To the Reader.

NOtwithſtanding the Diſcouragement, which the moſt Ingenious and Learned Mr. Du-Pin hath met with, from the Heads of his own Church, for his Free and Impartial Account of the Doctrine of the Ancient Fathers of the Firſt Eight Centuries; yet ſo Communicative is he of his knowledge, that he is not deterr'd from his Generous Deſign, but hath Preſented the World with a Continuation of that ſo Good and Excellent a Work in this Hiſtory of the Ninth Century: An Age, which was perplex'd with ſo many Intricate Controverſies quite through it; that ſcarce any Perſon, but of his Great Abilities, and firm Judgment, would have dared to medled with; yet he hath done it with that Clearneſs, Integrity and Faithfulneſs, that it is render'd one of the moſt Profitable Parts of Church-Hiſtory. Indeed, the Roughneſs of the Way hath forced him out of his Former Method, and this part of his Hiſtory appears in a Different Dreſs from his former; yet the ſame Ingenuity, Learning and Freedom, is ſo viſible throughout, that no Man that hath any thing of the Critick, can doubt it to be his; and, the Different Method hath made the Controverſies of the Age ſo clear, that that Hiſtory, which in our Annals ſeems very confuſed, is, by his way of Management, rendered not onely Clear and Intelligible; but extreamly Pleaſant and Delightful, ſerving to give Light to ſome of the Greateſt Conteſts, which have Diſturbed the Church in theſe Latter Ages; particularly thoſe of Predeſtination, and Grace, Chriſt's Real Preſence in the Sacrament, &c. Some of the Controverſies being ſuch, as are at this Day Hotly Debated, between the Church of Rome, and the Proteſtants: it may be juſtly ſuſpected, that our Author ſhould Repreſent things moſt fairly for the Romiſh ſide, in which, by his Profeſſion, he is engag'd, few being Impartial in ſuch Caſes; but, to the Juſt Commendation of Mr. Du Pin's Integrity, it ought to be ſaid, That he hath even in thoſe Points, no farther inclin'd to his own ſide, than the zeal of the Contending Parties hath juſtly oblig'd him, and the Words of the Controvertiſts will fairly bear, which is confeſs'd, are ſometimes through the Heat of Contention, and ἀμετρίᾳ ἀνθολκῆς, very Extravagant; but that ought to be imputed to the Author he is ſpeaking of, not Mr. Du-Pin: So that conſidering the Temptation our Author had to be Partial in the Hiſtory of this Century, more than in any of the Former, he is more to be admired for his Impartiality and Integrity in this, than in the Former Volumes.

As to the Tranſlation, it was done from the Copy Printed at Paris; and there hath been more than ordinary care taken, that it be Faithfully rendred into plain, and ſignificant Engliſh; and where-ever there occurr'd any difficult Cuſtoms or Words, or any Expreſſions, contrary to the Doctrine of the Church of England, there is added in the Margin ſuch Notes, as give an Explication of them, and diſcover both the Unſoundneſs of the Doctrine, and direct us to True and Orthodox Knowledge; whereby the Hiſtory is fitted, not onely for the Reading of the Learned, but made profitable, and without danger, to the more Unskilful Readers.

In the Account of the Editions of the Fathers, Mr. Du-Pin is not ſo very exact, becauſe his Deſign is only to give us an Account of their Writings, and a Cenſure upon them out of the Beſt Editions of their Works, which he ſometimes mentions: but ſince it is Uſeful to thoſe that Read theſe Authors, to know the ſeveral Editions of them; an Account of the varions Editions of the Works of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers of this Century is added; to gether with ſeveral Obſervations, for which the Reader's Kind Acceptance is all the Reward deſired.

AN HISTORY OF THE CONTROVERSIES AND OTHER Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, Tranſacted in the CHURCH In the Ninth Age.

CHAP. I.

Containing an Account of what paſſed in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churchs at the beginning of the Ninth Century about the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

IN the beginning of the Ninth Century the Greek or Eaſtern Church enjoyed Peace, and the Worſhip of Images was received by the greateſt part of the Members of it. The Emperor Nicephorus had choſen a Perſon of his own Name Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the year 806, who being of the ſame Judgment with the Emperor in the uſe of Images, joined with him in maintaining and upholding their Worſhip. Some little differences there were between them and Theodorus Studita about the reſtauration of Joſeph, the Steward of the Church of Conſtantinople, who had been depoſed by the Patriarch Taraſius, Nicephorus's Predeceſſor, but they were ſoon buried by the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, which happened in the year 811; for Michael Curopalates, his Son-in-Law and Succeſſor, made up the Breach between Theodorus, Joſeph Arch-Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and Nicephorus. The Peace of the Church being thus reſtored again, the Emperor and Nicephorus unanimouſly uſed their utmoſt endeavours to promote Image-worſhip, and root out ſome reliques of the Manichees-Hereſie, yet remaining in the Eaſt. But the State of Affairs was much changed by the Death of Michael, whom Leo Armeniacus having ſlain, poſſeſſed himſelf of his Throne. This Emperor was a favourer of the * Iconoclaſts, who having been much kept under, and ſcarce daring to appear after the Death of Conſtantinus Copronymus, made uſe of their Intereſt with him, and procured the baniſhment of their moſt inveterate Enemies, Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita, Nicetas, and ſeveral others, who were Zealous Patrons of Image-worſhip. After the Death of Leo, Michael, ſurnamed Balbus, who ſucceeded him in 820, mitigated the ſeverity uſed againſt the Patrons of Images in the laſt Reign, and ſuffered ſeveral of them to return from their Exile; ſeeking out all fit means to bring the Iconoclaſts and them to an Agreement, for which end he ſummoned both Parties to a Council. But the Image-worſhippers refuſed to come to any Conference with their Adverſaries, and boldly required him to reſtore the Biſhops of their Judgment to their Sees again, and to depoſe the Iconoclaſts in poſſeſſion of them. Michael hearing this inſolent demand was very angry, and immediately declared, that he would have all Images removed out of the City of Conſtantinople, which he had hitherto permitted, but his reſolution died with his paſſion, and he left all Men at liberty to worſhip Images, or not, as their Opinion was; yet he put out a Decree forbidding ſeveral Abuſes then commonly practiſed in the Adoration of Images, as to remove Croſſes out of the Churches, and put Images in their places, to adore the Images themſelves, to adorn the Statues with Cloaths, to accept them as Godfathers and Godmothers to their Children in the adminiſtration of Baptiſm, to cut off the Hair of thoſe that profeſſed a Monaſtick Life over them, to mingle their Colours with the Elements and deliver them to the Communicants, to put the Body of J. C. between their Arms, and celebrate the Holy Myſteries in their preſence in their Houſes. And that this Edict might take the better effect, he commanded by the ſame, that the Images which ſtood in low places ſhould be removed, and thoſe that ſtood more high ſhould be permitted to ſtand, and that they might be only of an Hiſtorical uſe, and not be adored by the more weak and ignorant, he ordered, that no Tapers ſhould be burnt, nor Incenſe offered in honour to them. Michael having thus publiſhed this Decree, was very deſirous to have it approved by the Weſtern Church, and for that end reſolved to ſend his Ambaſſadors to Rome with rich Preſents; and that he might be the better received by the Pope, he made his application to Lewis, ſurnamed Benignus, by them deſiring him to ſecond his Petition, and aſſiſt him with his Intereſt. This Emperor thinking this a fit opportunity of ſettling the Peace of the Church, ſent two Ambaſſadors, Trearcphus and Adegarius, to Rome with the Deputies of the Greek Emperor, to treat of this Affair. But the Romans could not be brought to compliance, no not by the Miniſters of Lewis, whereupon they requeſted, and obtained leave of the Pope, that their Maſter might have this Queſtion debated among his Biſhops. With this Grant they returned into France to Lewis, who ſoon after in 824, ſummoned a Council of the moſt Learned and Judicious Biſhops of his Realm, by whom this Queſtion was throughly canvaſſed and examined. They firſt read Pope Adrians Letter to Conſtantine and Irine upon this ſubject, in which they found, that he did juſtly condemn thoſe who demoliſhed and defaced the Images, but thought that he had given too much encouragement to the Adoration of them. Then they re-examined what the Synod of Nice had done by means of that Letter, and found, that in the Acts of their Council they had not only eſtabliſhed the Worſhip of Images, but had commanded them to be called Holy, by which they ſeemed to them to attribute ſome Holineſs to them. They alſo read over the Book which Charles the Great had cauſed to be written againſt this Council, to which though Pope Adrian had given an Anſwer, yet they ſaw ſo little of ſolidity in it, that they looked upon nothing in it worthy of their notice, but the Name it bore. They complain of the Rigour and inflexible Humour of the Church-men in Rome and Italy, commend the Moderation of the Emperor, in avoiding the Heats of both Parties, and labouring ſo earneſtly for the Peace of the Church. They commend the Prudence of the Ambaſſadors, who had obtained that that Queſtion might be debated in France. They judged, there was no other way to make their deſign ſucceſsful, but to make uſe of the Imperial Authority in ſettling what they ſhould upon the moſt impartial Examination find to be true by plain Text of Holy Scripture, and the Judgment of the Fathers, which they would do modeſtly and ſincerely.

Council of Paris.

In the laſt place, they made a large Collection of Paſſages of the Fathers, which they divided into 15 Chapters. The firſt was againſt thoſe that held, that Images ought to be wholly removed out of Churches, and Pictures blotted out which were engraven on the Holy Veſſels of Miniſtration. The 2d contains ſeveral Authorities out of S. Gregory the Great, ſhewing what profitable uſe may be made of Images. The 3d is ſeveral Teſtimonies of S. Auſtin againſt thoſe that worſhipped Images, and believed that they had any Holineſs or Virtue in them. The 4th contains ſeveral other Quotations againſt the Worſhip of Images. The 5th proves by ſeveral Authorities, that Saints and their Reliques may have ſome honour given 'em, but not be adored, from whence they infer, that it is not lawful to burn Incenſe to Images. The 6th contains ſome Teſtimonies againſt them that defend the Worſhip of Images by the common uſage of them, which hath been lately introduced. In the 7th they undertake to prove by ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, that even any Honour ought to be denied to Images, when it may give an offence to the weak. In the 8th and 9th they produce ſome Explications of the Fathers, to prove that the Text in Geneſis, where 'tis ſaid, That Jacob worſhipped the Top of his Son Joſeph's Staff; and another in the Kings, where 'tis ſaid, That Nathan worſhipped David, do prove nothing for the Worſhip of Images. The 10th contains a Teſtimony of S. Auſtins concerning the Holy Veſſels. The 11th contains one touching the Cherubins. The 12th contains ſome, which evince that Adoration is due to God only. The 13th contains ſeveral about the Croſs, which ſhew that a great difference is to be obſerved between that and Images, which is confirmed in the 14th by the practice of the Church, which hath always given ſome Reſpect and Reverence to the Croſs, by making uſe of that Sign in Benedictions, Conſecrations, and Exorciſms. In the 15th they exhort the Iconoclaſts, who were for deſtroying all Images, not to take occaſion from the former proofs to deface, beat down, or deride Images, ſince there is no Worſhip given, or intended to them; and to confirm the truth of theſe two Points, they recite recite several Passages of the Fathers. Last of all they compose a Copy of two Letters, the one to be sent in the Name of the Emperor Lewis to the Pope, to exhort him to further the Peace of the Church, by removing those abuses which had raised so many troubles in the East. In it, some were for intimating that he Worshipped Images, but others would not hear of it. The other was such a form as they wished, That the Pope would write to the Greek Emperors. It begins with a long Exhortation to them, to submit to the Church of Rome, and pay all due respect to it; Then it advises the Emperors to restore the Peace of the Church, by permitting Images to be used, but not worshipped. And lastly, produces some most plain and remarkable Passages of the Fathers, to confirm and establish that usage of them, and none else, as Lawful.

Lewis the Kind sent this Consultation, and these Acts, to Pope Eugenius, by Jeremiah Archbishop of Sens, and Jonas Bishop of Orleans, and desired him in his Letter to confer with them about the Embassy, which he was to send into Greece. And that he might not give the Pope the least offence, which might serve for a pretence to fly off from this design, he says, That he did not send those Papers to him, to impose Laws upon him, or direct him, as a Master, but barely to represent to him the Judgment of the Church of France, and contribute all he could to the Peace of the Church Universal. He recommends them to him, prays him to accept them favourably, and beseeches him to use his utmost endeavours to re-unite the Greek Church, and to act with a great deal of Prudence and Caution in so difficult and nice a Point as this is. He desires also, that his Ambassadors might go along with the Pope's into the East.

At the same time he gave the Bishops, whom he sent Ambassadors to the Pope some private Instructions, in which he charges them to shew the Pope the Collections of Authorities made by the Council held at Paris, to examine the business of Images according to the permission he had given them. He commands them to manifest his design to the Pope about Images, to treat of that Question with all Candor and Moderation, and to be very careful that they did not provoke him by opposing him too plainly. Lastly, He orders them that if they could not compleat the business, when they had done all they could, they should ask him whether they might not go with his Ambassadors into Greece, to which if he consented, they should immediately send him word, that at their return they might find Amalarius and Halitgarius, who before they went should meet them at the place where they were to Embark.

What the resolution of the Pope was in this Affair is not known, but Lewis the Kind did send Halitgarius Bishop of Cambray, and Aufridus Abbot of Nonantula, to the Emperor Michael, who received them kindly. Nevertheless, it doth not appear that their Negotiation had any good effect, for things remained almost in the same state in Greece as long as Michael Balbus lived, and after his Death his Son Theophilus used great severity against the Image-Worshippers. But the Empress Theodora, the Wife of Theophilus, becoming Mistress of the Empire [in the Minority of her Son Michael] after the Death of her Husband, which happened in 842, called a Council at Constantinople, in which the Worship of Images was again restored, the Iconoclasts condemned, and Methodius made Patriarch of Constantinople in the room of John, who was of the Party of the Iconoclasts. And thus the Controversie of Image-Worship was ended in the East.

In the West, Claudius Clemens, a Spanish Priest, and Scholar of Felix Orgelitanus, and afterwards Bishop of Turin, imitating the Conduct of Serenus Bishop of Marseilles, took up a resolution not only to give no Honour to Images himself, but to remove them out of all the Churches of his Dioceſs, not sparing so much as the Cross it self. Theodemirus, [a Benedictine] Abbot, much disliked the Actions of this Bishop, being perswaded that Images, as S. Gregory taught him, were to be retain'd in Churches without giving them any adoration. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, exhorting him to change his Opinion and Management. Claudius was so far from following his Advice, that he wrote a defence of his Proceedings, wherein at large he confutes what he had said, and disproves the use of Images he contended for. We have nothing remaining of this Letter, but what Jonas Bishop of Orleans, and Dungalus the Monk, have preserved in their Confutations of it, by which it appears, that it was Written with much briskness and closeness, full of Ingenuity and Subtilty. [Melchior Goldastus, in the end of his Collection de Cultu Imaginum, hath put all the pieces of this Letter together, and in a small Treatise put them forth.] Cl. Clemens an Enemy to Images.

This Writing of Claudius Bishop of Turin, being brought to the Court of Lewis the Kind, this Prince commanded the most Learned men, which he had about him, to examine it, who found great fault with it, and made a Collection of the most observable Assertions, which the Emperor sent to Jonas Bishop of Orleans to confute, as having several Errors and Falsities in them. Jonas began that Work, but Claudius Dying before he had finished it, he laid it aside, believing that his Error would be Buried with him. But Jonas hearing afterwards, that he had left some Writings behind him, wherein he revived the Error of Arrius, and that his Opinion did begin to spread in his Country, he thought himself obliged to finish that Work. He divided it into three parts; In the first, he maintains the use of Images, the Invocation, Intercession and Worship of Saints, and the Veneration that is due to their Relicks. He confesses, that the French did not Worship Images, reproved the Greeks, whom they supposed to Adore them, and asserts, That it is absurd to represent the Divine Nature under Corporal Figures. In the second, he maintains not only the Use, but Veneration of the Cross. In the last, he defends the Pilgrimages which were made to Rome out of Devotion, and answers, in the Name of Theodemirus, to that which Claudius of Turin had objected, viz. If that were a piece of Penance to go to Rome, why had he received, and did retain Jonas Bishop of Orleans's Judgment of Images.

retain in his Monaſtery 140 Monks, who entred thither only to do Penance? He anſwered, ſay I, that there were ſeveral ways of doing Penance, and many different States. Men may either go into a Monaſtery, or go to Rome, with a deſign of doing Penance; but thoſe that have once taken upon them a Monaſtick Life, ought to obſerve the Rule, and live according to the Order of S. Benedict, keeping continually in their Monaſtery. In theſe Books, he ſets down the very Words that had been taken out of the Letter of Claudius of Turin, and after he anſwers them, and confirms his Anſwers with the moſt ſolid Proofs he could find, as the Teſtimonies of S. Jerom, S. Auſtin, S. Gregory, the Examples of the Saints, moſt evident Miracles, and the Practice of the Ancient Church. [This Work is Printed at Colon 1554. in the Hæreſiology at Baſil 1556. in Orthodoxogr. Tom. 2. p. 1526. and in Biblioth. Patrum, Paris 2d Edition, p. 688. Tom. 4. Two other Treatiſes alſo are extant written by Jonas, viz. De Inſtitutione Laicorum, lib. 3. & de Inſtitutione Regia, lib. 1. in Dacherius's Spicileg. Tom. 1. & 5. p. 57.]

Dungal's Treatiſe of Images.

Not long after the Deacon Dungal [a Monk of S. Denis at Paris] wrote another Treatiſe againſt Claudius of Turin's Book, and Dedicated it to the Emperor Lewis and Lotharius. In it he oppoſeth three Points, which that Biſhop had delivered in his Treatiſe, That we ought to have no Images; That we ought not to Worſhip the Croſs; And that 'tis of no advantage to viſit the Churches where the Bodies of the Saints are laid, or Honour their Relicks. He alledges a great number of Quotations of the Fathers, both Greek and Latin, as alſo of the Chriſtian Poets, as S. Paulinus and Tradentius, to confute theſe Errors; and in the concluſion demands, how a Biſhop, who hates the Croſs of our Lord, can Baptize, Conſecrate the Chriſm, Confirm, Bleſs or Conſecrate any thing, or Celebrate the Communion, ſince none of theſe can be done without making the Sign of the Croſs? And how he can celebrate Divine Service without Invoking the Saints, and Honouring their Relicks? In this Treatiſe of Dungals there is little of his own, being nothing but a Collection of Paſſages out of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; what is his, is written in an harſh and unpleaſant Stile. [It extant in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 196.]

The Opinion of Agobardus about Images.

Agobardus, Archbiſhop of Lyons, ſeems not ſo great a Favourer of Images, for tho', indeed, at firſt, he ſeemed to oppoſe the Adoration of them only, againſt which he alledges ſeveral places out of the Fathers; yet afterwards he maintains, That we ought not to make uſe of theſe Viſible Signs to repreſent things Spiritual by, nor give them a Relative Worſhip in reſpect to the Saints repreſented by them. He affirms, that in the Ancient Church, the Images of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles, were preſerved rather for the love they bore to them, and to put them in mind of them, than out of Religion, or to Adore them. He is of Opinion, that it were fit, upon this occaſion, wholly to ſuppreſs them, as being the Cauſes of much Superſtition; in which he differs from the Judgment of the Church of France. [Theſe things he chiefly aſſerts in his Book de Picturis, & Imaginibus, which, together with his other Treatiſes, are Printed at Paris, 1605. 8°. by the care of Papyrius Maſſonus, who found the MS. by chance in a Book-binders Shop. After which, his Works were Printed again at Paris with Baluzius's Notes, 1666. 8°. 2 Vol. an Accurate Edition, but he endeavours to weaken his Authority againſt Image-Worſhip. This Edition is put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Wal. Strabo's Judgment about Images.

Walafridus Strabo, a Monk of Fulda, who wrote ſome time after Agobardus, ſpeaks of Images with much more Moderation, for he not only approves the uſe of them, but allows ſome reſpect to be given to them. He obſerves, that we ought not to Honour them with a direct Worſhip, but he would have us not to contemn them. He diſtinguiſhes them into three ſorts, ſome which ſignify ſome Myſteries, as the Ornaments of the Tabernacle and Temple, others which ſerve to perpetuate the remembrance of Sacred Hiſtory, and others, which are made to impreſs upon our Hearts the love of thoſe Perſons which they repreſent, as the Images of Jeſus Chriſt and the Saints. Whereupon he ſays, that the Devotion with which the Faithful are touched, when they look upon and contemplate them, is not to be blamed, ſince they draw ſo much profit from them; but he condemns the Superſtition of thoſe who honour them with Religious Worſhip. That as ſome Worſhip them more than they need, ſo others reject them imprudently, as a kind of Idolatry; That this Queſtion had ſtirred up great troubles among the Greeks. That in the time of Pope Gregory II. the Emperor Conſtantine had removed all Images, but that under Gregory III. there had been a Council called at Rome againſt the Hereſie, in which it was appointed, That the Images ſhould be ſet up again in the Churches according to the Ancient uſage. Laſtly, That the complaint of the Greeks having been brought into France, had been confuted by a Synodical Writing by the Order of Lewis the Kind. That Claudius of Turin, who had revived that Error, died before he received a Confutation, That Chriſtians being well Inſtructed, that none ought to be Worſhipped but God, and that the Supream Honour, that is due to him, can't be communicated to Saints or Martyrs, whom they Invoke as Interceſſors with him. Theſe lawful and moderate Honours of Images are not to be rejected wholly. Non ſunt omnimodis honeſti & moderati Imaginum honores abjiciendi. That as we do not demoliſh Temples, altho' we believe God to be every where, and that he doth not dwell in them, ſo we ought not to deface Pictures as uſeleſs and noxious, becauſe we are perſwaded that we ought not to Worſhip them. In fine, he ſays, that they have many advantages; They are the Books of the Ignorant, and ſuch as can't Read, and teach them thoſe Hiſtories that they could hardly know any other way. He concludes, that we ought to have and love Images, and not render them uſeleſs by contemning them, leſt the irreverence which we ſhew them, ſhould reflect upon them that are repreſented by them. Nevertheleſs, we ought to be careful not to corrupt corrupt our faith by an excessive worship of them, for fear lest by rendring too great honour to things Corporeal, we should give just ground of suspicion, that we do not sufficiently consider things Spiritual. [These things are spoken in his Treatise De Divinis Officiis, which is Printed at Mentz 1549, at Paris 1610, and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15. Other small Treatises of his are extant in Surius & Canisius Antiq. Lection. Tom. 6. & Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15.]

After this time I do not find that there was any Contest in the West about the Use and Worship of Images, which henceforward became common in France, Germany, and other Places. Let us now speak of the Authors chiefly engaged in this Controversy.

Nicephorus was but a Layman when he was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople in 806, after the Death of Tarasius. He had passed some part of his life at Court, but had been for some time before his Election retired from the World, yet was no Monk. He was no sooner in possession of the Patriarchal Dignity, but through complaisance to the Emperor Nicephorus, he restored in a Council Joseph the Steward, who had Crowned Theodota, whom Copronymus had Married, having Divorced his lawful Wife. Theodorus Studita and Plato violently opposed this Act, whereupon the Patriarch held a Council in 809, in which Joseph was not only confirmed in his place, but the second Marriage of Constantine was declared lawful by Dispensation, and every one that should maintain the contrary, was Anathematized. This Decision raised a great Quarrel between Nicephorus and Theodorus, who together with several Monks separated themselves from his Communion, and treated him as an Heretick, which Division continued till the Death of Nicephorus the Emperor But the Emperor Michael put an end to this Schism, and made them Friends upon condition, that Joseph should be displaced, and that the Monks for the future should obey the Patriarch in all things that were not manifestly contrary to the Faith and Law of God. From this time Nicephorus and Theodorus Studita were perfectly good friends, and suffered Persecution together for the Worship of Images. Nicephorus was driven out of his Church and banished in 814 by the Authority of Leo Armeniacus; and although under the Emperor Michael Balbus, many that were banished had liberty to return, yet he was allowed that favour, but remain 14 years in banishment, in which he died in 828. The Works which he hath left us are these that follow. Nicephorus Patriarch of Constantinopic.

The first is a Letter written in 811 to Pope Leo III. which contains a long Confession of Faith. Baronius hath Printed it in Latin in his Annals, and 'tis also Printed in Greek with the Acts of the Council of Nice, and in Greek and Latin in Zonoras, and in the Collection of the Councels. In it Nicephorus speaks of himself with much humility and abasement; He says, that having passed the former part of his life at Court, and in Worldly Affairs, he had retreated into solitude, out of which he was drawn against his Will and made Patriarch of Constantinople, that finding himself burdened with the Weight of so great a Charge, he begged the Prayers of the Bishop of Rome, and all the Faithful of his Church: He commends the Piety and Faith of the Church of Rome, but adds, that New Rome was not at all inferior to Old in the purity of her Faith. To make proof of this Assertion, he joins a Confession of Faith to his Letter, in which, after he hath explained the Mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, and acknowledged the Invocation and Intercession of Saints, and Worship of Images, he declares, that he receives the 7 first Councils and the Doctrine of the Fathers. After this he excuses himself to the Pope, that he did not write to him sooner, and says that the cause was, that he was made to believe that the Church of Rome was at Enmity with that of Constantinople, but now the cause of the Division being removed, he doubted not but there would be a perfect agreement between the two Churches. In the conclusion he recommends to the Pope Michael the Archbishop of Philadelphia, who carried this Letter and some Presents with it. [This Letter is extant in Greek and Latine at Heidelberg, 1591, put out by Cornelius, and with Zonoras at Paris, 1620.

Nicephorus's Abridgment of History is his most considerable Work, it begins at the Death of the Emperor Mauritius, and ends with the Reign of the Empress Irene, [ad an. 769.] It hath been published in Greek and Latine by Petavius, and Printed in Latine and Greek in Octavo in 1616, and since put into the Byzantine History, Tom. 1. [It hath been since put out with Theoph. Simoccitta's History, Paris 1648.]

Some attribute to him also a Chronology, which was heretofore Translated by Anastatius Bibliothecarius, [into Latine, and inserted into his History:] it contains a Catalogue of all the Patriarchs, Kings, and Princes of the Jews, Kings of Persia and Macedon, Roman Emperors according to the Order of their Successors, the Years of their Lives and Reigns, the Names of some of the Empresses, Kings of Israel, and Jewish High-Priests, the Names and Years of the Patriarchs of the Churches of Jerusalem, Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch. This Work is very defective if it be Nicephorus's, some other Person hath added the Names of some of the Emperors, and some Patriarchs which lived after his Death: At first there appeared only a Translation attributed to Anastasius; afterward Camerarius made another Version, upon which Contius, a Lawyer at Bruges, made a Comment. Scaliger Printed it in Greek at the end of his Edition of Eusebius's Chronicon, [or Thesaurus Temporum] and last of all F. Goar Printed them in Greek and Latin at Paris, 1652, with Sycellus's Chronicon. At the beginning of this Work is prefixed a Book, Entituled, Schometria, which contains a Catalogue of Canonical [Ecclesiastical] and Apocryphal Books, but 'tis not certain, that it is the Work of this Patriarch, [our Learned Bishop of Chester, Dr. Pearson, proves, that 'tis not Nicephorus's, but some other Authors coeval with him in his Vind. Ignat. p. 1.]

He made alſo four Treatiſes againſt the Iconoclaſts, of which we have only a Latin Verſion compoſed by Turrian, which is extant in Caniſius's Collection, [Tom. 4. p. 253.] and in the Bibliath Patrum, [Tom. 14.] In the firſt, he ſuppoſes the Iconoclaſts to have wrong Sentiments of the Incarnation, from whence he concludes, that they are juſtly condemned, becauſe they have not followed univerſally the Doctrine of the General Councils, becauſe they have demoliſhed the Temples, beat down the Images, and treated them as Idolaters which worſhip them, inſomuch, that they have been the cauſe of the effuſion of much Chriſtian Blood; and laſtly, becauſe they have ſeparated themſelves from the Church. In the 2d Tract, he endeavours to prove by 16 Reaſons, that the Image of Jeſus Chriſt ought to have more reſpect than the Croſs. In the 3d Book he proves the Worſhip of Images by the Example of the Cherubims over the Ark. In the laſt, he ſhews, that the Image of Jeſus Chriſt may be formed and painted, becauſe according to his Humane Nature he is bounded, and finite.

He hath alſo 3 Books which he terms Antirrheticks, againſt the Council held at Conſtantinople under Conſtantinus Copronymus, which aboliſhed the uſe of Images, but we have only ſome Fragments of this Work put out by F. Combefis in his Second Volume of his Addition to the Bibliath. Patrum, [at Paris, 1648.] Laſtly, we meet with ſeveral Canons which bear the Name of Nicephorus among the Greek Canoniſts. Glycas cites 51, which proves, that he made a great number. Cotelerius hath publiſhed a Collection of 37, and another of 9, [inter Monument. Eccleſ. Græc. Tom. 3. p. 445.] Theſe are the Contents of them, 1. If a Perſon by chance waſhes a Cloth conſecrated to the ſervice of the Altar, it loſeth not its conſecration; 2. A Man that hath been twice Married ſhall do Penance two years, and he that hath been Married thrice, 5 years; 3. He that remains but a ſmall time within the Cloſe of a Church ſhall not be puniſhed for it, but he that continues long there ſhall ſuffer the puniſhments in that caſe provided; 4. The Gifts beſtowed upon the Church by dead Men may be received, though they died inteſtate, if it be known that it was their deſign and intentions; 5. If the Feaſt of the Annunciation happen upon the Thurſday or Friday * in the Holy Week, the Chriſtians might upon that day eat Fiſh and drink Wine; 6. He that is conſecrated an Abbot, and is a Prieſt, may ordain Readers and Subdeacons in his Monaſtery; 7. He may not ordain any Perſon who hath lived vitiouſly in his youth, although he be become a virtuous Man, becauſe he that is conſecrated to God muſt be without ſcandalous faults; 8. Such as are born of Concubines, or of 2d and 3d Marriages, may be ordained; 9. The Communion may be given to a ſick Perſon, who is near death, although he be not faſting; 10. Bending of the Knee may be uſed in ſaluting upon Sundays from the Paſſover to Pentecoſt, but the ordinary kneeling may not be uſed; 11. A Prieſt doth not ſin, if he conſecrate the Sacrament, or burn a Taper for 3 Perſons at once; 12. He may not conſecrate a Chalice in the Veſtry; 13. A Prieſt may not conſecrate the Sacrament without hot Water, unleſs in caſe of abſolute neceſſity; 14. A Monk who hath left his Profeſſion, may reſume it again, without uſing the accuſtomed Prayers; 15. Religious Perſons may go within the Rails of the Altar to light the Tapers, or bruſh the Altar; 16. Monks may not labour upon Good-Friday, that they may not have a pretence of breaking the faſt; 17. A Monk may forſake his Monaſtery in 3 caſes, 1. if the Abbot be an Heretick, 2. if any Woman be admitted to it, or 3. if they teach the Children of Tradeſmen in it; 18. Becauſe theſe Youngſters will divulge the Secrets of the Monaſtery; 19. Monks that are put under Penances and Cenſures, may eat and pray with the reſt, and have part of the Eulogies and Conſecrated Bread; 20. On the Faſts of the Apoſtles and S. Philip the Monks in the Monaſteries ſhall not eat till night, but they that labour may eat after-noon, and ſup at night; 21. If a Nun have been forced by the Barbarians, if ſhe hath lived an orderly and commendable life before, ſhe ſhall be diſcharged after 40 days Penance, but if ſhe hath lived a lewd and ſcandalous life, ſhe ſhall undergo the Penance of an Adultereſs; 22. He that hath put on the Habit of a Monk for any Temporal Ends, as to exempt himſelf from bearing Arms, and afterwards diſcovers his Hypocriſie, ſhall be put to Penance ſix ſcore days, and afterwards may be admitted to the Communion; 23. Young Monks, who forſake their Monaſtery, muſt not be admitted to the Communion; 24. An Abbot ought not to pull off the Cowl from the Monk, nor endeavour it; 25. A Monk that hath put off his Habit, and will not reſume it, ought not to be received to the Communion; 26. If a Sick Man deſires Baptiſm, or a Monks Habit, they ought to be given him immediately; 27. A Monk that is a Prieſt ought not to celebrate the Maſs without his Cloak; 28. A Confeſſor who hath had ſecret Sins diſcovered to him, ought to keep thoſe ſecret Sinners from the Communion, mildly adviſing them to Repentance, and Prayer, and impoſe a ſuitable Penance upon them, but not prohibit them from coming into the Church, nor defame them; 29. As to Adulterers, Manſlayers, and other Notorious Sinners, who confeſs their Crimes, they muſt be kept from the Communion, endure a long Penance, and not ſuffered to remain in the Church longer than the Prayers for the Catechumens; but if their Sins are publick, they muſt go through the ſeveral degrees of Penance commanded by the Laws of the Church; 30. If a Layman do voluntarily confeſs his Sins, the Confeſſor may diſpenſe with part of his Penance; 31. A Prieſt by the permiſſion of his Biſhop may uſe the Ceremonies of ſetting up the Croſs; 32. The Sacrament may not be given to Uſurers. 33. Monks muſt faſt on Wedneſday and Friday in Quinquageſima-week, but after they have eaten of the Fore-conſecrated Elements, they ought to eat a little Cheeſe in oppoſition to the Hereſie of the Jacobites and Tetradites. 34. If a Man that hath a Concubine will neither put her away nor marry her with the Bleſſing of the Church, his Offerings may not be received by the Church. 35. If a Monk leaves leaves his Habit, Eats Flesh, Marries, and will not reform or repent, he must be Excommunicated, taken by force, and being put into his Habit, shall be shut up in his Monastery. 36. A Man that hath been guilty of Fornication ought not to be Ordained. 37. Such Persons as are reputed to be Fornicators need not to be avoided, but such as are known and proved such. These are the Canons of the first Collection, and the second are these, 1. Churches Consecrated by Hereticks are to be accounted no better than Common Houses; and therefore, though there be Singing before the Cross, yet there ought to be no Service at the Altar, burning Incense, Prayers, nor Lighting of Candles and Tapers. The 2d is about the Ceremonies in the reconciliation of a Monk, who resumes his Habit which he had once left. The 3d declares, That we ought not to receive the Sacrament from the Hands of a Priest that doth not Fast on Wednesdays and Fridays. The four next are in the precedent Collection. The 8th says, That a Priest, Deacon, or Reader, Deposed, if he become a Monk, may say Grace in the Monastery. The last is the same with the 25th of the former Collection.---- Leunclavius in his Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws, hath Published 17 Canons attributed to Nicephorus, which are all in the former Collection, except the 2d which forbids Travelling on Sundays, the third, which rejects some Apocryphal Books, the ninth, which forbids Travelling in the Week after Easter, and Singing the Hymn called Beati Maculati the Saturday which is before Quasi-modo, the twelfth, which inflicts the Penance of Manslayers upon him that strikes his Father, the thirteenth, which allows Monks to Baptize, and the sixteenth, which says, That 'tis Lawful for Lay-men to Baptize Infants when a Priest cannot be had.

After these Canons, Cotelerius hath also Printed a Canonical Letter of Nicephorus's, wherein he answers several Questions of Discipline propounded to him. The Questions and Answers are as follow. Quest. 1. Whether it be Lawful to Communicate, Eat or Sing, with those Priests which have been Ordained at Rome, Naples, or in Lumbardy, without Proclamation, or Title? He Answers, Yea, if it be through Necessity, and could not be done otherwise. Quest. 2. Whether they ought to receive Priests Ordained in Sicily out of the Province? He answers, Yes, for the same Reason. Quest. 3. Whether they may communicate with those Bishops in Prayer and Singing, who had communion with Hereticks, and go into their Churches? He answers, No, in no wise. Quest. 4. Whether they may do it if the Churches be not possessed by Hereticks, but Catholick Bishops? He answers, Yes, provided that the Catholick Bishop do solemnly open, and call Assemblies in them. Quest. 5. Whether the Orthodox Christians may go into the Church-yards, where the Bodies of the Saints lye, and Pray to them, when the Church-yards are in the possession of Hereticks? He answers, No, unless in case of Necessity, or to Honour the Saints Relicks. Quest. 6. How those Monks ought to be treated who have been invested in that Possession by Hereticks? He answers, They ought to be received to Communion by an Orthodox Priest after they have done their Penance. Quest. 7. How those Priests and Monks are to be dealt with who have Subscribed to Heresie? He answers, They ought to be received when they have done their full Penance. Quest. 8. Whether they may communicate with those Monks who hold communication with Hereticks? He answers, No. Quest. 9. Whether they ought to be put upon Penance, who have Eaten but once only with Hereticks? He answers, They ought to do Penance, and then they may be admitted with the ordinary Prayers and Ceremonies. Quest. 10. Whether such Lay-men, as have Subscribed to Heresie, and Communicated with Hereticks, may Eat with the Orthodox Laity? He answers, They may not, till they have done Penance. Quest. 11. Whether Men may be Baptized by a Priest, who hath held communion with Hereticks, when they cannot have an Orthodox Priest, especially in cases of danger? He answers, It is allowable for such Priests, in case of necessity, to Baptize, and Administer the Sacraments, which have been Consecrated by an unblameable Priest, to Invest Monks, to Read the Prayers at Funerals, and bless the Water at Epiphany. Quest. 12. Whether it be allowable to receive Schismaticks? He answers, They ought to undergo Penance before they are received. Quest. 13. Whether a Priest, who hath been Ordained by a lapsed Bishop, may Exercise the Office of his Priesthood, after he hath done Penance, as a certain Priest in a Monastery now doth? He answers, There is no doubt at all but that he may not. Quest. 14. How they are to be dealt with who have Eaten with the Patriarch of Constantinople, who is a Heretick? He answers, They may be received, as he said before, after they have undergone the Penance imposed on them, and continue in the Order wherein they were. The Penance ought to be proportioned to the Persons and their Manners, which is sufficient, if it be undergone 80, or 120 days. Quest. 15. May Men have Society with those, who have communicated with those Priests, who have Eaten with the Patriarch, not knowing it? He answers, Their Ignorance excuses them. Quest. 16. Whether Orthodox Priests may impose Penance, as Hilarion and Eustatius have done? He answers, Priests may certainly do it, and 'tis probable Monks may do it, when there is no Priests. Quest. 17. Whether a Monk Invested, by a Deposed Priest, not knowing it, is rightly and sufficiently Consecrated? He answers, His ignorance makes him safe. This Letter was written by Nicephorus, in the place of his Exile to a Bishop of his Province, about the difficulties which then happened in communicating with the Iconoclasts.

Photius, who had read this History of Nicephorus, passes his Judgment upon it in the 66 Vol. of his Biblioth. in this manner. His Style, saith he, hath nothing superfluous or obscure, neither too much affected, nor yet too careless in his Words and Expressions, but yet he uses such choice and elegant terms, as might well become a good Orator. He avoided all new fangled Words, and uses only the common and ancient expressions, and is very agreeable and pleasing. In fine, he might be said to have out-done all that ever wrote Hiſtory before him, had not his deſire of Brevity hindred him from uſing neceſſary Ornaments for ſuch a Work.

This Judgment of Photius is true, as to the Hiſtory of Nicephorus, but the ſame commendation may not be given to his other Works, which have nothing in them Praiſe-worthy but their Method and Brevity. I except his Letter to the Pope, which is of a copious, but flat Style.

Theodorus Studita. Next to Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita is the moſt conſiderable of the Patrons of Image-Worſhip; He was the Scholar of S. Plato, Head of the Monaſtery upon Mount Olympus, who voluntarily reſigned the Government of it to him in 795. The ſame year Conſtantinus Capronymus having forced his Wife to enter upon a Religious Life, married one of her Maids of Honour named Theodota, which Tareſius the Patriarch was extreamly againſt, tho' he did not oppoſe it with ſo much vigour as he ought, nor puniſhed Joſeph, the Monks Steward of the Church of Conſtantinople, who had marrried them; but Plato and Theodorus declared themſelves openly againſt the Emperor, and ſeparated themſelves from his Communion, blaming the carriage of Tareſius. The greateſt part of the Monks followed their example, which angred Conſtantine ſo much, that he baniſhed Theodorus with eleven of his Monks. After the Death of this Emperor, Theodorus returned to Conſtantinople, but not being able to ſtay in his own Monaſtery, by reaſon of the Inroads of the Barbarians, he was created Abbot of the Monaſtery of Studa at Conſtantinople, which was ſo called from the Name of the Founder. He reſtored this Monaſtery, put in his Monks, and enjoy'd it ſome time peaceably. But afterwards quarrelling with the Patriarch Nicephorus about the reſtoration of Joſeph the Steward, he was Baniſhed a ſecond time, becauſe he would not approve the Deciſion of the Synod, which declared the ſecond Marriage of Conſtantine Lawful. In his Exile, he continued his oppoſition to that Allegation violently; he wrote to Pope Leo III. about it, and treated them that maintained it as Hereticks, calling them Mæchians, becauſe they approved, or at leaſt, tolerated Adultery. And whereas ſome of his Friends told him, that he could not properly impute Hereſie to an Opinion that only reſpected Manners, he on the contrary held, That his Adverſaries had made a Doctrine of it, by giving a Diſpenſation or Indulgence to an Adulterous Match, and pronouncing them Accurſed who would not acknowledge it Lawful. They produced ſeveral Preſidents of Indulgences and Diſpenſations; in anſwer to which, to ſhew the preſent caſe to be very different from thoſe they alledged, he wrote a Treatiſe of Diſpenſations or Indulgences. In 811 he returned from his ſecond Exile, after the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, and was reconciled to the Patriarch Nicephorus by the Mediation of the Emperor Michael and the Pope. In the Reign of Leo, he undertook the Defence of Image-Worſhip with much heat and vigour, and tho' the Emperor commanded him to be ſilent, yet he ſpake and wrote Zealouſly againſt a Synod held by that Emperor againſt the Worſhip of Images. This was the cauſe of his third Exile, in which he ſuffered much through the Cruelty of Leo, whom he provoked by Writing to his Fellows in his Exile, and animated them to maintain their ground. In the beginning of the Reign of Michael Balbus, in 821, he had Liberty given him to return to Conſtantinople, but having ſpoken too freely, he was forced to retire for ſome time. At the end of his Life, he viſited the Patriarch Nicephorus in his Exile, and ſeveral others. He died in the Year 826. Michael his Scholar hath written his Life, who thus ſpeaks of his Writings. "He wrote, or dictated ſeveral Works, which "ſhew, That he was enlighten'd by the Holy Spirit. The firſt was a Catechiſe, which he calls "a ſmall one, tho' it contains 135 Sermons ſpoken to his Brethren, proper for each day, of which "the Sentences are choice, and Terms elegant. In them he treats of Conſtancy, contempt of Ad-"verſity, Perſeverance in the Auſterities and Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life, reſiſting of Temp-"tions, and Courage under all Accidents of Life, with great Eloquence. He hath alſo another "Work called a large Catechiſm, divided into three parts, containing the Rules and Diſcipline of "a Monaſtick Life. He hath alſo compoſed a Volume of Panegyricks, or Sermons upon the chief "Feſtivals of the Year, as well thoſe of our Lord, as thoſe of the Virgin and St. John, whoſe ſo-"litary and retired Life he commends in an Hymn by it ſelf. He hath made a Piece alſo in Jam-"bick Verſe, in which he deſcribes the Creation, the Fall of the firſt Man, the Murther of Cain, "the Life of Enoch, and of Noah. In the ſame Book alſo, he delivers an Hiſtory of the Hereſie "of the Iconoclaſts. We have 5 Books of his Letters, in which he manifeſts a great deal of freedom "in his Diſcourſe, Zeal for the Truth, Care of the Church, and Conſtancy in Adverſity. Laſtly, "He hath made a Dogmatical Treatiſe, in which he confutes the Sophiſms of the Iconoclaſts with "ſolid Reaſons.--- Of theſe Works, only theſe are come to our hands, A Latin Verſion of his 134 Sermons, made by Livinelus, Canon of Antwerp, and Printed there by Miræus in 1602. The Verſion of ſeveral of his Letters, which Baronius had out of a MS. and cauſed them to be Tranſlated by Sirmondus to put into his Annals, where they may be found between the Years 795 and 826. A Sermon in Latin upon the 4th Sunday in Lent, [which is in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.] A fragment of a Letter to Naucratius about the Hereticks, [extant in Gr. and Lat. in Allatius de conſenſu, l. 3. c. 13.] A Letter to a Monk who had left his Monaſtery, Tranſlated by Turnan. A Sermon upon S. Bartholomew, turned into Latin by Dacherius in the 3d Tome of his Spicilegium. The Life of S. Plato, Head of the Monaſtery of Mount Olympus, publiſhed by Surius, December 6. [or 16.] Laſtly, A Doctrinal Treatiſe about the Worſhip of Images, Printed at Antwerp 1556. in Lat. and at Rome in 1553. in Gr. with a Treatiſe of S. John Damaſcene of Images. Baronius hath alſo Printed the Teſtament or Will of this Abbot [in his Annals in 826.] which contains ſeveral profitable Admonitions and Directions for his Monks, [but chiefly a Superſtitious Zeal for Image-Worſhip.

Worship. It is also Printed with his Sermons at Antwerp in 1602. and in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.] In the Greek Liturgies there are several Hymns, or Songs, in Honour of the Restoration of Images, attributed to him, but they are not his, being made since the Peace was restored to the Greek Church about that subject. F. Sirmondus hath Published the Works of this Monk in Greek and Latin at the end of his own Works. His Works are useful for Monks. He wrote in a plain and easie Style. He died in the Year 826. Nov. 11. His Life was written by his Scholar Michael, part of which is Published in Baronius's Annals. [Tom. 9.] The Relation of his Death made by Naucratius, who was another of his Scholars, hath been Published in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis, in Vol. 2. Auctuar. Biblioth. Patr. [Dr. Cave hath this Treatise in MS. and hath given us a Specimen of its trifling, and vain commendation of the Image-Worshippers, and in particular of Theodorus Studita, in Hist. Lit. p. 512.]

Joseph, Archbishop of Thessalonica, was the Brother of Theodorus, and his Companion in all his Troubles. He was Banished with him for opposing the Marriage of Constantinus Copronymus; the Restoration of Joseph the Steward of Constantinople; and for so zealously maintaining Image-Worship. He hath left us a Discourse in Honour of the Cross, [extant in Gretzer de Cruce, Tom. 2. p. 1200.] and an Epistle to Simeon the Monk, Printed in Baronius's Annal in 808. p. 10. [Dr. Cave, 22.] Joseph Bishop of Thessalonica.

There was another Theodorus [Sirnamed Graptus] which flourished about the same time with Studita, and was one of the most Zealous Patrons of Image-Worship; for the Defence of which, he died in Exile and Prison. He composed the Relation of a Conference of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, with Leo, Published by F. Combefis, with a Narration of the Martyrdom of himself, and Brother Theophanes, who out-lived him, and was Bishop of Nicæa. There is attributed to him an Hymn in commendation of his Brother, which is found among the Greek Offices. [Theodorus also hath a Letter to Joannes Cyziconus, concerning his own and Brothers Sufferings from the Emperor Theophilus; Published also by Father Combefis, and a Book de fide Orthodoxâ contra Iconomachos, yet in MS.] Theodorus.

Theosterictus, a Monk and Scholar of Nicetas, a Defender of Image-Worship, wrote the Life of his Master in a Panegyrick, recited by Metaphrastes, [and is extant in Surius, April 3.] It contains an Abridgment of the Persecutions raised upon the account of Image-Worship, from the Reign of Leo Isaurus to that of Michael Balbas. These are the chief of the Greek Authors which wrote in the beginning of this Age in the dispute of Images. [Besides the forementioned Authors, there were others engaged in this contest of Image Worship, tho' of less note in the Greek Church, as Sergius, called Confessor by Photius, who wrote an History against the Iconaclasts, of which we have nothing but the Name, and the Judicious Censure of Photius of it, in his Biblioth. Co. 67. 2. Michael called Syncellus, who endured much for Image-Worship with Theodorus Studita and Nicephorus, he hath left nothing in the defence of the Cause for which he suffered, but hath two Pieces extant, viz. An Encomium of Dionysius the Areopagite, which is among the Works of Dionysius, Tom. 2. And an Encomium upon the H. Angels and Arch-Angels of God, put out in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis in his Auctuar. Nov. Tom. 1. p. 1525.] Theosterictus.

Claudius Archbishop of Turin, besides the Treatise of Images, of which we have already spake, hath composed several other Works. We have a Comment of his upon the Epistle of S. Paul to the Galatians, Printed at Paris in 1542. and inserted into the Biblioth. Patrum, [Tom. 14. p. 134.] Two Prefaces put out by F. Mabillon in Analect. Tom. 1. of which the first is to his Commentaries on Leviticus, and the other to those of his Epistle to the Ephesians. Tritherius makes mention of several other Commentaries of this Author upon many other Books of the Bible, viz. The Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, and all S. Pauls Epistles. His Comment upon Leviticus is in MS. in the Library of S. German de Prez. His Comment upon the Gospel of St. Matthew is a MS. in the Jesuits College at Paris, and in the Library at the Cathedral Church of Laon. His Comments upon S. Pauls Epistle to the Romans, and 2d to the Corinthians, are in the French Kings Library. That upon the Epistle to the Ephesians is in the Library of the Abby of Fleury, and upon Ruth in the Abby of Good-Hope. F. Labbs hath Published a short Chronicon attributed to this Author. Altho' Jonas Bishop of Orleans makes no great account of this Authors Commentaries, yet we may truly say, that in his Comment upon the Galatians, he explains the literal sense in a familiar and easie manner, agreeing with the true sense of the Apostle, without mixing any Allegories, and invented Senses far from the Subject. Jonas of Orleans, and Dungal, accuse him of reviving not only the Errors of Eustathius, and Vigilanthius, touching the Relicks and Honour of the Saints, and that of Felix Orgelitanus about the Incarnation, but also that of Arrius about the Trinity; yet Jonas owns, that it doth not appear by his Writings, but that he received it from Persons worthy of Credit. Claudius Bishop of Turin.

Dungal, besides his Treatise against Claudius of Turin, hath a Letter directed to the Emperor Charles the Great, about two Eclipses in the Year 810. 'Tis extant in the 10th Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium. Dungal.

The End of the Controversy about Images.

CHAP. II.

A Relation of the Diſpute concerning GRACE and PREDESTINATION.

The beginning of the Controverſie about Predeſtination and Grace.

OF all the Queſtions that were Debated in the Ninth Age, there was none that was managed with more heat and noiſe, than this of Predeſtination and Grace. Gotteſchalcus, a German Born, was the firſt Broacher of it. He was brought up and Inſtructed in the Monaſtery of Augia [the Rich] or Richenou, and was Sirnamed Fulgentius. He made Profeſſion of a Monaſtick Life in the Monaſtery of Orbez in the Dioceſs of Soiſſons, and was Ordained Prieſt at forty years of Age, not by his own Biſhop, but by Rigboldus, Suffragan of the Church of Reims, which made his Ordination to be ſuſpected. Hincmarus deſcribes him to us as an ill-bred, turbulent, and fickle Man, and aſſures us, that this was the ſenſe which the Abbot and Monks of his own Monaſtery had of him. Nevertheleſs, they could not but ſay but he was an Ingenious, Studious, and Subtile Man, but very troubleſome and over-reaching.

About the Year 846, he had a Mind to leave his Monaſtery, (Hincmarus accuſes him of doing it without the leave, or conſent of his Abbot) and go to Rome to viſit the Holy Places there. From thence he went into Dalmatia and Pannonia, where, ſome ſay, under a pretence of Preaching the Goſpel to the Infidels, he began to ſpread his Doctrine of Predeſtination. But however this was, at his return he tarried ſome time in Lombardy, in an Hoſpital Founded by Count Eberard, and had a Conference in 847 with Notingus Biſhop of Vienna, concerning the Predeſtination of the Saints to Glory, and of the Wicked to Damnation. Notingus offended at this Opinion of Gotteſchalcus, not long after being come to meet Lewis King of Germany at a Town of Switzerland, told Rabanus Archbiſhop of Mentz, who promiſed him to confute this Error of Gotteſchalcus in Writing, by the Authorities both of H. Scriptures and Fathers, which promiſe he not long after performed in a Treatiſe, which he ſent with two Letters, one to Notingus, and the other to Count Eberard, both againſt the Error of Gotteſchalcus. In his Treatiſe he accuſes this Monk of teaching that Predeſtination is ſo made, That every Man, that is Predeſtinated to Life, can't be Damn'd; and every Man Predeſtinated to Damnation can't be Sav'd. He chiefly oppoſeth this laſt aſſertion, and ſhews, That ſuch a Predeſtination is contrary to the Goodneſs and Juſtice of God, who deſires the Salvation of all Men, becauſe nothing is more Unjuſt than to Damn a Man who can't avoid Sin. He owns that Predeſtination is aſſerted in H. Scripture, but in this ſenſe, That all Men being fallen by the Sin of the firſt Man into a State of Damnation, can't be delivered but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, who was provided, and Predeſtined from all Eternity. That thoſe, who are freed from the State of Damnation, and to whom both their Original and Actual Sins are Pardoned by Baptiſm, are afterwards Damned for the Sins that they commit wilfully and freely; And that it is by the foreſight of their Evil Will, that they have been Predeſtined; But that the Predeſtination of God, whether to Good or Evil hath no influence upon Man to neceſſitate him either way. That God Predeſtines things only, becauſe he foreſees after what manner they will happen. That he doth not Predeſtine Evil, but foreſees it only, whereas he both foreſees and Predeſtines Good. That out of the whole Maſs of Mankind, he through meer Grace, accepts thoſe, whom he pleaſeth, to Salvation, and leaves others, yet not Ordaining them to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foreſees they will commit freely. Theſe are the Doctrines which Rabanus lays down againſt Gotteſchalcus in his Treatiſe to Notingus, which he endeavours to prove by Texts of Scripture, and Teſtimonies of S. Auſtin, Fulgentius, and Gennadius, whoſe Book concerning the Doctrines of the Church, he cites under the Name of S. Auſtin. He repeats the ſame thing in his Letter to Eberard, and exhorts that Lord not to ſuffer any contrary Doctrine to be Taught in his Dominions. [This Treatiſe and Letters, are Printed alone at Paris 1647. by the care of Sirmondus.]

Rabanus's Book againſt Gotteſchalcus.

Gotteſchalcus ſeeing himſelf thus attacked by an Adverſary of great Credit and Authority, reſolved to ſet himſelf about the Explication of his Opinion, that he might make him underſtand his true meaning, and rectify his miſtake concerning him. Wherefore he went into Germany in the beginning of the Year 848, and finding that the difference between himſelf and Rabanus might be reduced to three Queſtions, 1. Concerning the Predeſtination of the Wicked; 2. Concerning the Will and Death of Jeſus Chriſt to ſave all Men, even Infidels themſelves; and 3. Concerning Free-will, he Compoſed a Treatiſe, in which he oppoſes the Opinion of Rabanus under theſe three heads.

Gotteſchalcus againſt Rabanus.

He

He reproves him for aſſerting, That the Reprobate are not Predeſtined to Damnation. He maintains, That God foreſeeing that they would live and die in Sin, hath Predeſtined them to Eternal Torments. Concerning the 2d Article he ſays, That we muſt underſtand that Text of Scripture, God will have all Men to be ſaved, of thoſe that are actually and effectually ſaved, becauſe there is none that God will have to be ſaved but ſhall be ſaved; And that Jeſus Chriſt hath not poured out his Blood to redeem thoſe that are finally and eternally Reprobated, but only for the Elect. Upon the 3d Queſtion, which concerns Free-will, he reproves Rabanus for taking up the Opinion of Gennadius, the Scholar of that unfortunate Man Caſſian, inſtead of S. Auſtin's. We have not this Treatiſe of Gotteſchalcus, but ſome fragments of it cited by Hincmarus. Gotteſchalcus propounded theſe three Queſtions to the moſt able men of his time, praying them to reſolve them agreeable to the Doctrine of S. Auſtin. He wrote particularly to Lupus Servatus, Marcaldus Abbot of Prumiers, and one Named Jonas.

The Council of Mentz against Gotteſchalcus.

In October 848, there was a Council held at Mentz, in which Gotteſchalcus was accuſed by Rabanus. Gotteſchalcus preſented a Confeſſion of his Faith, in which he declared, That he owned and believed before God, and his Saints, that there were two ſorts of Predeſtination. The one of the Elect to Eternal Happineſs, and the other of the Reprobate to Damnation, becauſe as God hath immutably Predeſtined the Elect before the Creation of the World through his free mercy to Life Eternal, in like manner hath he immutably Predeſtin'd the Reprobate for their wicked Actions to Eternal Death. This expreſſion ſhews plainly, what was the ſtate of the Queſtion between Gotteſchalcus and Rabanus. Rabanus accuſes him for believing, That God Predeſtined men to Damnation, without any proviſion of their wicked Works. Gotteſchalcus in this Confeſſion of Faith owns, That no Man is Predeſtined to Damnation but for his Crimes. Propter ipſorum mala Merita. Rabanus acknowledges, That God knows thoſe, that are in a ſtate of Sin, and hath decreed to puniſh them with Eternal Death, becauſe of their Sins; but he will not call it Predeſtination to Death, leſt Men ſhould think God alſo Predeſtines them to Sin. And Gotteſchalcus reſolutely maintained, That there was a Predeſtination to Death as well as to Life. They both agreed, That Predeſtination to Life was free and gratuitous; That God hath choſen, whom he pleaſeth, out of the Corrupt Maſs of Mankind, to Salvation, and through meer Mercy, and fits them for Salvation by his Graces, and all other neceſſary means for that end; As alſo they both confeſs, That God deals after the ſame manner with the Reprobate, whom he condemns to Eternal Death only for their Sins, of which he is no manner of cauſe. But Rabanus would by no means allow this laſt Decree, Predeſtination to Evil, and Gotteſchalcus ſtiffly maintained it. The Biſhops of this Synod not being able to perſwade him to change his Opinion, or way of ſpeaking, condemned him; and knowing that he was a Monk of the Dioceſs of Soiſſons, which was ſubject to the Archbiſhop of Reims, where he was Ordain'd, they ſent him to Hincmarus, to whom Rabanus wrote in theſe words. Ye know, that a certain Vagabond Monk named Gotteſchalcus, who ſays that he was Ordain'd Prieſt in your Dioceſs, being come from Italy to Mentz, is found to teach a wicked and pernicious Doctrine concerning Predeſtination, maintaining that as there is a Predeſtination of God for the Good, ſo there is alſo for the Evil; and that there are many Perſons in the World that can't return from their Errors, nor turn from their Sins, becauſe of the Predeſtination of God, which conſtrains them to ſuffer their Death, to which they are determin'd, being in their own Nature incorrigible, and worthy of Damnation. This Man being known to maintain this Doctrine in the Council lately held at Mentz, and being found incorrigible, we have thought fit, according to the Order and Advice of our moſt Pious King Lewis, to ſend him to you, after we had condemn'd him and his pernicious Doctrine, that you may keep him within your Dioceſs, out of which he is gone contrary to the Canons. Do not ſuffer him to teach his Errors any longer, nor ſeduce the People; for I perceive, he hath already ſeduced ſeveral Perſons, who are become leſs careful of their Salvation, ſince he hath put this Opinion into their Minds, ſaying in them, Why ſhould I labour for my Salvation? If I am Predeſtin'd to Damnation I can't avoid it; and on the contrary, whatever Sins I am guilty of, If I am Predeſtin'd to Salvation I ſhall be certainly ſaved. Thus have I, in a few words, ſhewed you his Doctrine, which you may better, and more fully underſtand, from his own Mouth, and act according as you think fit againſt him. [This Epiſtle is alſo Printed by Sirmondus at Paris, 1647] Hincmarus was deſcended of a Noble Family in France, and brought up in the Monaſtery of S. Denys [near Paris] where he wore a Canons Habit, according to the Cuſtom of the Monks of that Monaſtery. Being come from it, he was a long time at the Court of Lewis the Kind, but returned again to the Monaſtery of S. Denys, after it was reformed by Hildum in the year 829 [then Abbot of it.] He accompanied him into Saxony, whither he was Baniſhed, but did not abett the Faction of Lotharius with him, but, on the contrary, continued faithful to Lewis the Kind. When this Prince was reſtored, Hincmarus, who had a diſpoſition very proper for ſuch Affairs, abode at Court to ſerve the King and Biſhops about Eccleſiaſtical Matters. After ſome time ſpent thus about Worldly matters, he returned again to his Retirement in the Monaſtery, but he ſtaid not long there, for in May 844, he was choſen Archbiſhop of Reims, ten years after the Depoſition of Ebbo, in whoſe place Fulcus was put, and preſided almoſt 9 years in it, and was ſucceeded by Noto, who held the See but a year and half. He was Conſecrated in a Synod of Archbiſhops and Biſhops held at Beauvais, after he was deſired by the Clergy and People of the Metropolis of Reims, with the conſent of the Abbots, and Monks of his Monaſtery. A year after his Ordination, the Emperor Lotharius, who favoured Ebbo, (who was Depoſed meerly becauſe he had put Lewis the Kind to Penance) and hated Hincmarus, whom he looked upon to be wholly for Charles the Bald, King of France, endeavoured to revoke the Sentence passed upon Ebbo, and restore him, supposing, that some did not acknowledge Hincmarus to be their Lawful Bishop of Reims. To this end he wrote to the Pope, and obtain'd a Letter from him, wherein he gave Gonbaldus, Archbishop of Rouan, Commission to examine this Affair with such Bishops of the Kingdom as he should think fit to choose, who should meet at Treves, and having cited Hincmarus, examine him before the Popes Legats, who should be present. After Easter, Hincmarus went to the Council, and waited for the Popes Legats till the time appointed. After this, Gonbaldus Summoned Ebbo, who not daring to appear, left Hincmarus in quiet possession of the Archbishoprick of Reims. He governed that Church almost thirty years, for he Died not till Dec. 21. 882. He had a great share in all the Affairs which were transacted in that time in the Church of France, and as to his own particular, had no small difficulties to extricate himself out of, in which he shewed a great deal of Wit, Diligence and Courage. Being endued with these Qualities he was pleased to meet with so good an occasion of signalizing himself by the Condemnation of Gotteschalcus; he first heard him himself, and resolved with himself to present him before the Council of Bishops, that was to meet with the Parliament appointed by Charles the Bald at Queircy, which was the Kings Palace in the Dioceſs of Reims. And that things might be done in the better order, he gave Rhotadus notice of it, to be present there, because he was the propereſt Judge of Gotteschalcus. Wenilo Archbishop of Sens was present with Hincmarus, and 11 other Bishops, among whom were Rhotadus Bishop of Soissons, two Suffragan Bishops, of whom Rigboldus, who Ordain'd Gotteschalcus, was one, and three Abbots, viz. Paschasius Rathbertus Abbot of Corby, Bavo Abbot of the Monastery of Orbez, where Gotteschalcus was a Monk, and Hilduinus Abbot of Hautevilliers, Gotteschalcus having been questioned in their presence, and maintained the same Opinions which he had done at Mentz with the same obstinacy and incorrigibleness, casting some reflexions upon his Enemies, was condemned for an Heretick, degraded from his Priesthood, which he had received from Rigboldus Suffragan of Reims, without the knowledge of his Bishop; and moreover, for his obstinacy, was condemned, according to the Laws, Canons of the Council of Agatha, [Can. 38.] and Constitutions of S. Bennet, to be beaten with Rods, and Imprisoned, as the Bishops of Germany had before ordered. Hincmarus fearing that Rhotadus had not power enough to see this Sentence executed, and so he might escape, took care to shut him up in a Monastery of his Dioceſs. The Judgment passed against Gotteschalcus was delivered in these words.

The Life of Hincmarus.

Council of Quiercy.

Brother Gotteschalcus, know that thou art deprived of the Sacred Office of Priesthood, which if thou hast ever received, you have managed contrary to all Rules, and Profaned, to this day, by thy Manners, disorderly Actions, and corrupt Doctrines; And that by the Judgment of the H. Spirit, of whose Grace the Priesthood is a special Gift, and by the Virtue of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, thou art utterly forbidden to officiate in any Office of it for the future. Moreover, because thou hast intermeddled with Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, contrary to the Profession and Duty of a Monk, and in contempt of the Ecclesiastical Laws, we do, by Virtue of our Episcopal Authority, Order and Command, that according to the Rules of the Church, thou be severely Scourged, and afterwards shut up in a close Prison; And that thou may never Teach again to infect others, we enjoyn you perpetual silence in the Name of the Eternal Word. Thus was Gotteschalcus Condemned in the presence, and with the consent of his Bishop, Abbot, him that Ordain'd him, and of those who were well affected to the Doctrine of S. Austin, which shews that he had an injury.

Gotteschalcus Punished and Imprisoned.

This Sentence, which was pronounced against him, was Executed with the utmost severity, for he was Whipped in the presence of the Emperor Charles, and the Bishops, till he cast out of his own Hand, into the Fire, a Book, wherein he made a Collection of such Texts of Scripture, and Testimonies of the Fathers, as proved his Opinion; after which he was kept close Prisoner in the Monastery of Hautevilliers in the Dioceſs of Reims. Nevertheleſs, Hincmarus, that he might induce him to change his Opinion, sent him a Writing, in which he explained those places of the Fathers on which he grounded it, and proved, That God indeed knows them that shall be Reprobated for their Sins, but hath Predestinated no Man to Evil; and that his presience is not the cause of any Mans ruin. He sent him also a second Instruction, but could not remove him from it.

Two Confessions of Faith made by Gotteschalcus.

Hincmarus also wrote to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, an Account of what had passed in the Judgment given against him, and consulted that Bishop what he ought to do in case Gotteschalcus should continue obstinate, whether he should deprive him of the use of Divine Service and the Communion. What answer Prudentius gave to these Questions is not known, but about the same time Gotteschalcus composed two Confessions of Faith, one more long, in which he confesseth, That God hath not Predestinated any Man to Sin, or Evil, but to Good only, which is of two sorts, viz. The Rewards of his Favour, and the Effects of his Justice; That he hath freely Predestinated his Elect to Life Eternal, and also hath Predestined the Devils and Reprobates to Eternal Death. He grounds this Doctrine upon Consequences taken from Holy Scripture, and assertions of the Fathers, chiefly of S. Austin, Gregory, Fulgentius, and Isidore. That this Predestination is but one in it self, though it hath respect to two Objects, as Charity towards God and our Neighbour is the same Charity in two parts. To prove himself no Heretick, he brings a Definition of an Heretick out of S. Cassiodorus, viz. He is a Person, saith this Author, who either out of Ignorance, or Contempt of the Law of God, defends a new Error, or follows an old one. He affirms, That he holds nothing but what is agreeable to the Doctrine of H. Scripture and the Ancients; and consequently, the the Definition of an Heretick doth not touch him. He doubts not but he can prove the Truth of his Doctrine in an Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly, if he could be ſo happy as to have the liberty given him, not only by his Diſcourſes, but alſo by caſting himſelf into ſcalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, without ſuffering any harm. He explains himſelf more clearly in his ſhorter Confeſſion of Faith, declaring, That God hath not Predeſtinated the Devils, and Wicked men; to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foreſees that they will commit. [Theſe two Confeſſions are Publiſhed by Biſhop Uſher, in his Hiſtory of Gotteſchalcus. Dublin 1631. Hanov. 1662.]

Hincmarus alſo wrote a Treatiſe in defence of his Opinion, to the Monks and Recluſes of his own Dioceſs, againſt the Opinion of Gotteſchalcus. ‡ Ratramnus a Monk of Corby, finding ſome things in it that deſerved a Confutation, wrote a Letter againſt that Treatiſe. Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes wrote alſo a Book, in which he explains his ſenſe of the Queſtions of his time, and ſent it with a Letter, which ſerved inſtead of a Preface to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, and Pardulus Biſhop of Laon. He attributes much to the Authority of S. Auſtin in theſe Matters, and in the body of his Book, he ſets down a Collection of ſeveral paſſages to that purpoſe out of him and other Fathers. He doth not diſagree from Gotteſchalcus's Opinion concerning Predeſtination, declaring notwithſtanding, that God is not the Author of Sin, and that he Damns no body but for their Crimes, which deſerve ſo great a puniſhment. He follows alſo the Principles of S. Auſtin about Grace, Free-will, and Gods Will to ſave all Men. This Writing was ſent to Hincmarus and Pardulus, after the Council held at Paris about the end of the year 849, in which this Matter was mentioned, but not debated, or determined in a full Council; nevertheleſs the part, which the Biſhops began then to abett, made it ſo famous, that Charles the Bald being at Bourges on his return from the Siege of Toulouſe, would have it cleared, and gave Order to Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, and Ratramnus Monk of Corby, to write upon that Subject. Hincmarus, for his part, wrote about it toward Eaſter in 850, to Rabanus Archbiſhop of Mentz, who had engaged in this Conteſt. He ſent him the Treatiſe which he had written to the Monks of his Dioceſs againſt Gotteſchalcus, with the Writings of ſome other Authors, which ſeemed to favour him, and among them the Book of Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes. Rabanus having ſeen them, would not undertake to anſwer the Teſtimonies alledged by that Biſhop, but collected ſome Texts of Scripture, and Sayings of the Fathers, about Predeſtination, to prove that the Word Predeſtination was never taken in an ill ſenſe; That God inclines no Man to Evil; That he is not the Author of our Damnation; That he doth not in a proper ſenſe harden the Heart of a Man, but only permits it to be hardened, either by their own ſinful actions, or by the malice of the Devil. That he made not Death; That he repents not for the deſtruction of the Angels; That he would have all men to be ſaved. In the concluſion, he adviſes Hincmarus to hinder men from debating ſuch ſort of Queſtions, which may cauſe much ſcandal among the Faithful, and not to ſuffer Gotteſchalcus either to Write or Teach. He wonders that that Monk ſhould be allowed to Write, who is culpable both in Practice and Doctrine. He adviſes him to ſuffer him no longer to Write, or Diſpute for the future, till he hath retracted, and much diſapproves of their letting him enjoy Communion. He accuſes him of Obſtinacy and Pride, and looks upon him as incorrigible. He reproves him for wiſhing that he might paſs through Veſſels of ſcalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, and ſays he never heard of the like; That it was to tempt God; That he could not endure that puniſhment if it were Ordained for him, and therefore 'tis a great piece of preſumption to wiſh for it, and deſire it.

‡ Or Bertram.

The Writings of Hincmarus, Bertram and Rabanus, about Predeſtination.

Nevertheleſs Lupus Servatus, which I do not believe to be a different Perſon from the Abbot of Ferrara, who was conſulted about the Queſtions of the Times, 1. By Gotteſchalcus; 2. By Hincmarus; and laſtly, by Charles the Bald, made a Book to clear the three Queſtions which Gotteſchalcus had propounded to the Council of Mentz, about Free-will, Predeſtination to Evil, and about the Death of Jeſus Chriſt for all men; in which Treatiſe he lays down, and proves theſe Principles and Doctrines; That God, who only is immutable, hath made Spiritual Creatures ſubject to change, who may do either Good or Evil. This appears in the fall of the Angels, who being Created good, fell into Sin by the depravation of their Nature, whereas others of them adhering voluntarily to God, have received this as the Reward of their Fidelity, That they can't fall from their Happineſs. That Man who is compounded of a Material Body and Spiritual Soul, was created in a State of Happineſs, exempted from Death, and perfectly free; That he could do good by making uſe of the aſſiſtance of God's Grace, and Sin by abandoning of it, but having ſinned freely, he is under an unavoidable neceſſity of Dying, and ſubject to the irregular Motions of Concupiſcence. That the whole Nature of Man hath been corrupted by the Sin of the firſt Man, and all deſcended of him are fallen with him. That Men have ſome ſort of freedom, but can't chooſe that which is good but by the aſſiſtance of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. That our Liberty only inclines us to Evil, and ſo we may ruin our ſelves, but no Man can ſave himſelf, or free himſelf from the power of Sin, but by the help of Jeſus Chriſt. That they that are Damned, are ſo by Gods Juſtice; and they that are Saved, are ſo by his gracious Mercy, becauſe by the Sin of the firſt Man, we all deſerve Damnation, and that no Man could eſcape it, if God did not ſave him through pure Mercy; tho we muſt not inquire, Why God ſhews Mercy on ſome and not on others: That he could do ſo to all, but it is his good Pleaſure to ſave ſome, and leave others in the Maſs of Perdition: That when he ſays in Scripture that he will have all Men to be ſaved, it ought to be underſtood only of thoſe that are actually ſaved. That the Word All is capable of exceptions, and may mean all ſort of Men; That Predeſtination is gratuitous, and not upon the account of our Merits. That it is in purſuance of this Election, that God gives his Grace to ſome, by which they are able and ſedulous to do good, and leaves others to their corrupt wills by not aſſiſting them. That he is not the Author of the Evil Men do, but Man ought to impute it to himſelf, or rather to the Devil, who leads him into it. That God foreſees both good and evil, but he predeſtines nothing but the good, that he only ſuffers the evil and puniſheth it; That what God hath predeſtined ſhall infallibly fall out, but that his Predeſtination impoſeth no neceſſity; That no Chriſtian ought to think himſelf of the number of the Reprobate, Men ought to labour to live well, that their puniſhment may be the leſs. He paſſes over ſlightly the Queſtion about Predeſtination to Damnation. He confeſſes that he meets not with that word uſed in that ſenſe in Holy Scripture, and that the great Lights of the Church abhor that expreſſion, for fear Men ſhould think God hath made his Creatures to puniſh them, and that he unjuſtly condemns Perſons, who have no power to avoid Sin or Damnation. That nevertheleſs, it happens, that as God hath ordained the puniſhments which are conſequent upon the Sin of the Firſt Man, ſo he hath ordained the puniſhment of Sinners, yet ſo as they themſelves are the Authors of their own Damnation. That ſince Men agree in the Matter, they ſhould not quarrel about the Words and Expreſſions, ſeeking to get an unprofitable Victory. Laſtly, he paſſeth to the 3d Queſtion concerning the Extent of the Redemption of Jeſus Chriſt, which he calls the Meaſure of his Blood. He ſets down and approves of the Expreſſions of Scripture, which import, That Jeſus Chriſt died for all Men, and hath redeemed all, but he ſays, that they ought to be underſtood as he hath explained them, in which it is ſaid, He will have all Men to be ſaved. He adds, that it may be ſaid as a probability, that he died for all, that are in his Church, and receive the Sacraments, whether they be in the number of the Elect, or Reprobate. He ſays, that ſome Men condemn this Opinion of Blaſphemy; that he himſelf ſhould be of that Judgment, and ſhould believe that God puniſhes ſome of the Reprobate the leſs for the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, but that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, that they are of no worth to thoſe that are circumciſed, it ſeems reaſonable to believe that the Death of Jeſus Chriſt is of no worth to thoſe that are indeed Baptized, but relapſe and die in their Sins and Infidelity; That nevertheleſs, that he may not render himſelf odious to them who hold that Jeſus Chriſt died not only for the Good, but alſo for Sinners, he ſets down a Paſſage of S. Chryſoſtome, which ſeems to favour that Opinion, and may unite all divided Minds about that Matter. Jeſus Chriſt, ſaith that Excellent Biſhop, by his Doctrine and Holineſs died for all, not only for the faithful, but all the World, if all do not believe he hath done whatever was requiſite on his part to ſave them. After theſe Remarks Lupus concludes, leaving every one to their liberty to chooſe what Opinion they judge trueſt. He confirms his Opinion, which he laid down in this Treatiſe, by a Collection of Paſſages out of S. Auſtin, S. Jerom, and ſome others of the Fathers upon theſe three Queſtions. [This Treatiſe of Lupus is extant, Printed by Sirmondus in Holland 1648, and 1650, and with the reſt of his Works at Paris 1664.]

Lupus's Letter to Hincmarus and Pardulus.

After Lupus had compoſed this Tract, he ſent a Letter to Hincmarus and Pardulus, which contained an Abridgment of his Doctrine. In it he ſays, that the trueſt Opinion is, that Predeſtination in regard to the Elect is a Preparative Grace, and in reſpect to the Wicked is a withdrawing of the ſame Grace; That all Men are born in a State of Damnation, and God takes ſuch out of that State, as he pleaſeth by his Mercy, and leaves others in it by his Juſtice. So that it is true that God predeſtines thoſe he hardens, not by impelling them into ſin, but by not keeping them from it; That this Predeſtination doth neceſſitate neither the good, or evil, becauſe both have a freedom of will, which excludes a fatal neceſſity; That the Elect, who receive from God the power to will and do, do freely perform all that conduceth to their Salvation, and the Reprobate who are forſaken by God, do voluntarily, and not againſt their wills, thoſe actions which deſerve Eternal Puniſhment; That no Man is ſo ſilly, as to ſay, that there is a neceſſity, where the will hath a command, although it be aſſiſted by the Grace of God, or left by his juſt Judgment. But as to Infants, who dye before they come to the uſe of Reaſon, it cannot be ſaid that their will hath a part in their Salvation, or Damnation, becauſe they are either ſaved by the Grace of Baptiſm, or damned by the Sin of the Firſt Man. [This Letter is among his Epiſtles Printed by Maſſonus at Paris, 1588, and in the foremention'd Edition of all his Works.]

It is eaſie to ſee, that this Author, although he was of S. Auſtins Judgment, yet manages his Expreſſions ſo warily, that he may offend neither ſide, but bring them to an Agreement, but it happened to him, as it ordinarily does to them that are Mediators for Peace, though they carry themſelves never ſo wiſely and cautiouſly, and have often Reaſon of their ſide, they are diſliked by both Parties at variance. Gotteſchalcus, a very rough and ſevere Man, blamed the mildneſs which Lupus Servatus had uſed, and the moderate Expreſſions which he had brought. That Man (ſaith he) in a Letter written to Retramnus, is ſo cautious and moderate, and hath ſo cunningly anſwered the 3 Queſtions of which he ſpeaks in his Book, that he agrees not throughly with either Party. Hincmarus and Pardulus were not better ſatisfied, but accuſed him of Opinions unworthy of the Mercy and Goodneſs of God, which forced him to write his Letter to Charles the Bald, to explain his Judgment more clearly in that Diſpute. It contains an Abridgment of his former Treatiſe concerning the Fall of all Men in Adam, concerning the Election which God is pleaſed to make of ſome; concerning Predeſtination and Reprobation; concerning the Aſſiſtance which God is pleaſed to give Men through his mere Mercy; concerning the Juſt deſertion of the Wicked; concerning the loſs of Man's free will to do good; concerning the Efficaciouſneſs of Grace, and the Death of Lupus's Letter to Charles the Bald.

Jeſus

Jeſus Chriſt for all Men. Which laſt Article he explains more largely, for after he hath cited ſome Paſſages of S. Auſtin to prove, that when he ſays, that Chriſt died for all Men, he ought to be underſtood of thoſe only that are ſaved; he oppoſeth the ſaying of S. Chryſoſtome againſt them, but we muſt obſerve, that he is not of his Judgment, by taking notice, that he ſaith with all due reſpect to him, that he did not well underſtand that place of Scripture, and that he hath not proved his Opinion by any Teſtimony. Laſtly, he rejects the Authority of Fauſtus, as a Biſhop who was in an Error, and ſays, that we muſt keep to the Judgment of S. Auſtin, S. Jerom, and other Fathers, commended by Pope Gelaſius, and adviſes the Emperor to call a Councel of Learned Men about theſe Queſtions, who may Examine whether he ſpeaks Reaſon, or no. [This Letter is alſo extant in the fore-mentioned Editions of his Works.]

Ratramnus or Bertramus's Treatiſe about Predeſtination.

At the ſame time Retramnus, a Monk of Corby, who had alſo been conſulted by the Emperor about theſe famous Queſtions, compoſed a Treatiſe of Predeſtination divided into two Books. The firſt contains a Collection of Paſſages out of the Fathers, that all that is done in this World, is done by Order and Direction of God's Providence. That although he be not indeed the cauſe of the Crimes, and Sins of Wicked Men, yet they are alſo ſubject to the Order of Providence, and ſerve for the Execution of his Will. That God hath foreſeen from all Eternity what ſhall befall the Good and Evil, the Elect and Reprobate. That the Predeſtination of the Saints is the Effect of his Mercy, and the number of the Elect can neither be increaſed, nor diminiſhed, nor altered. That all the holy thoughts and good actions of the Saints, by which they acquire themſelves happineſs, are the effect of the mere Grace of God. That our Free-will is too weak to do any good, unleſs it be ſtrengthned by the Grace of God, which helps us to do good. That this Grace operates in us to will and to do, and that it is neceſſary for the beginning of Faith and Prayer. In the Second he treats of the Predeſtination of Sinners, and ſpeaks by the by of the Predeſtination of the Elect. He ſhews by the Teſtimonies of St. Auſtin, Fulgentius, and other Fathers, that God hath not predeſtined Sinners to ſin, but to the puniſhment of their Sins, and Eternal Torments. He rejects the diſtinction of thoſe who ſay, that Eternal Puniſhment was ordained and appointed for Sinners, but they were not predeſtined to it. He maintains that this Predeſtination did not impoſe a neceſſity of Sinning upon any Man, though thoſe that are Elected by the mere Mercy of God, ſhall be infallibly ſaved; and thoſe whom God leaves in the Maſs of Perdition, ſhall be infallibly damned for their Sins which they voluntarily commit. He adds, that we ought to attribute all the good we do to God, and all the evil we do to our ſelves, becauſe God never inclines us to evil, but only leaves us to the motions of our Wills. At the end of theſe Books Retramnus prays the Emperor not to publiſh them, before theſe Queſtions be fully examined and cleared, that they might know which Opinion to follow. He adds, that if this Book diſpleaſeth the Emperor, that he would correct it, or ſhew him what corrections he would have made in them. [This Treatiſe is publiſhed by Mauginus in Collect. Script. Tom. 1. p. 29. and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15. p. 442.]

Scotus's Book about Predeſtination.

The Emperor gave theſe two Books of Lupus and Retramnus, to Hincmarus and Pardulus to examine them, who oppoſed them to Amalarius, a Deacon of Treves, and Johannes Erigina Scotus, whom they had ordered to write upon this ſubject. We have not the Work of Amalarius, but only that of Joannes Scotus, which, according to the Genius of that Author, is full of Scholaſtick Subtleties and Diſtinctions. He begins with this Poſition, That every Queſtion may be reſolved by four general Rules of Philoſophy, viz. Diviſion, Definition, Demonſtration, and Analyſis, and the reſt of his Work is not leſs Logical, for although he cites ſeveral Paſſages of S. Auſtin, yet he chiefly proves his Aſſertions by Scholaſtical Reaſons and Arguments. He rejects the double Predeſtination, and proves that Predeſtination doth not impoſe any neceſſity. He maintains, that Man is abſolutely free after the Sin of Adam, and that although he cannot do good without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt yet he doth it without being conſtrained to it, or forced by the Will of God, by his own free choice. He adds, that Sin, and the Conſequence of it, the Puniſhments with which it is rewarded, being mere Privations, are neither foreſeen nor predeſtined by God. That Predeſtination hath no place but in thoſe things which God hath preordered in order to Eternal Happineſs, and ſuppoſeth, that this Predeſtination ariſeth from the foreſight of the good uſe of our free-will. To prove what he had aſſerted, that Eternal Puniſhments are mere Privations, he affirms, That the Torments of the Damned are nothing but privations of Happineſs, or the trouble of being deprived of it; ſo that according to him Material Fire is no part of the Damned's Torments. That there is no other Fire prepared for them but the fourth Element, through which the Bodies of all Men muſt paſs, but that the Bodies of the Elect are changed into an Ætherical Nature, and are not ſubject to the power of Fire, whereas on the contrary the Bodies of the Wicked are changed into Air, and ſuffer Torments by the Fire becauſe of their contrary qualities; and for this reaſon 'tis, that the Dæmons, who had a Body of an Ætherial Nature, were maſſed with a Body of Air, that they may feel the Fire. Thus did Philoſophy lead this Author to many wild and extravagant Notions and Opinions. [This Piece is put out by Maugius in his Vind. prædeſt. & Gratiæ Tom. 1. p. 103.]

Prudentius's Work againſt Scotus.

Wemlo or Ganelo, Archbiſhop of Sens, having read this Work, gathered out of it ſeveral Propoſitions, which he put under 19 Heads according to the number and order of the Chapters of Scotus's Work, and ſent them to Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, who having read them, found, as he thought, not only the Errors of Pelagius in them, but alſo the Impiety of the Collyridians. Whereupon he compoſed a Book to confute him, in the Preface of which he accuſes John Scotus of following of Pelagius, Cæleſtius, and Julian, to reſiſt the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Juſtice of God;

God, to deny Original Sin, and many other Blaſphemous Doctrines. Yet John Scotus did not deny Original Sin, and acknowledged the neceſſity of Grace in his Work, but Prudentius thought he found ſuch Principles in it, as ſeemed to abet the Doctrine of Pelagius. Prudentius anſwered John Scotus's Book Chapter by Chapter, and oppoſed the Judgment and Authority of the Fathers to his falſe Reaſonings. [The 19 Heads gathered out of Scotus's Book, are Printed in Biſhop Uſher's Hiſtory of Gotteſchalcus, cap. 19.]

After he hath rejected his Method of deciding all things by the four Rules of Logick, and ſhew'd, that Queſtions of Divinity are not ſo to be handled, he confutes Scotus's Opinion of Predeſtination, Free-will, and the puniſhment of the Damned, and proves the contrary Opinion. He diſtinguiſhes Predeſtination from Preſcience, and ſhews that Preſcience extends to Sin, but not Predeſtination. He diſtinguiſhes Predeſtination into two ſorts, the one by which God hath freely Predeſtined the Elect to Grace and Glory, the other by which he hath Deſtined the Wicked, whoſe Sins he foreſees, to Eternal Damnation. He proves that Man, ſince the Fall, hath not a full Liberty and Power to do good, and that he cannot do it, not only without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, but that his Grace excites, impels, and enables him to do it. He maintains, that no Man affirms that Grace wholly deſtroys Free-will, or that Predeſtination impoſes any Neceſſity upon men, but he obſerves, that Free-will is nothing elſe but a voluntary choice, and unconſtrained acting of the Mind. He, in the laſt place, decides the extravagant Opinions of Scotus about the Torments of the Damned, and propounds the Doctrine of the Church, and Fathers, who acknowledge, that Damnation conſiſts not only in the privation of Happineſs, but Tortures of Fire. [This confutation of Scotus's Book by Prudentius is extant in Mauguinus's Vindic. Gratiæ, Tom. 2. p. 191. and ſome parts of it are in Biſhop Uſher's Hiſt. of Gott. c. 8. & 11.]

Florus's Writings againſt Scotus.

The ſame Extracts of Scotus's Book being ſent to the Church of Lyons, they employed one of their Deacons, named Florus, to write againſt him. This Deacon ſome time before delivering his Opinion concerning Predeſtination, ſaid, in his Diſcourſe, That God hath freely Predeſtinated the Elect to Grace and Glory, but he only foreſees the Crimes and Sins of the Reprobate, and afterwards Ordains, and Predeſtines them to Damnation; and concerning Free-will, that 'tis ſo much weakened by the Sin of the firſt Man, that it can do no good thing unleſs it be enlighten'd, and ſtrengthned by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſame Doctrine he teaches us in his Tract againſt Scotus, and lays down a twofold Predeſtination, or rather Predeſtination under a twofold reſpect. 1. A gratuitous Predeſtination of the Elect to Grace and Glory, and a Predeſtination of the Reprobate to Damnation, for their Sins which they commit by their own Free-will; and maintains, that tho' our Free-will can chooſe that which is good, yet it never would chooſe, or do it, if it were not aſſiſted by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. And to explain this, he makes uſe of the compariſon of a Sick Man, of whom we may ſay, that he may recover his health, although he hath need of Phyſick to reſtore it; or of a Dead Man, that he may be raiſed, but by the Divine Power. In like manner, ſaith he, the Free-will being Diſtempered, and Dead, by the Sin of the firſt Man, may be revived, but not by its own Virtue, but by the Grace and Power of God, who hath pity on it, which Florus underſtands not only of that Grace, which is neceſſary for actions, but of that alſo which is neceſſary to ſeek Converſion by Prayer, and begin to do well; Hitherto neither Prudentius, nor the Church of Lyons, nor any other Author, had declared themſelves for Gotteſchalcus. They contented themſelves in thus treating upon the Queſtion, without engaging on either ſide. Florus, who in his firſt Diſcourſe thought him much to blame, ſeems to doubt in his anſwer to Scotus, where in the 4th Chapter he ſays, That he knows not how that unhappy Monk was Condemned and Impriſoned; adding, That if he was really guilty of Hereſie, as he is accuſed, it were Juſt, that according to the Cuſtom of the Church, all the Churches of the Kingdom ſhould be acquainted with his Condemnation, and the cauſe why he was Condemned. [This Treatiſe is extant in Mauguin's Vind. Gratiæ at Paris 1650, p. 575. and in the Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 8.]

Amalo's Letters to Gotteſchalcus.

Nevertheleſs, Amolo Archbiſhop of Lyons wrote a Letter to Gotteſchalcus about the ſame time, in which it appears, that he thought him faulty. In the beginning of it, he gives him the Title of Moſt Dear Brother, (although he ſays, he knew him an Enemy to Brotherly Unity) becauſe Chriſtian Charity ought not to ceaſe or be cooled, even towards thoſe that are our Enemies. He tells him, that he loves him moſt heartily, and wiſhes as well to him as to himſelf; But he ſays, that having read and examined his Writings, which he had ſent him by a Brother, he had diſputed with himſelf a long time whether he ſhould anſwer him, becauſe he had been accuſed a long time of dangerous attempts againſt the Church, and had ſtill held his Opinion, although he was condemned by the Authority of a Council for his Obſtinacy; That he was afraid leſt he ſhould be thought imprudent in holding correſpondence by Letters with a Perſon who had been condemned by his Brethren; but on the other ſide, he took himſelf obliged by Chriſtian Charity, to anſwer his Requeſt. Laſtly, That being convinced by the admonition which Jeſus Chriſt propounds in the Parable of the Samaritan, that it is our Duty to comfort our Brethren in affliction, and to have ſuch a ſincere Charity towards our Brethren, as to live in Unity, and communicate one with another in all Offices and Services of Love, after he had begged God's Grace to enable him to give him neceſſary Comforts and Inſtructions, and to fit his Mind to receive them with Meekneſs and Humility, he looked upon himſelf to be under obligations to anſwer him. And firſt of all, he adviſes him to be of a peaceable and ſubmiſſive Spirit. He tells him, that he had heard with grief, that he had began to ſpread abroad his new Doctrines, and to raiſe Diſputes about unprofitable Queſtions in Germany.

That

That ſince he had ſeen one of his Writings, in which he explains his Opinion at length, and endeavours to prove it by the Teſtimonies of the Fathers, and H. Scripture. And laſtly, That he had lately received a Writing of his directed to the Biſhops, or rather made againſt the Biſhops who were concerned in his Condemnation. That by his Writings he perceived, that his Tenets were dangerous; ſo that he thought he could not do a better piece of Service, than to ſet down in ſhort thoſe Propoſitions that ſeemed contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, and confute them by Scripture, and the Judgment of the Church. That he ought to keep firmly to that Doctrine, if he will be one of the Living Members of Jeſus Chriſt. That he did not ſend this Work directly to him, becauſe he was Excommunicated, but to his Metropolitan, that he being moved with compaſſion toward him, may admit him again into the Unity of the Church upon the abjuring of his Errors. After this Preface he ſaith, that this Propoſition which he hath delivered diſpleaſeth him. That all thoſe that are redeemed by the Blood of Chriſt cannot periſh; becauſe he ſays, 'twill then follow, that either no Man that is Baptized can be Damned: Or, that thoſe who are Baptized, and Regenerate by Baptiſm, and yet afterward periſh, are not truly Baptized, or Redeemed by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; now both are falſe, and contrary to the Scripture, and Faith of the Church. In the ſecond place, he is angry that he is perſwaded that the Holy, and true Sacraments of the Church, Exorciſm, Baptiſm, Confirmation, Unction, and the Euchariſt, are given to no purpoſe, to thoſe that are in the number of the Reprobate, becauſe they are not Redeemed by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, without which the Sacraments are no better than uſeleſs Ceremonies. He maintains, that they do effectually work upon thoſe that do not perſevere. In the third place, he can't approve that which he holds, That Infants and Adult Perſons, who are Baptized, but are not of the number of the Elect, are not true Members of the Church of Jeſus Chriſt. In the fourth place, he doth not like his words where ſpeaking of Predeſtination, he ſaith, That the Devils and Reprobates are Predeſtined to Damnation, ſo that none of them can be ſaved. He affirms, That this is an horrible Blaſphemy againſt God, and an Impiety, that makes Sin neceſſary. That God, indeed, foreſees the Sins of Devils and wicked Men, without which they would be neceſſitated; and that he hath not Deſtined them to eternal puniſhments but upon the previſion of their Sins, which he knew they would commit freely. Fifthly, He abhors the Propoſition delivered by Gotteſchalcus, that the Damned are as infallibly, and irrevocably Predeſtined to Damnation, as God is Infallible and Immutable; And he laughs at that which he adds, That the Biſhops ought to exhort the Reprobate to Pray, that tho' their Damnation is irrevocable, yet their Torments may be leſs. Sixthly, He can't endure what he hath ſaid, That God and his Saints rejoyce at the Eternal Condemnation of the Reprobates. He ſays, That God rejoyces in their Deſtruction, but not for it; That he rejoyces not in their Evil doing, but in the Exaltation of his own Juſtice. Laſtly, He condemns his behaviour toward the Biſhops, by railing at them, contemning them, and calling them, that are not of his Judgment, Hereticks and Rabaniſts. He chides him for being unconcerned at the ſeparation of the Church which he had ſuffered a long time, for exalting himſelf againſt his Spiritual Fathers the Biſhops, for ſubmitting to no Authority, nor deſiring a peaceable Deciſion of the Controverſie in hand with humility, and for thinking himſelf the only Perſon enlightened and inſpired by God to confirm the Truth. He exhorts, adviſes, and conjures him to reflect upon himſelf, return from his Errors to the Church, and ſubmit himſelf to the Biſhops; and gives him, with a Fatherly goodneſs, ſuch other Counſels as were proper for him to follow. [This Epiſtle is Printed by Mauguin in Collect. Script. 9 Sæculi, Tom. 2. and with his other Works, at the end of Agobardus's Works put out by Baluzius at Paris 1666.]

Some have pretended, that this Writing of Gotteſchalcus, which Amolo confutes in this Letter, was Forged by Hincmarus, whom they accuſe of this Forgery, but they have no proof of it, and the two conjectures upon which they ground the Accuſation are took weak to raiſe any Credit upon, ſo that 'twould be a very raſh thing to condemn ſo illuſtrious an Archbiſhop of ſo ſcandalous a Crime without better proofs, eſpecially ſince we do not find any of the Favourers of Gotteſchalcus to have laid any ſuch thing to his Charge. It is moſt reaſonable for us to believe, that Gotteſchalcus compoſed this Writing privately, and ſent it to Amolo Archbiſhop of Lyons, ſuppoſing that that Church would be more favourable to him, becauſe it was of S. Auſtin's Judgment about Predeſtination and Grace; but ſince he ſtrain'd his Opinions to too high, and faulty a pitch, and drew hard and unwarrantable Conſequences from them, 'tis no wonder that Amolo gave him ſuch an Anſwer, which is written with all the inſinuating Art poſſible to appeaſe Hincmarus, and oblige this Monk to make him ſatisfaction. There is another ſmall Piece, which is annexed to this Letter to Gotteſchalcus, which is thought to be a fragment of the Letter written at the ſame time to Hincmarus, in which he treats of Grace and Predeſtination. In it he teaches us to believe, that 'tis Grace by which men are ſaved, which is not given them according to their merits, but through the pure and free Mercy of God, which moves them to good not by Neceſſity, but by their Will and Love. That this Grace is given to Infants in their Baptiſm, to Adult Perſons, and all the Faithful, in all their Actions, Thoughts and Words that are good, becauſe there is no good but is the gift of God. That his Preſcience is certain, and that he foreſees how all things will come to paſs; ſo that the number of the Elect is known to him, and cannot be changed. That the Predeſtination of the Juſt is of free Mercy, and is not done in conſideration of their Merits, but that he hath juſtified and ſanctified by his Grace in time, all thoſe who have been Predeſtinated from all Eternity through his meer Mercy, that they may be holy and juſt. That Perſeverance is a Gift of God; That our Free-will is ſo much weakened by Sin, that it can't raiſe it ſelf to the love of Truth and Juſtice, if it be not excited, healed and ſtrengthned, by the Grace which frees it. He adds, That this Doctrine needs not to caſt us into Deſpair, but gives us confidence in the Mercy of God; That that which is found in S. Auſtin, and ſome other Fathers, that God hath Predeſtinated the Wicked to Damnation, and eternal Death, ought not to be underſtood as tho' God conſtrained them by his Power, or Predeſtination, to be Sinners, and ſo Damned, but in this ſenſe, That God hath Ordain'd by his juſt Judgment eternal puniſhments, for thoſe that he foreſaw would continue in the Maſs of Perdition by the Sin of Adam, or who would make themſelves ſubject to Damnation by their own voluntary Sins. [This fragment of Amolo's Epiſtle is alſo extant in the forementioned Edition of Agobardus.]

Hincmarus's Letter to the Church of Lyons.

Hincmarus ſeeing Amolo thus in a manner to condemn Gotteſchalcus, thought it convenient to write to the Church of Lyons upon that ſubject. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, giving him an account after what manner Gotteſchalcus was Judged and Condemned in two Councels, and compriſes his Doctrine under five chief Heads. 1. That God hath Predeſtined from all Eternity, thoſe whom he pleaſeth to the Kingdom of Heaven, or Eternal Damnation. 2. That they that are Predeſtined to Eternal Death can't be Saved, and thoſe that are Predeſtined to Eternal Glory can't be Damned. 3. That God will not have all Men to be Saved, and that the Apoſtles Words ought to be underſtood only of thoſe that are Saved. 4. That Jeſus Chriſt came not to ſave all Men; that he hath not ſuffered for all Men, but for thoſe only who are ſaved by the Myſtery of his Paſſion. 5. That ſince the Fall of Man, no Man can keep himſelf ſafe by his own Free-will from the commiſſion of Sin. Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, wrote alſo to the Church of Lyons upon the ſame ſubject, telling them, that of thoſe ſix Perſons who had written upon theſe Queſtions, none of them had ſufficiently cleared them. Some join to theſe Letters one of Rabanus's written to Notingus. [Pardulus's Letter is not extant to the Church of Lyons.]

The Anſwer of the Church of Lyons to Hincmarus by Remigius.

When theſe Letters were carried to Lyons, Remigius, who ſucceeded Amolo in the Archbiſhoprick of Lyons, wrote, in the Name of his Church, an Anſwer to three Letters that were brought him. He abandons Gotteſchalcus, and condemns the raſhneſs and temerity of that unhappy Monk, but defends the Opinion of S. Auſtin about Predeſtination and Grace; and after he hath produced ſeven Rules, and ſeveral Paſſages of the H. Fathers, to prove that the Preſcience and Predeſtination of God are infallible, he concludes, that none of thoſe whom God hath Predeſtined from all Eternity, to his Glory, through his free goodneſs, ſhall periſh; and none of thoſe, whom God hath Predeſtined to Eternal Death, through his juſt Judgment, having foreſeen their Sin, ſhall be ſaved, not that they are unavoidably Sentenced to Damnation, by the power of God, but becauſe they deſerve it by the malignity of their Will, which is unconquerable, and unchangeable. This was the ſenſe of Remigius, upon two of the Propoſitions which Hincmarus reproved Gotteſchalcus for. Concerning the third, which reſpected the Will of God to ſave all men, he ſays, that 'twas a difficult Doctrine to reſolve; but 'tis certain, that all are not ſaved, and that all that God Will ſhall come to paſs. How then can he Will all men ſhould be ſaved, when 'tis plain all men are not? He finds this difficulty reſolved four ways in the Writings of the Fathers. 1. They ſay, that All is put in that place for all ſorts of Perſons. 2. For all thoſe that are ſaved, becauſe there is none ſaved but by him. 3. Becauſe he inſpires his Servants with deſires and wiſhes, that all men ſhould be ſaved. 4. That he will have all men to be ſaved, as Creator, becauſe he hath given them a Will by which they may be ſaved, if they pleaſe. He ſaith, that this laſt Explication hath many difficulties attending it, becauſe God doth not expect the Will of Man to ſave them, but prevents them with his Grace. Yet he confeſſes, that according to ſome Fathers, it may be ſaid, that God, as Creator, would have all Men to be ſaved, but at the ſame time, as he is Judge, he will not have them ſaved who dye in their Sins, either Original or Actual. So that 'tis not true, that God doth not accompliſh his Will that he hath, that all Men ſhould be ſaved, becauſe of the oppoſition of Man's Will to his, but becauſe he will not have it fulfilled himſelf, that he may puniſh their Sins. He adds, that theſe things are ſo obſcure and intricate, that he is not willing to contend much about them, nor define them raſhly, but contents himſelf to hold what is certain, without engaging in theſe fruitleſs Diſputes. Nor is he more willing to deliver his Opinion raſhly about the 4th Queſtion concerning Chriſt's dying for all Men, but would ſearch diligently in the Scripture what he ought to believe. Wherefore, after he has recited ſeveral Texts which prove that Jeſus Chriſt died for the Redemption of Men and of the World, he ſaith, that in the Order of Reconciliation, the firſt Men are the Elect, of whom none can periſh. The ſecond are the Faithful, who haue received their Baptiſm ſincerely, and whoſe Sins are Pardoned by Grace, but do not perſevere. The third are ſuch as yet remain in their Infidelity, but ſhall ſoon be called through the Mercy of God. The fourth are thoſe that will remain always in their Infidelity, and ſhall not receive Grace, either for a time, or in the end. He acknowledges and proves, by the Authority of the Fathers, that Jeſus Chriſt died for the three firſt, but maintains, that properly ſpeaking, he died not for the Wicked, who were Dead before his coming, without the knowledge of the true Religion, nor for Infidels, which are Born ſince, or ſhall be Born in future Ages. He adds, nevertheleſs, that he finds ſome Fathers, who aſſert that Jeſus Chriſt died for thoſe Infidels that were never Baptized, nor Converted; which expreſſion, he ſays, may be Tolerated for Peace ſake, though it be not exact nor true. That Men ought not to condemn one another in Queſtions of this nature, becauſe there may be ſome things which we know not becauſe of our ignorance. Concerning the laſt Propoſition, he

ſays, that he much wondders that any Man ſhould hold, that ſince the fall of Adam Men can't uſe their free-will to do good. He ſays, if they had added, Without Grace, the propoſition had been Orthodox, but to ſay it in general, as ſuppoſing that Grace alone does all the good we do, is a propoſition which he never heard of before nor underſtood, and which the Hereticks themſelves never yet aſſerted. He owns, that the Free-will may be ſaid to be dead and periſhed by the Sin of the firſt Man, provided, it be not meant, that the Nature and Eſſence of the Will is not periſhed, but that the good which is in the will, i. e. the faculty of inclining it ſelf to good, and that it hath need of the immediate Grace of Jeſus Chriſt to incline it to good. Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons, after he hath thus treated of the Doctrine contain'd in the Letter of Hincmarus, paſſes to the Judgment and Perſon of Gotteſchalcus. He finds fault, that he was firſt of all condemned by the Abbots and Monks, which were of the Council, to undergo their Regular Diſcipline, and afterwards was judged by the Biſhops. He ſays, that according to the ancient uſage, ſince he was accuſed of Hereſie, he ought to have been judged by the Biſhops only. He complains of the Cruelty with which their Sentence was executed. And as to the Heads of his Doctrine related by Hincmarus, he ſays, That the firſt and ſecond were agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church and Fathers; That the 3d and 4th were not to be condemned; and as to the 5th, if it were true that he aſſerted it in thoſe terms, it deſerves to be condemned. In fine, That he deſerved to be condemned for his imprudence and troubleſomeneſs, for his talkativeneſs and inconſtancy; That nevertheleſs they ought not for all that to condemn the Truth, nor uſe him with ſo much ſeverity and cruelty as they had done. Then he confutes what Hincmarus had ſaid concerning the will of God to ſave all Men, againſt the Predeſtination of the Wicked to Damnation, and concerning Free-will. He alſo Anſwers the Letters of Pardulus and Rabanus. This Anſwer was accompanied with another ſmall Treatiſe from Remigius, Entitled, A Reſolution of the Queſtion, in which he endeavours to confirm the Principle of S. Auſtin; That all the Generation of Mankind is corrupted by the Sin of Adam, and ſubject to Damnation, of whom ſome are choſen through mere Mercy, others left through juſt Judgment, the one are elected through the free Mercy of God to glory, the other predeſtined for their own or firſt Mans Sin to Damnation. [This Treatiſe of Remigius, with ſome other Tracts of his are extant in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 15. and is put out by Mauguin in Collect. Script. de Præd. & Got.

The Articles of Quiercy.

This Anſwer not being ſuch an one as Hincmarus expected, he endeavoured to eſtabliſh his Doctrine another way. Wherefore meeting at Quiercy, in his return from the Council of Soiſſons held in 853, with ſeveral Biſhops and Abbots, he propounded four Heads of Doctrine to the Emperor, which were publiſhed by his Authority. The I. was, That there is no other Predeſtination but only to Life, by which God had choſen out of the Maſs of Perdition, into which all Men are fallen by the Sin of Adam, thoſe whom he hath predeſtinated by his Grace to Glory. And as to thoſe whom he hath left in the State of Damnation, he foreſaw that they would periſh, but he hath not predeſtined them to deſtruction, but only hath predeſtined the Eternal puniſhment which they have deſerved. The II. is, That the Free-will which we have loſt by the Sin of the firſt Man, is reſtored by Jeſus Chriſt, and we have a full power to do good by the aſſiſtance of his Grace, and to do evil, being forſaken by it. The III. is, That God would have all Men without exception to be ſaved, although they are not all ſaved. That thoſe that are ſaved, are ſo by the Grace of Chriſt, and thoſe that periſh are damned for their own Sins. The IV. was, That Jeſus Chriſt hath ſuffered for all Men, although all Men are not redeemed by the Myſtery of his Paſſion, which doth not happen becauſe the Price of Redemption is not great enough, or ſufficient, but becauſe they have not Faith, or not ſuch a Faith as is ſaving, i. e. a Faith which worketh by Love.

Prudentius's Letter to the Council of Sens.

Theſe four Articles were Signed by the Biſhops and Abbots preſent at their Aſſembly, and if we may believe Hincmarus, were ſubſcribed by Prudentius himſelf. But this Biſhop repenting of what he had done, wrote to the Biſhops aſſembled at Sens to chooſe a Biſhop of Paris, that ſince he could not be preſent himſelf at that Synod, he had ſent Arnoldus, a Prieſt, to whom he had given commiſſion to ſubſcribe to their Election of a Biſhop, provided they would ſign and approve theſe four Articles concerning Grace. 1. That the Free-will of Man which was loſt by the diſobedience of Adam, is ſo far reſtored by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, that we cannot do, think, or deſire any good thing without it. 2. That God hath predeſtinated ſome to Eternal Life through his mere Mercy, and others through his juſt Judgment to Damnation. 3. That the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt was ſhed for them that believe on him, and not for thoſe that do not believe. 4. That God ſaves all thoſe he will have ſaved, and that no Man can be ſaved whom he will not have ſaved. 'Tis not known what effect this Letter had in the Council of Sens, but is probable that it was read, but nothing was determined in that matter.

The 4 Articles of Quiercy as confuted by the Church of Lyons.

But the 4 Articles of Quiercy being ſent to the Church of Lyons, the Archbiſhop examined them, and confuted them in a Book made on purpoſe, [Entituled, A Cenſure of the Articles of Quiercy, or a Book proving that the Truth of Scripture is to be held, and the Judgments of the Holy Fathers followed.] In anſwer to the firſt Article, he finds fault with theſe Aſſertions; 1. That the firſt Man was free to do good, not mentioning the Divine aſſiſtance, without which neither he nor the Angels themſelves can do good; 2. That they ſpeak of the Predeſtination of the Elect, as if it were made upon the account of their good Works foreſeen; 3. That they deny, that God hath predeſtinated the Wicked to Damnation. Upon the 2d Article he objects, 1. That they have ſpoken too ſuccinctly and briefly about Free-will, having ſaid nothing, but produced ſome Explications, cations of the Fathers upon that point; 2. That they had aſſerted, that we have utterly loſt our Free-will by the Sin of the firſt Man, though the Fathers acknowledge, that though it be weakened by that Sin, it ſtill ſubſiſts in Man, but he can't uſe it well without the aſſiſtance of Grace. That all Men have naturally Judgment, Reaſon, and Underſtanding, by which they are able to diſtinguiſh that which is good from that which is evil, and that which is juſt from that which is unjuſt. That they alſo have a liberty of chooſing good in ſome ſort, but through the Law we have of Human Affairs, 'tis wholly carried upon the good of Society, Tranſactions of the World, and certain private Intereſts. Laſtly, That in that reſpect we can do ſome good, but we can do nothing towards our Eternal Happineſs but by the inſpiration and Motions of Grace. 3. He alſo reproves them in this Article for ſaying, that after regeneration we have liberty of doing evil, as if we had it not before Regeneration. Concerning the 3d Article, which is about the Will of God to ſave all Men, part of his Remarks are loſt, but by what remains we may ſee, that he diſapproved their aſſerting of it ſo generally, and had rejected the Fathers Explications of it. In the laſt Article he reproves them for ſaying, 1. That there is no Mans Nature that is not healed by Jeſus Chriſt, and aſſerts, that Jeſus Chriſt did not aſſume the Humane Nature of neceſſity, but of his own good will, and that for the Elect; 2. He diſlikes them for holding, that there is not, ever was, nor ſhall be a Man for whom Chriſt died not. He confeſſes that he died for all that is Baptized, and for the Righteous Men of the Old Teſtament, but denies, that he died for all Infidels which died before Chriſts Nativity, for thoſe who never received the Faith, or Infants dying without Baptiſm. He maintains, that Chriſt died for none, but for thoſe for whom the Church prays, and mentions in their Holy Services after their Death. Laſtly, He diſapproves their compariſon between Infidels that never received the Faith, and Chriſtians, who though they have been Baptized, die in their Sins. [This Confutation of Remigius of the Articles of Quiercy is extant with the Treatiſes laſt mentioned.]

The Canons of the Council of Valence about Grace.

Remigius Biſhop of Lyons having thus confuted the Articles made at Quiercy by his own Writings, cauſed his Doctrine to be confirmed in a Council held at Valence, an. 855. made up of 14 Biſhops of the Provinces of Lyons, Arles, and Vienna, in which the 3 Metropolitans preſided, and Ebbo Biſhop of Grenoble was preſent. They made 6 Canons in this Synod concerning Grace, Free-will, and Predeſtination. The firſt forbids all Novel Expreſſions about ſuch Matters, and commands Men to follow the Doctrine of the Latin Fathers. In the 2d they declare, that God hath foreſeen from all Eternity all the Good which Righteous Men will do by his Grace, and all the Evil that Sinners will do by their own Malice; That the Righteous ſhall receive Eternal Life as a reward of their good Actions, and the Wicked be condemned juſtly for their Crimes to Eternal puniſhment. That this Preſcience lays no neceſſity upon any Man, none being condemned but for their Original or actual Sins. In the 3d the Biſhops ſtrongly aſſert the Predeſtination of good Men to Eternal Life, and of Wicked Men to Eternal Death. Nevertheleſs after ſuch a manner, as that in the choice of them that ſhall be ſaved the Mercy of God goes before their Works, but on the contrary in the damnation of thoſe that periſh their Crimes goes before the juſt Judgment of God, yet God hath predeſtinated no Man to ſin by his own power, ſo that thoſe that are predeſtinated are under neceſſity of being damned. The 4th is about the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, concerning which they think it ſufficient to ſay, and confeſs ſincerely, that Jeſus Chriſt died for all thoſe that believe in him. They reject the 4 Canons of Quiercy as idle, vain, and falſe, and condemn Scotus's Treatiſe as a ſilly Book. In the 5th they aſſure all thoſe that are Baptized and Regenerate, that they have a part in the Redemption of Jeſus Chriſt, although afterward they looſe the Innocency of Baptiſm, and are in the number of the Reprobate. Laſtly, in the laſt they declare, that as concerning the Grace of Chriſt, by which Men are ſaved, and the Free-will of Man weakened by the Sin of Adam, but reſtored by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, they do hold as the Holy Fathers have taught, what the Councils of Africa and Orange have decided, and what is held and maintained by the Biſhops of the Apoſtolick See.

The Relation of what followed the Council of Valence about the Conteſt of Grace.

Theſe Canons of the Council of Valence were preſented to the Emperor Lotharius, the King of theſe Biſhops who had made them, with the Treatiſe made upon that Subject by the Church of Lyons, and the Propoſitions of Scotus, that he might ſend them to Charles the Bald, and that he would adviſe him at the ſame time not to ſuffer the contrary Doctrine to be publiſhed in his Realm, but Lotharius not being to do it, Ebbo Biſhop of Grenoble preſented theſe Pieces himſelf to Charles the Bald, who went to him to his Palace at Verbery, an. 856. This Prince in September the ſame year, delivered them to Hincmarus to examine them, who compoſed an Anſwer to them. His Book was of a conſiderable bulk, and dedicated to Charles the Bald; it was Entitled, Of Predeſtination and Free-will, and divided into 3 parts. We have not the Work it ſelf, but only the Letter written to Charles, which ſerved for a Preface to it. In it he complains that they had condemned his 4 Articles without ſo much as reciting of them, and had put a bad conſtruction upon them. That they would have him undertake the Defence of Scotus's Propoſition, which he never ſaw, nor knew, and which were collected only to make Orthodox Perſons odious. That they had made this noiſe without deſiring his Opinion, without adverting him of what they diſliked, without hearing him or citing him to the Synod. He wondered that Ebbo Biſhop of Grenoble, a Perſon ſo Eminent for Piety, ſhould engage in ſuch a Faction. He obſerves by the bye, as a thing extraordinary, that of all the Biſhops that were at the Council of Valence, he only was named in the Head of the Council amongſt the Archbiſhops, which looked like affectation of Greatneſs, though he would not call it Pride.

Laſtly,

Laſtly, That the Biſhops of this Council had began the Quarrel, and laid the foundation of the Difference. He then lays down the order of his Anſwer; Firſt, he tells the Emperor, that he had ſent him the Writings which had been preſented to him by the Council; 2. That he had joined to them ſeveral other Tracts which he had received from other places upon the ſame Subject, of which he approved ſo much only as was agreeable to his 4 Articles; That he will make a Collection of the Authorities and Paſſages of the Fathers. Laſtly, That he will prove, that theſe Articles are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, and the Scriptures, which ſhe acknowledges for genuine, and the Fathers whoſe Writings ſhe allows, to which he will add the Authorities of more late Orthodox Writers, as Beda, Alcuinus, and Theodorus Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

In the year 859 the ſame Biſhops which were preſent at the Council of Valence being met in the Suburbs of Langres with the Emperor Charles, preſented to him the 6 Canons under debate, but ſuppreſſed what was ſaid in them particularly againſt the 4 Articles of Hincmarus; Fifteen days after they met at a Council at Savona in the Province of Toul [or Tullium], where they were alſo read. Hincmarus and thoſe of his Party oppoſed their Reception, but Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons deſired, that the Deciſion of the Controverſie might be entirely left to the next Synod, to which they would every one bring the Books of the moſt eminent Fathers of the Church, and out of them determine what they ſhould follow, that they might be of one mind. This was the concluſion of this Council, but Prudentius did not reſt here, but brought the Matter to Rome, ſending the Canons of the Council of Valence to Pope Nicolas. that he might confirm them. Prudentius ſays the Pope approved of them, but Hincmarus did not yield to it, and would not take notice of the Definition which he had paſſed upon the Queſtion.

Hincmarus's 2d Treatiſe of Predeſtination.

We do not find that this Queſtion was afterward Examined or Judged in any Council of France, but Hincmarus made another Treatiſe of Predeſtination to defend his 4 Articles, and confute the Canons of the Council of Valence. This alſo is dedicated to Charles the Bald, containing 38 Chapters. In the firſt he treats of the Original of the Hereſie of the Predeſtinarians, and pretends to prove, that it began ſince the time of S. Auſtin; and to prove it, he makes uſe of the Teſtimonies not only of S. Auſtin, but of S. Proſper and Cæleſtine, by whom it appears that S. Auſtin's Doctrine of Grace was oppoſed by ſeveral, but he doth not obſerve, that they who oppoſed it then, were altogether oppoſite to the Error of the Predeſtinarians, for the Prieſts of Marſeilles, and the other Frenchmen of whom S. Auſtin and Proſper ſpeak, were ſo far from being Predeſtinarians, that they contradicted the Doctrine of S. Auſtin about Predeſtination, becauſe it ſeemed too rigorous. He cites a Book falſely attributed to S. Auſtin, called Hypomneſticon; He maintains very poſitively that it is his, and proves it by the Letter of Fauſtus to Lucidus about the Recantation of that Prieſt, and by the Authority of the Council of Arles, which through a miſtake (he ſays) was held by the Authority of Cæleſtine, who was dead 44 years before that Council. In the 2d he gives the Hiſtory of Gotteſchalcus, whom he pretends to have revived the Error of the Predeſtinarians. In the 3d he rejects the Authority of Fulgentius, but he gives one bad Reaſon for it, when he ſays, that he is not much to be eſteemed, becauſe Pope Gelaſius doth not reckon him among the Doctors of the Church, for Gelaſius was dead 8 or 9 years before this Father wrote. In the 4th he proves himſelf conformable to the Doctrine of the Apoſtolick See. In the 5th, after he hath obſerved that Gotteſchalcus and his Followers write the Authorities of the Scripture and Fathers to eſtabliſh that Error imperfectly, he brings the Propoſitions of Gotteſchalcus, Prudentius, and Retramnus, in which they acknowledge Predeſtination to Eternal Torments. In the 6th he begins to treat of the Canons of the Council of Valence in particular. He obſerves in that Chapter, that the firſt is taken out of Florus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, but his Sentence is changed and altered by him that tranſcribed and abridged it. In the 7th he explains the Paſſage of S. Paul alledged by the Compiler of them, in which he ſays there are Veſſels of Wrath fitted for Deſtruction. He cites ſeveral places of the Fathers to explain that Text, and ſhew, that 'tis not God that hath fitted thoſe Veſſels for Death, but they fitted themſelves for it by their Sins. In the 8th he alledges ſome places in Fulgentius, to ſhew, that God hath predeſtinated no Man to Death. In the 9th he cites ſome Paſſages of Iſidore of Sivil, S. Auſtin, S. Fulgentius, and Florus, to explain thoſe which his Adverſaries had alledged. In the 10th he expounds ſeveral places of Scripture which they made uſe of. In the 11th he examines the following Canon of the Council of Valence. He finds fault, that they had laid aſide the Explication of Florus, and diſtinguiſhed between Predeſtination to Grace and Predeſtination to Glory. In the 12th he treats of Predeſtination at large according to the Principles of S. Auſtin. He ſaith that God hath predeſtinated the Works as well as the Glory of the Elect. That he hath foreſeen the Sins of the Reprobate, and knowing them, not only foreſees, but predeſtines the puniſhment which they ſhall ſuffer, but he affirms. that it can't be ſaid, that he hath predeſtinated them to Death or Damnation. So that all the difference between Hincmarus and his Adverſaries is in this, that theſe affirm, that God foreſeeing the Sins which the Reprobate would voluntarily commit, hath predeſtinated and condemned them upon the account of them to Damnation. And Hincmarus confeſſes, that God hath prepared and predeſtinated this Eternal puniſhment for their Crimes, but will not ſay that he hath predeſtinated them to be damned. S. Fulgentius in his Book which he wrote to Monimus, was moſt favourable to the Opinion which Hincmarus oppoſes, for which reaſon it is, that in the 13th Chapter he oppoſes ſome Paſſages of S. Proſper, and in his 14th a Paſſage of S. Auſtins cited by Fulgentius himſelf. In the 15th Chapter he returns to the Hiſtory of the pretended Predeſtinarians. He ſays that the ancient Predeſtinarians had 4 Errors. The firſt,

That God condemns Men for the Sins which they have not committed, but would have committed had they lived. The 2d, That Baptiſm doth not take away Original Sin from th[illegible] who are not of the number of the Predeſtinated. The 3d, That there is no difference between Preſcience and Predeſtination. The 4th, That God hath predeſtinated Men to Sin and Damnation. He owns, that the Modern Predeſtinarians held not the firſt Error, that they paſs the 2d, avoid the 3d, and have new molded the 4th, although they retain the ſubſtance of it, aſſerting, that God hath predeſtined the Reprobate to Damnation, although he hath not predeſtinated them to Sin, ſince they can't ſuffer Damnation but by Sin. He confutes the two former Errors in a few words. Then he undertakes to juſtifie his 4 Articles, by ſhewing that they are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and chiefly of S. Auſtin, S. Fulgentius, and S. Gregory. He proves the firſt, which is concerning Predeſtination, by tranſcribing in the 16th Chapter ſeveral long Quotations of thoſe Fathers. In the 17th he examines a place in the Book Entitled, Hypomneſticon, attributed to S. Auſtin. In the 18th he proves, that the number of the Elect is certain, and determined. In the 19th he owns, that a double Predeſtination may in ſome ſenſe be allowed, though not in that of Gotteſchalcus and his Adherents, who affirm, that God hath predeſtined Sinners to Torments, as he hath the Good to Glory, but that it may be ſaid, The Elect are predeſtined to Glory, and Eternal Torments are predeſtined for the Wicked. In the 20th he examines in what ſenſe S. Gregory ſpeaks of the Predeſtinarians in the Plural Number. In the 21th Chapter he produces ſeveral Paſſages of S. Auſtin, to juſtifie the ſenſe and terms of his 2d Article of Free-will. In the 22d he ſhews, that what is ſaid in that Article is conformable to the Deciſions of the Councils of Africk and Orange about Grace and Free-will. In the 23d he anſwers the accuſation brought againſt him, that he had affirmed, that Man had wholly loſt his free-will by the fall of Adam; He aims, that Man hath a freedom of Will ſince Adams Sin, but his Free-will is a Slave to Sin, which leads him to the commiſſion of Evil only, ſo that he can't do any good through the weakneſs of it without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. In the 24th Chapter he treats about his 3d Article, which is about the Will of God to ſave all Men. He declares, that the Church of Rome, which is the firſt Church in the World, ought to be conſulted about that point in the firſt place. He compares it to the ancient Jeruſalem, and cites a Paſſage in the forged Decretal of Pope Anacletus, which ſays, that that Church was founded by God himſelf. He adds alſo a Citation out of Innocent's Letter to Decentius Biſhop of Eugubium, after which he quotes a Sentence of Cæleſtine, where he ſays, that the Prayers of the Church determine what we ſhall believe, Legem credendi Lex ſtatuat ſupplicandi; From whence he concludes, that ſince the Church prays for all Men without reſtriction, or exception, we ought to believe, that God will have all Men to be ſaved without exception. But why then are not all Men ſaved? He ſays, 'tis becauſe they will not; They that love Darkneſs rather than Light, Injuſtice than Juſtice, Sin than Virtue, deſtroy themſelves; That it will not then follow, that God is not Almighty, becauſe he knows how to diſpoſe of their actions who will not do as he wills them. Whereupon he cites ſeveral Paſſages out of S. Auſtin and S. Gregory, but depends chiefly upon the words of S. Chryſoſtome. In the next Chapter he joins ſome Expreſſions taken out of the Writings attributed to S. Dionyſius the Arropagite, S. Cyprian, S. Hilary, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Theophilus, S. Jerom, and S. Cyrill, ſome things alſo he brings out of S. Auſtin and S. Proſper, to whom alſo he adds S. Caleſtin, S. Leo, S. Gregory, Bede, and Caſſiodore. In the following Chapter he confirms this Doctrine of the Will of God to ſave all Men without exception, becauſe if God would not have all Men to be ſaved, ſome would be under a neceſſity of damnation. And whereas his Adverſaries objected, that the Will of God is all powerful, and therefore, if God would have all Men to be ſaved, they would be ſo. He puts the ſame Queſtion to them as to the Angels, and urges them to anſwer it. Are thoſe Angels which are fallen, fallen by the Will of God, or not? And ſince they could not deny according to their own Principle, but that God did deſire their Salvation: He concludes, that they muſt own, that Gods will hath not always its effect. He there recites ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers to explain thoſe places of Scripture where the Allpowerful will of God is ſpoken of. In the 27th Chapters he examines the State of the Queſtion concerning the 4th Article, the Death of Jeſus Chriſt for all Men. He declares, that it extends not to the Devils, for whom Jeſus Chriſt was no Mediator, but only to Men. And whereas it was demanded of him, whether Jeſus Chriſt died for Antichriſt; He anſwers, that Antichriſt ſhall be a Man, and ſince Jeſus Chriſt died for all Men, he is of the number of thoſe for whom Chriſt died. In the 28th Chapter he cites ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, to prove, that Jeſus Chriſt died for thoſe Men who are dead in their Sins, although it can't be ſaid, that they are redeemed for Eternal Salvation. In the 29th he juſtifies the Expreſſion which he had delivered, that there never was a Man whoſe Fleſh was not aſſumed by Jeſus Chriſt, and cites ſeveral places of the Fathers which approve that Expreſſion. He then ſhews, that thoſe that are Baptized receive the Faith that worketh by Love, which he had affirmed in his laſt Article. He adds in the following Chapter, that except two Sentences of it, the reſt of that Article is taken out of S. Proſper.

Hincmarus having thus juſtified himſelf, paſſes his Judgment upon the Writings which were come to his hands, made upon this ſubject. He diſapproves Scotus's and Prudentius's Books, and ſays, that he will not enter into any Conteſt with them becauſe he does not know their deſign, yet he tells us, that he had obſerved ſome Expreſſions in them contrary to the Catholick Truth, viz. That there is a Triple Divinity; That the Sacrament of the Altar is not the true Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, Christ, but a Memorial only of his true Body and Blood; That the Angels are Corporeal; That the Soul of Man is not in his Body; That the Tortures of Hell are nothing else but the remembrance of Sins, and the reflection of a guilty Conscience; and other fruitless Questions concerning the manner how we shall see God, which arise perhaps, saith Hincmarus, from hence, that those who are busiest to move such disputes take no care to see him. He rejects the 7 Rules laid down by Prudentius. In the 31th Chapter he shews, that those that lived before the coming of Jesus Christ are redeemed by his Death, as well as those that live after his coming. In the 32d he produces a great number of Testimonies both from the Greek and Latin Fathers, to prove, that Jesus Christ died for all Men without exception. In the next Chapter he confirms the same Doctrine by several Reasons grounded upon the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and shews, that although Jesus Christ died for all Men, yet they are not all redeemed and saved, because they will not. In the 35th he approves the 5th Canon of the Council of Valence, propounded by his Adversaries; That Jesus Christ died for all those that are Regenerate by Baptism; But he maintains, that Gotteschalcus and the Predestinarians deny that Baptism washes away the guilt of Original Sin from those that are not predestinated, and confutes their Error.

Hincmarus's Remarks upon the Constitution of the Council of Valence about Ordinations.

The Bishops of the Council of Valence, after the Articles of Grace, Free-will, and Predestination, confuted by Hincmarus, added a Canon concerning the Ordinations of Bishops to this effect. To prevent for the future, that Ignorant Bishops, unable to discharge that great Function, and whose Lives are not sufficiently Examined, may not be put into the Sees, as they formerly have been, (to the utter ruine and overthrow of all Church Discipline) it is decreed, That after the Death of any Bishop, they should Petition the Princes to grant the People and Clergy of that City power to make a Canonical Election of some Person of the same, or the Neighbouring Dioces, who is fit to fill the See, and if any Clerk be sent from Court to be made their Bishop, they should strictly examine and look into his Life and Doctrine and Manners before they Ordain him, and if he be found an Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniacal Person, the Metropolitan should refuse to Ordain him, and going to Court represent it to the Prince. Hincmarus imagining, that this Canon was made against him, and some other Bishops who had been Ordained through the favour of the Court, takes it into Examination, and therefore, in the 36th Chapter he observes first, that this Canon makes directly against him whom he thought the Author of it, because he was Shaved and Ordained in another Church than that of which he was Bishop, evidently meaning Remigius Arch-Bishop of Lyons. Secondly, He observes, that he had left out several things which concerned the Ordination of a Bishop, as for Example, If they choose a Clergy-man of another Church, that he should not be Ordained till his Bishop hath given his Consent. Thirdly, He says, that those Men are not worthy to bear the Names of Bishops whose Ordination was such, as he describes, Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniacal. Fourthly, He says, that in speaking so he affronts all the Bishops of France, the Metropolitans who have made such unlawful Ordinations, and the Princes who have approved them. Fifthly, He defends his own Ordination, and relates the whole History of the Deposition of Ebbo, and the Process had against him; He relates the Judgment given in favour of him against Ebbo in the Council of Soissons in 853, the Declaration of Ebbo, who acknowledged himself justly deposed, and consented another should be made Bishop in his place, approved by the Bishops met at Thionville in 835, whose Sentence was confirmed by Pope Sergius. He adds, that 10 years after this Deposition, the Bishops of the Dioces of Reims being Assembled at Beauvais, desired him of the Prince, and he was Ordained by his Consent after he had been Canonically chosen by the Clergy and People of Reims. Hereupon he says, that he spake these things with regret, but he was obliged to it, lest any Man reading this Canon should think his Ordination contrary to the Canons and Rules of the Church. Then he opposes to this Article 12 Canons of the Church concerning the Penalties to be inflicted upon such Persons as revive old Heresies that have been condemned; Which are, 1. When an Error hath been once condemned by the Church, it needs no further Confutation. 2 That when the Author of an Heresie is condemned, all that fall into the same Heresie are involved in the same Condemnation. 3. That the same Condemnation extends to all the Abettors of an Heresie. 4. That they that Communicate with Hereticks, ought not to be admitted to any Synod of the Orthodox. 5. That those that revive a Condemned Heresie ought to be reproved by all the Bishops by virtue of the ancient Condemnation. 6. That it is not lawful to introduce new Doctrines, nor compose new Creeds. 7. That such as acknowledge their Errors may be again received into the Church, provided that we find sure tokens of their sincere Repentance in their return. 8. That such Persons may never be promoted to any higher degree of the Clergy than what they are now in. 9. That if they relapse again they deprive themselves of their Dignity. 10. That those that act any thing contrary to the Definitions of Pope Cælestine ought to be Excommunicated. 11. That such Clergymen may be received, and continued in their degree of Priesthood, who having once assented to the true Faith, subscribe to Errors, provided they deliver a Recantation of their Errors in Writing. 12. That they that will not subscribe to the Truth are condemned of themselves. Hincmarus alledges a great number of Authorities of Popes, Councils and Fathers, to prove these Points of Discipline, which never were contested, in which he shews more Learning and Skill in the Canons of the Church, than Judgment or Equity. Lastly, Hincmarus ending this Work, adds a Conclusion divided into 6 Chapters, in which he sums up what he had before said concerning Predestination, Grace, Free-will, the Will of God to save all Men, and the Death of Jesus Christ for Infidels.

Hincmarus's Book upon the Expreſſion Trina Deitas.

Some time after Hincmarus wrote another Treatiſe againſt Gotteſchalcus upon another Subject. He had forbidden, that the Hymn of the Martyrs, called Sanctorum Meritis, ſhould be ſung in his Church, becauſe at the end of it the Three Perſons of the Trinity were called Trina Deitas, thinking that Expreſſion to be contrary to the manner of ſpeaking exactly about that Myſtery. Gotteſchalcus ſeeking an occaſion to expoſe and accuſe him, compoſed a Treatiſe to defend this Expreſſion, maintaining that the Trinity was Perſonaliter Trina, i. e. Perſonally Three, becauſe each Perſon of the Trinity hath his perfect and entire Deity, & Naturaliter una. He juſtified this Expreſſion by ſome Examples of like Expreſſions drawn out of the Fathers. Hincmarus maintained the contrary, that the Deity was the Name of the Nature not of the Perſons, and that we might not ſay Trina Deitas, as we ordinarily do Tres Perſonæ, becauſe there is but one God in Three Perſons. It is apparent, that this diſpute was only about Words and Names, which Hincmarus ſpins out to a great length with much Zeal in his large Treatiſe Entitled, De Trina Deitate, reciting ſeveral Quotations of the Fathers, and producing ſeveral Arguments, which is both tedious and needleſs to abridge. We underſtand by Hincmarus, that not only Gotteſchalcus, but alſo Ratramnus Abbot of Corby had written in the Defence of this Expreſſion, and that the Benedictine Monks did ſing this Hymn, not leaving out Trina Deitas. But now we do not find thoſe Words in the Hymn of the Martyrs, which ſeems to be changed into, Te Summa Deitas, for they are in the Proſe of S. Thomas upon the Euchariſt. [The Editions of Hincmarus's Works are ſet down at the end of the 6th Chapter following, to which the Reader is referred.]

The End of the Second Controverſy and Chapter.

CHAP. III.

A Relation of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons.

Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons.

Hincmarus was engaged in many other Controverſies and Quarrels, which were not ended with leſs trouble than that with Gotteſchalcus. The firſt was the Conteſt with Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, in which he was forced to contend with the Pope himſelf, and at laſt give place to his Judgment. This Rothadus had been Ordained Biſhop of Soiſſons in the Reign of Lewis the Kind. He had an Order to apprehend Ebbo, his Metropolitan, who was fled, and to ſhut him up in a Monaſtery, that he might attend the Synod. He was preſent in 835 at the Synod held at Thionville, where Ebbo was depoſed. So that Rothadus was an ancient Biſhop when Hincmarus was made Archbiſhop of Reims, which was 10 years after the Depoſition of Ebbo, which perhaps was the Reaſon, that he would not give ſo much reſpect and ſubjection to Hincmarus as he expected of him. The beginning of the Buſineſs of Gotteſchalcus ſhews, that Rothadus and Hincmarus were not well affected to one another, for Hincmarus would not put that Monk into his Cuſtody, ſuſpecting him to be inclinable to Novelties. There were alſo ſome other differences, about which Hincmarus was angry with Rothadus, as his frequent Admonitions and Threatnings of him ſhewed. At laſt the Quarrel broke out, when Hincmarus accuſed him at the Council held at Senlis in 863, that he had unjuſtly depoſed a Prieſt of his Dioceſs, and would not obey his Metropolitan, who commanded him to be reſtored, and the Perſon put in his place to be removed; that he had ſquandered away the Church Revenue, and pawn'd a Golden Chalice; that he had ſold the Veſſels and Ornaments of the Church without the conſent of his Metropolitan, the Biſhops of Provence, yea, of the Steward and Clergy of his own Church, and that he had lived in ſuch a way as did not become a Biſhop. Rothadus ſeeing himſelf likely to be condemned, appealed to the Holy See, and deſired that he might have leave to go to Rome. Hincmarus and the Biſhops of the Council conſented to it, upon condition that he ſhould return by ſuch a time. Rothadus returned immediately to his Dioceſs, and prepared for his Voyage to Rome. But before his departure he wrote to the King, and Hincmarus, and at the ſame time ſent ſome Heads of Requeſt to a Biſhop that was his Friend, to be ſhewn to the King, in which he prayed the Biſhops that had not conſented to his Condemnation, to ſtir in his defence. The Prieſt that carried this Letter was conſtrained by the King and Hincmarus to ſhew it them, although the Biſhop to whom it was directed was not preſent. When Hincmarus had read it, he made uſe of it directly to hinder his going to Rome, and have him judged in France. He interpreted this as a tacit Renunciation of his Appeal, and that he would be contented to be judged in France by the Biſhops he had deſired the aſſiſtance of, and ſince ſince they were the Judges he had choſen himſelf, he could not afterward Appeal from them according to the Rule Ab electis Judicibus appellare non licet.

Rothadus's Appeal to Rome.

Rothadus's Condemnation.

Being therefore glad of this opportunity, he perſwaded the King to appoint thoſe very Biſhops for his Judges, whoſe aſſiſtance he begged, and immediately ſent a Prohibition to Rothadus to ſtop his Journey to Rome, and cauſed him to be Summoned to a Synod by thoſe Biſhops. Rothadus refuſed at firſt to come, and inſiſted upon his Appeal to Rome, but it was denied him; ſo, againſt his Will, he was brought to the Synod, Depoſed, and afterward Deprived, Baniſhed and Impriſoned. Another Biſhop was put into his place, but to lighten his Sufferings, Hincmarus gave him a good Abbey, with which he might live commodiouſly. Hincmarus ſays, that Rothadus, at firſt, ſeemed to acquieſce in this Judgment, but afterwards being ſollicited by the Biſhops of the Kingdom, and by Lotharius, who quarrelled with him, becauſe he would not wholly join with them in the Matter of Waldrada, as alſo by ſome Biſhops of Germany, Lewis's Kingdom, he put himſelf in the head of them, and went to Rome, to obtain his Reſtoration. But Rothadus on the contrary maintain'd, that he never acquieſced in that Judgment; that he always proteſted againſt it; and demanded, that he might be Judged at Rome, and never had any intention to chooſe the French Biſhops for his Judges; that it was a Trick of Hincmarus's, who made that ill uſe of the Letter he wrote to a Biſhop his Friend. But however that was, Charles the Bald having given Pope Nicolas an Account, that Rothadus, who had Governed the Dioceſs of Soiſſons very ill for 30 Years, was Depoſed, and deſiring him to approve his Depoſition, was anſwered, that he did not approve it in the leaſt; and wrote in particular to Hincmarus, that he ſhould reſtore Rothadus within 30 days, after he had received his Letter, or ſuffer him to come to Rome, and come himſelf, or ſend his Deputy on his behalf, threatning him, that if he did not do one of them within that time, he will interdict him from the Celebrating the H. Sacrament, and would inflict the ſame Sentence upon all thoſe who conſented to the Condemnation of Rothadus. Hincmarus, and the other Biſhops of France, underſtanding that Pope complained of their Judgment, ſent the Acts of his Depoſition to him, by Odo a Biſhop, and wrote to him at large concerning that Matter, but the Acts did only confirm the Pope in his Reſolution and Opinion: Wherefore he wrote again to Hincmarus, that he was much troubled to ſee, that they had Judged that Biſhop contrary to the Appeal he had made to the Holy See; that they ought not to have Depoſed him without Writing to the Biſhop of Rome; and which is much worſe, Ordained another Biſhop in his place after he had entred his Appeal. For which reaſon, he refuſed to confirm thoſe Priviledges which Hincmarus had requeſted him to do, exhorting him to amend what he had done amiſs, and enjoining him a ſecond time to ſend Rothadus to Rome, threatning him, that if he did not do it, he would paſs a definitive Sentence upon him, after a third Admonition. He gave Charles the Bald alſo an account of what he had Written to Hincmarus, deſiring him to take it into ſerious conſideration; and to ſhew his diſpleaſure, told him plainly, that he muſt expect no favour from Rome, if he would not maintain the Priviledges and Prerogatives of the H. See. He alſo wrote a Letter to all the Biſhops who were preſent at the Synod of Senlis, and had conſented to the Depoſition of Rothadus; in which, after ſome Allegations out of the Fathers, and the Canons of the Council of Sardica, to confirm the Right of Appeals to the H. See, and condemning the Behaviour of the Biſhops of France, in pronouncing Judgment againſt Rothadus, he orders them to recal him from the place of his Exile, and to ſend him to Rome, and with him two or three Biſhops, or their Deputies, that he might re-examine that Affair, aſſuring them, that if they did not obey his Order within thirty days after they had received his Letter, he would Abſolve Rothadus, and treat them as they had uſed him. Nicolas, at the ſame time, alſo gave Rothadus notice of what he had done for him, viz. That he had Written to Hincmarus, and exhorted him to come to Rome and anſwer his Appeal; and after he had received the Acts of his Condemnation, he let him know what he had Anſwered to the Biſhops of France, at the ſame time adviſing him, if he knew himſelf Guilty, to ſubmit to the Sentence paſſed againſt him, as he had adviſed his Adverſaries to reſtore him, if they believed him wrongfully Condemned. He tells him alſo, that he was permitted to come to him, being aſſured by the King and Hincmarus, that he was already let out of the Monaſtery to which he was confined. He deſired the King likewiſe to furniſh him with all things neceſſary for his Voyage, and tells the Queen Hermentruda, that he could not paſs by this Matter, as ſhe had deſired him, to gratify her Husband Charles the Bald. It is evident that Hincmarus, who had a mind to keep the Matter as it was, hindred Rothadus from going his Journey, for Nicolas was forced to ſend him a fourth Letter, wherein he complains of his Carriage, and forbids him Conſecrating him Biſhop of Soiſſons who was choſen to be put in Rothadus's place. Hincmarus ſeeing himſelf out of favour at Rome about this Affair, and ſome other Matters, writes a long Letter to Pope Nicolas to juſtify himſelf, chiefly about this Matter. In the Letter he aſſures him, that Rothadus was not condemned with a deſign to hinder his Appeal to the H. See, that he was Tryed by ſuch Judges as he had made choice of himſelf, upon which account it was that he thought it not neceſſary to ſend him to Rome, but judged it ſufficient to acquaint his Holineſs of the Sentence they had paſſed on him; That he was perſwaded that the Holy See ought not to be troubled with perſonal differences, between either the Superior or Inferior Clergy, for the Canons of Nice, and the Conſtitutions of Pope Innocent, and many other, leave them to the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Biſhops of the Province. 'Tis true, when the cauſes of the Biſhops are difficult, and can't be decided by the ordinary Canons in a Council of the Province, then they ought to be carried to the H. See. As alſo if a Biſhop, who hath been Tryed

The Quarrel between the Pope and Hincmarus about the buſineſs of Rothadus.

Hincmarus's Letter to the Pope about Rothadus.

by a Council of the Province, and hath not Appealed to Judges of his own chooſing, thinks himſelf unjuſtly Condemned, he may Appeal to the Patriarch to have his Cauſe re-examined, and the Pope may Write to thoſe that have been his Judges, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica. That the Archbiſhops only receive their Pall of the Pope, who therefore ought only to be Judged immediately by him. Coming in the next place to the buſineſs of Rothadus, he ſays, That he had been admoniſhed of his Duty long before, and reproved for his Diſorders, but not reforming in the leaſt, he was obliged to accuſe him before the Synod of Biſhops, that he might grow better upon their Advice; and that inſtead of hearkening to them, he deſired that they would be Judges of the difference between him and his Metropolitan. That theſe Judges had condemned him, and he acquieſced at firſt in their Sentence, but afterward being ſollicited by the Biſhops of the Provinces of Lotharius, and Lewis of Germany, required his Reſtoration. That upon the Letters that the Pope had Written he was ſet at Liberty, and they would ſend him to Rome, but they did not think it fit to Reſtore him, becauſe he was unworthy, and his diſorders being ſo publick, they could not do it without Scandal. That if his Holineſs would reſtore him, he would quietly ſubmit to his Deciſion, but he took himſelf obliged to let him know the Crimes of that Biſhop, of which, if he were well informed, he could not believe that he would Diſanul the Judgment given againſt him, eſpecially ſince he choſe the Judges himſelf; and according to the Council of Carthage, it is not allowed to Appeal from the Sentence of thoſe Judges a Perſon hath choſen himſelf. He inſinuates, that according to the Council of Sardica, the Pope ought not to have the firſt Hearing of the Cauſes of the Biſhops, nor Judge them at Rome, but they ought firſt to be determined in their own Province; and in caſe of Appeal, the Pope muſt ſend his Commiſſioners to the places. He adds, That if he that hath been Condemned at the firſt Tryal be Reſtored, the latter Examination ought not to hurt the Perſons of the firſt Judges, nor ought they to be reproved for it, unleſs it appears that they have Condemned him out of Enmity, Covetouſneſs, or Partiality. In fine, That if the Pope Annuls the Judgment paſſed upon Rothadus, he would render all the Judgments of the Biſhops of France ever after contemptible. As for himſelf, he would never concern himſelf to Judge, or Condemn any Man, but, if they would not amend upon Admonition, ſend them to Rome. And this he ſhall be obliged to do, to avoid the Menaces of Excommunication which the Pope hath ſo often repeated to him, altho' it is the Opinion of the Fathers that Excommunication ought rarely to be uſed, and that in caſe of great Neceſſity. Laſtly, He implores him, that his Compaſſion for Rothadus ſhould not make him over-look the Rules of Diſcipline, and give an ill Example of Impunity to the Church. Theſe Maxims he confirmed by the Canons of the Councils, and the Ancient and Genuine Writings of the Popes. Hincmarus alſo in this Letter aſſures the Pope, that they had ſent their Deputies to Rome in their ſtead, not to accuſe Rothadus, but only to ſatisfy him, that the Biſhops of France intended no manner of diſreſpect to the H. See in Judging him, and to certify the Pope, that that Biſhop was condemned by thoſe Biſhops whom he choſe for his Judges. But tho' Hincmarus had promiſed, in the Name of the French Biſhops, to ſend their Deputies to Rome, nevertheleſs they did not go, and pretended, for an Excuſe, that it was told them that the ways were not open, and they ſhould be ſtopped in their Journey if they went. Wherefore Rothadus went alone, and having waited almoſt Eight Months for his Accuſers, he preſented a Petition to the Pope, in which he complains, That he had been Depoſed in contempt of his Appeal to the H. See. He maintains, that he never deſiſted from his Appeal, nor did chooſe or demand any other Judges. He accuſeth Hincmarus of Compulſion and Deceit. He complains of his ill uſage which he had received from him, and prayed the Pope to Try him.

Pope Nicolas's Letters in favour of Rothadus.

Nicolas, who had entertain'd him civilly, and dealt with him as a Biſhop, declared himſelf wholly for him, and made an Oration in S. Mary's Church upon the Eve of the Nativity 865, in which he pleaded Rothadus's Cauſe, and maintains, That having Appealed to the H. See, he could not chooſe any other Judges, nor be Judged at another Tribunal; that he had not done it. And laſtly, Since if he had not Appealed, they could not have Depoſed him without acquainting the Biſhop of Rome with it, becauſe the Canons reſerve the Knowledge of ſuch Cauſes as concern the Biſhops to the Holy See; He declares him Innocent, and Diſannuls the Judgment given againſt him, and reſtores him to his Dignity; And after he had done it, with great noiſe, upon a Solemn Day, he makes it known to the Clergy and People of Rome in a Letter on purpoſe. He ſent alſo an Expreſs to Carolus Calvus, in which he much blames the proceedings of Hincmarus in derogation of the Right which he pretended to belong to the Biſhop of Rome, without whoſe Cognizance they could not Judge a Biſhop. He complains of the delays which they had made for above two Years, keeping Rothadus from Rome, and neither ſending their Deputies, Witneſſes, nor Accuſers. He declares Rothadus innocent, and deſires the King, Charles the Bald, to ſee him reſtored to his Dignity and Eſtate. At the ſame time he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus, in which, after he had upbraided him with the ſame Dealings, he commands him to ſubmit to the Judgment he had given in favour of Rothadus, and to Execute it, or come himſelf to accuſe him, upon condition, nevertheleſs, that Rothadus ſhould be firſt reſtored to his Dignity and Revenues. In concluſion he ſays, That if he did not do one of them, he Pronounced him, by Virtue of his Apoſtolick Authority, Depoſed from his Prieſtly Dignity, and ſeparated from the Communion of the Church, without hopes of Reſtoration. He wrote alſo a large Letter to all the Biſhops, to oblige them to receive Rothadus, and approve the Judgment he had given in his favour; and taking this occaſion to greaten his Authority, he claims, as his due, that all Cauſes of the Biſhops ſhould be brought to the H. See. He upholds this pretence by the falſe Decretals, which he vouches to be Genuine, Ancient, and very Authentick; and becauſe the Cauſes of the Biſhops are the greateſt Cauſes, whoſe Cognizance belongs to the Biſhop of Rome, according to the Conſtitutions of the Popes. He proves that Rothadus made no Choice of his Judges, becauſe he Named none in particular, but had only Written to ſome Biſhops that they would undertake his Defence; that he never renounced his Appeal, nor indeed could he, becauſe having once Appealed to a Superior Tribunal, he can't be Judged at an Inferior. Nevertheleſs, he declares that he will do no Injuſtice to any Man, and gave them free Liberty to accuſe him before the H. See, upon condition they ſhould firſt reſtore him, and put him in the ſame Quality he was before their Sentence paſſed upon him. He wrote alſo to the Clergy and People of Soiſſons, to Congratulate the Reſtoration of their Biſhop, and Exhorts them to receive him joyfully. Laſtly, He gave Rothadus a Letter directed to him, in which he reſtores him to his Dignity and Revenues, forbids all Men to trouble him, Exhorts him to take care of his Biſhoprick, and execute his Epiſcopal Functions diligently, (upon condition nevertheleſs, that if after he is reſtored, any one ſhall accuſe him before the H. See, he ſhall be ready to defend himſelf) and Pronounced a Sentence of Excommunication againſt them, who, after three Admonitions, would not reſtore any Goods, that belong to the Church of Soiſſons, which they had invaded, and againſt them who communicated with ſuch. This Letter is Dated January, Indict. 13. An. 866. [Theſe Epiſtles of Pope Nicolas, with many other, are Printed in one Collection at Rome 1542. and in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268, 480, 514, and 563.]

Rothadus furniſhed with all theſe Letters returned into France. The Biſhops of that Kingdom ſeeing the Pope ſo earneſt in that Affair, would not contend with him, but for Peace ſake reſtored Rothadus, altho' they were perſwaded that the Pope did not act according to the Canons, which appoint that Biſhops ſhould be Judged in the Province, and that their Cauſes ſhould not be carried to Rome, but he ought to ſend Commiſſioners to the places. And this they did ſo much the more willingly, becauſe the Perſon who had been put in his place was Dead, as Hincmarus Biſhop of Reims obſerves in the 5th Article againſt his Nephew Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon. The Concluſion of the buſineſs of Rothadus.

CHAP. IV.

A Relation of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, and other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, who had been Archbiſhop of Reims.

HIncmarus had no better ſucceſs in the Conteſt with Wulfadus, and ſome other Clerks Ordain'd by Ebbo, after the Depoſition of him from his Archbiſhoprick, than he had in the former with Rothadus. The Story is this: Hincmarus, then Archbiſhop of Reims, having obſerved that there were ſome Clerks in his Dioceſs Ordain'd by Ebbo, after he was Degraded, would not permit them to Execute their Office of Prieſt in the Church, nor acknowledge them as Clerks Lawfully Ordained. Theſe Men ſeeing this, Appealed to the Council held at Soiſſons, in the Monaſtery of S. Medardus, in April 853, in which Hincmarus preſided with Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, Paul Biſhop of Rouen, and Amauri Biſhop of Tours, and at which alſo Thierri Biſhop of Cambray, Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, Lupus Biſhop of Chalons, Immo Biſhop of Noion, Erpuin Biſhop of Senlis, Hermenfridus Biſhop of Beauvais, Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, Hilmeradus Biſhop of Amiens, Hubert Biſhop of Meaux, Agius Biſhop of Orleans, Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, Herimarus Biſhop of Nevers, Jonas Biſhop of Autun, Godefaldus Biſhop of Chalon upon the Saone, Dodo Biſhop of Angers, Gontbertus Biſhop of Eureux, Hildebrandus Biſhop of Seez, Erloinus Biſhop of Coutance, Balfredus Biſhop of Baieux, Herrardus Biſhop of Lizieux, Anſegaudus Biſhop of Auranches. Breindigus Biſhop of Maion, Launus Biſhop of Angoulême, Rhitbol Suffragan of Reims, ſeveral Prieſts, Abbots, Deacons and Clerks, were preſent, with Carolus Calous himſelf. Theſe Prelates being Aſſembled, and treating about ſeveral Matters, Sigloardus, who ſupplied the place of the Archdeacon of the Church of Reims, told them, That there were ſeveral Clergy-men ſtanding at the Door and deſired admittance: They asked him their Names, who told them, That they were Rodoaldus, Giſlaldus, Wulfadus, Fredebertus, Canons of the Church of Reims, Sigiſmund a Monk, of the Monaſtery of S. Thierri, and three other of the Monaſtery of S. Remigius. The Council, and Prince, ordered them to come in, and Hincmarus immediately asked them their buſineſs. They anſwered, That they came to deſire that they might be reſtored to their Prieſtly Function, to which they had been admitted by Ebbo, but had been Suſpended from the Exerciſe of it by Hincmarus. Hincmarus asked The Council of Soiſſons.

them, whether they had a Petition in Writing. They anſwered, No. Whereupon he told them, that in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs 'tis uſual to uſe Inſtruments and Records. That the Catechumeni gave in their Names in Writing when they required Baptiſm. That the Elections of Biſhops were confirmed by an Inſtrument Signed by the Electors. That a Biſhop when he was Ordained received Letters Teſtimonial of his Ordination. That all Accuſations, Judicial Sentences, Excommunications, and Admiſſion to Communion were performed by publick Records, and ſo they ought to prefer their Petition ſubſcribed by their Hands, that they may determine about their demands. Therefore they drew up a Petition immediately, and preſented it to the 3 Archbiſhops the Preſidents of the Council. Hincmarus reading it over, and perceiving that Wulfadus his Name was not to it, becauſe he underſtood he was ſick in the Monaſtery, he ſent a Requeſt to him by his Meſſengers to ſign it as the others had done, which he did. When it was brought back, Hincmarus ſaid, that if their Complaint had been made againſt any Biſhop, it had belonged to him to judge of it, but being made againſt that Sentence which he had paſſed upon them, the determination ought to be referred to Judges choſen by both Parties according to the Canon of the Council of Africk, confirmed in the firſt Book of the Synodal Articles of the Emperor Charles the Great, Chap. 43. Whereupon he delivered a Writing, in which he declared, that he chooſes for his Judges in that Cauſe Wenilo Arch-Biſhop of Sens, Amauri Arch-Biſhop of Tours, and Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, who ſhould have his place in the Judgment, without any prejudice to the Primacy of the Church of Reims, to his own Rights, and the Reſpect due to the Apoſtolick See. After which he retired, and Pardulus took his place. The Complainants were then allowed to chooſe either the ſame Judges or others, or to add whom they pleaſed to them. Whereupon they choſe the ſame, adding only Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, againſt whom Hincmarus had nothing to object. Wulfadus alſo conſented to this Election, and ſo the firſt Action or Seſſion of this Synod ended.

In the Second, the Judges declared firſt of all, that if Ebbo had Ordained theſe Clerks before he was depoſed, or ſince his Depoſition was declared unjuſt and his Reſtoration Canonical, there had been no diſpute, but that they ought to exerciſe their Prieſtly Office. But ſince thoſe that Ordained Hincmarus have proved that Ebbo was juſtly depoſed, and that he never was Canonically reſtored, and that he had the boldneſs to Ordain theſe Clerks after his Depoſition, it is evident, that they neither can nor ought to exerciſe their Function. Then Thierri Biſhop of Cambray preſented the Acts of the Depoſition of Ebbo, by which it appears, that he was depoſed after he had owned his fault, that he had himſelf conſented to his Degradation, and had notice given him not to exerciſe any Epiſcopal Function. It was alſo ſet down in the Book of theſe Acts, that Pope Sergius had confirmed his Condemnation, and ordered him to be allowed only a Lay-communion; that ſince he had not been Canonically reſtored, but had dared to Exerciſe his Prieſtly Function, of which he had been juſtly diveſted.

In the Third Action, Hincmarus's Ordination was Examined. Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons brought the Teſtimonial of his Election, ſigned by the Clergy and People. Hincmarus himſelf preſented his Letters of Ordination, a Letter of the French Biſhops, and the Kings Letters Signed and Sealed, by which his Ordination was confirmed.

In the Fourth Seſſion therefore they concluded, that Hincmarus was Lawfully Ordained Arch-Biſhop of Reims, and began to Examine the Validity of the Ordinations made by Ebbo. Immo Biſhop of Noyon cited a Decretal of Pope Innocents, that they can't receive Orders from them who have no power to Ordain. Whereupon it was in concluſion reſolved upon and determined unanimouſly.

In the Fifth Seſſion, that all that Ebbo had done after his Depoſition, except Baptiſm, was null and void, and all thoſe who had been Ordained by him ſhould be deprived of their Orders in what place ſoever they were. Then Fredebert, who was one of the Canons Ordained by Ebbo, hearing this Sentence, ſaid, that he was Ordained by that Biſhop, becauſe he ſaw the Suffragans of the Archbiſhop of Reims, of whom Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons was one, were come to Reims by the Order of Lotharius, and had reſtored Ebbo. To prove this, he produced a Letter ſigned by Eight Biſhops. It was proved that theſe Subſcriptions were forged, and Immo who was among them, and therefore concerned to clear this Matter, declared, that theſe Clerks being Excommunicated had no right to accuſe a Biſhop, but to ſatisfie the Council and Prince, he preſented a Record, by which it appeared, that the Suffragans of Reims had declared, that they ought not to have any thing to do with Ebbo after his Depoſition. He adds, that what was ſaid in that Letter of the Staffs and Rings which they affirm that Ebbo had given (to 3 Biſhops Ordained in his abſence) was abſolutely falſe, and that thoſe Men who dare ſo boldly to affront and abuſe the Biſhops, ſhould be puniſhed according to the utmoſt Rigour allowed by the Canons.

In the Sixth Action, the Cauſe brought againſt Hincmarus being thus decided, he reſumed his place; and then they handled in particular the Validity of the Ordination of a Prieſt, Abbot of the Monaſtery of Haut-Villiers called Halduin, who having been Ordained Deacon by Ebbo, was afterwards made Prieſt by Lupus Biſhop of Chalons. The Biſhop excuſed himſelf, that being made Governor of the Church of Reims during the Vacancy of that See by an Order of the Prince, this Halduin was preſented to him by the Arch-Deacon of that Church to be Ordained Prieſt; The Synod judged, that conformable to the Canons of the Council of Nice and Sardica, the Prieſt Halduin ought to be depoſed.

In

In the Seventh Action it was demanded, how they ought to be dealt with who had communicated in the Sacrament and Prayer with Ebbo, becauſe the Canons had ordered, that ſuch ought to be Excommunicated. eſpecially if they knew that he was depoſed. Erpuin ſhewed, that according to the Canons they might be favoured ſo far as to enjoy Communion ſtill, if they acknowledged their fault.

Hereupon, in the Eighth Seſſion, the King deſired of Hincmarus, that the Clerks which had been Ordained by Ebbo, and thoſe who had Communicated with him, ſhould be granted Lay-communion, which the Council conſented to, and when they had begged pardon of their fault, and acknowledged it, it was allowed them. Thus was the Judgment of this Affair managed in the Council, as the Acts of it relate more at large, the ſubſtance of which is contained in the firſt of the Canons.

Hincmarus being deſirous to make this Sentence irreverſible, uſed his utmoſt endeavours to get it confirmed by the Pope. And to this end wrote ſeveral Letters to Leo IV. but he refuſed to approve the Acts of this Council, becauſe they were not ſent by ſome of the Biſhops who were at the Council, and becauſe he had heard that ſome of the Perſons who were depoſed had appealed to the Holy See. Nevertheleſs Hincmarus was ſtill urgent to have the Judgment confirmed, and the Clerks who were concerned in this matter carried their Complaints to Rome, inſomuch, that Leo IV. having regard to what Pope Nicolas had written about it, ſent the Biſhop of Spoletum his Legate, to hold a Council in which the Caſe ſhould be decided between the Parties at difference, upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if the Depoſition of the Clerks were confirmed, they ſhould have liberty to appeal to Rome. This was not executed, but Leo being dead Hincmarus addreſſed his Succeſſor Benedict, and having deſired the confirmation of thoſe Priviledges granted by the Popes to the Archbiſhops of Reims, prayed him alſo to confirm what had been done againſt Wulfadus and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, ſhewing him in what manner that Judgment had been paſſed. Benedict anſwered him, That if the Buſineſs were ſo managed as he had related, and as it was ſet down in the Acts of the Council, he would confirm their Deciſion with the Apoſtolick Authority, and would make it to remain in force.

The Confirmation of the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons by Leo IV. and Benedict.

Pope Nicolas, who not long after ſucceeded Benedict, confirmed the Priviledges granted to Hincmarus in the ſame form, but afterwards being changed in his affections towards Hincmarus, and being ſollicited by Wulfadus and his Fellows, he reſolved to review this Affair, and to write to Hincmarus to ſhew thoſe Clerks ſome favour, to reſtore them, or to have their Cauſe re examined in a Council of Biſhops which ſhould meet at Soiſſons, and at which Remigius Arch-Biſhop of Lyons, Ado Archbiſhop of Vienna, and Wemlo of Sens ſhould be preſent, with the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops of France and Neuſtria, where Hincmarus and the Biſhops of his Province ſhould meet, and Wulfadus and the Clerks in the ſame Cauſe, ſhould be ſummoned: That the whole Matter being Examined, they ſhould determine as they thought fit concerning the Reſtoration of thoſe Clerks, but if they ſhall appeal to the Holy See, or deſire to be judged there, both Parties ſhould come to Rome, or ſend their Deputies after the Council, which ſhould begin the 16th of Auguſt. In fine, That it ought not to be pleaded in excuſe, that thoſe Clerks having not appealed in the year ought not to be received; for beſides that this exception is not in the Canons which ſpeak of Appeals to the Holy See, thoſe Clerks did Appeal to Pope Leo within the year concerning the Judgment given againſt them, as appears by a Letter of that Pope which he had by him. Wherefore he Exhorts Hincmarus not to be ſevere with thoſe Clerks. He anſwers alſo to what might be alledged, that he had the Grants of the Holy See, by which this Judgment was confirmed, by ſaying, that if he read them attentively, he would find, that the final Deciſion of that Controverſie was reſerved to the Holy See, which maintains the Rights of other Churches without leſſening its own. This Letter of Pope Nicholas's is dated April 2. Indict. 14. anno 866. Hincmarus at the ſame time wrote a Letter to Herard Arch-Biſhop of Tours, and to other Arch-Biſhops that were to be at that Council, and prayed King Charles the Bald to call it together. This Prince anſwered, that he would cauſe the Council to be holden, but withall, that he had deſigned to make Wulfadus Arch-Biſhop of Bourges, in the place of Rodolphus who was lately dead; that he had been choſen by the Biſhops and People of the Dioceſs, but that he dare not let him be Ordained before his reſtoration, till he had written to him about it; that he deſired he might be Ordained Prieſt, and then Biſhop, or if he would not do it till the Synod was met, that he would permit the Government of that Church to be left to him. The Pope wrote to this Prince, that he ſhould not do any thing concerning Wulfadus till his Cauſe was Examined and Judged in the Synod.

Pope Nicolas's Judgment about Wulfadus

This Synod therefore met in Aug. 866. Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Reims preſented Four Petitions or Memoirs to it in his own defence. In the firſt he ſhews, that Wulfadus and thoſe that had been Ordained by Ebbo after his Depoſition were declared deprived of their Holy Orders by the Judgment of a Council of 5 Provinces, and by the Judges they themſelves had pitched upon; That afterward he had himſelf, by the Order of the Council, given an Account of the Matter at Rome, and that the Judgment of the Synod had been confirmed there by Pope Benedict, and alſo Nicolas; That he did not envy the Happineſs of theſe Clerks in the leaſt; That he was troubled they were degraded after ſuch a manner, and wiſhed they might be reſtored, but he neither dare, nor could do it after the Judgment of the Synod, it being expreſsly forbidden by the Canons, and Decretals of the Popes, who had ſeveral times declared, that they could not themſelves annul the Canons made by the Councils, and approved by their Predeceſſors. The Second Memoir concerns the

The Council of Soiſſons, 866.

Perſon of Ebbo. Hincmarus proves by the Popes Letters, that Ebbo owned his Crime, and was depoſed by 44 Biſhops, whoſe Judgment was afterward confirmed and approved by Pope Sergius, who had ordered him to content himſelf with a Lay-Communion, and ſince he was not afterward Canonically reſtored, he ought not to be looked upon as a Biſhop after his Condemnation, and that at this time it ought not in the leaſt to be queſtioned, becauſe this Judgment being paſſed in 835, he had a preſcription of above 30 years againſt him. They alledged, that notwithſtanding his Depoſition he had continued to execute his Epiſcopal Function to his Death. Hincmarus replies, that this unwarrantable Action was of no uſe to him, and that the number of thoſe that approved it could not juſtifie his Carriage, which was ſo oppoſite to the Laws of the Church; That it was contrary to all the Canonical Rules for him to exerciſe all the Offices of a Biſhop in the Church of Maience, for the Canons do not permit in any caſe whatſoever a Biſhop who is deprived of his own Dioceſs to exerciſe the Expiſcopal Function in another. Hincmarus then ſhews, that his own Ordination was Canonical and Lawful, ſaying, that after the Depoſition of Ebbo Fulcus took care of the Church of Reims for 9 years, in which time Ebbo did not claim his Dignity again, nor make any oppoſition to him. That Noto had done the ſame for a year and a half, without any demand of reſtoration from Ebbo. That as for himſelf he was afterward Ordained in the Synod of the Province of Reims held at Beauvais, being deſired by the People and Clergy of the City, and by the Biſhops of the Province, and that he was Conſecrated by his Arch-Biſhop Biſhop, and by the Biſhops of the Province, with the conſent of the Abbot and Monks of the Monaſtery of which he was a Member. That he was put in poſſeſſion of it without any oppoſition from any Man. That his Ordination was approved by the Biſhops of France, who wrote about it to Pope Sergius, and confirmed by an Edict of King Charles the Bald. That all theſe Acts were ſent to Leo IV. Sergius being dead in the mean time. That Lotharius himſelf having in vain ſollicited Pope Sergius to have Ebbo reſtored, agreed to his Ordination; That the Holy See had allowed it, and Leo IV. had granted him the Pall, and had writ to him ſeveral Letters; That Pope Benedict and Pope Nicola had confirmed him by granting him his Priviledges. Laſtly, That he was not obliged to enter into any diſpute about it with any Man, ſince Nicolas had not required of him an Account of his Ordination of him. Laſtly, having confirmed that which had paſſed in the Affair of the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, it belonged to the Biſhops to direct what they thought juſt and regular to ſatisfie the Pope; That as for himſelf he would not oppoſe what they did; That if it were neceſſary he would explain the Buſineſs more at large, and would ſhew them the Reaſons, why they ſuſpended theſe Clerks at the Synod of Meaux, and degraded them quite in the Council of Soiſſons. Then he preſented to the Synod the Acts of the Council of Soiſſons, with thoſe of the Synod of Bourges, and the Priviledges of the Popes Benedict and Nicolas.

Hincmarus alſo preſented a 3d Petition, in which after he had ſet down ſuch Canons and Paſſages in the Popes Letters, as made it appear, that ſometimes Clemency had been uſed towards them whoſe Ordinations were dubious, he conſented for Peace ſake, and to ſatisfie the Pope, that ſome gentle Method might be found out to receive and promote to Holy Orders thoſe who had been Ordained by Ebbo, yet with a due care that this fact might not prejudice the Canons of the Church, nor the Judgment given againſt them and againſt Ebbo.

The Fourth Memoir of Hincmarus was preſented to the Council, but not read, for fear of offending ſome Perſons in the Council. It ſhews, That it was againſt his will, that he was forced to declare, that Wulfadus, after he had been condemned by the Council of Soiſſons, without the conſent of the Biſhops of that Council, without any authority from the Holy See, and without conſulting the Church of Reims, had left the Province wherein he was Baptized, had received the Tonſure of a Clerk, and had executed the Office of a Reader, to go into the Church of Langres, which was then vacant, that he might be Ordained a Biſhop there. That he had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Revenues of that Church, which according to the Council of Chalcedon, ought to have been kept by the Steward for the next Biſhop. That having been removed by the Order of the Synod, he had made an Oath that he would never attempt the like again, nor undertake any Eccleſiaſtical Function for the future. That he had delivered this Declaration in Writing in the preſence of Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, Gontbertus Biſhop of Eureux, and Æneas Biſhop of Paris, before the King, and ſeveral Judges choſen by the Synod. That an Oath and Declaration had been required of him, as the Popes had decreed, to prevent a change of his reſolution. And that it was for the ſame cauſe, that he had deſired Pope Nicolas to confirm the Judgment given againſt him in the Council of Soiſſons, which had been already confirmed by his Predeceſſor Benedict. That he did not ſay this out of Malice, or with a deſign to do Wulfadus any Injury, nor to hinder the effect of the Popes good will towards him, but only to inform the Council fully of what had paſſed in that Affair.

After ſo full an Information, the Biſhops of the Council were of the Opinion, that the Synod of Soiſſons had judged rightly; That Hincmarus had good reaſon not to reſtore theſe Clerks in contempt of the Decrees of that Council; That they might nevertheleſs be reſtored without injuring the Authority of the Council of Soiſſons confirmed by the Holy See, by granting them to continue in their Orders by Favour and Diſpenſation, and ſo ſucceed the Biſhops when they died. But they thought it not convenient for them to do it by their own Authority, and judged it beſt for the Pope to do it by his. Wherefore they wrote to him, and aſſured him, that they had followed and executed his Orders; and that it might not be thought that they had revoked what was decreed in the Council of Soiſſons, Herardus Arch-Biſhop of Tours made a ſolemn Proteſtation in the Council in all their Names, Names, that they would never alter their Opinion, but only would conſent, that the Judgment which had been given in ſtrictneſs of Juſtice, might by a merciful Charity be moderated, and ſweetned. Seven Archbiſhops were at this Council, viz. Hincmarus of Reims, Remigius of Lyons, Trotarius of Bourdeaux, Herardus of Tours, Wenilo of Rouen, Egilo of Sens, and Liutbert of Maience, and 28 Biſhops of France, among whom was Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, who Subſcribed the Letter ſent to the Pope about the Affair of Wulfadus and his Fellows. Hincmarus wrote in his own Name to Pope Nicolas to excuſe himſelf, that he had not immediately reſtored thoſe Clerks, becauſe he dare not Diſannul what had been done in a Synod of five Provinces, but that he had ſubmitted to the Synod as he order'd him, and had conſented to the Accommodation that his Brethren had found out agreeable to the Canons of the Council of Nice, made concerning thoſe who had been Ordained by Meletius; That he did not conceive it neceſſary for him to ſend a Deputy in his ſtead, ſince Egilo went in the Name of the Council, and the Pope had not enjoined him to come to Rome, or ſend his Deputies, unleſs there were an Appeal from the Judgment of the Synod, either on his own part or Wulfadus's. He beſeeches him to confirm what the Council had done, and aſſures him, that he wiſhed no ill to Wulfadus, and other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, who were but nine in all, as well Canons and Monks, as City and Country Clergymen. Charles the Bald wrote alſo a Letter to the Pope, in which he commends Hincmarus for his Obedience, approves the Method which the Council had taken, to refer the Reſtoration of Wulfadus to the Pope, and gives him notice that he had, in the mean time, left the Care of the Church of Bourges to him. The King alſo deſired of the Biſhops of this Council to Crown his Queen Hermintruda, which was granted him, and the Ceremony was performed by them at the ſame time in the Church of S. Medardus.

Egilo Archbiſhop of Sens was ſent with theſe Letters, the Acts of the Council, and a Petition ſent by Hincmarus, which is not met withal among his Works, in which he gives the Sum of all that he had alledged in the Council concerning the Depoſition of Ebbo, and recites ſeveral Authorities out of the Popes Letters, to ſhew, that he ought not to blame, or condemn, what has been done againſt that Archbiſhop, nor Annul the Judg ment given againſt Wulfadus, or the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, but only reſtore them by an Act of Grace.

Pope Nicolas being deſirous to Diſannul all that had been done in the firſt Council of Soiſſons, was not at all pleaſed with this Judgment, but returned a large Anſwer to the Biſhops, in which he much blames the Tranſactions of that Council, and ſays, That the Acts of it are full of Falſities, and that they were never Confirmed at Rome after a full knowledge of the Cauſe; That Pope Leo, his Predeceſſor, had ordered that the Matter ſhould be re-examined, and for that end ſent his Legat to be preſent at the Tryal, but it was never Executed, and Pope Benedicts Confirmation was obtain'd by ſurprize by Hincmarus, and by a falſe relation of it; and beſides, 'twas not Definitive, or without a Reſerve; That he had adviſed Hincmarus to receive thoſe Clerks, and in caſe he would not, he commanded that a Synod ſhould do it; That he was mightily pleaſed that there was no difference in the Council, but they had unanimouſly agreed to reſtore Wulfadus, and the other Clerks; That all he complained of was, that ſince they had left their Reſtoration to him, they had not given him a full account of that Affair, and all that concerned it; That they ought to have made a Declaration at large, of all the circumſtance of Ebbo's Depoſition, and Reſtoration, of his ſecond Deprivation, and Tranſlation to another Church; That he wiſhed they had done it in that Cauſe, and would do it in all others, about which he ſhould order a Council to be held. He approved of Hincmarus's ſubmiſſion, but could not but ſmile at his aſſertion, That 'twas not he that had ſuſpended them, or declared them fallen from the Orders, ſince he knew what he had done in his Province againſt them, and how eagerly he had Proſecuted that Affair at Rome, He ſubjoins, That the Matter being not ſufficiently cleared, or examined, he could not paſs his definitive Sentence upon it, but becauſe theſe Clerks were Depoſed contrary to the Canons they, ought to be reſtored, and reſettled for the preſent, till Hincmarus can produce what he hath againſt them, and prove that they have been lawfully Depoſed. He complains, That they had made one of thoſe Clerks a Biſhop at the ſame time that they pretended to leave the Judgment of the Matter to him, and declares, That he will not yield to his Ordination till the thing is ended. Laſtly, In the Buſineſs of Ebbo, he ſays, That 'tis no wonder that Pope Sergius would not receive him to his Communion, becauſe he was Condemned, and had not Appealed to the H. See about his Condemnation, nor had his Cauſe been fully diſcovered to him, or examined. He ſpeaks the ſame things to Hincmarus in his Letters written to him at the ſame time, but more eſpecially blames his Carriage, and Adminiſtration, in many ſharp reflexions; and concludes, telling him, That he takes it ill that he makes uſe of the Pall on ſuch occaſions as were not allowable. In a third Letter, he thanks King Charles the Bald for the ſatisfaction he had given him, in making the Biſhops of France unanimouſly join in the Reſtoration of thoſe Clerks, but could not blame Hincmarus. Laſtly, In his fourth Letter he Congratulates Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, for their Reſtoration, and Exhorts them to be ſubject to Hincmarus; and tells them, That he would allow them a Years time to proſecute that Affair at Rome, if they thought fit. Theſe four Letters bear Date Dec. 7. 866. [Theſe Letters of Pope Nicolas are extant Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268. and 480. They are alſo Printed with a Collection of his Epiſtles Publiſhed at Rome 1542. Fol.]

P. Nicolas's Letter about the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons.

By what has been ſaid, it is evident that the Biſhops of France would not bring theſe Cauſes to Rome, nor be obliged to appear there themſelves to maintain the Juſtice of their Sentence, nor would endure it to be Diſanulled, or blamed in the leaſt; the contrary to which, Pope Nicolas pretended pretended to do. He required, that the Councils which Judged any Cauſes at the firſt Hearing ſhould be called by his Authority; That both the Accuſed and the Accuſers, had liberty of Appealing to Rome, before and after their Sentence; That all Synods ſhould give him a large and full Account of their Proceedings before they paſſed Sentence; That in caſe of Appeal, the Holy See might put the Condemned into the Places and Condition they were formerly in, conditionally, and then the Judges ſhould be obliged to come, or ſend their Deputies to Rome, to maintain their Judgment, where the Cauſe ſhall be Examined a-new, as if it had never been decided. From this time the Biſhops of France, who were moſt Learned, and beſt Skilled in the Canons, to evade the Pretenſions contrary to the Canons, which tended directly to the utter ruining of the Epiſcopal Authority, and overthrow of all Church Diſcipline, and that without quarrelling with the H. See, Judged all Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes that came before them in their Synods; and that their Judgment might be of greater Authority, they cauſed the Contending Parties to chooſe their Judges, becauſe, according to a Maxim of Law, It is not Lawful to Appeal from the Sentence of thoſe Judges whom they had Elected. Laſtly, They cauſed that Judgment to be Executed, and in caſe the Perſons Condemned referred themſelves to Rome, they would ſend the Pope their Reaſons, and require his Confirmation, or rather Approbation of their Judgment, but tho' often cited never would go to Rome, nor ſend their Deputies with a Commiſſion to act in their Names, to call any Matter in Queſtion, but left it to the Pope to do as he pleaſed, without oppoſition. And if it ſo happened, that they were obliged eitheir for the good of the Church, or for Peace ſake, or in Obedience to the Will of that Prince, to do as the Pope would have them, they proteſted that it was without any Abrogation of their Sentence, which was Valid and Juſt, but only to ſhew Mercy to the faulty. Thus they behaved themſelves in this Cauſe. Hincmarus, firſt of all, cauſed thoſe Clerks to preſent their Petition in Writing, and to leave it to the Synod of France: He then made them chooſe their Judges by agreement, after he had withdrawn from the Tryal. After the Judgment was paſſed he had it executed, and confirmed by the Pope; but at laſt, Nicolas I. being ſolicited to it by Wulfadus, and being deſirous to have that Cauſe re-examined in a Synod, Hincmarus ordered the matter ſo, that not only their Decree was kept in force, but was confirmed without any offence to the Pope, who had reſolved to reſtore theſe Clerks, or to the Emperor, who favoured Wulfadus; For he perſwaded the Biſhops not to deal ſo rigorouſly with Wulfadus and his Fellows, as in Juſtice they might, and to conſent to their Reſtoration, if the Pope deſired it. This ſhewed a great deal of complaiſance to the Pope, in leaving the thing to his diſpoſe, in reſpect to the H. See, but it was not what the Pope deſired; He would have had the Synod, which he called, to have quite Diſanulled what was done at Soiſſons, and himſelf to be made Judge in that Affair; and upon an Appeal, both Parties ſhould have come to Rome to Conteſt about it. And for this Reaſon it was that he would not determine the Matter definitively, but ſatisfied himſelf to Reſtore Wulfadus, and the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, conditionally.

Wulfadus Ordained Archbiſhop of Bourges.

Before Nicolas's Letters were brought by Egilo, Charles the Bald, who had ſo great a favour for Wulfadus, and would have him Ordained Archbiſhop of Bourges by all means whatſoever, ſent his Son Carolomannus, Abbot of S. Medard, to have him Ordained and Inſtalled, which was done in September, by ſome Biſhops who were not very well Skilled in the Laws of the Church, which Wulfadus had provided, and Carolomannus had ſcared into it. It was Aldo Biſhop of Limoges who Conſecrated him; and ſome have ſaid, that that Biſhop, in the midſt of the Ceremony, was taken with a Fever, of which he Died ſoon after. Egilo being returned with four Letters from Pope Nicolas in the Year 867, Charles the Bald called a Council at Troyes, at which were the Archbiſhops of Reims, Tours, Rouen, Bourdeaux, Sens, and Bourges, with thoſe 14 Biſhops who were preſent at the Council of Soiſſons the Year before; in which, ſome Biſhops favouring Wulfadus to pleaſe Carlus Calvus, would encounter Hincmarus, but he defended himſelf ſo well, that they only reſolved to ſatisfy the Pope to ſend a Synodical Epiſtle, containing a large Relation of what had paſſed in the Depoſition of Ebbo, his pretended Reſtoration, and the Ordinations of Wulfadus, and others, who had been Conſecrated after his Depoſition. In it they relate, how the Children of Lewis the Godly would have deprived him of his Eſtate, and for that end had made uſe of Ebbo, and ſome other Biſhops, who having obliged that Prince to confeſs ſome forged Crimes, had put him in a State of Penance, and deprived him of his Authority; How afterwards, when Lewis the Kind was again reſtored by the Authority of his Biſhops, Ebbo had left his See, and fled; how he was Apprehended, and carried to the Emperor by Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, and by Ercaraus Biſhop of Chalons; how he had himſelf Signed, and Approved the Reſtoration of Lewis the Kind; and owned, that he was unjuſtly, and contrary to the Canons, put to Penance; after which manner having acknowledged his fault in Writing at the Council in Thion-ville held 835, in which Year Lewis the Kind Died; how afterward Lotharius being come out of Italy into France, Ebbo met him at Worms, conducted by the Abbot Boſo in the Monaſtery, where he then abode; How Lotharius having given order that he ſhould be Reſtored, he went to Reims, and began to Exerciſe his Epiſcopal Function in the preſence of the Biſhops of the Province, without any contradiction from them; How in that time he had Ordained Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, about whom the Controverſie was, who were told. That he was Canonically reſtored to his Church; How after he had enjoyed peaceably, one Year, the Archbiſhoprick of Reims, he withdrew himſelf into the Kingdom of Lotharius, when King Charles had paſſed over the Sequana, and Conquered the Country; How great Service he had done Lotharius, who gave him two Abbeys, and had employed him in ſeveral Affairs,

Affairs, and sent him to Rome with Drogon Bishop of Metz 844, to Pope Sergius, who would not acknowledge him for a Bishop; How having refused to go Ambassador into Greece, he fell into Disgrace with Lotharius, and was turned out of his Abbeys; How afterwards retreating into the Empire of Lewis of Germany, he was made Bishop of Hildesheim in Saxony, where he Exercised his Episcopal Function; How in 845, Charles had called a Synod at Beauvais to have a Bishop Ordained for the Church of Reims, which had been vacant ten Years, yet Governed by the Abbot Fulcus, and after by Notho; How Hincmarus had been Canonically Elected and Ordained Bishop and his Ordination had been confirmed by Gontbaldus, whom Pope Sergius had appointed at the Sollicitation of Lotharius to regulate that Affair. They joined to this Relation all that they had Written to the H. See about that Matter, and all that the Pope had given them in Command, declaring to him, that they approved the Restoration of the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo; and consented, that they should Exercise their Office. Lastly, to gratify the Emperor Charles, they required the Pall for Wulfadus, Ordain'd Bishop of Bourges. This Letter was dated Nov. 867, and Sealed up with the Archbishops Seals, and given to Actardus, Bishop of Nantes to be carried to the Pope; But Charles the Bald made him deliver it to him, broke the Seals, Read it, and Wrote another to the Pope, which was more favourable to Ebbo, relating every thing that was for him, and concealing what was against him; He says he was the Son of a Person that belonged to the Kings Treasury; that having his liberty, he had entred into the Ecclesiastick State, and was made the Kings Library-Keeper; That after the Death of Charles the Great, in the time of Lewis the Kind, Wulfaraus Archbishop of Reims being Dead, and it being left in the power of the People to choose whom they would Bishop, they first chose Gillemarus, but he being presented to the Bishops to be examined, was found uncapable of it; wherefore the Emperor propounding Ebbo as a Person of Merit, the People agreed to choose him; That in the first Rebellion of Lewis the Kind's Sons, Ebbo continued Loyal, but the second time he had engaged himself, and the Party of Lotharius, and acknowledged his fault publickly in the Church of S. Steven at Metz; That to prevent his Deposition, he had sent to the Empress Judith the Ring that she had given him; That that Princess was employed to pacify her Husband Lewis the Kind, and to sollicit for Ebbo; That nevertheless, some Bishops had perswaded him to confess his fault, and after that Confession, had advised him never more to exercise his Priests Office; That the Emperor had written to Pope Gregory to confirm his Deposition, and had received his Letter thereupon, but what was in it they knew not, yet Lewis the Kind did not seem satisfied by it, because he did not make another Archbishop upon it, which he would immediately have done, if the Pope had confirmed the Deposition of Ebbo; That after the Death of Lewis the Kind Ebbo was acknowledged by all the Suffragan Bishops, Archbishop of Reims; That they had all communicated with him, and all that had been Ordained Bishops in his absence had received the Ring and Crosier from him, with Letters of Confirmation. This is the account that Charles the Bald gave the Pope in particular about the Deposition of Ebbo, and after excuses himself for having caused Wulfadus to be Ordained, before he had received the Popes Answer, and demanded the Pall for him, and commends the condition of the Bishops oppressed by the Britains to him. - - Hincmarus had also written a private Letter to Pope Nicolas, in Answer to that which he had received from the Pope, full of reproof, and angry reflexions: In it he defends himself with much submission, but as much smartness. He tells him, that he had found in the Letter written to himself, and in that to the Bishops of the Council of Soissons, many reproachful imputations, which he deserved for his Sins; That if he were present with him, he would do as S. Benedict ordered his Monks to do, when they found their Prior offended with them, cast himself upon the Earth at his feet, but what he could not do with his Body he would do with his Mind and Heart, according to the Advice of S. Gregory, who bids us to have Patience, and Charity in our Hearts towards our Neighbour, who is at a distance from us. In fine, that he had executed the Popes Command in restoring Wulfadus, and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo. After he hath thus humbled himself, he assures him that he was much troubled to see him so angry with him, but he imputes that Charge to the false Reports he had received of him, and owns, that had he been really guilty of those things he is accused of, he should have deserved to be dealt withal more severely, but his Conscience testifies to him, that tho' he be a great Sinner, he is not such an one as the World hath represented him. He says, That he was heretofore accused to Pope Sergius, and Leo, that he had not that respect he ought for the H. See, but he shewed, by his obedient Carriage, how submissive he was to the H. See, and how far from that ambitious Spirit which was charged upon him, as well as from cruelty and falshood; That neither his own Church, nor the Neighboring Churches, ever complained that he was subject to those Vices, and beseeches him never to believe that he hath had any design to delude him, or oppose his Orders, or despise his Admonitions; That as to Ebbo, he thought it not convenient to lay open his faults, lest any Man should think that he insulted over the Dead, or would revive an Affair that had been ended and determined above 30 Years. Nevertheless, to satisfy the Pope, he tells him, how he had declared himself unworthy of his Priesthood, without being constrained by violent means to it, or engaged by fraud. He takes notice, that of all the Bishops who had Deposed him, there now survived but two, viz. Rothadus and Erpuinus. He then describes the manner how he was Ordained into his place; how Pope Sergius being sollicited by Lotharius to it, had Named Gontbaldus Archbishop of Rouen to examine his Ordination; how Ebbo, when he was Summoned to the Synod by Gontbaldus dare not appear; whence it was concluded that Ebbo was never restored, and should remain Deposed from his Priestſy Office and Dignity; and that having loſt it in his Life time, he ſhould not recover it after his Death. He next gives him an Account of the buſineſs of Wulfadus, and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo after his Depoſition; and becauſe Pope Nicolas chiefly inſiſted upon this, That Pope Leo had not confirmed the firſt Judgment given againſt them at the Council of Soiſſons, Hincmarus gives him the particulars of all that had paſſed between him and Pope Leo in that buſineſs, viz. That Pope Leo had written to him that he could not confirm what had been done in that Synod, becauſe the Council had not ſent their Deputies to him, nor were his Legates preſent at it, nor had the Emperor writ any thing to him about it; and becauſe 'twas ſaid that Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, had Appealed to the H. See. That, beſides this, Lotharius had importuned him not to confirm the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons; That the Biſhops hearing that Lotharius concerned himſelf in that Matter, had written to him, and that he had nominated two Biſhops of Italy to look into it in a Council, which was called by the Authority of the H. See; That after this, that Prince had ſent his Deputies to Rome to Pope Leo, who died as they were in their Journey to him; That being arrived there in the Papacy of Benedict, that Pope had granted him a Grant to confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Soiſſons; that ſince that, neither the Biſhop of Spoletum, Nominated by Lotharius, nor any other Biſhop, had held any other Synod about that Affair, but that which was lately called by the Authority of Pope Nicolas; He defends himſelf againſt that Accuſation that the Pope laid againſt him, that he had falſified Benedict's Letter of Priviledge, and aſſures him, that the Copy which he had ſent him was a true one, as he will find, if he compares it with the Original Draught, which is in the Regiſtry of the Church of Rome. He adds, that he had not required of the H. See any other ſpecial Priviledges, but what were uſually granted to all Metropolitans, and were anciently granted to the Metropolis of Reims, but becauſe his Province, and alſo his Dioceſs, was partly in one Kingdom and part in another, he thought it neceſſary to have his Priviledges renewed, becauſe men had great regard to them, and carnal men being awed by ſuch marks of diſtinction, reſpected him the more. Laſtly, as to the Pall, he aſſures him, that he never uſed it unleſs upon the great Feſtivals of the Paſſover and Nativity, becauſe on the other Holidays of the Year, tho' 'twas allowed for him to wear them, yet he was obliged through urgent buſineſs, and the Affairs of Church and State, to be abſent from his Cathedral Church. In fine, that he deſired the Pall for no particular uſe, becauſe the Pall is an Ornament which is ſuitable for all Metropolitans, as a mark of the Dignity or Virtue of him that wears it. Hincmarus had compoſed this Letter before the Council of Troyes, immediately after he received Nicolas's Letter, but it was not ſent in that form, for the Biſhops of that Council having given him a large relation of the buſineſs of Ebbo, he cut off the beginning of his Letter, and wrote a ſhorter beginning with his own Ordination, and the buſineſs of Wulfadus. Actardus Biſhop of Nantes, the Deputy of the Council to go to Rome, was alſo entruſted with another Affair by the Council of Soiſſons. 'Tis thought commonly to be of that of 866, but it was another Council held there in 867, for Actardus, who was the Bearer, went to Rome in that Year only; and Pope Nicolas in his Anſwers to the Synod, and Biſhops of the Council of Soiſſons in 866, makes no mention of any thing written in this Letter. The Biſhops of the laſt Council tell him, how the Churches of Tours and Nantes were much annoyed by the Britans, who would not come to the Synods of the Province to which they belonged, nor acknowledge the Metropolitans and Biſhops of France, pretending to govern themſelves; That they valued not the Petitions that had been made to them; That they had encroached upon Nantes, and attempted the ſame upon the Biſhopricks of Tours, Angers, and Mans; That almoſt all the Churches of Neuſtria had endur'd much by their Cruelty; That they had Depoſed the Biſhops of Dola and Vannes, and put other Biſhops in their place; Then they pray the Pope to do them Juſtice, to give Actardus a favourable Audience, to reduce the Britans to good Order, and to write to their Duke, either to ſubmit to King Charles, or elſe to make uſe of the Sword of Excommunication. This Letter is dated Aug. 16.

The buſineſs of Actardus.

When Actardus came at Rome he found Pope Nicolas Dead, and Adrian ſettled in his place, to whom he preſented the Synod and Kings Letters. Adrian returned this Anſwer to the Biſhops of the Synod of Troyes, That tho' they had omitted ſome things as to the Reſtauration of Ebbo, yet he commends their Zeal; That he was glad that Wulfadus's Innocency had been proved ſo clearly; That he approved of his Promotion to the Archbiſhoprick of Bourges, and granted him the Pall; That he deſired him to put Pope Nicolas's Name into all their Dypticks, and to oppoſe all that the Greeks might ſay, or attempt againſt this Pope. This Letter is Dated Febr. 11. 868. He ſent an Anſwer alſo to the Letter of the Biſhops of the Council of Soiſſons, in the beginning of which it evidently appears, that the Letter before-mentioned was not written by that Council of Soiſſons held in 866, but in another which met there in 867, before the Council of Troyes. He tells them, that he much pitied the condition of Actardus, who was deprived and diſpoſſeſſed of his Biſhoprick and Orders; that he ſhould be put (incardinari) into the firſt vacant Church, to exerciſe his Epiſcopal Function there. He ſays, that he had written about it to King Charles. And indeed, in the following Letter which is directed to that Prince, he Anſwers firſt to the Letter which he had written to him concerning Ebbo, telling him, that 'tis to no purpoſe to examine the matters concerning that Biſhop, who is now Dead. He thanks him for the Protection which he had given the Churchmen, which the H. See thought fit to reſtore. He grants the Pall to Wulfadus, and recommends Actardus to his Care to be put into the next vacant See, which was not leſs then his own. He alſo recommends him for the ſame reaſon to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, and Herard Archbiſhop of Tours, in private Letters to them: He commands this laſt to give Actardus an Abby, which he had heretofore in his Dioceſs, and tells him, Adrian's Anſwers about Ebbo and Actardus.

him, that he had written to Solomon Duke of the Britans, and his People, to exhort them to do him Juſtice; and deſires him to be fully aſſured, that if they ſhould ſend any one to Rome on their part, they ſhould not obtain any thing to prejudice his Rights. He grants by another Letter the Pall to Actardus, to comfort him for the loſs of his Dioceſs. Thus ended the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, with the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo. [These Letters of Pope Adrian are Printed among his other Epiſtles, which are 26 in all, in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 896.]

The End of the Fourth Conteſt.

CHAP. V.

An Hiſtory of the ſeveral Conteſts that Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims had with his Nephew Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon.

The Original of the diſcontents between Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, and his Nephew H. Steward of the Palace.

HIncmarus engaged in another buſineſs againſt his Nephew Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, which had no better effects than the former. He had by his Intereſt and favour made this Nephew Biſhop of Laon, which is ſubject to his Metropolis, in 859. This Man inſtead of being ſubject and devoted to the will of his Uncle, would govern according to his own humour, and being grown into favour at Court, accepted an Office there, and obtained an Abby. This diſpleaſed the Arch-Biſhop of Reims, who did all he could to oblige him to quit them, and reproved him for leaving his Dioceſs to go to his Abby without his permiſſion, although it was forbidden by the Canons to Biſhops to leave their Province without the conſent of their Metropolitan.

The Conteſts between the Biſhop of Laon and Charles the Bald.

The Biſhop of Laon fearing the Preſence of his Uncle, dare not be at the Synod of Biſhops met at Cambray for the Ordination of a Biſhop, although he was ſummoned. In 868 Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon engaged himſelf in a Buſineſs with Charles the Bald. Having ſome Conteſts with certain Lay-men about the Eſtate of the Church, and principally with a Lord called Normannus, to whom the King had given a Benefice, i. e. ſome Lands belonging to the Church of Laon, with the conſent of this Biſhop Hincmarus himſelf, who had himſelf ſollicited him, and procured it for him, as one of his Friends, but afterwards repenting of what he had done, and being deſirous to get it again, had Excommunicated that Lord. He began to diſcuſs the Affair privately before the Commiſſioners, among whom were ſome Biſhops, but it happened that the Son of Luido accuſed the Biſhop of Laon before the King, and the Lords of his Council, of having deprived him of a Benefice of his Fathers, (i. e. of a certain Mannor belonging to the Church, which had of ancient times been poſſeſſed and enjoyed by his Father) although to retain the poſſeſſion and enjoyment of it he had paid a Fine to the Church, and had gotten a grant of him. The King complaining of theſe Actions to Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, he anſwered his Majeſty with ſo much Impudence, that the Prince fell into a great paſſion againſt him, and gave him many ill words. He then ſummoned him to his Council, but Hincmarus humbly ſhewed him, that he could not appear, and at the ſame time ſent a Letter to Rome to accuſe Normannus, and to requeſt the Pope to take this Matter upon him, and procure that he might come to Rome. Hincmarus hereupon was condemned for his Default by the Kings Council, and all the Revenues of his Biſhoprick were ſeized on. The King alſo put him out of his Office at Court and his Abby. And although Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Reims was very angry with him, yet he endeavoured to aſſiſt him on this Occaſion, and wrote a ſmart Letter to Charles the Bald, in which he affirms, that what he had done againſt Hincmarus was altogether unjuſt; That it was never heard of, that a Chriſtian Prince ſhould confiſcate the Revenues of the Church. Whereupon he recites ſeveral Laws of the Emperors and Decrees of the Councils and Popes to prove, that 'tis not allowable for any Man to invade the Church Revenues. Then he preſented to the King a Memoir, which contained ſeveral Canons, to ſhew, that Biſhops ought not to appear before Lay Judges in Matters Eccleſiaſtical. The King anſwered, that the Kings his Predeceſſors had compelled the Biſhops to give an Account before the Lords of his Council of the Benefices they would put their Officers out of. Hincmarus replied by another Writing, that that Cuſtom was an Abuſe, which was reformed by the Capitularies. The King being at Piſtis in Normandy, he held a Council there. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon preſented a Petition to the Biſhops aſſembled, requiring them to ſettle him in his Revenues, or ſuffer him to ſhift for himſelf at Rome, but the Matter was accommodated by Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Reims, and the Biſhop of Laon was reſtored to his place, after he had begged the Kings pardon, and ſo he retreated immediately into his Dioceſs. Charles the Bald commanded him ſeveral times to come to him, but he would not obey the Order, but deſigned to fly into the Kingdom of Lotharius, who had promiſed to receive him into his protection. He had alſo the boldneſs to write to King Charles, that he had rather live out of his Kingdom, than to be repreſented ſuch an ill Man as he was reported to be in it. The King then commanded his Domeſtick Servants to come to him, ſome obeyed, but he detained the reſt. After this the King a ſecond time ſent two Biſhops to him, and ſome of his Guards, to bring them either by perſwaſion or force. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon having heard that ſome Soldiers were coming to him, pronounced Excommunication againſt thoſe that did meddle with the Revenues of his Church. The two Biſhops which Charles the Bald had ſent, having put Hincmarus in mind of the Oath which he had made to the King, could not perſwade him to go with them to him, and therefore therefore returned after they had obliged ſuch Perſons of his Family as were freed by an Oath to appear. Hincmarus of Laon holding on his courſe, iſſued out an Excommunication againſt ſeveral Perſons in the Arch Biſhoprick of Reims, and in other Archbiſhopricks and Dioceſes, not ſparing the King Charles himſelf, which was a Cauſe of great Scandal to the whole Church and Kingdom. Nevertheleſs Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Reims found out a way to compoſe this Matter, and to hinder the Biſhops who were provoked, from bringing it before a Synod, and to reconcile his Nephew with thoſe he had Excommunicated; but this did not put an end to this Buſineſs, for Hincmarus of Laon, a Man of an untractable temper, enraged King Charles again, who thereupon called an Aſſembly at Verbery, Apr. 24. 869. in which that Biſhop was accuſed; and ſeeing himſelf ready to be condemned, he required leave to go to Rome, and remove his Buſineſs thither. But King Charles inſtead of granting it, ſtopped him for ſome time, upon which he immediately Excommunicated, or rather Interdicted his Prieſts and Clergy, and forbad them to celebrate their Office, adminiſter Baptiſm, yea, even to Infants in danger of Death, to give the Communion even to dying Perſons, or Bury any Perſon in his Dioceſs, till he ſhall return, or they receive a Letter from Rome to order the contrary. The Arch-Biſhop of Reims having heard of this Prohibition by ſome of the Clergy of the Church of Laon, who came to complain to him, wrote immediately to his Nephew to take off the Interdict, and to the Clergy of Laon, that they ought to exerciſe their Function, and adminiſter the Sacraments, without any regard to that dangerous and unlawful Excommunication. He ſent them alſo ſome Rules taken out of the Canons to direct them how to behave themſelves. The Biſhop of Laon not regarding the Advice of his Metropolitan, he wrote to him a ſecond time more ſmartly, and enjoined the Clergy of the Church of Laon to do their Duty. He wrote alſo again a third time to the Biſhop of Laon, who was ſet at liberty, after he had taken an Oath to be faithful to King Charles. But to juſtifie himſelf, he gathered ſeveral Extracts out of the falſe Decretals attributed to the ancient Popes, in which it was ſaid, that Biſhops ought to be tried by the Holy See, at the firſt Examination, if they demanded it.

Adrian's Letter in favour of the Biſhop of Laon.

Some time after this, Pope Adrian wrote to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, and King Charles, to compel Normannus to reſtore immediately to the Church of Laon the Lands he was in poſſeſſion of, telling him, that if he did not do it, he would Excommunicate them, and to ſuffer Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon to come to Rome to fulfil his Vow he had made of going thither, and to take care of the Church of Laon in his abſence, which provoked them both againſt the Biſhop of Laon.

The Quarrels of the two Hincmarus's about the buſineſs of Nivinus.

In the mean time Lotharius II. King of Lorrain, being dead in Italy, Aug. 8. 869. Charles poſſeſſed himſelf of his Kingdom, and being accepted by the Grandees of the Country, he was Crowned by Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, Sept. 7. in the ſame year. In the beginning of the year 870, Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims expelled out of his Dioceſs a Perſon named Nivinus, being accuſed of debauching a Nun, and carrying her away, His Nephew not only received Nivinus, but put him in poſſeſſion of an Eſtate he had in another Dioceſs, and gave him in recompence of what he had loſt a Penſion out of the Revenues of the Church of Laon. Hincmarus wrote, Feb. 13. 870, to him, and tells him, that he ought not to receive either him or his Brother Bertricus, whom he had expelled out of his Dioceſs for ſeveral Crimes, of which he was found guilty. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon returned him an Anſwer, That he had always avoided to ſpeak or write to him of ſuch things as he had acted contrary to his Judgment, but he was obliged to be plain with him in reference to the Excommunication of Nivinus, and could not but tell him, that he thought that he ought not to deal with that Perſon as if he had been regularly accuſed, and could not or would not make his defence, or had been convicted of the Crime, becauſe when he had obtained a time of him to clear himſelf, although he had no Accuſers, and was come upon the day appointed to vindicate his own Innocence by the Teſtimony of Credible Perſons, he neither found him, nor any Perſon in his ſtead to be his Judge; but without a Legal Hearing he was commanded to depart out of his Dioceſs. He finds fault with Hincmarus for believing falſe reports ſo eaſily, and aſſures him, that it was not true that he had received the Eſtate of Nivinus, or allowed him a Penſion out of the Revenues of the Church. He alſo defends himſelf ſtrongly againſt the ſuſpicion which Hincmarus had entertained againſt him, that he ſold the Goods of the Church. He confeſſes that Nivinus had a great while ago offered him a part of his Eſtate adjoining to his, but he would not accept of his gift, whereupon he ſoon after gave them to another Perſon; and alledges ſeveral Canons to prove, that he ought not to have paſſed ſo raſh a Sentence. Laſtly, he ſays, that he thinks Bertricus ought not to be looked upon as an Excommunicated Perſon, becauſe the Archbiſhop of Reims could not Excommunicate him who was not of his Dioceſs, and had neither been put to publick Penance, nor condemned by a regular Sentence.

Another Difference between the two Hincmarus's about Adulphus.

Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims ſometime after this ſent another Requeſt to his Nephew, in which he had a more favourable Anſwer. The Biſhop of Laon had employed a certain Prieſt named Adulphus in a Commiſſion, who did not diſcharge his truſt well, but being reproved for it by his Biſhop, ſpoke diſreſpectfully to him, and withdrew himſelf. Hincmarus angry at this, ſent the Prieſt Clarentius to tell him, that he was Excommunicated, but he ſtopped his Ears, and would not hear the Sentence, and then fled to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims. Afterwards being deſirous to return to Laon, the Doors of his Church and Cloyſter were ſhut againſt him, to his admiration. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims interceeded for him, and deſired his Nephew to receive him, and reſtore him to his place, or if not, at leaſt to receive him into Communion. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon anſwered him, that that Prieſt had fled very unfitly, and without any neceſſity, telling him, that that he would never have any thing to do with him. That although he had behaved himself so ill to him, yet in respect to what he had written, he would restore him to his Prebend and House, and would permit all that would to communicate with him, upon condition that he shall not be allowed communion with himself till he received him upon his trial, or had satisfaction. This Letter of Hincmarus is dated the 19th, and the Answer the 27th of April, in the same year 870. [This Letter with some others of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims is Printed, with the Works of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, by Sirmondus at Paris 1645. Vol. 2.]

Hincmarus Bishop of Laon declared openly against his Uncle.

At the same time Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims and Hincmarus Bishop of Laon quarrelled about another matter. There was a Chapel in the Diocess of Laon belonging to a Benefice of the Church of Reims, in which there was ordinarily a Priest to officiate, who was presented by the Incumbent of the Benefice. Sigibert, who had the Benefice, had presented one named Senatus, a Servant of the Church of Reims, and Hincmarus would set him at liberty, that he might be Ordained by the Bishop of Laon. This Clergyman, though he was not in Priestly Orders, had yet officiated in that Chapel for 4 years. Then the Bishop of Laon sent thither two Priests of his Company, but after a while he removed these Priests, and would have a Priest only to bear the Titles, and that the Inhabitans should go to a Parish of the Diocess of Laon governed by Hermerardus. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims desired his Nephew, either to Ordain Senatus, or to put into that Church another Priest whom he should appoint to bear the Title. Instead of satisfying his Uncle, he gave him an angry and harsh answer, thinking himself abused by some admonitions which he had given him in his Letter, with the authority of his Uncle and Metropolitan. He first of all accuses him as the Author of his imprisonment. Then he tells him, that he can't give him a full answer as to the business of Hermerardus, because he had not heard it canonically and regularly; That he did not remember what decision had been made in that business, but would inquire of those that had been present, and remembred it; That he did not positively require the Priest Adulphus to be present at the Synod to be held at Laon on the 15th of that month; That he wondred, that he did not send again sooner, since he had granted what he had desired; That as to Senatus, 'twas not true that he had consented that that Clerk should have the Church in debate, but on the contrary had told him, that he would deal with the Church which the Archbishop of Reims had in his Diocess, as he had done with that which the Bishop of Laon had in his; That he had a Complaint against Sigibert for putting that Clerk into the Church that belonged to Hermerardus; That Sigibert had answered, that he did it with the consent of his Officers, and particularly of Adulphus; That he had answered, that if Hermerardus would relinquish that Church, well, if not, he would proceed as in Justice he might; That not being able to perswade Hermerardus to recede from his Right, he had given notice to Sigibert by a Man that belonged to him; That afterward he took that Church from Senatus; That Hermerardus had desired to determine the Lands in a Synod; That he had advised Sigibert to accommodate the Matter; Lastly, That he could not approve of the Ordination of Senatus, and since it was faulty at first, because he was a Servant, he ought not to confirm it, nor promote him to a superior degree of Orders.

Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims being met with several other Bishops, at the Palace of King Charles in Gondeville, in the Diocess of Tola, Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, instead of saluting him as he did the rest of the Bishops, would not so much as take notice of him. Wenilo Archbishop of Rouen asking him why he would not live peaceably with his Metropolitan, he answered him, that he could never be friends with him heartily, because he had not burnt the Writings which he had sent to him concerning the Excommunication which he had issued out against his whole Diocess; adding, that he did but follow his Example in Excommunicating, because he had Excommunicated a Village in his Diocess belonging to the Bishop of Laon, because the Inhabitants had refused to pay him their Tenths, but payed them to the Church to which they belonged, so that several Infants died unbaptized, and several Noble Persons without the Sacraments. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims replied to Wenilo, that that fact was not true, and that that Recrimination was a tacit confession of his fault and in short, that he desired nothing more, but that the Writings on both sides might be examined by a Synod. Wenilo relating this Answer to Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, he said, that he had not the Papers that had passed between them, but gave him the Papers which began with the Verses directed to Carolomannus, which was the second Collection of some Extracts of the Popes Decretals, and Canons to settle the Judgments of the Causes of the Bishops at Rome in their first Examination. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims having read these Papers with a great deal of Earnestness, made an Answer to them, which he sent to Wenilo, to be given to the Bishop of Laon. He waited for an Answer, or expected that he would have sent him the Writings which he complained of, that they might be examined, but Hincmarus Bishop of Laon would do nothing.

When they went from hence, the King came to Attigni, where he held a Synod in May, at which the Deputies of the 10 Provinces of France were present. Here they first gave the Ambassadors of Germany audience about the Division of the Empire. Then the Business of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was brought upon the Board. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims after he had delivered him 55 Articles to serve for an Answer: As to the Collections he had made out of the Decretals, and to all that he had said and written against him, presented a Petition to the Council, in which he related to the Bishops all that he had done to conquer the Obstinacy of the Bishop of Laon. He was also accused in the Council by the Bishops, who complained of the unjust and rash Excommunications which he issued out against their Diocesans; by the King, That he had broken the Oath of Allegiance which he had made to him; and by the Lord Normannus, That he had put him out by force of Arms of the Benefices which he was in lawful poſſeſſion of. Hincmarus of Laon, that he might get free from this Buſineſs, demanded that he might be judged by the Holy See, but not being able to gain that point, he delivered a Writing, in which he promiſed ſubmiſſion to his Metropolitan Hincmarus, and took a new Oath of Allegiance to King Charles, but he deſired that Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims ſhould give him a Writing to oblige himſelf to maintain him in the Priviledges that belonged to him, and to defend him. Frotarius Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux was the Mediator of this Peace. But ſince the Accuſations of Normannus and his Wife, who complained of their ill uſage, and that they were unjuſtly deprived of the Benefices they had enjoyed, and alſo of ſome others to the ſame effect, did yet ſtand unſatisfied, Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims choſe for the Judges of that Affair Actardus Biſhop of Nantes, Ragenelmus Biſhop of Noyon, and John Biſhop of Cambray. Theſe Judges Examined that Matter before the King, and were of Opinion, that the Biſhop of Laon ought to reſtore ſome of thoſe Benefices, but they did not give their Judgment upon the day prefixed, but put it off to another day to give ſentence. Then Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, ſeeing that the Affair would not go well for him, eſcaped away in the night. What paſſed afterwards, I ſhall give you an account of, when I have given an Abridgment of the 55 Articles which Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims preſented in the Council to his Nephew, as an anſwer to all that he had written and ſaid againſt him.

Hincmarus's 55 Articles.

In the beginning of this Work he puts ſome Verſes, as an anſwer to thoſe which Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon had put before his ſecond Collection of Canons, and as this Biſhop had taken this for the ſubject of his Verſes, That Men might freely appeal to the Holy See, ſo he made it the ſubject of his, that according to the Canons all the Biſhops of a Province ought to be ſubject to their Metropolitans, and ſharply reproves his Nephew for not giving him the reſpect due to him.

In Art. 1. he explains the buſineſs about the Chapel, where the Biſhop of Laon accuſed him for Excommunicating the Inhabitants becauſe they would not pay the Tenths. He ſays, that the Chapel, which was in the Country of Attolia, had been a long time before ſubject to the Prieſt of the Church of the Village of Jouigny; That Bertierus, ſent by the Biſhop of Laon to take care of that place, had hindred them from paying their Tithes to the Prieſt of the Pariſh, and had employed them as he pleaſed; That the Prieſt Auſoldus, who was to take care of the Dioceſs of Reims, where this Chapel ſtood, had demanded Juſtice ſeveral times againſt Bertierus, and when he could not obtain it, he forbid celebrating Divine Service in that Chapel till the Inhabitants ſhould pay their Tithes to their Curate according to the ancient uſage, in which if they would hearken to him, they might come to the Church of Jouigny, but that Baptiſm and the Communion was denied to no Man, neither did any Man die in that time without receiving the Sacraments. Having thus cleared himſelf as to that matter, he proves by a long poſſeſſion, that the Chapel of the Court and Lordſhip of Attolia did belong to the Territories within the Dioceſs of Reims.

In Art. 2. he reproves the Biſhop of Laon for getting an Abby, and taking an Office at Court without his leave, and proves, that by the Canons ſuch things are not allowable to Suffragan Biſhops without the conſent of their Metropolitan; as alſo for Excommunicating Amalbertus of the Dioceſs of Reims, being accuſed of Impotency by his Wife, who was taken out of the Biſhoprick of Laon.

In Art. 3. he reproves him for Excommunicating Perſons not of his own Dioceſs.

In Art. 4. he relates what had paſſed about the Writings in the Conferences with Wenilo.

In Art. 5. he anſwers the threatning Speeches which the Biſhop of Laon had given out, that he could withſtand his Metropolitan, and valued him not, becauſe the Holy See had already diſannulled two Sentences paſſed by him, viz. thoſe againſt Rothadus and Wulfadus. As to the former, after he hath produced ſeveral Canons to prove, that Metropolitans and a Synod of the Province had right to Judge the Biſhops at the firſt Tryal, although the Holy See might afterwards reſtore them if it thought fit; He ſays, that the Pope did not find fault with the Judgment in France given againſt Rothadus, but through his great Wiſdom, he had deſired them to reſtore that Biſhop who had implored his help. That as to the Second Judgment he was not concerned for it, being none of the Judges, and that ſince the Holy See would not join with ſo rigorous a Sentence, he had conſented to his Pleaſure and the Will of the King. That he had fully cleared himſelf to Pope Nicolas, and that his Succeſſor Adrian had through his goodneſs put away all diſpleaſure and anger about that matter. In fine, he ſays, that he had always done with alacrity what the Holy See had deſired of him, to avoid all differences, being perſwaded, as St. Leo ſays, that the Pope hath ſome reaſon to mitigate the ſeverity of the Laws, on condition that they ſhould ever after beware of it, and keep to the due Execution of the Canons.

In Art. 6. he inquires into the truth of what Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon had ſaid to ſeveral Perſons concerning his Uncle, That he had looſed thoſe whom he had bound, had depoſed thoſe whom he had ordained, I will cauſe that he or I will never ſing Maſs more; Hincmarus ſhews, that it did not become him who was his Inferior to ſpeak ſo of him, and vindicates the Right of Metropolitans, and the difference between them and other Biſhops. It belongs to them to call Synods, and all their Suffragans are bound to come to them, or ſend their Excuſe, and if they do not ſo, they may puniſh them; That the Accuſations againſt any Biſhop ought to be brought to them, and they may appoint Judges for the Accuſed, or conſent to them that are Elected. It belongs to them to Ordain the Biſhops of their Provinces, and thoſe that are not Ordained with their conſent, ought not to be acknowledged for Biſhops according to the Council of Nice, whereas, if a Biſhop be Ordained with the conſent of his Metropolitan, and other Biſhops of the Province, except one or two, his Ordination is accounted good. If a Biſhop Dies in his Province, it belongs to the Metropolitan to Name a Viſiter of the vacant Church. A Biſhop ought to Sign the Regulations and Canons which his Metropolitan preſents to him, if they contain nothing in them contrary to the Faith. He can't make any changes or alterations in the Lands of his Dioceſs, without the conſent and advice of his Metropolitan. Men may appeal from the Judgments of the Biſhop to the Metropolitan; if he hath Excommunicated any Perſon, and will not receive him again, he may be Abſolved by his Metropolitan in a Synod of Biſhops. Laſtly, The Metropolitan hath a care of all the Province, and all thoſe that have any Eccleſiaſtical Matters may apply themſelves to him, and he can take cognizance of them; A Biſhop hath only the Government of his own Dioceſs, in which he may Ordain Prieſts and Deacons; if he hath any differences with another Biſhop, they can't take the Biſhops of another Province for Judges; he can do nothing in the general Affairs of a Province without his Metropolitan; In dubious Cauſes he ought to aſſiſt him, he ought not to go directly to Rome; If he will go out of his Province, he muſt firſt obtain leave of his Metropolitan. Nevertheleſs, if he hath any Accuſation againſt his Metropolitan, he may demand Judges of the H. See, according to the Council of Sardica. Laſtly, The Metropolitan may cauſe the Canons, and Conſtitutions of the Church, to be put in Execution in all the Province, without aſſembling any Synod, or conſulting the Biſhops, and if he finds any thing oppoſite to them, he may reform it immediately, becauſe in ſo doing he is the Author of no new Laws, but the Executer of the old only.

In the 7th Article, He reproves Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Laon, for going out of his Dioceſs without his conſent, and flying from the Judgment of his Metropolitan and the Biſhops of his Province.

In the 8th Article, He accuſes him for ſending the Pope's Letters directed to the King and himſelf, by ſuch Archbiſhops as were at a diſtance from him, whereas he ought to have ſent them by his own Meſſengers.

In the 9th Article, He reproves him for having Excommunicated a Monk of S. Dennis, which the King had put in a Monaſtery in the Dioceſs of Laon, and would not be perſwaded to revoke that Excommunication.

In the 10th Article, He anſwers the Collection of Decretals made by Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, and becauſe he grounded the Authority of theſe Records upon a paſſage of S. Leo, who ſays, that we are obliged to obey the Decrees of his Predeceſſors, made and promulgated concerning the Orders and Diſcipline of the Church, quæ de Eccleſiaſticis ordinibus, & Canonum ſunt promulgata diſciplinis. He explains the ſignification of this expreſſion, and affirms, that it ought to be underſtood of the Laws taken out of the Canons, and which they have publiſhed in their Decretals, and not of the private Decrees which they have made, and which are not agreeable to them; whereupon he cites ſeveral Sentences of the Popes, which declare, That we ought to obſerve the Canons.

In the following Articles, as far as the 16th, he treats of the Order and Subordination in general, which ought to be among the Biſhops.

In the 16th Article, He treats in particular concerning the Subordination of the Church of Laon to that of Reims; He ſays that this Metropolis had eleven Churches under it, before S. Remigius erected the Caſtle of Laon in that Biſhoprick; That the Biſhoprick of Laon owes its Erection to the Church of Reims, and that it hath always been ſubject to it; That the Authority of S. Remigius is in his Succeſſors, and that this Metropolis hath been dignified with ſeveral Priviledges by the H. See.

In the 17th, He cites ſeveral paſſages in the Pope's Letters againſt thoſe Inferiors that exalt themſelves againſt their Superiors.

In the 18th and 19th, He ſhews that ſeveral have deſtroyed themſelves through Pride and Vanity, by explaining H. Scripture according to their own fancies, and by governing according to their own humor, without following the Tradition of the Church.

In the 20th, He ſhews that the Diſcipline of the Church may change and alter: He ſpeaks of the firſt ſix General Councils, whoſe Authority he acknowledged. As to the ſeventh he ſays, That 'twas not received in France, and cites a paſſage of the Caroline Book concerning the General Nature of Synods. Afterwards, he heaps together many Hiſtorical Facts, in which he is miſtaken in giving credit to the Suppoſititious Letters of Marke and Felix.

In the 22d, He explains S. Gregory's words in his Letter to Theoctiſtus, that they ought not to be Abſolved who are Excommunicated by the Church; and maintains, that they ought to be underſtood of thoſe only that are Excommunicated for Juſt Reaſons, becauſe we ought not to think that Unjuſt Excommunications are made by the Church.

In the 23d and 24th Articles, he ſays, That the Roman Church hath not received the 9th Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, in that which reſpects the Permiſſion, which it gives to a Clerk, who hath any thing againſt his Metropolitan, to apply himſelf to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. In the laſt of theſe Articles, he rejects the Collection of Canons, which was ſaid to be given by Pope Adrian to Angilram.

In the 25th and 26th, He ſhews that there is a difference to be obſerved between the Deciſions of General Councils and the Letters of holy Men and Popes; That 'tis abſolutely neceſſary to obey all

all the Deciſions of the Councils, but the ſame ſubjection is not due to all that is contain'd in thoſe Letters.

In the 27th, He ſhews that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon is not exempted from anſwering, for ſaying, That he was ſtopped; and by pretending that he hath Appealed to Rome.

In the 28th, He ſays that 'twas an injury to interdict his Prieſts and Clerks without any Accuſation, or they were either Convicted of their Crimes, or Confeſſed them. To prove this, he produces a great number of Canons, which preſcribe the Order to be obſerved in Eccleſiaſtical Judgments, and what ought to go before the condemnation of every Perſon.

In the 29th and 30th, He ſhews that Superiors have right to declare no Excommunications which are manifeſtly irregular and contrary to the Laws of the Church, ſuch as that was by which the Biſhop of Laon forbad to adminiſter Baptiſm to Infants, and the Sacrament to Dying Perſons, contrary to the Decrees of the Church, which do not allow the Sacraments to be denied to any Perſons in their Neceſſity. He ſets down in this Article many good Rules about Excommunication.

In the following Article he ſays, 'tis great Inhumanity to deny Burial to the Dead.

In the 34th, He ſhews, by ſeveral paſſages out of the Popes Letters, that about Matters evident, or already decided, 'tis not neceſſary to call a Synod, nor Appeal to the H. See, and that the things already Ordained and Decreed ſhould be put in Execution.

In the 35th Article he proves, That the H. See Judges with the Biſhops, and the Biſhops with the H. See; That no Man can put a reſtraint upon Metropolitans, nor hinder them from Judging the Affairs of their Province, much leſs in that which is already Ordained, and Decided by the Councils. He adds, that in theſe things there is no need of conſulting, or calling together the Biſhops of the Province.

In the 36th Article, He examines the Subſcription of the Inſtrument of the Biſhop of Laon, by which he Excommunicated thoſe that would not obey the Decrees of the Popes contained in his Collection. He ſays, that if he affirms that this Collection contains any thing ſingular in it, and contrary to the Conſtitutions of the Council of Nice, and the other Councils received and approved of by the Church, he is himſelf Excommunicated by endeavouring to Excommunicate others, and ſo hath ſeparated himſelf from the Church's Unity with thoſe he hath cauſed to Sign it.

In the following Articles to the 43d, he gives him wholeſome Advice, and aſſures him in the 40th, that he was no cauſe that he was out of favour with the King.

In the 43d, he vindicates himſelf from the Calumny that the Biſhop of Laon had caſt upon him, in accuſing him of falſifying the Quotations which he cited. He ſpeaks of the buſineſs of Nivinis, he ſays that his Crime was publick and certain, that all the World knew that he had Debauched the Nun, and had conveyed her by Night out of the Monaſtery into his Houſe; That the thing being diſcovered, the Nun had undergone her Penance in the Convent, and afterward he had conveyed her away; That he had done all he could to make him acknowledge his fault, and oblige him to do Penance, but inſtead of undergoing Penance, he had affronted and abuſed him; whereupon he Excommunicated him, and expelled him out of his Dioceſs.

In the 44th and 45th Articles, he exhorts his Nephew to come to an agreement, lay aſide all Animoſities and Enmities, and to take mild Methods to gain the Kings favour without going to Rome.

In the 46th and 47th, he reproves him for bragging he was never Conquered.

In the 48th he ſays, 'tis very dangerous for a Man to be too fond of his own Opinion.

In the 49th, he Adviſes him not to abuſe the Talent that God hath given him.

In the 50th, he reproves him for not ſuffering any to ſay, that he hath received any kindneſs, or good turn, which he hath not deſerved.

In the 51th, he accuſes him of receiving Preſents from his Clergy, and proves, that it is forbidden by the Canons. In the 52th, he accuſes him of being arrogant, proud and vain.

In the 53th, he gives him advice about his Geſture, and the motions of his Body, which were indecent.

In the 54th, he exhorts him not to miſuſe his health of Body, or Pleaſures of the World, in the flower of his Age. Laſtly, he concludes this Work with Elias's Words to Eliſha, I have done for you all I was able. He adds, that he believes, tho' he ſhall not profit by his Advice, that it will not be in vain, before God, to him that gives it. He prays to God to grant to him, to will, ſay, know, and do what he hath commanded, and to make his Nephew to hear favourably, and do what is convenient for him, and that both of them may will and do what he hath commanded, and perſevere in the obſervance of his Commandments.

The ſequel of the Affair of Hincmarus of Laon, after he left Attigni.

We will now return to the remaining part of the buſineſs of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon: After he was gone from Attigni, as we ſaid before, he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, which was given him the 12th of July by one of his Deacons named Ermenoldus, in which he beſeeches him, that ſince he had appealed twice to the Pope, as they themſelves acknowledged, he would get leave of the King to let him go thither. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims returned him no Anſwer, whereupon he wrote directly to the King, and having excuſed himſelf for not coming to him, becauſe he had a Fever, he prays him earneſtly to let him go to Rome, that having performed his Vow, he may be recovered from his Fever. The King anſwered Bertricus, who brought brought him the Letter, that 'twas a wonder that the Fever, which kept him from Court, should not hinder him from going to Rome; that he should come to him, and if he had any just cause of going to Rome, he would permit him. The King also commanded him to give a Benefice to one named Eloi. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon having received this Answer, sent Eddo, Provost of the Church of Laon, to carry a Petition to the Archbishop of Reims, in which he tells him, 1. That he greeted him, and prayed for him. 2. That he was perswaded that he was sensible that he was Persecuted, and that he did share in his Sufferings. 3. That the King had taken away the Revenues of the Church of Laon, and given them to Normannus, which he knew when he withdrew from Attigni. 4. That some other Persons had possessed themselves of the Lands belonging to the Church by the Kings Order, who had required him to restore a Benefice to Eloi, who had forcibly gotten it. 5. That he intreated him, who was his Unkle and Archbishop, to obtain of the King that he might have a free Administration of the Revenues of his Church, and to order and dispose of them, as he thought fit; He promises in this Juncture to obey him, come to him, and follow his Directions, protesting, That if the King will not grant him this favour, he never will obey him more, nor never come in his presence; That he will fly to the H. See, and use his Authority by Excommunicating those who have invaded the Goods of the Church, as it is allowed in the Constitution of the Bishops, which he had sent him. This Constitution was made up of certain Canons of the Council held in 860 at Touſſi, in the Dioces of Tola, which Decreed, among other things, that those who violently seized upon the Goods of the Church, should be Excommunicated for their whole Lives, nor should obtain Communion at their Death, nor have a Christian Burial; That the Princes and Judges should find out such Persons as corrupted Virgins and Widows dedicated to God, upon Penalty of being expelled out of the Church, and deprived of Burial; That those that have taken away any of the Church Revenues, or Goods, should restore them double, treble, or fourfold, according to the thing they have taken.

A Petition of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon.

Altho' the Name of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims be among the Subscriptions to the Canons of this Council, yet when he received this Writing, he said he had never heard of any such Constitutions, and that the Bishops who were present at that Council said the same thing: He says, that these Constitutions are unreasonable, and contrary to the Laws of the Church, and judged by the Subscriptions, that those acts were false, because he found the Names of some Bishops that were not there, and two Bishops of the same See at the same time, viz. Two Bishops of Auxerra, Christianus, and Ablo, and two Bishops of Noin, Immo and Raginelmus, who succeeded him. He adds, that his Seal was among others there, altho' he was sure that he had not set his Seal to that Act.

This Petition of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was given to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims at Pontigon, July 16. by Heddo; He represented his Nephew's Petition to the King, and got the Bishops then at Court to second him in it, viz. Remigius, Harduicus, Odo, and Willibert. The King answered, That he thought the Bishop of Laon might be satisfied with what was said at Attigni; That he had taken more than belonged to his Church out of the Estate which the Prince was willing to give him, so that he might re-enter upon the Land of Paulls; but as to the other Revenues about which the Contest was, he must wait till the Matter could be Regulated, and Commissioners be sent on both sides to the places to examine what doth really belong to the Church, that it may be restored to it. As to the Benefices of which he speaks, Hincmarus answers him, That he had deprived the Lawful Heirs of them, to whom he himself had once granted them; and that the Judges, which he had chosen, had determined that he ought to restore them; that he would stay but till some Articles were decided before he fled, and would not wait till Sentence were pronounced; That he might return, and bring with him the Arrest, by which the King had given, or restored to the Church of Laon, the Lands in question, and would do him Justice. In fine, that he had sent him a Writing of that which was done in the Council of Touſſi, which he never saw, and of which the Bishops of that Council never heard, and which was not agreeable to the Original he had. Lastly, he advises him not to Excommunicate Normannus, or any others, rashly, nor go to Rome till 'twas examin'd in a Provincial Synod, whether his Appeal to the H. See were regular.

The Answer to the Bishop of Laon's Petition.

Hincmarus Bishop of Laon returned a long Answer to this Letter of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, in which he tells him, That he did not desire to enjoy the Revenues of the Church to put them to a bad use, but to employ them as the Canons prescribe; and that it could not but trouble him much to see the Revenues, which were intended for the Subsistance of himself and Clergy, to be taken away, and given to a Person to whom his Predecessor would never grant a Church-Farm; That another had got a Farm granted him, which use to furnish the Church with Candles; and several others were given to such persons, who had done no Service to the Church a long time, and could be no ways profitable to it; That the King never spake a word to him, of that which Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims mentioned to him; and that he only told him, that he heard he had taken more Grounds in the Lands of Paulls than belonged to him, or were granted by the Letters he had sent him; That he would have them; That he was willing that he should enjoy what was contained in these Letters, except the Farms in the possession of Angarius, who was his Man, upon condition, nevertheless, that they should restore them to him, if he found that they belonged to the Land of Paulls; That the King had delayed to restore them to him, but he was put upon doing it by the Advice of Hincmarus; That he had not unjustly seized upon, and kept thoſe Farms, but they have belonged above 60 Years to the Land of Paulli; That he had enjoyed them ever ſince the King had reſtored thoſe Lands, ſix months ſince, till Anſgarius had obtain'd them of the King, without any cognizance of the Cauſe, and without examining his Claim. As to the Judges, which he ſays were Named by him, it is true that the King ordered the Archbiſhop of Reims to Nominate ſome Biſhops who ſhould examine the Affair of thoſe who complained that they were deprived of their Benefices; That Hincmarus having Named them, he did appear before them with one Clergy-man and Lay-man of his Church; That Regenard having preferred his complaint firſt, he did ſhew his Reaſons why he deprived him; and whereas, among other things, he had accuſed him of not paying the Service due, the Judges required him to take an Oath that it was ſo, and that Regenard ſhould loſe his Benefice. Whereupon Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon complains, that the Judges regarded Temporal more than Spiritual Cauſes, becauſe being alſo accuſed of ſpoiling the Farms, and having abuſed the Revenues of the Church, they did not condemn him to make any Reſtitution. The ſecond that made his complaint was one Grieon, who being accuſed of ſpoiling a Wood which his Father had Planted, he defended himſelf by ſaying, 'Twas not ſo, and that 'twas ſome Peaſants that had waſted it againſt his knowledge; and that Hincmarus had deprived him of his Benefice only becauſe he would not go to Rome; That when Hincmarus maintained the contrary, and produced his Witneſſes, they put off the Judgment of that Affair till next Week. He then confeſſes, that he withdrew himſelf, but ſays 'twas to avoid the Perſecution intended againſt him; That all his Family was Baniſhed; That they favoured the Lord Normannus, who was Excommunicated both by the Pope and himſelf; That they would not permit him to go to Rome, but had taken away the Revenues that belong to his Church. As to the Conſtitution of the Synod of Touſſi, he ſays, that he received it of Harduicus Archbiſhop of Biſancon, who was preſent at it; and that it was written by two of his Deacons; and that he remembers well, that 'twas made in that Council; That 'tis true, that he had compoſed another Letter, but finding it too long, he thought it beſt to Sign this which was ſhorter, and, as it were, an abridgment of the other. Laſtly, he enlarges upon the Popes Decretals; he affirms that they do not contradict one another, and that the Biſhops, who deſire to be judged at Rome, at the firſt Examination ought to be ſent thither. He complains of his Archbiſhop, that he had been no help to him ſince he deſired to be ſent thither, but, on the contrary, oppoſed his Intereſts. This is the Anſwer that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon gave his Metropolitan; but having no mind to have to do with him, nor thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Judges that he had Nominated, he reſolved to requeſt Secular Judges of the King, two months after he retired from Attigni. The King appointed Helmingarius, Hotarius and Urſio, who were Court-Officers. Theſe Judges altered, and re-examined the things that had been decided by the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and were more favourable to Hincmarus of Laon than they had been, for they made the Lord Normannus to leave his Benefice; and others, who had gotten poſſeſſion of the Benefices in conteſt through the flight of Hincmarus, to reſign them to him again. Things being thus ordered, Hincmarus of Laon returned to Court, and never ſpake more of going to Rome.

A new Conteſt between Hincmarus of Laon and the King.

Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims, was very angry that his Nephew had ſo well acquitted himſelf before the Lay-Judges, contemning the Authority of his See, and the Judges he had appointed; wherefore he wrote to him with a great deal of Paſſion. Nevertheleſs, the Judgment given for him was Executed; but not long after, Hincmarus of Laon engaged in a freſh Quarrel with King Charles upon the account of Caroloman. This happened thus: Caroloman, the Eldeſt Son of King Charles, was Baptized in the Church of Reims, and devoted by his Father to be a Churchman, having been Shaved, and afterwards received all the Orders, as far as a Deacon, from the Hands of Hildegarius Biſhop of Meaux; But becauſe he was forced to embrace a Profeſſion, which diſpleaſed him, he reſolved to make his eſcape, and being got away, he conſpired againſt his Father. He was accuſed in the Synod of Attigni, and condemned as a Rebel, and thereupon being deprived of his Abbies was put in Priſon. Having appealed to Rome, the Pope wrote in his favour, and a little after he was ſet at Liberty. But in the Year following he began his Quarrel again, took Arms, gathered Troops, and Plundered the Country. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, in the abſence of the King, who was gone into Burgundy, aſſembled the Biſhops of his Province immediately, and after he had admoniſhed him four times that he ſhould lay down his Arms, he declared him Excommunicated, and all his Soldiers, which were the greateſt part of the Province of Reims, if they did not reform, and do Penance before the 11th of March. Hincmarus ſent this Letter of Excommunication to Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons, and to the Biſhops of his Province, and wrote on purpoſe to Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, to require his conſent, under Hand, to this Excommunication, but he gave him no Anſwer to it; wherefore he wrote a ſecond time more earneſtly to him. Then he anſwered, That he would not give his conſent to it, becauſe he had not anſwered his deſire made to him by Eddo, which he ought to have added in that Act. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims replied, That Eddo had never ſpoke to him about it, and that he had not any thing to add. Nevertheleſs, he deſired him to tell him plainly what he would have added, promiſing that he would do it if it were reaſonable, being always ready to learn of others, follow their advice, and reform any thing that was amiſs. In the reſt of the Letter, he ſpeaks with loftineſs to his Nephew, and ſhews that he is greatly diſpleaſed with his Diſobedience. 'Tis Dated Aug. 19.

On the 5th of May, a Clergy-man of Laon called Teutlandus coming to Reims, the Archbiſhop ordered him to bid his Biſhop to ſend his conſent immediately to the Excommunication of Caroloman, man. Laſtly, Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon being admoniſhed a 6th time by a Letter from his Metropolitan, anſwered, That he wondred he ſhould deſire his conſent to that Excommunication, ſince he had not taken his Advice in iſſuing it out. He alſo complains, that his Unkle had ſent his Summons by the Clergy-men of his own Church, and that he had pronounced a Benediction in the Dioceſs of Laon upon ſome of the Confederates of Caroloman.

On the 14th of May, Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims cited the Biſhop of Laon to a Synod, which was to be held, that he ſhould anſwer to the complaints and accuſations brought againſt him; but he, inſtead of giving a civil anſwer, wrote a Letter full of Invectives and Affronts, in which he accuſes him of betraying, and delivering him up, when he was apprehended, and of being his Enemy ever ſince he oppoſed him in his putting a Biſhop into Rothadus's place, till he ſhould receive the Popes pleaſure about that Affair. Nevertheleſs, Adrian wrote two Letters in favour of Caroloman to the King his Father, to the Biſhops of France, and the Lords, in which he forbids the laſt taking Arms againſt Caroloman, and the others to Excommunicate him. Theſe Letters bear date July 13. but they did Caroloman no ſervice, as we ſhall ſhew anon. This Pope wrote alſo to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, March 25. to call a Synod for the Reformation of Abuſes in his Dioceſs; and under this pretence Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims cited Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, in the Name of the Pope, and by his Authority, to the Synod which was to be holden at Douzi, Aug. 5. The Act ſays July 5.

Hincmarus of Laon cited to a Synod.

Adrian's Letter in favour of Caroloman.

The Council being aſſembled at Douri, King Charles preſented a Bill to them containing ſeveral heads of Accuſation againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon; the beginning of it is loſt. In that part which remains, he accuſes him for Writing to Rome againſt him, at the ſame time when he acknowledged in France, that he had not meddled with any of the Revenues of the Church; for going out of his Kingdom into Lotharius's; for not coming to him when he had commanded him, and for hindering his Servants to come to him; for Writing a ſecond time to Rome againſt him; for flying from Attigni after he had Sworn Allegiance to him. Laſtly, for Arming his Servants to hinder the Governor of the Province, that he might not apprehend certain ſuſpicious Perſons which were at his Houſe, to ſend them to the Council, but let them eſcape. When this Bill was read, the King deſired, that ſince the Biſhop of Laon, who had been cited by his Metropolitan to appear before the Council, did not come, they would ſearch what the Canons and Laws decreed concerning thoſe heads of Accuſation brought againſt him, and if he came to the Synod, that the differences between him and his Metropolitan ſhould be Judged and Determined.

The Council of Douzi.

Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims preſented another Petition to the Synod, in which he briefly relates all that had paſſed between him and Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, the cauſes of complaint he had againſt him, the heads of Accuſation that he charged him with, and the conſequence of the whole matter, ſetting down under every Article the Deciſions of the Popes and Councils, ſhewing wherein the Biſhop of Laon had offended, and the puniſhment he deſerved. He defends himſelf, againſt the Accuſation, that he had betrayed him, and produces three Letters written at the time he was ſeized, to ſhew that he had no hand in his Impriſonment, but had diſapproved it. He alſo juſtifies himſelf againſt the Accuſation, that he had no reſpect to the Judgment of the H. See, and ſlighted its Authority, and treats of what paſſed at Attigni about that matter. Laſtly, He concludes that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon having been Summon'd three times by the Council and not appearing, ought to be condemned for his Contumacy, notwithſtanding the Appeal he had made to the H. See, becauſe it is irregular, and he hath not proſecuted it.

The Biſhops of the Council deſiring ſome time to Anſwer the King's Requeſt, made a Collection of the Canons, Laws, and Teſtimonies of the Fathers, upon every head of the Accuſation contain'd in that Bill, concerning the falſe Oaths, and Perjury, the Sedition and Violence he had uſed, concerning the alienating of the Revenues of his Church, the Calumnies he had written to Rome againſt his Prince, his Diſobedience and Rebellion, and for having made many of the King's Subjects to fly.

This Memoir was read in the Council, and Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, ſummoned again to the Council. But he anſwered, That he had Appealed to the H. See. The Biſhop of Soiſſons, who Cited him, told him, That he ought to appear at the Synod, and if it were neceſſary for him then to appeal, they would ſuffer him to proſecute it. Hermerardus alſo was cited by the Synod. Theſe Citations having been repeated three times, at laſt Hincmarus appeared before the Council; but Hermerardus would not come. They then read to him the King's Bill, and a Letter from the Pope ſent to him, in which he was ordered to be obedient to his Metropolitan, with an allowance of an Appeal to the H. See, if there were juſt Cauſe.

The next day, he was ſummoned to the Council, to anſwer to the Accuſations brought againſt him by the King. On the 14th of Auguſt he came; and Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims, having ordered him to anſwer to the King's Petition, he ſaid, That he was deprived of all his Revenues, and would not anſwer in that Synod: And taking up his Papers, he began to read the Canons concerning Biſhop's Appeals. The Council ordered him to anſwer the Accuſations brought againſt him, giving him Liberty afterwards to appeal to the H. See, if he would. He perſiſted in his firſt Anſwer That he was deprived of his Revenues, and would not anſwer. They asked him, who had deprived him? He anſwered, his Clergy-men knew: And one of them being asked about it, anſwered, that it was the King; who immediately ſaid 'twas falſe, and accuſed Hincmarus of arming his Servants to hinder that his Governour might ſend ſeveral Perſons accuſed of Treachery to the Council, Council, of ſaving them, of flying himſelf, and carrying with him the Sacred Veſſels and Ornaments of the Church of our Lady at Laon, which made him ſo backward to make his Defence: That ſince he came to the Synod, he had prepared him an Houſe where his Servants might lodge, but he choſe rather to abide in his Court near the Church: That he had ordered Bernard to treat him civilly, and take care of his Goods and Papers: That they had brought them to him, with a Golden Croſs ſet with Stones, and ſeveral things belonging to the Church. The King proved the Facts by Witneſſes, though the very Clergy of the Biſhop of Laon owned them. He was accuſed of having taken away and given a Chalice, with a Patten of Gold ſet with Stones, to a Prieſt, to hide for him, which the King had given to the Church of S. Maries at Laon; of having taken away the Relicks and Deeds of the Church of Laon, with a Golden Croſs; ſo not only enriching himſelf with the Goods of the Church of Laon, but ſuffering his Servants to convey them away.

Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims, having ſummoned him to anſwer theſe Accuſations, he ſaid, he would not anſwer before him, becauſe he had ſomething againſt him, and therefore appealed to the H. See. Hincmarus anſwered him, That he ought not to decline his Judgment, ſince he had often reproved him, and admoniſhed him, but had not yet judged him, and ſo he could not appeal to Rome; becauſe by the ancient Canons, no Appeals can be made thither, but after Judgment: Wherefore he ought to anſwer, and ſhould be tryed without any Prejudice to the Privileges or Judgment of the Pope, as it is decreed by the Council of Sardica, That he might appeal to Rome after the Judgment of the Provincial Synod. Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, ſaid, That he would not anſwer, nor accept his Metropolitan for his Judge, becauſe he had adviſed the King to take him Priſoner. Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims, having prayed the King to ſpeak the Truth, the King proteſted with an Oath, That he did it without the Conſent of the Archbiſhop of Reims, and added, That had it not been for the Reſpect he had for him, he would have impriſoned him above two years ago for his Inſolencies; and that if he had not kept his Lords from it, he had been ſet upon in his Palace, and ſtabbed or beaten to death. Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims alſo prayed Ado and Hildebaldus, who were preſent when the Biſhop of Laon was apprehended, to ſpeak what they knew; who both of them teſtified, as well as two Prieſts and Earls, That it was done without the Privity of the Archbiſhop of Reims.

After this, Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Reims, read over again the King's Requeſt, and interrogated him about every Article; but he would not anſwer: But all the heads were proved againſt Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, either by Writing or Witneſſes; and being required three times to anſwer, the Archbiſhops of Beſancon, Bourdeaux, Bourges, Trives, Rouen, Sens, and the Biſhops of Troyes, Tongres, Meaux, Mets, Chartres, Beauvais, Tournay, Poictiers, Cambray, Orleans, Chalons, Soiſſons, Verdun, and Paris, with the Rural Biſhop of Tongres, were of opinion, That he ought to be depoſed, without Prejudice to the Judgment of the H. See, ſalvo per omnia Apoſtolicæ Sedis Judicio. Hincmarus, who gave his Opinion laſt, was of the ſame Judgment. This Sentence was ſealed by theſe Prelates and ſome Prieſts. The Name of the Biſhop of Lyons, Renugius, is found among the Subſcriptions; but he was not at this Synod. The Biſhops of the Council wrote a Letter to Pope Adrian, in which they tell him, That they were forced to depoſe Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, as he will underſtand by the Acts of the Council, which they ſent him. Beſide the Crimes therein ſet down, they accuſe him of having converted to his own uſe, or given away, ſeveral of the Ornaments of the Church of Laon, to have ſtirred up many Seditions, to have excommunicated and abuſed Amalbertus. They deſire the Pope to confirm their Judgment, or if he thought fit to review it, (which they could not think neceſſary) That he would appoint Judges, either of the ſame or neighbouring Provinces, and if he pleaſed, ſend his Legate to be preſent at the Judgment, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica; upon condition nevertheleſs, That Hincmarus ſhall not be reſtored to his Dignity, till his Cauſe be examined and tried anew in the Province; becauſe as yet they had not departed from the Rights of the Gallican and Belgick Churches. They declare, That if he reſtores him, and ſends him into France, they'll never trouble themſelves with him, but let him live as he liſt without communicating with him. They recommend, in the laſt place, to him Actardus, who was deſired by the People and Clergy of Tours, that he might be made Biſhop of that Church by his Authority, altho' they could do't themſelves. This Letter is dated Sept. 6. 871.

Hincmarus's Letter to Adrian.

Hincmarus wrote alſo in his own Name to Pope Adrian; He begins his Letter with the buſineſs of Actardus, and after ſpeaks of the Condemnation of the Biſhop of Laon. He excuſes himſelf, that he did not maintain him in the buſineſs with Normannus, becauſe he was injured, and the caſe was not that which he had related to the Pope. He laments that he ever Ordained him, and ſays, That after he had done all he could to reclaim him, and found him incorrigible, he was forced to leave him, and ſuffer him to be condemned. Laſtly, He gives the Pope an Account of the buſineſs of the Prieſt, who was Depoſed for endeavouring to kill, and actually wounding with a Spear, another with whom he was Travelling in a Journey, after he had made himſelf Drunk with him.

Adrian's Anſwer.

Pope Adrian having received the Letter of the Biſhops of the Council, returned an Anſwer, That he approved their Election of Actardus for the Biſhoprick of Tours, but he diſapproved the Judgment given againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, contrary to his Appeal, to be Judged at Rome; He orders that he ſhould come with his Accuſer thither, and forbids them putting any other Biſhop in his place, till his Cauſe be Examined and Tryed a-new. This Letter bears Date Dec. 26.

He

He alſo wrote at the ſame time two Letters to Charles the Bald. In the firſt, which he intended to be publick, he complains, that he had taken his Petitions, which he made to him, ill, and exhorted him to accept them favourably. He orders him to ſend Hincmarus, and his Accuſers, to Rome, aſſuring him, that he would not conſent to his Depoſition till that were done. He approves the Promotion of Actardus to the Archbiſhoprick of Tours, without depriving him, nevertheleſs, of the Right which he hath to the Reverſion of the Dioceſs of Nantes. He exhorts the King to ſee, that all the Revenues of the Church of Tours be reſtored that belong to it, as alſo the Monaſteries, which according to the Canons are ſubject to that Biſhop.

The ſecond Letter, which was private and ſecret, was wrote with more mildneſs and aſſurance, but he inſiſts more particularly upon this, That the King had not received his Admonitions with all poſſible ſubjection, and that he had enriched himſelf with the Revenues of the Church. In the reſt, he pretends a great deal of Friendſhip to him, commends his Piety, blames the carriage of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, and ſeems to think him faulty, and juſtly condemned; but nevertheleſs, hopes he will ſend him to Rome, that after he hath heard him, he may appoint him Judges, or ſend his Legates to the place to have him Judged before them there.

K. Charles's Anſwer to the Pope.

King Charles being offended at theſe two Letters of the Pope's, as alſo at a former, which the Pope had written to him, full of reproachful Language to his Perſon, which he exhorted him to bear patiently, and take in good part, writ ſharply to him, and ſhewed himſelf angry for being treated in ſuch a manner; and becauſe he had ordered him to ſend Hincmarus immediately to Rome. Hereupon he accuſes him of Worldly Pride, in ambitiouſly claiming a Dominion in the Church; and ſays, That he did not know before that a King, whoſe Office is to puniſh Evil doers, and revenge Crimes, was obliged to ſend the guilty to Rome, after they were condemned and convicted; That he ſhould know, that the Kings of France are not the Biſhops Vicegerents, but abſolute Maſters of their Country; That he doth not find that the Popes, his Predeceſſors, did ever write in that faſhion to the Kings of France. Then he recites ſeveral expreſſions of the Popes, and ſhews by many Eccleſiaſtical Laws, that no Canon obliged him to ſend Condemned Biſhops to Rome, but on the contrary, that Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes ſhould be Judged and Determined in the Province where the Matters were acted. Laſtly, He adviſes him not to write to him more in ſuch a ſtrain, nor to the Biſhops and Lords of his Kingdom, unleſs he will have his Letters and Meſſengers ſlighted, which he wrote to him ſaith he, becauſe of the reſpect he did bear to him, and becauſe of the deſign he had to be ſubject, as he ought, to the Vicar of St. Peter, the Prince of the Apoſtles, leſt he ſhould force him, againſt his Will, to do otherwiſe than he intended. In fine, that he knew that he ought to follow, and to hold to that which was approved by the H. See, when 'tis found agreeable to the H. Scripture, Tradition, and the Laws of the Church, but rejected the claim which was grounded upon Forged, and ill-compoſed Pieces.

The Execution of the Judgment given againſt Hincmarus.

Nor did the Biſhops of France write with leſs Reſolution to the Pope about that Affair, they boldly rejected the pretences the Pope had, that Hincmarus ſhould come to Rome and be Judged; and maintain'd, that the Judgment given againſt that Biſhop ought to be Executed; And in effect it was done, and the Church of Laon became vacant de facto & de jure, altho' the H. See would not confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Douzi. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was put in Priſon, and two years after his Eyes were put out, as Caroloman's were; a very uſual puniſhment at that time for ſuch as were found guilty of Rebellion. Charles the Bald being afterwards Crowned Emperor by * John VIII. gave him an Account of the Judgment given at the Synod of Douzi, and deſired the confirmation of it from him, which he granted, writing to Hincmarus, that upon the Relation of the Emperor he approved the Judgment, he, and other Biſhops of France, had given againſt Hincmarus of Laon; after whom, Henedulphus was Ordained Biſhop of Laon, in purſuance of the Decree of his Election made March 26. and 876.

* This Pope, according to Platina's reckoning, which is accounted the trueſt, is John IX. for John VIII. is Pope Joan, of which the Romiſh Church is ſo much aſhamed, that they have blotted her out of the Catalogue of their Popes, for though they allow their Popes too many Women, yet they will not endure to hear of a Woman to be a Pope.

The Council of Troyes.

After the Death of Charles the Bald, Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was ſet at Liberty, who hearing that Pope John VIII. was retired into France, held a Council at Troyes, he went thither and Preſented a Petition, in which he complained, That being carried to the Council of Douzi by force, deprived of his Goods, accuſed by K. Charles, he was condemned by the Archbiſhop of Reims, although he had Appealed to the H. See; that ſince that time he had been put in Chains, and his Eyes were put out. He begged of the Pope to do him Juſtice, and paſs an equitable Sentence upon that Matter, which was referred to him. He alledged, That the Biſhops of the Synod of Douzi had condemned him very unwillingly, that moſt of them were very much troubled at what they had done by the impulſe of Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Reims, who adviſed them to it by Writing. Nevertheleſs, by the Acts of the Council, and the Letters written by them, it doth appear, that they condemned Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon with a full conſent and agreement, and never did repent that they had done it.

Nevertheleſs, the Petition of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was approved in the Council of Troyes by ſome Biſhops, and King Ludovicus Balbus did not oppoſe it; But Pope John VIII. judging that it would be a very difficult thing to reverſe the Sentence of the Council of Douzi, ordered that Henedulphus ſhould continue Biſhop of Laon, although he himſelf deſired that he might retreat into a Monaſtery, but allowed Hincmarus liberty to Sing Maſs, and to have a Penſion out of the Revenues nues of the Biſhoprick of Laon. Whereupon ſome Biſhops took him, and having Cloathed him with his Epiſcopal Veſtments, they led him to the Church with Singing, and cauſed him to give the Benediction. He died not long after, and his Unkle Hincmarus made Prayers to God for him after his Death.

CHAP. VI.

An Account of ſeveral other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs tranſacted in France, in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

The Divorce of th' Queen Theutberga.

Hincmarus, beſides the private Affairs, had alſo a ſhare, as I before intimated, in all the moſt Important Affairs both in Church and State, which gave him occaſion to exerciſe his Pen in divers Controverſies. That which made the greateſt noiſe of all, was the Divorce of the Queen Theutberga, and Lotharius III. King of Lorrain; She was the Daughter of Hubert Duke of Outrelemontjou, and allied to Charles the Great. Lotharius being fallen in Love with another Woman, endeavoured to diſſolve his Marriage, and made this the pretence, That Theutberga had committed Inceſt with her own Brother; He forced her to confeſs it, and ſo diſſolved his Marriage by the Advice of ſome Biſhops in an Aſſembly held 860 at Aix la Chapelle. Since theſe Biſhops had given it out that Hincmarus approved of this Divorce, he thought himſelf obliged to teſtify his Deteſtation of it in Writing. This Paper was made in his own, and all the Biſhops Names of the Province of Reims, and directed to Kings, Biſhops, and all Chriſtians. He firſt gives this reaſon of the Dedication, That altho' the Church of Rome ought principally to be conſulted in Matters obſcure and dubious, yet it is convenient to Addreſs himſelf to the whole Church, when the ancient Truth is attacked by ſome Novelty; That the Matter about which he treats is of ſo great importance, that Kings and Princes, Magiſtrates and People, ought to give great attention to the Truth of the Judgment, Conſent of the Biſhops, and the Lenity, Patience and Goodneſs of the King. Laſtly, That he addreſſed his Speech to Kings, who ought to be an Example to the People; To the Biſhops, who are obliged to Teach what Chriſt hath commanded; And to all the Faithful, who ought neither to approve, nor favour any Man's faults. After this Preface, which he hath adorned with ſeveral paſſages out of the Fathers, to authorize and explain theſe Maxims, he Anſwers the Reaſons that are brought to maintain the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga; The firſt and chief was the Inceſt, which that Queen was accuſed to have committed with her own Brother, by whom ſhe is ſaid to have conceived, and afterward procured her Abortion. She denied that ſhe was guilty of any ſuch Crime, and ſince no Proof or Witneſſes could be produced for her, it was reſolved by the Lay-Judges, with the Advice of the Biſhops, and conſent of Lotharius himſelf, that ſhe ſhould Name a Man that ſhould undergo the Trial of hot Water; Accordingly it was put in Execution, and the Man received no hurt, ſo ſhe was declared Innocent even by the Judgment of the King her Husband. Some time after this Accuſation was again renewed, and certain Biſhops were Summoned to the Palace of Aix la Chapelle, of which the chief were Thietgaldus Archbiſhop of Treves. and Gonthierus Archbiſhop of Cologne (the former the Unkle, and the other the Brother of Waldrada, whoſe Siſter Lotharius deſired to Marry;) They made Theutberga to own that ſhe was not fit to continue Lotharius's Wife; She called Gonthierus for a Witneſs, to whom ſhe had confeſſed it, and required him to tell the Reaſon of it before the other Biſhops. Hincmarus, after he hath thus recited the Articles of that buſineſs, he ſhews, that the Præmonitions that the Biſhops gave the Queen, that ſhe ſhould not accuſe her ſelf of any Crime ſhe was not guilty of, do evidently prove, that they knew ſhe was to accuſe her ſelf; After which he ſays, that the ſecret Crimes which are diſcovered in Confeſſion ought not to be divulged, nor ought any Perſon to be condemned for his ſecret Crimes. He alſo relates the Declaration of Gonthierus, Jan. 8. who aſſured the Council, that the Queen had confeſſed to him that ſhe had ſuffered an Abuſe, tho' againſt her conſent; The Judgment of the Biſhops, Adventius and Thietgaldus was, that if this were true ſhe ought not to cohabit with Lotharius; The Council of the Abbot Egilius was the ſame; and the Extract of the Acts of the Seſſion of that Synod held Febr. 14. (at which, beſides Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, were Wenilo Archbiſhop of Rouen, Frotarius of Tongres, or Liege, Hatton of Verdun, Hildegarius of Meaux, and Hilduinus) which contains a Declaration in Writing, which the Queen gave the King her Husband, in which ſhe owns, before God and all his Angels, that her Brother Hubert had abuſed her. 'Tis then ſaid, that the Biſhops did conjure the King to tell them, whether he had obliged her either by force, or threats, to make this Declaration, and he proteſted that he had not, and that he was much troubled at it; Then the Biſhops asked the Queen again whether it were true, and ſhe boldly ſaid it was; whereupon they Judged, that ſhe ought to be put to Publick Penance, to attone for the Inceſt which was now become publick by her Declaration. Hincmarus ſays, that Pope Leo forbids this ſort of Confeſſion by Writing, as to what reſpects the Church; That Lotharius, who ſeemed to be troubled bled at this, was inwardly pleaſed, and was the Author of this Stratagem; That the Queen having accuſed her ſelf in Judgment in the preſence of the King, and his Lay-Judges, ought not to be put to publick Penance; that ſhe was not regularly condemned, and therefore they had the leſs reaſon to Divorce her ſo readily from her Husband, and allow him to Marry another.

He then ſhews, that this Cauſe was much different from Ebbo's, becauſe he had choſen his Judges, before whom he regularly and judicially owned his Crime; and beſides, that there is a great deal of difference between Depoſing a Biſhop and parting Man and Wife, the Union between Husband and Wife being much more near and cloſe than that between a Biſhop and his Church; That if a Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon, own their Crime, although it be falſe that they have committed it, they ought to be Depoſed according to the Council of Valence, but a Wife cannot be parted from her Husband for the ſame reaſon; That Biſhops may leave their Churches, but a Woman can't depart from her Husband.

It was farther ſaid, That the Archbiſhop of Reims had conſented to what was done in that Aſſembly, and had conferred about it with Adventius. Hincmarus Anſwers, That it was not true; that Adventius had indeed ſpoke to him of it, and invited him to be at the Synod, or ſend thither, but he gave him his anſwer in Writing, before he parted from him, that he could not do it, becauſe he had not conſulted the Biſhops of his Province; and that he wrote to him after ſuch a manner, as did ſhew, that he did not approve of that Divorce. Before he enters upon a particular diſcuſſion of this buſineſs, he produces ſeveral Authorities concerning the manner how a Lawful Marriage ought to be contracted; he treats of the Reaſons of a Separation between Man and Wife, which are, according to him, the deſire of their Salvation, to live Continently: And Adultery, for which the Lay-Judges part Man and Wife, with the conſent of the Eccleſiaſtick, and the Church, put the Guilty to publick Penance, if the Crime be known. He adds, That in the Caſe in hand, the Separation was neither for the love of Continence, nor for publick and certain Adultery, but only on meer Suſpicion, and that this Matter ſhould have firſt have been examined by Lay-Judges, and then the Biſhops ſhould have done their Duty, and uſed the Authority of the Church. He brought an Example of a Caſe that happened in the Reign of Lewis the Kind, how a Woman of Quality, Named Nothilda, preſented to a General Aſſembly of the Eſtate a Petition againſt her Husband Argembert. This Prince bid her apply her ſelf to the Biſhops, who ſhould put her over to the Lay-men, that they might judge of that Matter, and enjoined her to follow their Judgment, reſerving to themſelves a Power of putting, either her or him to Penance, who ſhould be convinced of any Crime.

After the Judgment by hot Water was found favourable to the Princeſs Theutberga, they that accuſed her ſaid that theſe ſort of Proofs were forbidden; Hincmarus endeavours to maintain them by Authority and Uſe, and affirms, That the Man named by the Queen to undergo the Proof of hot Water, not being ſo much as burnt or ſcalded, it was a Miracle that could not be done to Authorize a Lye. He adds, That ſince this Judgment was not certain, and they could not accuſe the Perſon ſo cleared, they ought not to make uſe of a ſecret Confeſſion for that end.

It was alſo asked Hincmarus, if it were not poſſible that the Queen might have to do with her Brother, and conceive by him, without loſing her Virginity? He laughs at this Propoſition, and ſays, That if ſhe were a Virgin when ſhe was Married, it was fooliſh to accuſe her of being Defiled, and imagine that ſhe had conceived before her Marriage. He ſent back this Queſtion to the Lay-Judges with another, viz. Whether if a Woman, who hath not lived honeſtly before Marriage, but after lives honeſtly with her Husband, deſerves to be condemned to Death for her former Lewdneſs, and whether it be not more fit to Pardon her?

They alſo asked, Whether the King having had to do with another Woman, after he heard that his Wife had committed this Crime, was not guilty of Adultery? He anſwers, That he could not deny it but that he was guilty, altho' at laſt his Wife were found guilty of the Crime for which he ſuſpected her, becauſe he had done it before the Sentence of Divorce was paſſed. He adds, That tho' a Man be engaged by Oath to live with another Woman beſides his Wife, or a Woman with another Man beſides her Husband, they ought not to obſerve that Oath.

They alſo asked him, If it were true that Sorcerers could make a Man and his Wife to hate each other Mortally? He affirms that they can, and proves by ſeveral Relations that there were ſuch Magicians and Sorcerers, and that the Devils could, by the permiſſion of God, poſſeſs Men, make them Mad, and torment them. He owns, that if it were found, that according to the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Laws, the Marriage of Theutberga were invalid, ſhe might be Divorced, and the King Marry another; but he maintains, that till his Wife be declared unworthy to be ſo by the Judgment of the Lords, and Advice of the Biſhops, he ought not to think of Marrying his Concubine. Laſtly, After he hath confuted ſeveral pretences alledged for the maintenance of the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga, he concludes, that the Biſhops ought to oppoſe ſuch diſorderly proceedings, and if they did it not, or did encourage them, they were highly blameable before God.

Notwithſtanding this oppoſition made by Hincmarus, there was a Synod held in 862 at Aix la Chapelle, in which the Biſhops aſſembled allowed Lotharius to Marry another Woman; whereupon he immediately Married Waldrada. This buſineſs made a great noiſe, and being carried to Rome, Pope Nicolas wrote about it to K. Charles, who deſired an opportunity to Quarrel with Lotharius, and deprive him of his Kingdom, but Lewis of Germany endeavoured to compoſe the Matter, and Council of Metz.

Lotharius

Lotharius referred it to the Judgment of the States; Then having Appealed to the Pope, two Legats were Named to hold a Council, where two Biſhops of Lewis's, and two of Charles's Kingdom met them, that they might judge of this Matter: This Council was held at Metz June 863. In it Lotharius went about to confirm his Marriage by the Artifices of Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and by corrupting the Popes Legats. Gonthierus and Thietgaldus had the boldneſs to bring the Sentence to Rome, but Pope Nicolas, inſtead of confirming it, called a Council, in which he declared the Judgment of the Synod at Metz null and void, Depoſed Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and declared, That all the Biſhops, which concurred in that Sentence, had incurred the greateſt Puniſhment, which he reſolved to inflict on them, unleſs they changed their Opinion.

A Counsil at Rome.

Gonthierus and Thietgaldus ſtoutly defended themſelves, and ſent a Letter againſt Pope Nicolas's Sentence to all the Biſhops, with a Proteſtation, That they had ſignified it to him, in which they declare him Excommunicate, becauſe he had, as they ſaid, gone contrary to the Canons, favouring perſons Excommunicated, and ſeparating himſelf from the Society of other Biſhops meerly through Pride; But the other Prelates of Lotharius's Kingdom excuſed themſelves to the Pope; Thietgaldus alſo begged Pardon, but could not obtain Abſolution ſo long as Pope Nicolas lived; but Gonthierus, Archbiſhop of Cologne, could never be brought to beg Pardon. Lotharius himſelf did all he could to appeaſe the Pope, who deſired, that Waldrada ſhould come to Rome in Perſon, and receive Abſolution; She promiſed him, and went twice into Italy, but repenting as often of her ſubmiſſion, returned back again; wherefore the Pope having called a Synod Excommunicated her, and wrote ſeveral ſharp Letters to Lotharius the Younger. Afterward he ſent a Legat into France Named Atſenius, who addreſſing himſelf to Lewis of Germany, called a Synod, in which Lotharius was forced to take his former Wife, but as ſoon as the Legat was gone he began to uſe her ill, and to enter a Proceſs againſt her for Adultery, ſo that ſhe was forced to put her ſelf under the Protection of King Charles; The Pope was very much concerned at it, and Excommunicated Waldrada a-new.

The Buſineſs of Judith and Baldwin.

At the ſame time, there were two other Matters of like nature Debated between Hincmarus, the Biſhops of the Kingdom, and Charles on the one part; and Gonthierus, and the Biſhops of Lotharius's Kingdom on the other. The one was about Judith the Daughter of K. Charles, the Widow * of the King of England, who was taken away from Senlis by Earl Baldwin, who was fled into the Kingdom of Lotharius; and the other concerning Ingeltrude the Wife of Boſon, who had left her Husband, and was fled into the Dioceſs of Gonthierus. As to the firſt of theſe, it was ſoon ended by the interceſſion of Pope Nicolas, for Earl Baldwin, whom he had Excommunicated at the Sollicitation of K. Charles, coming to Rome with Judith, caſt himſelf at the Popes feet; at which he was ſo much moved, that he wrote ſeveral Letters to King Charles, his Queen Hermentruda, and the Biſhops, to obtain their Pardon; by which means the King conſented to the Marriage, and ſo it ended.

The buſineſs of Boſon.

As to the Wife of Boſon, Gonthierus wrote about her to Hincmarus, An. 860. propounding the Queſtion thus to him: If this Woman come to me, and tell me that ſhe hath committed Adultery, deſiring that I would protect her from Death, which ſhe is afraid of from her Husband, ought I to put her to publick Penance in my Dioceſs at a diſtance from her Husband, or ſhall I ſend her again to her Husband, making him promiſe that he will not put her to Death? Hincmarus Anſwers, That he ought not to put another Man's Wife to Penance who belongs to another Dioceſs, nor Protect her; That Boſon doth not accuſe her of Adultery, but complains, That ſhe hath left him, and promiſes that he will do her no harm; So that all you can do upon this occaſion is this, That the King of the County, whether ſhe is fled, ſhould make her return to her Husband, but withal, taking ſuch ſecurity of her Husband as is uſual to be given for thoſe who have put themſelves under the Protection of the Church.

The buſineſs of Count Raimond.

There was alſo another buſineſs of the like nature, in which Hincmarus was engaged; Count Raimond had Marry'd a Daughter to a certain Lord Named Steven, who would not live with her as his Wife, under a pretence that ſhe had had a Carnal knowledge of one of her near Relations, but would not tell who it was. E. Raimond wrote a Letter of Complaint about it to the Synod held at Touſſi 860, whereupon Steven was Summoned to the Synod, where he propounded the buſineſs, and told them, That whereas in his Youth he had had a Carnal Knowledge of one of the near Relations of the Daughter of Earl Raimond, it happened that he deſired to have her in Marriage, and obtained it; but afterward calling to mind what he had formerly done, he went to a Confeſſor to know whether he might not do Penance for his Sin in private, and Marry the Earls Daughter, as they had agreed? The Confeſſor Anſwered, No; and ſhewing him a Book, which he ſaid was a Book of Canons, by which it was Decreed, That he that hath had any Carnal Knowledge of the Womans Relations, whom he would Marry, muſt not Conſummate the Marriage with her; That afterward falling under the Diſpleaſure of the King his Lord, he was forced to leave the Kingdom, without breaking of the Contract with Raimonds Daughter, or Marrying her, ſo that it was put off for ſome time; That afterward he was conſtrained to Marry her publickly, but for fear he ſhould Damn his Soul, he would not have any Carnal Knowledge of her. This he aſſured the Council, with an Oath, that it was true, and that he did not do it for Intereſt, or becauſe he loved another Woman; declaring, That he was ready to follow the Judgment of the Biſhops, if they could ſatisfy him that his Honour and Salvation might be alike ſecured, in giving contentment to his Father-in-Law and Wife. The Synod reſolved, that it was necessary to call a Council of Bishops and Lords, at which the King himself should be present; That the Lords should examine the business, and the Bishops conclude it. Steven accepted this condition, and Hincmarus was employed by the Council to search into the Truth of the Matter, by which he was obliged to write to the Archbishops of Bourges and Bourdeaux, and the Bishops of their Provinces. He tells them, that they ought to bring Raimond's Daughter to the Assembly, and inquire of her, whether it was true that her Husband had no Carnal Knowledge of her; That it ought to be searched into, whether Steven did not say this that he might leave his Wife; That he ought to Name the near Relation he had known; That he ought to Swear it was true; and if it did appear to be true, that he had really done so with any of her near Relations, they shou'd be parted, and Steven should be put to publick Penance.

In 842, Nov. 1. Hincmarus held a Council at Reims with the Priests of his Dioceſs, in which several very useful Consultations were made. They Decreed and Ordered that all Priests should know how to explain the Creed and Lord's Prayer, and be able to repeat by heart the Preface and Canon of the Mass, and recite distinctly the Psalms, Hymns, and Athanasius's Creed; That they should know how to Administer Baptism, Absolve Penitents, and Anoint the Sick; That on every Sunday they should Consecrate Water, and burn Incense after the Gospel and Offertory; That they should distribute the Holy Bread to all those that would not Communicate; That they should read the 40 Homilies of St. Gregory; That they should know the Kalendar, and how to Sing, and should Sing the Service; That they should take care of the Poor and Sick; That they should not Pawn the Holy Vessels; That they should not Bury any Man in the Church, without permission from the Bishops, and should demand nothing for Burials; That they should take no Gifts of Penitents; That when they meet at Feasts they should be sober; That when they meet at Conferences they should not make any Feasts, but be contented with Bread, and two or three Glasses of Wine, and no more; That Fraternities should be upheld for Piety-sake, and none should be suffered to promote Feasting and Revels; And lastly, That when any Priest Died, no Man should get possession of his Church without the Bishops Order. The Council of Reims, 842.

He gave also, at the same time, to the Prebends and Deans that were to visit his Dioceſs, some Articles of Enquiry, viz. What Titles every Priest had; and by whom he was Ordain'd; What is the Revenue of his Living, and how many Houses in his Parish; In what condition the Ornaments of his Church are, and how the Relicks are Preserved; If there be a place to throw the Water in, with which the Vessels of the Altar and Ornaments are washed; If the Holy Oils were kept Locked up; If there be a Clergy-man that keeps School; In what case the Church is, and whether it be in good Repair; Whether the Tithes be divided into three parts, and an Account be given of two of them to the Bishops; Whether there be any Church-Wardens; Whether the Church Revenues be improved, and no private advantage made of them; If the Clergy live orderly, and do not familiarly converse with Women, frequent Ale-Houses; How those that are vicious should be reproved, and for what Crime they may be Condemned and Degraded.

In 857, which was the 12th Year of Hincmarus's Bishoprick, June 9. he held another Synod, in which he added some other Rules, which ordered, That Publick Sinners should be put to Penance in Publick by the Authority of the Bishops, to whom the Curates are obliged to send them; That if they do not present themselves to receive them, after they have been advertised of it by the Priests, they shall be Excommunicated within 15 days; That they shall require nothing for Burials; and no Man shall Celebrate Mass but upon a Consecrated Altar, or Table. He also made some other Constitutions in 874, in July, Commanding, That Priests, Curates, and Prebends, should reside in their Benefices, and not retire into Monasteries; That they should take nothing to make Church-Wardens, and should allow those that are chosen a part of their Tithes, to be employed about the Buildings, and Ornaments of the Church; That Priests should not be familiar with Women, nor enrich themselves with the Revenues of the Church; That they should give nothing to Patrons to be Nominated to any vacant Church. A Synod of Reims in 857 & 874.

These are the Constitutions which Hincmarus made for the Priests, but lest the Archdeacons, who are to put them in Execution in their Visits, should not give them in Charge to the Curates, he made, July 877. an Order, in which he forbids them to go their Visitations with many Attendants, or Horses, to require or exact any thing of them, to stay long with them; Not to meddle with the Division of Parishes, to make the Ancient Churches to be still subject to their Parishes, in which there have always been Priests; to suffer no Man to have a Chapel without the permission of the Archbishop, to Discharge no Penitents through favour before they have done their Penance, nor to Ordain any Persons not duly qualified, or to settle any Deans without the Authority of the Bishops.

After these Constitutions follows, in the Works of Hincmarus, a Recital of the Ceremonies and Prayers used at the Coronation of Charles the Bald for the Kingdom of Lotharius, Celebrated at Metz by Hincmarus, Sept. 8. 869. as also at the Coronation of Lewis, Dec. 8. 877. and of Judith the Daughter of Charles, when she was Married to Ethelwolfe King of England, An. 856. as also of Queen Hermentrude, celebrated at Soissons. The Coronations of Kings.

Hincmarus also, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, gives various Instructions to Princes out of the Fathers, which he lays down as undoubted Truths, viz. That God makes good Kings, and permits bad ones; That a good Prince is the greatest Happiness of the People, and a bad one their greatest Misfortune; That a Wise Government is the greatest Proof of great Power; That a King should choose Wise, Experienced, and Virtuous Men; That nothing is better than for Rulers to know how they ought to Rule; That it is most profitable, that good Kings have the greatest Kingdoms; That Necessity only should make them make War; That War is Lawful, if Some Instructions of Hincmarus to Charles the Bald.

it be Juſt; That God gives the Victory to whom he pleaſes; That they ought to be Prayed for that Dye in Battels; That Kings ſerve God by making Laws for his Honour; That they are obliged to compel Men to do good, and puniſh them juſtly; That they may ſometimes ſhew favour, but they ſhould be careful they do it not unfitly; That they ſhould be continually upon their Guard, that they be not ſurprized by their Favourites or Flatterers; They ſhould have no Wicked Men about them, nor Pardon their Relations; That they ought to mix Juſtice with Mercy. After he hath thus ſpoken of a Prince, as endued with Kingly Powers, he then lays down the Virtues of a Prince conſidered as a Chriſtian, which is nothing but a Collection of Texts of Scripture, and Sentences of the Fathers, concerning the Duties of a Chriſtian Life. He hath alſo a third Letter to the ſame King, concerning the Nature of the Soul; He holds that it is Spiritual, not confined to a place, and doth not move locally, altho' it changes its Will and Manners. He alſo moves this Queſtion, Whether we ſhall ſee God, in another World, by the Eyes of our Body, or only by the Eyes of the Soul?

Hincmarus's Advice to Lewis of Germany. In the Year 858, Lewis, Emperor of Germany, entred Charles's Kingdom to Invade him, while he was gone to War againſt the Britans and Normans; Hincmarus, and the other Biſhops of his Dioceſs, whom he had told the States that they muſt ſtay at Reims, ſent a Remonſtrance to him, in which they tell him plainly, That he was Unjuſt to his Brother, in entring into his Kingdom in an Hoſtile manner, exhorting him to make Peace with him, to turn his Arms againſt the Pagans, to preſerve the Priviledges of the Church, and ſuffer no Man to Rob it of its Revenues; to reſtore thoſe Monaſteries of the Monks which are in the poſſeſſion of Lay-men, to take care that the Monks live according to their Rule, and that the Revenues of Hoſpitals ſhould be diſpoſed of rightly by the Overſeers, with the Authority of the Biſhops. He then gives him ſome Directions how he ought to Live and Reign, and how he ought to govern the General Synod of France.

His Advice to King Charles. In 859, Charles being ready to march againſt Lewis, Hincmarus wrote to him to hinder the Diſorders and Pillaging which the Soldiers uſe to make. He alſo admoniſhes the Church-men at Court, by another Letter, to hinder the Soldiers, which were uſed to Pillage, to do it again. Laſtly, He admoniſheth the Prieſts of the Dioceſs of Reims to Excommunicate them, who, after Admonition, ſhould continue to Pillage any.

A Remonſtrance to Lewis of Germany. In 875, after the Death of Lewis King of Italy and Emperor, Charles the Bald being gone into Italy to be Crowned Emperor, and poſſeſs himſelf of Italy, Lewis of Germany falls upon France to give him a Diverſion; Hincmarus preſents him with a long Petition full of Quotations of the Fathers, to ſtop him in this Enterprize, and was effectual.

The manner of proceeding againſt a Prieſt. The ſame Year John Biſhop of Cambray was written to by Hincmarus, who gave him Directions how he ſhould deal with the Prieſt Humoldus, who was ſuſpected of an unlawful familiarity with a Woman. He ſays, That the Cuſtom of the Province hath been to make inquiries about the Prieſt who is thus charged and defamed, that their Witneſſes muſt be Sworn, and Interrogated concerning his frequent converſe and familiarity with Women; That after the Depoſition of 6 Witneſſes, there ought to be a 7th to prove the Fact; That if there be no Witneſſes, but it be only a Common report, the Prieſt muſt clear himſelf by the Oath of 6 of his Neighboring Prieſts.

The Condamnation of a Prieſt. Some time after, in 878, he condemned a Prieſt of his Dioceſs himſelf, Named Goldbaldus, who was accuſed of converſing with a Woman; the Fact was proved, but the Prieſt fled from Judgment. The Inſtrument of this Prieſt's Depoſition is among Hincmarus's Works. In the ſame year he Excommunicated * Soucherus and Hardoiſa, who Married their near Relations, and would not be parted from them.

* Or Fulcherus.

Hincmarus's Book againſt Anſegiſus's Priviledge. In the year 876, Pope John VIII. Named for his Vicar in France and Germany, Anſegiſus Archbiſhop of Sens. This Priviledge being prejudicial to the Church of Reims, and the Authority of Hincmarus, he wrote a large Treatiſe to defend the Rights of Metropolitans againſt the new pretences of theſe Vicars; And in particular, glories much in the Rights and Priviledges of the Church of Reims. He cites a Letter of Pope Hormiſdas, in which he makes Remigius his Vicar in France; and a Bull of Benedict, which aſſerts, That all Perſons in the Province of Reims are ſubject to their Metropolitan, and that no Man can go before any other Judges, without prejudice to the Right of the H. See. He adds, That he would not refuſe to meet at a Synod of ſeveral Provinces, provided that it be called either by the Pope, or Emperor, becauſe the firſt General Councils were called by the Emperors; and S. Gregory himſelf bids the Kings of France to aſſemble Synods in their Realms. He obſerves, that Boniface Biſhop of Maience, whom the Pope had made his Vicar in France and Germany, had never encroached upon the Rights of the Metropolitans; That Drogon Biſhop of Metz, having obtained the ſame Prerogative of Pope Sergius, could not enjoy it, becauſe they, who ſuſtained any loſs by it, would not acknowledge him.

The Council of Pontigon. Anſegiſus's Letter of Priviledge was brought to the Council held June 19. at Pontegon, where the Popes Legats were met to repreſent the Pope. The Emperor, who was preſent, asked the Biſhops what they had to ſay againſt the Pope's Bull. They anſwered, They were ready to obey it, ſo far as was conſiſtent with the Right of their Metropolitans, according to the Canons and Decrees made and confirmed by the Popes, agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The Emperor, and the Pope's Legats, urged them to approve the Priviledge granted to Anſegiſus without any reſtrictions, but they perſiſted in the Exception, only Frotarius, Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, Anſwered as the Emperor deſired, being willing to be Tranſlated to Bourges, becauſe his Country was Ravaged; The Emperor inſiſted on it, That the Pope had Named Anſegiſus to keep his place in the Synod, and he had ſet him above all the Biſhops of his Realm, on the ſide of the Pope's Legats. Hincmarus exclaimed againſt it, and publickly complained, That they had done a thing contrary to the Canons of the Church. The Question was revived again in another Session, July 14. in which the Bishops protested, That they would obey the Popes Letters in the same manner that their Predecessors had obeyed his Predecessors, according to the Constitutions. This Answer satisfied the Emperor and Pope's Legats somewhat more, but the business being again Debated in the last Session, they explained themselves in the same manner that they had done in the first Session; so that Ansegisus could gain nothing more of them.

In the same Synod Hincmarus, and the other Archbishops, were forced to take an Oath of Fidelity openly to the Emperor. This Action much displeased Hincmarus, so that he made several Observations upon the Terms, in which the Oath was expressed; but that which troubled him most was, That his Fidelity seemed to be questioned, in requiring of him a new Oath of Fidelity, who had for so many years served his Prince faithfully. The same year he composed a Writing, to shew that the Land of Neuills belonged to the Church of Reims.

In the year 877, Hincmarus wrote a Letter to the Pope in the Name of Charles the Bald, about the Appeals of Priests to the H. See. Several Priests Justly and Canonically condemned by their Bishops went to Rome, and surreptitiously obtained Letters of Absolution. This abuse freed Criminals from punishment, weakened and disannulled the Bishops of Authority, and quite destroyed the Order and Discipline of the Church; So that to stop the course of these Actions, the Emperor wrote a Letter to the Pope, in which, after a Collection of Canons which respected the Judgment of the Bishops and Priests, he prayed him to observe them, and conform to the Council of Sardica in the Appeals of Bishops; and as to Priests, they ought by the Canons to be Judged by their Bishops, and can't Appeal from the Judgment of their Bishop and Metropolitan. In the end, he prays the Pope to admonish the Bishops that they be moderate in their Judgments, and not suffer themselves to be transported either with Passion or Pride. Hincmarus's Letter about Appeals.

Charles the Bald died a little time after, and left for his Successor his Son Lewis Balbus, or the Stammerer, who was Crowned by Hincmarus, Dec. 8. 877. Soon after this Archbishop sent him a Paper of Directions how to govern his Realm; He advises him to prevent all disagreements among his great Men, to assemble them, and take their Advice in Government, to put in Execution the Ordinance made by his Father concerning the Honour of Bishops, and Priviledges of Churches, to keep his Subjects in Peace and Unity, to oppose the Inroads of the Britans, and hold Friendship and Correspondence with the Kings his Cousins. He exhorts him to pray to God, that he may attain an Heavenly felicity, administer Justice, and live like a Christian. Hincmarus's Advice to Lewis Balbus.

About the same time, upon the occasion of the Election of the Bishop of Beauvais, he wrote a Treatise of the Duties of a Bishop and his Functions, which are to Sing the Publick Service of the Church, Consecrate the Chrism, to Administer Baptism according to the Tradition of the Church, and to take care that the Priests also Baptize; to Ordain Priests, Deacons, and other Orders of the Clergy, at the time set apart by the Church, to call Synods of Priests, to go to Provincial Synods, and to assist at the Ordination of Bishops, when they are invited, or to send a Priest and a Deacon to excuse him; to govern his Clergy, and furnish the Church with all things necessary; to have Hospitals to receive the Poor and Passengers, to have a care of the Monasteries in his Dioceses, and the Country-Parishes, to Preach the Word of God to the People, to Confirm, impose Publick Penance, Absolve those that have gone through with it, to have a care of all the Revenues of his Church, to serve the Prince in his Wars for the Defence of his Church, to make a good use of the Church-Revenues, to know and observe the H. Canons. Hincmarus's Tract upon the Duties of Bishops.

Lewis the Stammerer dying in 879. left two Sons, Lewis and Caroloman; These two Princes having many Enemies lying upon them, had need of the Emperors Protection, who was Charles the Gross. Hincmarus wrote to him, to thank him for the kindness he seemed to have for these young Princes, and to desire him to Protect the Church, and to appoint these Princes some Counsellors and Tutors, who might have a care to Educate them well, and to teach them all Virtues necessary for Princes. Hincmarus's Letter to Charles the Grosse.

At the beginning of the Reign of Lewis III. the Church of Beauvais having been vacant some time, Hincmarus, and the Bishops of his Province of Reims, being met in S. Maries Church, proceeded to the Election of a Bishop, and chose Odo. The Clergy and People of Beauvais had before chosen two, one after another, but they were rejected as uncapable, by reason of their Ignorance and corrupt Manners. The Bishops, who had chosen Odo, had wrote to the King, to pray him, that he would leave the Election of their Bishops to their Metropolitan, and the Bishops of their Province, with the consent of the People and Clergy, and after they would present the Bishop chosen to him, that he might put him into the Possession of the Revenues of the Church, which was under his Protection; And when this is obtain'd, he shall be Ordain'd by the Bishops. The King pretending to Name him whom he would have, who was already chosen, refused to grant the Bishops Request, and wrote to Hincmarus, That his Intention was to govern and dispose both Ecclesiastical and Civil Matters, and desired him to be obedient to him, as he had been to his Predecessors; And that he would have the Church of Beauvais given to Odacer, in whom the Votes of the People concurred with him. Hincmarus answered him, That the Election of Bishops ought to be left to the Bishops, Clergy and People; that he ought not to force them to choose the Person he had Named to them; That the Ecclesiastical Laws, which give power of Electing Bishops, were revived in the Ordinances of the Kings his Predecessors; That he was not Lord over the Church Revenues, to dispose of them as he pleased. He puts him in mind of the Profession he made at his Coronation to protect the Church; That as for Odacer, he could never endure that he should be Bishop of Beauvais; and if he put him in pos- The Election of the Bishop of Beauvais.

ſeſſion of the Church, he would not permit him to execute the Orders of his Prieſthood in his Dioceſs; That he ought not to be Ordained, although he was choſen by the Suffrages of the Clergy and People of Beauvais unanimouſly, becauſe they having Elected two unfit perſons ſucceſſively, the Right of Election was fallen to the Biſhops.

King Lewis having again earneſtly ſollicited Hincmarus by a ſecond Letter to grant his Requeſt, and to approve of the Election of Odacer to the Biſhoprick of Beauvais, he anſwered him with greater reſolution than before; and when Odacer was put in poſſeſſion of the Revenues of that Church againſt his will, he Excommunicated him by a Circular Letter directed to all Prieſts, and all the Faithful of the Church.

Hincmarus's Advice to Caroloman.

Laſtly, Lewis being Dead, and Caroloman only remaining King of France, Hincmarus, according to his Cuſtom, ſent an Inſtruction to him how he ought to govern himſelf. It is written with Gravity and Authority. He inſerts the Duties of the Kings Servants, and Counſellors of State.

Hincmarus's Writing againſt Rapes.

It is not certain to what King Hincmarus Dedicated his Letters againſt Rapes, a Vice common in thoſe Ages; He proves, both by the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws, that that Crime ought to be puniſhed ſeverely; that Marriages with Raviſh'd Women are forbidden, and that Kings ought neither to tolerate them, nor compel Fathers to conſent to them.

Hincmarus's Treatiſe about Proofs.

He hath alſo made a Treatiſe about the Proof by Water, ſent to Hildegard Biſhop of Meaux, either when Men, to prove their Innocency, are dipped in Scalding Water without burning, or when they caſt themſelves into Cold Water, and yet Swim on the top of the Water; and endeavours to juſtifie this Cuſtom, but the greateſt part of his Reaſons are meer Sophiſms, which are deſtroyed by the Principle which forbids us to tempt God.

His Abſolution by Letter.

He hath alſo a Letter written to Hildebold Biſhop of Soiſſons, who being Sick, had ſent him a General Confeſſion of his Sins in Writing, praying him to give him his Letters of Abſolution. He writes to him again, That by the Apoſtolick Authority he Abſolved him of all his Sins, and prayed God to forgive them to him by the Grace of his H. Spirit, to deliver him from all Evil, to keep him in perpetual Peace and Safety, and guide him to Eternal Life. Theſe are the terms in which he gave him Abſolution; To which he alſo added, That not being able to come to him and pronounce it himſelf, he hoped his Miniſters and Prieſts would do it: And tells him, That he had ſent by one of them the H. Oil, with which being Anointed, he ſhall receive Remiſſion of his Sins. He exhorts him alſo to make, beſides this General Confeſſion, a particular one to God, and a Prieſt; and adds ſome Precepts about a true Converſion.

The Form of Epiſcopal Ordination.

The Form of Epiſcopal Ordination which he ſent to Adventius Biſhop of Mets, is very remarkable. He ſays, That the Biſhops of the Province ought to meet the Saturday before the Biſhop Elect is to be Ordain'd, and there openly Read the Decree for his Election, and the Biſhops muſt demand if their Votes are unanimouſly for him, if he hath all Virtues requiſite for a Biſhop, and no Man hath any thing to ſay againſt him. Then they ought to Ordain him according to a Canon of the Council of Carthage. That on the Lords-Day, the Biſhops, Clergy, and People, ought to meet in the place where the Metropolitan uſeth to Ordain. That the perſon Elected ought to go out of the Veſtry Cloathed with his Pontifical Veſtments, and take the loweſt Seat among the Biſhops. That the Metropolitan ſhall begin the Service as far as the Gloria. That after the Gloria, he ſhall Read the Prayer for the Conſecration; and when that's ended, he ſhall Exhort the People to Pray for him, who is to be Ordain'd, and for them that Ordain him. That taking him by the Hand, he ſhall kneel down before the Altar with all the Biſhops his Aſſociates, while they read the Litany. That when the Agnus Dei is begun to be Sung, they ſhall riſe up. That the Metropolitan ſhall take the Goſpels, and lay them upon the Neck and Shoulders of him that is to be Ordained; That that Book ſhall be held by him that Conſecrates him, and two other Biſhops: That all three of them ſhall lay their Hands upon the Head of the Perſon to be Ordained, and he that Conſecrates him ſhall read the Prayer. Then he ſhall go on with the Service, and when he comes at the places marked with the Croſſes, the Biſhop, that Conſecrates him, ſhall take the Veſſel of Holy Oil in his Left Hand, and taking ſome of it with his Thumb of his Right Hand, ſhall make Croſſes upon the Crown of the Head of the Perſon that is to be Ordained, Reading the Prayers in that place. This being done, and all the Congregation ſaying Amen, they ſhall take the Goſpels from the Neck of him that is to be Ordain'd, put the Agnus upon his Finger, and give him the Paſtoral Staff; After which, he ſhall take his place among the Biſhops, viz. The firſt, if he be a Metropolitan, and the laſt if he be a ſingle Biſhop. Then they ſhall read the place in the Epiſtle to Timothy, where he ſpeaks of the Qualifications of a Biſhop; and when the Service is ended, they ſhall lead him to the Epiſcopal Chair, from whence he ſhall return into the Veſtry, and then ſhall come out again to Celebrate the Sacrament. Then they ſhall give him a Teſtimonial of his Ordination.---

* Hincmarus's Treatiſe againſt the Tranſlation of Biſhops.

* Hincmarus oppoſes the Tranſlations of Biſhops in a Writing compoſed upon that Subject, upon the occaſion of the Tranſlation of Actardus Biſhop of Nantes to the Archbiſhoprick of Tours. He proves, that according to the Laws of the Church, and the Tradition of the Apoſtles, the Tranſlation of Biſhops is forbidden, altho' in ſome caſes theſe ſort of Tranſlations are permitted for the good of the Church. The only Lawful Reaſons for Tranſlations, according to him, are theſe, The Neceſſity of Preaching the Goſpel, and the Peoples refuſing to accept a Biſhop. As for the Perſecution of a Biſhop in his Dioceſs, he ſhews, that it is not a ſufficient reaſon for Tranſlation; and that according to the Law and Canons, a Biſhop perſecuted, or driven out of his Dioceſs, ought only to remain in another in the Quality of a Biſhop, but there is no neceſſity he ſhould be a Titular Biſhop in another Church. As to the particular caſe of Actardus, that he might have remained in the vacant Church, where the Council permitted him to remain main without removing to the Church of Tours, and that 'twas not heard of that he might be Archbishop of Tours, and yet retain the Right which he hath to the Church of Nantes. Actardus excused himself, because he had not sufficient Revenues in the Church of Nantes to live Honorably according to his Quality, but Hincmarus says, that that pretence is by no means a lawful excuse, but on the contrary, proves his Covetousness, and so much the more, because he had elsewhere Abbies, and an Estate sufficient for his maintenance and expence. There are in this Treatise a great many excellent Citations out of the Fathers, and some very good Precepts against the Covetousness and Ambition of Bishops.

His Treatise of the Accusations and Judgments of Priests, is a Collection of the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws upon that Subject; in it he shews, what Persons may accuse Priests, the quality, and number of the Witnesses, the Judge before whom they ought to be accused, which is the Bishop, the Judgment from which they may Appeal to the Metropolitan, the common Subjects, for which they may be accused, the manner how they ought to clear themselves when there are no Witnesses nor Proofs against them. He confutes the Opinion of some Persons, who held, that a Priest, or Bishop, could not be accused by their Inferiors. He shews the falshood and impertinence of a Decree taken out of the forged Acts of Pope Silvester. He owns, that for causes Civil and Pecuniary, a Clergy-man may be Summoned before a Lay-Judge, and ought to answer before him by his Attorney. Lastly, He is of Opinion, that the Estates of Clergy men, all Ecclesiastical Revenues, and Oblations of the Faithful, do belong to the Church. He orders, that all Bishops Officers should be careful to inform them, whether that part of the Tenths, which ought to be distributed to the Poor, be appropriated to the Church, and whether they take any Presents of any Man not to put them in the Registers of the Church, nor require of them any sort of Service; whether they do not put in their Kindred; And lastly, If they look after the Poor and Infirm of their Parishes. Hincmarus's Tract of the Judgment of Priests.

Hincmarus applies the Laws, which he had laid down for the Judgment of Priests, to the particular Fact of a certain Priest called Teutfrid, who had taken away the Ornaments of the Church: He shews, first, That he ought to be Judged in his Province, either by his Bishop, or by a Council; That if he hath confessed, or is convicted of having conveyed away the Ornaments, he should be condemned to make Restitution. Deposed and Excommunicated: If it be found that he hath rejected the Judgment of the Church to have recourse to the Prince, he ought also to be Excommunicated, and Deposed, according to the Canons of the Councils at Antioch and Carthage; That if he confesses, or be convicted to have sworn falsly to his Neighbors in his own behalf, he ought to be condemned as a Perjured person, and that he ought not to be excused, by saying, That he was forced, or by putting another sense upon his Words, because God can't be deceived by such Equivocations; and that we ought not so much to consider the Words of him that Swears, as what is meant by him that imposes the Oath. The Process against Teutfridus.

The relation of the Vision of Bernoldus is worth our notice, because of the circumstances of what happened to that Person, being fallen Sick, made his Confession, received Absolution, Unction with the Holy Oil and the Communion of the Body and Blood of J. C. That afterward he fell into such a condition, that he could not speak, nor take any thing but a little Water, and when he had remained thus 3 days, on the 4th day about Noon he became utterly senceless, but coming to himself about Midnight, he called for his Confessor, who being come, and having made such Prayers as are usual upon such Occasions, he told him he had been in another World, and had seen 41 Bishops in a certain place, among whom were Ebbo, Pardulus, and Æneas, who seemed to him to be mangled, and black, as if they had been burnt, quaking sometimes for cold, and sometimes scorched with heat; That Ebbo calling him to him, said to him, Since you have a permission to go into the other World, we pray thee to do us this Service, as to bid the Priests and Laymen of our Dioceses to Pray, and offer Sacrifice, and give Alms for us; That Bernoldus answering, that he knew not where to find them, they ordered a Person to conduct him, who brought him to a large Palace, where there were a great number of Bishops; That returning from this Walk, he came to the first Bishops, whom he found in a better condition, and more merry than they were the first time, who told him, That he had freed them from the Evil Guardian they had, and had put them into a state of rest; That afterward he saw the Emperor Charles in another place, who charged him to tell Hincmarus that he was in torments for not following his good Advice, and that he prayed him to help him, and deliver him from those pains by his Prayers; That after this, he was carried into a place full of Light, where he saw Hincmarus ready to Sing Mass, and that being discharged of his Commission, at his return he found Charles in a light place, and in a good condition; That he also met with Jesse, and saw several poor Souls tormented by the Devils in Lakes of Fire; That he also saw Earl Atharius, who charged him to bid his Wife pray to God for him; That he was dismissed by a Man of an honest countenance, who Exhorted him to abound in good Works, that he might have an happy Station in another World, and promised him that he should live 14 years. That Bernoldus, after he had related these things, received the Communion, and then Eat and Drank. Hincmarus hearing of this, (and believing it true, because he had read such like Visions in S. Gregory's Dialogues, and heard, that the like had happened to a certain Monk named Wetinus, in the Reign of the Emperor Lewis the Kind (or Godly) he took an occasion from hence to Exhort all the People of his Dioceses to live well, and recommended it to them to Pray for King Charles, and for all others, whom this restored Person had seen, Interpreting, what they had said in this sence, that if they did what they desired, they should receive the comfort which they longed for. The Vision of Bernoldus.

Towards the end of Hincmarus's Works is a Piece added concerning the Repentance of King Pepin; This Prince being delivered by the Lords of Aquitain to his Brother Charles, and confined to the Monastery of S. Medard at Soissons, An. 852. made his escape out of that Monastery, and fled to the Normans, who then Ravaged France, but was taken again. Hincmarus consulting with himself how he ought to be dealt with, made this Treatise, and in it concludes, that he ought to be Exhorted to make a Sincere and General Confession of all his Sins in secret, and publickly acknowledge his fault in leaving his Monastery, being Perjured, and made no better than an Heathen, and do his publick Penances; that A Relation of K. Pepin's Repentance.

then he may be reconciled, receive the Clerical Tonſure, and put on a Monks Habit, promiſing to live regularly for the future. And after this he may take the Communion, but muſt be treated civilly and kindly, and left at liberty in the Monaſtery, yet the Monks ought to obſerve ſtrictly, that he doth not relapſe into the ſame fault, not eſcape, as he hath already done from the Monaſtery of S. Medard, and as Carloman had done from the Monaſtery of Corby.

Several Letters of Hincmarus. At the end of Hincmarus's Works are ſome fragments of his Letters taken out of Hodoardus: The firſt is taken out of a Letter written to King Charles the Bald, concerning the manner how he ought to adminiſter Juſtice to the Biſhops; The ſecond is out of a Letter to Lewis Emperor of Germany, about the Ordination of Bertulphus to the Archbiſhoprick of Treves; This Church had been a long time vacant, and Hincmarus Ordained Bertulphus to it. Lewis of Germany was angry at it, as an encroachment upon the Rights of his Kingdom, and an intruſion upon a Church that did not belong to him; wherefore Hincmarus wrote to him to excuſe himſelf, and ſays, that he undertook that Ordination for the good of the Church; that he thought, ſince there were not Biſhops enow in the Province of Treves to Ordain a Metropolitan, it belonged to him, who was the next Archbiſhop, to do it; and ſo much the rather, becauſe the Churches of Reims and Treves were looked upon as Siſters, and the Cuſtom in the Councils was, that the moſt ancient of thoſe two Churches ſhould have the Precedency of the other. That, indeed, he had not concerned himſelf with that Ordination, but by the entreaty of the Church of Treves, by whom Bertulphus was generally approved of; That he was reſolved to maintain what he had done, and to defend the validity of this Ordination; That ſo long as he lived he would acknowledge Bertulphus Archbiſhop of Treves, unleſs he were Canonically Depoſed; That Walto, who had invaded that Church, ſhould never be acknowledged by him for a Lawful Biſhop, and if he perſiſted in his Claim they would condemn him.

In another Letter written to the Monks of S. Dennis, he forbids them to ſell their Tythes, and convert the Price of them to their own advantage. In the 4th, directed to an Earl, he forbids him taking any thing for his Nomination to a Church, and tells him, That if a Perſon capable of a place be preſented to him, he will Ordain him, if he will vouch that he hath given nothing for it, if not, he ſhall put in another. He complains, that there was a Perſon put into the Regiſter of the Church who had given a Preſent to have his Name written into it.

In the fragment of the 5th Letter, he aſſures Hermengardis, Lotharius's Queen, that he never was unfaithful to the Emperor her Husband.

The 6th is an Admonition to the Nuns, about the Election of an Abbeſs [for the Monaſtery of S. Croſſe.] The laſt is a fragment of a Treatiſe of Hincmarus's, Intituled, Ferculum Solomonis, taken out of Durandus Abbot of Troarn, who ſays that this Treatiſe of Hincmarus's was in Verſe; That which we have in the end of the firſt Tome of this Author's Works is in Proſe, and ſeems to be a ſecond part of that Work. The firſt is loſt, and we have not ſpoken of the other, becauſe it contains nothing in it but ſome Myſtical Notions and Meditations.

There are two other Treatiſes of Hincmarus's of the ſame Nature, the one upon theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Herodii Domus Dux eſt illorum; and the other upon the Myſtical Name which he had given to the Council of Nice, in which he affirms, That it deſerves that Name, becauſe the number of 318, which was the number of the Biſhops preſent at it, is a Myſtical Number.

By what we have ſaid of the Life, Actions and Writings of Hincmarus, it is plain that he was better Verſed in the Canons and Diſcipline of the Church, than in the Studies of Eccleſiaſtical Doctrines; He had read the Writings of the Councils well, and had made Collections of the Paſſages of their Writings, and Canons, upon all ſorts of Subjects; He knew how to uſe them dexterouſly, and convert them eaſily to his own advantage; He was a great Politician, and knew very well how to uſe the Laws of the Church to bring about his Intentions and Deſigns; The French Church is much beholding to him for his vigor in defending her Liberties, and the Dignity of her Biſhops and Metropolitans, againſt the attempts that the Popes had made upon their Rights, yet without depriving the H. See of the reſpect and ſubjection that was due to it; He found out a way to oppoſe the unjuſt Pretences of the Court of Rome, without making a Schiſm, or ſlighting the H. See.

But it was not againſt the Popes only, that he maintained the Rights of the Church, he alſo defended them againſt the Kings, and tho' he was much in favour, yet he courageouſly defended his Rights, by telling them freely what was their Duty. Some perſons may, perhaps, blame him for intermeddling ſo much with Affairs of State, but this may be ſufficiently juſtified by the uſage of France in his time, where the Biſhops were looked upon not only as the Spiritual Paſtors of the Church, but as the Principal Members of the State.

His Style is fitter a great deal for Precepts and Inſtructions, than for Works of Doctrine or Eloquence, for 'tis clear and plain, but neither ſmooth nor elegant; the faults which are to be met withal in reading his Works are recompenſed by abundance of excellent Rules and Authorities for the Government of the Church; There is no Author, where we meet with ſuch plenty and ſo well Authoriz'd, and from whom we can know the Rights of the Church ſo well; Altho' he doubted of the falſhood of the forged Decretals of the Popes, yet he Quotes them often, but 'tis uſually when they are agreeable to the Common Right, for when they diſagree he rejects them, and grounds himſelf chiefly upon the Canons of the General Councils, or other Councils received and approved by the Church, and upon the Decretals of the Popes, which are agreeable to that Diſcipline.

A Part of his Works were Printed at Mayence, [by the care of John Buſæus] in 1602. and at Paris in 1615. by Cordeſius, [who added ſeveral Tracts of Hincmarus to the former Edition] but Father Simondus put out a much larger Edition in 2 Vol. in Folio, Printed at Paris by Cramoiſy in 1645. Since F. Cellot Publiſhed in 1658. four little Pieces of his againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, [with Learned Notes of his own, and joined to them the Council of Douzi] which are alſo inſerted in the 8th Tome of the Councils, with ſome new Letters of Hincmarus about the ſame buſineſs.

The History of the Controversie upon the Eucharist Debated in the Ninth Century.

THE Famous Controversie of the Church of Rome with the Lutherans and Calvinists, upon the Eucharist, has made Men more attentive to all Controversies formerly raised about that Mystery. The Ninth Century affords us one, no less Important than Abstruse. It cannot be deny'd, that there were Great Contests in this Age about the Eucharist, occasioned by the Book of Paschasius Radbertus, Concerning the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; but the Difficulty is, to know the True State of the Question: And that's the thing which lies now upon me to Clear, by giving a Faithful Account of the Authors that have Written upon this Subject, as well as of their Writings. I shall begin therefore with Paschasius Radbertus, whose Book has occasioned the Debate upon this Subject.

The Importance of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

Paschasius was a Native of Soissons. Who, being from his Infancy forsaken by his Relations, was brought up by the Charity of the Nuns of our Lady of Soissons, in the out-parts of their Abbey. He became afterwards a Monk in the Monastery of Corbey, then under the Government of St. Adelardus, Brother of Theodrada the Abbess of our Lady of Soissons, who had taken care of Paschasius in his youth. He proved a very Studious Man, Managed divers Conferences, and Writ several Books. In short, having got a great Name both by his Learning and Vertue, he was chosen Abbot of Corbey, Anno 844; but would not take upon him the Order of Priesthood, and contented himself with that of Deacon, which he had taken when he was a private Monk. Some Difference hapned betwixt him and the Monks, which made him quit his Charge; and he spent the rest of his Life in Reading and Writing of Books. He died in the year 865.

The Life of Paschasius.

His Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, was Written when he was yet a Monk; and that during the Exile of his Abbot, to whom he gives in his Preface the Name of Arsenes, and whom he calls another Jeremy. It has been a received Opinion, that it was Adelardus, who was Exiled Anno 814. But it is plain, by the Dialogue made by Paschasius upon the Life and Actions of St. Adelardus, that it was not Adelardus, but Wala, whom he called by the Names of Arsenes, and Jeremy. Which Wala was Exiled in the beginning of the Troubles raised by the Division that hapned betwixt the Emperor Lewis, Surnamed the Godly, and his Children, of which Paschasius himself takes notice in that Book, which made Father Mabillon conjecture, that this Book of Paschasius was not Written till the Year 832; notwithstanding that, in a Manuscript of the Abbey of Corbey, it is said, that this Abbot Arsenes is Adelardus, Sanctus Adelardus; which words seem to be foisted in, and are not to be found in other Manuscripts.

Paschasius his Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

This Book Concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, bore likewise the Title of A Treatise of the Sacraments; for it is not true that Paschasius Writ two Books with those two different Titles, but one Book with both Titles, as it appears by some Ancient Manuscripts. By other Manuscripts we find, that it was Dedicated to an Abbot named Placidus, which is confirmed to us by the Testimonies of Sigebertus and Trithemius. This Placidus was the Famous Varinus, Abbot of the New Abbey of Corbey in Saxony, as it appears by a Letter of Paschasius, to be seen in the beginning of this Treatise, in the Manuscript of Annecy, published by Father Mabillon; who informs us besides, that this Book was Composed for the Instruction of the Saxons, who were not as yet well Instructed in the Christian Faith. In it, having first prepared their Minds to believe the Ineffable Mystery of the Eucharist, by demonstrating, that God by his Omnipotency may bring to pass many things Supernatural, and to us Incomprehensible, he says, That * no Man ought to doubt of its being the Body of Jesus Christ, and that his Flesh and Blood be really there; and shews, that none ought to be ignorant of so great a Mystery, daily Celebrated in the Church, and such as ought to be Received by the Faithful. Which they cannot do Worthily and Effectually, unless they can discern the Excellency of the Mystical Body and Blood of Jesus Christ from what they perceive by the Taste. That it is called Sacrament, either because under the Species of a Visible Sign, God is pleased to Work some Secret Thing, or because the Holy Ghost does Consecrate the Visible Sign, and under the Veil of Outward Signs does Work some Mystical Thing for the Salvation of the Faithful. That all Sacraments in general may be defined to be an Earnest or a Pledge of Salvation, by which, under a Visible Representation, the Holy Ghost works in an Invisible manner. That such are in the Church, the Sacraments of Baptism, Chrism, and that of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; therefore called Sacraments, because under the Visible Species the Flesh is Consecrated by a secret and Divine Vertue, so that they are in effect Inwardly, what they are thought to be Outwardly by Faith. That in Baptism we are Regenerated by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards, by the Power of Jesus Christ, nourished with his Body and Blood;

[* No Man ought to doubt, &c.] Although in this sum of Radbertus's Book de Sacramento Corporis & Sanguinis J. C. there be many Expressions that manifest the Ancient Doctrine of the Spiritual Presence in the Sacrament onely: yet it must not be deny'd, but that he speaks very plainly of the Substantial Conversion, and stands up stoutly for it; yet that this was a New Doctrine, and a strange Notion in the Church, appears by the General Opposition made to it by the Learned Men of the same Age, viz. Rabanus, Scotus, Bertram, &c. the sequel of the Controversie will manifest.]

Blood; and that we ought not to wonder, that the Holy Ghoſt, who has Formed our Saviour's Body in the Virgin's Womb, ſhould, by an Inviſible Power, change the Bread and Wine, though there appear no Viſible Change, becauſe it is done Spiritually and Inviſibly: That by the Conſecration of this Myſtery, the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt are truly Created, Produced, and Sacrificed in a Myſtical Manner. That it is not to be deny'd, but that there is ſome Figure in this Myſtery, being 'tis a Myſtery, but that the Figure does not hinder the Reality. That what appears outwardly is a Figure, but the inward a Reality, becauſe the Body and Blood of our Saviour are made of the Subſtance of the Bread and Wine: So that this Myſtery is both Figure and Verity; a Figure of the hidden Truth, and a Verity, not perceivable indeed by the Senſes, but believed by Faith. That the Ancient Figures differed vaſtly from this, they being but a Shadow and Image of what we really Injoy by Receiving this Myſtery, the real Fleſh and real Blood of Chriſt our Saviour. That thoſe who do not dwell in Chriſt, that is, who remain in ſin, take the Sacramental Elements out of the Prieſt's hand, but do not eat and drink Spiritually the Body and Blood of Chriſt. That, in fine, the Church is the Body of Chriſt, that all the Faithful are Members of his Body, and that the Euchariſt is daily Conſecrated to be the Body of Chriſt, but that thoſe onely, who are his Myſtical Members are allowed to Receive it. That from this Food ſome receive Life, others Death; it being Life to ſuch as are Members of Jeſus Chriſt, and Death to ſuch as are Members of the Devil. That we muſt raiſe our Mind to God, and Believe that after the words of Conſecration, 'tis the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, that very Fleſh which was Born of the Virgin, and died upon the Croſs. That Chriſt himſelf is upon the Altar, Offering, as High-Prieſt, our Vows and Supplications to the Lord. That the Angels are preſent at this Sacrifice, in which our Saviour once Sacrificed upon the Croſs for the Salvation of Mankind, is daily offered in a Myſtical manner for the Atonement of the Sins we daily commit, to Diſcriminate the Good from the Wicked, to dwell Corporally in ſuch as have received Baptiſm, that they may dwell in him, and to Nouriſh the Faithful: That therefore he is called Bread, becauſe as the Bread nouriſhes the Body, ſo the Body of Jeſus Chriſt nouriſhes the Soul of the Faithful: That he is alſo called Wine, becauſe as the Wine is made of the Juice of ſeveral Grapes, ſo we are Juſtify'd by the Graces and Spiritual Influences which flow from him, who is the True Vine, of which the Faithful are but Branches. That it is the very Blood which ran out of his Side at his Death and Paſſion; and that for that Reaſon it is, that we mingle Water with the Wine, becauſe out of his Side there came both Blood and Water. That others ſay, Water is mingled with the Wine, to joyn together the Water of Baptiſm, and the Blood which was the Price of our Salvation. That, whether the Conſecrating-Prieſt be a good or bad Man, we ought to Believe, when we receive the Euchariſt from his hands, that we equally receive the Truth of the Myſtery; becauſe the Conſecration is not made by the Merit of him that Conſecrates, but by the Power of the Creator, and the Virtue of the Holy Ghoſt; and that it is Jeſus Chriſt who Baptizes, as it is he, by whom, through the Virtue of the Holy Ghoſt, the Euchariſt becomes his Fleſh and Blood. That the Prieſt is not the Creatour of Chriſt his Body, but that he Prays to God the Father by his Son; that he Offers Gifts unto him, before the Conſecration, and Prays him to Accept of them; and that he makes this Offering in the Name of the Church and of the Faithful. That, although this Sacrament has neither the Taſt nor the Colour of the Fleſh and Blood, yet by the ſtrength of Faith and Reaſon our Soul receives 'em as ſuch; and that as we have received in Baptiſm the Image of our Saviour's Death, ſo we receive in this Sacrament the Likeneſs of his Fleſh and Blood; ſo that there is truth in this Myſtery: and yet the Heathens cannot Reproach us, that we Drink the Blood, or Eat the Fleſh of a Dead Man.

That, to evidence theſe Truth, either to ſuch as called them into queſtion, or to thoſe who had a tender love for theſe Holy Myſteries, the † Body and Blood of our Saviour have ſometimes viſibly appeared upon the Altar, particularly to a Prieſt who had deſired it ardently. That the Conſecration of this Sacrament is made by the energy of the words of Jeſus Chriſt. That, howſoever this Myſtery be the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, it may nevertheleſs be call'd Bread and Wine, by reaſon of the Effects they produce. For as the Terreſtrial Bread is a ſupport to our Temporal Life, ſo this Spiritual Bread yields unto us a Spiritual and Heavenly Life; and as Wine doth rejoyce the Heart of Man, ſo does this Heavenly Drink rejoyce the inward Man. That by receiving the Fleſh of Chriſt we receive his Divinity, and that we receive both his Body and Blood, becauſe they cannot be ſeparated. That, though our Saviour did Adminiſter this Sacrament to his Apoſtles after Supper for ſome Myſtical Reaſons, it was nevertheleſs the Practice of the Catholick Church to receive it Faſting. That it is not requiſite however to forbear eating till the Euchariſt be digeſted, according to the Injunctions of ſome Apocryphal Books. That, though this Sacrament nouriſhes our Bodies, we ought chiefly to conſider the Spiritual Effects of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, as nouriſhing our Souls in a Spiritual manner; ſo that it is frivolous to fear that this Sacrament goes into the draught as our Terreſtrial Food, or that it mingles it ſelf, and is digeſted with it. That we ought not to believe, that Chriſt is to drink Wine during his Reign of a Thouſand years, as ſome have imagined. And laſtly, that, though Good and Bad Men receive the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, yet we muſt believe, that this Sacrament is Salvation to the firſt, and Damnation to the laſt. Thus I have, in few words, ſummed ſummed up Paſchaſius his Doctrine upon the Euchariſt from his aforeſaid Treatiſe*; To which he adds ſeveral Conſiderations, with Allegorical and Myſtical Reflections, and towards the Concluſion ſome Paſſages out of S. Hilary, S. Auſtin, S. Ambroſe, S. Gregory, S. Leo, S. John Chryſoſtom, and Beda, for the Confirmation of it.

† The Body and Blood of our Saviour viſibly appear'd.] This Fabulous Apparition Hoſpinian de Sacr. l. 4. p. 1. p. 325. tells us, is plainly foiſted into the Original Manuſcript, and doth ſo plainly differ from the Style and Doctrine of the reſt of the Treatiſe, that it is eaſily diſcernible to a moderate Judgment, that the Chapters 38 & 39. wherein it is, are added by the Monk who put it out, or by ſome other, who would promote the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation by ſuch Legendary Tales.

A long time after this Treatiſe was publiſhed (for it was Written in 831. before Paſchaſius was Abbot of Corbey, and what we are going to ſay hapned but about the latter end of his Life, towards the Year 864.) Fredegardus, or Frudegardus, a Monk of the New Abbey of Corbey, for whoſe Monks Paſchaſius had Compoſed this Book, having met with ſome Men of a different Opinion, and himſelf entertaining ſome Doubts upon this Subject, did freely Write unto him his Thoughts upon the Matter. In Anſwer to which Paſchaſius Writ him a †Letter, wherein he explained and confirmed what he had laid down in his Treatiſe concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour. There he ſays, That, notwithſtanding the Scruples of thoſe Perſons, he had good Reaſon to maintain, that it is the very Fleſh of our Saviour which is given to us in the Euchariſt, the ſame Fleſh that was Born of the Virgin, and the ſame Blood that was ſhed upon the Croſs. Otherwiſe, ſays he, How can this Sacrament confer Eternal Life and the Remiſſion of Sins, were it not the Fleſh and Blood of him who is Life and Salvation? Fredegardus did own it to him, that he had been of that Opinion; but that having Read in the Third Book of the Chriſtian Doctrine, Writ by St. Auſtin, that theſe words of our Saviour, This is my Body, This is my Fleſh, are a Figurative expreſſion, and a Figure more than a Reality, he could not tell how to Reconcile that with his former Sentiment. And the rather conſidering what that holy Father ſeems to ſay, That it were a horrible thing to believe, that Chriſtians eat the ſame Body which was Born of the Virgin, and drink the ſame Blood that was ſhed upon the Croſs. To which Paſchaſius Anſwers, That it is not inconſiſtent with good Senſe, to ſay, That thoſe words of our Saviour are a Figurative Expreſſion, becauſe there is a Figure in this Myſtery, and that the Real Body and Blood of Chriſt are really found in it, but in a Myſtery and Figure, as our Saviour is called the Character and Figure of his Father, though he is really God. That he has ſufficiently explained it in his Book, by aſſerting, That the Euchariſt is both a Figure and a Real thing. That St. Auſtin himſelf did own it, and that he agrees in that Point with St. Ambroſe, St. Cyprian, and Euſebius Emeſenus, ſome of whoſe Paſſages he quotes. Whence he infers, That it is the Doctrine of the Fathers, though many doubt of it, who cannot apprehend how, the Bread remaining viſibly intire, it can be ſaid, that it is the Body and Blood of Chriſt. But that they would have other Thoughts of it, ſhould they but conſider, how five or ſix Loaves could be Multiplyed into an infinite Number; and as thoſe Loaves were Multiply'd by the Power of God, ſo Chriſt's Fleſh is multiply'd, and the abundance of his Fleſh and Blood diffuſed in the Sacrament. That we ſay likewiſe, That Chriſt is daily Sacrificed upon our Altars, though he Died but once for the Salvation of Mankind, becauſe we believe it to be done Spiritually, but not without the Sacrament: Which is not reiterated, by cauſing Chriſt to Die again; but he is Myſtically Sacrificed every day for us, that we may receive in the Bread what was nailed to the Croſs, and drink in the Cup what ran out of our Saviour's Side. For walking by Faith, our Belief ought to be Spiritual, not Carnal. Upon which he quotes a paſſage of St. Gregory, and another of the Council of Epheſus, and then invites Fredegardus to Read over his Treatiſe attentively. Not, ſays he, that there is any thing extraordinary in it, being contrived for the meaneſt capacity; but becauſe he heard that Treatiſe had ſtirred up many to apply themſelves to the Knowledge of this Myſtery, teaching them to entertain Notions worthy of our Saviour, whoſe Body is Incorruptible, becauſe Spiritual, and that all things that are done in the Sacrament are alſo Spiritual. He tells him, That 'tis that Spirit who gives Life to thoſe who receive it worthily; and that thoſe who want Faith, or receive it unworthily, eat and drink their own Damnation. To his Letter he ſubjoyns an Abſtract of his Commentary upon the 26th Chapter of St. Matthew's Goſpel, wherein he explains the words of the Inſtitution of the Euchariſt, and oppoſes thoſe who give it onely a Figurative Senſe, as if the Words imported nothing but the Figure and Vertue of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, and not his Real Fleſh and Blood. Then he tells him, that he thought himſelf obliged to explain that paſſage more at large, upon the Information he had received, that ſome People found fault with what he had formerly Written upon that Subject. Which Doctrine he confirms by the Teſtimonies of St. Ambroſe, St. Hilary, and the Council of Epheſus, together with ſome Expreſſions in the Canon of the Maſs.

Although Paſchaſius in his Book followed the Doctrine of the Church, it having been the Opinion of all the Orthodox before him, That the Body and Blood of Chriſt were actually preſent in the Euchariſt, and that the Bread and Wine were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet it was not uſual in thoſe Times to ſay poſitively, That the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt was the ſame that was born of the Virgin, and Aſſert it ſo plainly. This is the Judgment of Father Mabillon, which he expreſſes in theſe words; Quippe ante Paſchaſii Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini confitebantur Catholici omnes Chriſti Domini verum Corpus verumque Sanguinem revera exiſtere in Euchariſtia; itemque Panem & Vinum in illa converti; at nemo Paſchaſii tempore illud Corpus eſſe idem quod ex Maria Virgine natum eſt tam directe aſſerere auditus fuerat. Theſe Expreſſions, ſays the ſame Author again, are indeed to be found in the Ancient Fathers; but this Age was either ignorant of thoſe Paſſages, or did not take notice of them. Id quidem antea ex Patribus tradiderant non pauci, ſed ignota erant illo ævo, aut certe non obſervata eorum hac de re Teſtimonia. Paſchaſius therefore, adds Father Mabillon, teaching this Doctrine in his Book ſo poſitively, gave occaſion for ſome eminent and learned Men to oppoſe his Opinion. Theſe are are his Words, Quapropter cum Paſchaſius in Libro ſuo tam fidenter & aſſeveranter illud docuiſſet, hujus rei Novitate, ut ſibi videbatur, commoti ſunt quidam Viri docti haud incelebres, qui ſcriptis editis hanc ejus ſententiam acriter impugnarunt. Paſchaſius maintained it by a Paſſage of S. Ambroſe, in his Book of Myſteries; whence he concluded, that the Sacrament of the Euchariſt was the very Fleſh of our Saviour, born of the Virgin, crucified, and raiſed again from the Dead. Which Expreſſion, being made publick, was diſliked by Rabanus, Ratramnus, and an Anonymous Author in the time of Paſchaſius, then in the next following Age by Erigerus. They look'd upon Paſchaſius as one that receded from the expreſs Words of S. Auſtin and S. Jerom, who ſaid, our Saviour's Body might be taken in two or three manners, and they could by no means approve of ſuch Expreſſions. Their Controverſie was † not about the real Preſence, which they owned with Paſchaſius, but only about the Expreſſion it ſelf. Paſchaſius maintained, that not only the Body of our Saviour was really in the Euchariſt, but alſo that Chriſtians ought plainly to ſay, that there was no Difference betwixt the one and the other. His Adverſaries on the other ſide, to whom this Expreſſion appeared too harſh, as if there were no Figure in the Euchariſt, and the outward Species were the very Body of our Saviour, were diſguſted at it. So that the ſtate of their Controverſie was not, whether Chriſt's Body was truly and really in the Euchariſt, but whether we ought to ſay that he was there in the ſame manner as he was born, crucified, and raiſed from the dead; whether he was there without Veils, or Figure; or whether the outward Signs that appeared to our Senſes were the Body and Blood of Chriſt. 'Tis true, Paſchaſius owned the Figure in the Euchariſt, as they did the real Preſence. But his Adverſaries repreſented him as one that denied the Figure; and he thought his Adverſaries diſowned the real Preſence, or at leaſt that they had ſome Objections againſt it. Thus the whole Controverſie betwixt them was merely about Expreſſions, and for want of a right Underſtanding.

[† Not about the Real Preſence, but only about the Expreſſion.] Although Tranſubſtantiation be not plainly aſſerted in this Controverſie, for it was not yet come ſo far as to determine how Chriſt's Body was preſent in the Sacrament, whether In or Trans, or Sub, or Con; yet this Diſpute laid the Foundation for it, though our Hiſtorian would perſwade us 'twas but a verbal one only. Yet the Oppoſition of ſuch learned men as appeared againſt Radbertus, do plainly intimate more, who would not fight with Shadows. Theſe Expreſſions had a plain Tendency to a great Error: for though both Parties acknowledged a Real Preſence, yet herein was the Difference; Radbertus was for a carnal and bodily Preſence, Bertram, Scotus, &c. were for a ſpiritual and figurative Preſence; according as the Ancient Fathers had always held: which is not leſs real than the other. And if we keep in mind this Diſtinction, Radbertus and Bertram are as far from agreeing as Truth and Error.]

The firſt Author who oppoſed Paſchaſius was Anonymous.

The firſt Author that writ againſt Paſchaſius was a nameleſs Author, whoſe Writings upon this Subject Father Mabillon found in a Manuſcript of Gemblours, at the end of Erigerus his Treatiſe, with this Title, Dicta cujuſdam ſapientis de corpore & ſanguine Domini adverſus Ratbertum. This Author ſays that, as all the Faithful ought to believe and confeſs that the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt are one and the ſame Fleſh, ſo they ought to believe that of the Bread is made his real Fleſh, and of the Wine his real Blood, by the Conſecration and Virtue of the Holy Ghoſt. Yet he oppoſes Paſchaſius his Expreſſion; viz. Quod non ſit alia caro Chriſti quam quæ nata eſt de Maria, & paſſa in Cruce, & reſurrexit de Sepulchro; and ſays, that the Notion was perfectly new, he never read, or heard of it, and wonders S. Ambroſe ſhould make uſe of it. But he oppoſes S. Auſtin to him, who ſays that our Saviour's Fleſh is not eaten with our Teeth, ſuch as it was upon the Croſs, or as after it roſe from the Dead. And, to reconcile S. Ambroſe with S. Auſtin, he ſays, that our Lord's Body in the Euchariſt does not differ in Nature, but in Species, from his Body born of the Virgin; meaning (as he explains himſelf) that it is really the ſame, though in another ſtate, and under another form, viz. under the Species of the Bread and Wine. So fully convinced was this Author, that Paſchaſius believed our Saviour's Fleſh to be in the ſame manner, and as viſibly in the Euchariſt, as upon the Croſs, that he charged him with this impious Aſſertion, that as often as Maſs is celebrated, our Saviour ſuffered as really as he did upon the Croſs. Father Mabillon affirms, that this anonymous Book is Rabanus's Letter to Egilo; but he brings no certain Proof for it. The Title is different, nor is the Treatiſe made in the form of a Letter; ſo that I am apt to think it another Thing. However, 'tis certain Rabanus has alſo found fault with Paſchaſius his Expreſſions: for, beſides Erigerus his Authority, who joyns him with Ratramnus, as one of Paſchaſius his Adverſaries, Rabanus himſelf, in his Letter to Heribaldus, ſpeaks on that Subject in theſe Words; Some Men, ſays he, not having true Sentiments upon the Sacrament of the Body and Blood, aſſert, that that very Body and Blood of our Saviour, which was born of the Virgin, and in which our Saviour ſuffered Death upon the Croſs, is the ſame Body we receive at the Altar; which Opinion we have confuted, as much as in us lay, in our Letter to Egilo the Abbot, wherein we teach what ought to be believed concerning Chriſt his Body. 'Tis true, theſe very Words, Idem eſſe quod ſumitur in Altari, are not in the Manuſcript; but Monſieur Baluzius has inſerted them, upon the Credit of Erigerus. And, whatever Additions or Alterations might be made, 'tis plain, Rabanus did by no means approve of Paſchaſius his way of expreſſing himſelf; yet this is no Argument but that he believed Chriſt's real Preſence in the Euchariſt. For in the tenth Chapter of the ſeventh Book of Orders he expreſly ſays, that the Bread is changed into the Body of Chriſt, and the Wine into his Blood, and looks upon this Change as a very great Miracle. Who could believe, ſays he, that the Bread could be changed into the Fleſh of Chriſt, and the Wine into his Blood, if our Saviour himſelf had not ſaid it, by whom both the Bread and Wine were created, and all things made of Nothing? 'Tis much more eaſie for him to make one thing of another, than to make all things of Nothing. In his Book of the Inſtitution of Clerks, he ſays, that the viſible Creatures being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, paſs into the Sacrament of the divine Body. And in his Manuſcript Commentary mentary upon Joſhua, he ſays, That the Fleſh and Blood of the unſpotted Lamb are offered every day on the Altar, for the Nouriſhment of the Souls of the Faithful who receive the ſame, that the Shadow of the Law being paſt, the Truth of the Goſpel may come to light by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf. Whereby it appears that Rabanus did not in the leaſt oppoſe the real Preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt, but only diſproved Paſchaſius his Expreſſion, which he thought ſeemed to intimate that the outward Signs of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which our Eyes ſee, and our Hands feel, are the very Body of our Saviour.

There is another anonymous Author, whoſe Work is quoted by Erigerus, and inſerted in the 12th Tome of Dacherius his Spicilegium, who ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe. As there is nothing (ſays he) but what is true and real in Chriſt, ſo there is nothing in the Myſtery of his Body and Blood, which is conſecrated into what it was not, by virtue of the bleſſing and the Word of God, that can be falſe or deceitful; and thoſe Gifts being thus conſecrated, are changed by an inviſible Power into what they were not before, as the Water was changed into Wine at Cana, but that this being a ſpiritual Change, is not perceptible but by Faith. Meaning, that the * Species of Bread and Wine remain, and that the inward Change, though real and effective, is not perceived by our bodily Eyes, but by Faith.

Who is the Author that bears the Name of Bertramus

[* The Species remain, and the Inward Change, though real, is not perceiv'd by our Eyes, but by Faith.]

Mr. Du-Pin in repreſenting this Controverſie, uſes the words, Species, Accidents and Form, to expreſs the Elements of the Sacraments to us, that he may make the Romiſh Doctrines appear in the Venerable Robes of Antiquity, and ſo deſcribes the Real Change, all along, as if it were Corporeal; but if we attentively obſerve the words of the Author, we ſhall find that Bertram, and thoſe of his Sentiments, allowed no Material, but Sacramental Change in the Elements. Chriſt's Body and Blood were preſent Effectively and Really, but not Bodily, and Subſtantially, or Tranſubſtantially, as the Romaniſts hold; and in this ſenſe it is, that we Proteſtants, agreeable to all true Antiquity, as Caſaubon ſays, Credimus in Euchariſtiâ præſentiam, non minus quam ipſi Papicolæ, veram.]

But nothing gives us a clearer Inſight into the State of the Queſtion, then under debate, than the Book of the Body and Blood of our Lord, which paſſes commonly under the Name of Bertram: But becauſe ſome queſtion whether he be the Author, it will not be improper, before we relate what is ſaid therein to the preſent purpoſe, to examine whoſe Work it is, whether of Ratrammus himſelf, a Monk of Corbey, or of ſome other Author. The Firſt Impreſſion of this Book was at Collen, Anno 1533, by the care of the Proteſtants of Germany; which made it the more odious to many Catholicks, who, without a due examination thereof, lookt upon it as a Book that countenanced the Errour of the Proteſtants in the point of the Euchariſt. Some there were, as amongſt others, Sixtus Senenſis, and Deſpanſæus Santonenſis, who gave it out for ſpurious: But, ſome Ancient Manuſcripts of it being found, that ſuppoſition ceaſed. Some undertook the Defence of this Treatiſe, others conceived there were many things in it fit to be Corrected, and others gave it quite over. But, however Divines were divided in thoſe days, upon the Doctrine of this Book, ſtill they agreed in this, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the ſame, though Bertramus is the moſt commonly uſed, and to be ſeen both in Sigebertus and Trithemius. Arch-Biſhop Uſher is the firſt that quoted him under the Name of Ratramnus, taking it for an undoubted Truth, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the ſame. But Mareſius being Asked his Opinion concerning this Author, by Father Dacherius, Writ to him a Learned Epiſtle, inſerted into the Second Tome of his Spicilegium, that came out in 1657, in which he maintains, That the Book bearing the Name of Bertramus, is not Ratramnus's; but that it is the Book of Johannes Scotus Erigena, who did certainly Write a Treatiſe on the ſame Subject, in which he ſeemed to oppoſe the Reality of our Saviour's Body in the Euchariſt. This Opinion was followed by Father Paris, a Canon Regular of S. Genovefa, eminent both for his Learning and Piety, in the Diſcourſe he made upon this Subject, and which he put at the end of the Firſt Tome of his Book, called, The Perpetual Tenour of our Faith: and of late by Father Harduin, in his Treatiſe of The Sacrament of the Altar. The Principal Reaſons on which they ground their Conjectures, are theſe. 1. What Authors have ſaid of the Book of Johannes Scotus, concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, does agree with the Book that bears the Name of Bertramus. Aſſelin tells us, That it was a little Book, wherein he endeavoured to prove, That what is Conſecrated upon the Altar, is not really the Body and Blood of Chriſt; for a Proof whereof, he alledged ſeveral places of Scripture, which he explained contrary to the true meaning of them, and quoted, amongſt other things, S. Gregory's Prayer in theſe words, Perficiant in nobis tua, Domine, Sacramenta, &c. to which he added next, Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate. All which agrees with Bertramus his ſmall Book, wherein the Author ſeems to deſign to diſprove the Reality of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt. In order to which he alledges ſeveral Paſſages taken out of the Fathers, and, amongſt others, that very Prayer of S. Gregory, with this Gloſs, Dicit quod in Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate. Berengarius, ſpeaking of Scotus his Book, tells us, That it was Written by the Order of Carolus Magnus; and Bertramus his Book is thus Dedicated, Ad Carolum Magnum. 'Tis own'd, that Charles the Great is the ſame with Charles the Bald: But, ſince the Title of Great was not commonly given to this laſt, 'tis unlikely (ſome think) that two Authors ſhould have Dedicated it to him: So that Bertramus his Book muſt be the ſame mention'd by Berengarius. 2. 'Tis alledg'd, That the Book of Johannes Scotus, and that of Bertramus never appear'd together; and that the Authors who quoted the one, never quoted the other. 3. 'Tis affirm'd, that the Style, Genius, and Character of Bertramus his Book, is the ſame with that of Scotus; that there is the ſame Spirit of Confuſion and Contradiction which appears in his other Works, and the ſame Diſagreement from the Doctrines generally received in the Church. The Arguments are in due form. The Concluſion of Bertramus his Book is very like unto the Preface of Scotus's Book of Predeſtination; and the Concluſion of his Fifth Book of the Diviſion of Nature. Theſe are the Conjectures of Learned Authors, which indeed ſeem very ſtrong, and might have made their Opinion very probable, had not the Learned Father Mabillon brought poſitive Proofs to the contrary, ſuch as are not grounded upon mere Conjectures, but upon Matter of Fact. Who, in the firſt place, inſiſts upon the Authority of a Manuſcript of the Abbey of Lobbes, Written above 800 years ſince; wherein is found the Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour; and, next to that the two Books of Ratrammus, touching Predeſtination. One bearing this Title, Incipit Liber Ratrammi de Corpore & Sanguine Domini; Juſſiſti, glorioſe Princeps. The other this, Incipit Liber de Prædeſtinatione Dei, Domino glorioſo atque præcellentiſſimo Regi Carolo, Ratramnus. Which Inſcriptions are confirmed by an Ancient Catalogue of Books of that Library made in 1049, with theſe words in it, Ratrammi de Corpore & Sanguine Domini Liber I. Ejuſdem de Prædeſtinatione Dei ad eundem Libri II. It is an unqueſtionable Evidence, that the Book bearing the Name of Bertramus is really his; that this Manuſcript which is of the ſame Century, bears his Name in the Title, and his Books of Predeſtination, are joyned unto that of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which proves it to come from the ſame Author. The ſame Father does aſſure us beſides in his Travels into Germany, that he ſaw another Manuſcript of above 700 years ſtanding, with the very ſame Superſcriptions.

Secondly, 'Tis worth our Obſervation, that the Anonymous Author of Father Cellot doth attribute to Ratramnus Abbot of Corbey, and to the Author of the two Books concerning Predeſtination, That of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, under the Name of Bertramus. And, if that Anonymous Author was Contemporary, his Teſtimony in this Caſe muſt needs be deciſive. Now that Author was Erigerus, Abbot of Lobbes, who ſucceeded Fulcuin in that Dignity, Anno 890, and died in 907, as Father Mabillon proves by an Ancient Manuſcript; wherein the Anonymous Book, publiſhed by Father Cellot, bears the Name of Erigerus. And it appears beſides by the Chronicle of Lobbes, that that Abbot had Written upon that Subject. This is obſervable moreover, that the ſaid Author, ſpeaking of Ratramnus his Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, ſays, That it was divided into a Hundred Chapters, the ſame Diviſion that is found in the foreſaid Ancient Manuſcript of Lobbes. Which makes it a ſtrong Preſumption, that it was the very ſame Manuſcript which Erigerus had.

Thirdly, In two Ancient Manuſcripts of Sigebert, inſtead of Bertramus, we read Ratramus, or Ratramnus. In Trithemius he is called Betrannus, or Ratrannus. Which Names do not differ much from that of Ratramnus, afterwards ſmoothed into Bertramus. But that which is the moſt deciſive in this caſe, is, what thoſe Authors do ſay, viz. That the Author of the Book touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour, did alſo Write a Book concerning Predeſtination, Dedicated to Charles the Bald. Scripſit, ſays Sigebert, Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini, & ad Carolum Librum de Prædeſtinatione. Trithemius makes him Author of ſeveral Works, of all which he found (as he ſays) but one Book De Corpore & Sanguine Domini; and another, Ad Carolum De Predeſtinatione. Now the Book of Predeſtination, Written by Johannes Scotus, was not dedicated to Charles, but to Hincmarus and Pardulus; whereas Ratramnus his Book was Dedicated to that Emperour. We muſt therefore conclude Ratramnus to be the Author of the Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

Theſe Poſitive Proofs are ſufficient to deſtroy all oppoſite Conjectures, which, how plauſible ſoever they may appear, are not altogether ſolid. For why might not both Ratramnus and Scotus Write a Book upon the Euchariſt, as they did upon Predeſtination; And what ſhould hinder both their Works to be much of the ſame length? They might be each of them conſulted by the Emperour Charles the Bald about the Euchariſt, as they were about Predeſtination. Why could they not both be of the ſame Opinion, as Ratramnus and Goteſcalchus chanced to be of the ſame Judgment about this Expreſſion Trina Deitas? 'Tis not to be wonder'd at, that both of 'em ſhould have made Collections of Paſſages out of the Fathers, ſeeing it was the common Practice in their Time, and the uſual way of thoſe two Authors. Why is it urged, that they have not both alledged S. Gregory's Prayer, Perficiant tua, Domine, &c. being it was a common Teſtimony? The Gloſs of Ratramnus upon that Prayer, differs from that of Scotus. Who, according to Aſſelin, had Written, Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate. Ratramnus does not ſay ſo; but explaining the words of the Prayer, Dicit (ſays he) quod in Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate, id eſt per Similitudinem, non per ipſius rei Manifeſtationem. Which words, Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate, were the Comment Scotus made upon it; whereas here the Words of the Prayer are explained by the next Words, not in the leaſt diſagreeable to the Catholick Faith. As to the Dedication, Why might it not happen that two Authors ſhould be of the ſame Mind, in giving the Title of Great to Charles the Bald? Beſides, that in the Manuſcript of Ratramnus his Book in the Abbey of Lobbes, there is no ſuch thing to be found as Præfatio ad Carolum Magnum Imperatorem. And, when this Book was compoſed, Charles was not yet Emperour: So that the Title muſt needs be added afterwards. But there are other Inſtances of this Epithet of Great, given to Charles the Bald. The ſecond Reaſon grounded upon a Pretence, That they who were acquainted with Scotus his Book, knew nothing of Bertramus's, is confuted by what has been already alledg'd, That in the Ninth and Tenth Centuries Ratramnus his Book was Tranſcribed under his Name, and quoted by Erigerus, that of Scotus by Aldrevadus. In the Eleventh, the Book of Ratramnus was Tranſcribed by Sigebert, and Scotus his Book by thoſe who Writ againſt Berengarius.

garius. To conclude, the last Reason is a groundless Errour. So far is it from being true, that Bertramus his Book is of the same Style and Character with those of Scotus, that on the contrary it is most uniform both in Style and other Circumstances with Ratramnus his other Works, whereof any Reader may be a competent Judge. Thus much as to what concerns the Author of the Book, that bears the Name of Bertramus. Let us now proceed to the Subject Matter of it.

The Opinion of the Author of the Book that bears Bertramus's his Name.

The Question, upon which Charles the Bald asked his Opinion, is thus stated by him. While (says he) amongst the Faithful, some say there is no Veil or Figure in the Mystery of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, which is daily celebrated in the Church, but that it is done by a plain Manifestation of naked Verity; and others on the contrary maintain, That the Body and Blood of our Saviour are contained therein under the Figure of the Mystery, and that what appears to our bodily Senses, differs from what our Faith perceives in it; the Church is divided by these different Opinions, and a way made to a kind of Schism. So that here is the true State of the Question, Whether or no there is any Figure in the Eucharist, if it be without any Veil, and whether the Body it self and Blood of our Saviour be perceived by our outward Senses. Your Majesty, says he, desires to be satisfi'd, whether the Body and Blood of Christ be made in a Mystery, or in Truth; that is to say, whether it is so made, as that there is some Thing secret and hidden, not to be perceived but by the eyes of Faith; or whether our outward eyes do outwardly perceive what the inward sight does perceive inwardly in it, without any Veil of the Mystery, in such a manner, that the whole of it does manifestly and openly appear. Those are the words of the first Question. So that the Question is not, Whether the Body and Blood of Christ be in the Eucharist, that being taken for granted; but whether they be there without Veil, so as to appear to our outward Eyes. For 'tis in this Sence the Author takes the Word Verity, and opposes it to Figure. 'Tis a naked Verity, without Veil or Mystery, such as is perceived by our outward Senses, and doth exclude all manner of Figure.

The other Question proposed to Ratramnus, is, Whether that very same Body we receive be that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which Suffer'd, and was put to Death, which was Buried, and Rose again from the Dead, then Ascended into Heaven, and now sits on the Right Hand of the Father everlasting. That is to say, Whether his Body be in the same manner in the Eucharist, as it was and is in those Places, and whether it be there in as visible and palpable a manner. For, to prove that it is not so, he says, That the Body of our Saviour, in its natural state, is under the form of a humane Body, with Bones and Sinews, and all the Lineaments of a Man's Limbs; Whereas in the Eucharist 'tis under another Form, not supported by Bones and Sinews, nor with that Distinction of Limbs, in such a state as makes it incapable of proper Motions, or to give any sign of Life.

To those two Questions Ratramnus answers distinctly, in the two Parts of his Book. But, that his Opinion of the State of the Question may be the better understood, he gives first the Definitions of what he calls a Figure and a Verity. A Figure, says he, is, when there is some Obscurity, and that under some certain Veils another Thing is exhibited. A Verity, on the contrary, is a manifest Demonstration of the Thing, without the covering of any Image or Figure. This being granted, he maintains, That if the Mystery of the Body and Blood of our Saviour were made without any Figure, it could not properly be called a Mystery, because that cannot be called a Mystery, wherein there is nothing hidden; nothing but what is perceived by our outward Senses; nothing cover'd with any Veil. That that Bread which is made the Body of Christ, by the Ministry of the Priest, shews Outwardly one Thing to the Senses, and, at the same time, insinuates into the Minds of the Faithful, that there is another Thing Inwardly. Outwardly it appears to be Bread, as it was before; we perceive its Form, the Colour, and Taste; but we believe, that Inwardly it is some Thing much more precious and excellent, because it is a divine and heavenly Thing, that is to say, the Body of our Saviour which is exhibited therein, which does not fall under our outward Senses, but is by the eyes of our Souls seen, received and eaten. The same he says of the Wine, and our Saviour's Blood; and concludes, that the Bread and Wine are, by a Figure, the Body of Christ; that is to say, That we do not see any Flesh and Blood, but Bread and Wine, though after the Mystical Consecration it is no more called Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. To which he adds, that, If there were no Figure, as some maintain'd, and that the whole Truth might be plainly seen, there would be no room for Faith, and then 'twould be no Mystery, because it hath nothing in it that is secret.

Next he shews, that the Change which is made in the Eucharist is not made visibly, and to our outward Senses. 'For, says he, 'tis not a Change of a Thing that was not into one, that is; seeing the Bread and Wine were before, they were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. 'Nor is it a Change of a Thing that is, into one that is not, seeing the form of the Bread and 'Wine appears the same to our eyes. Nor lastly, the Change of one Thing into another by a 'change of qualities, the qualities of the Bread and Wine remaining still the same. Whence he con- 'cludes, That those who believe no Figure in the Eucharist cannot explain that Change, and must 'own that there is nothing in it, which was not before. Nevertheless, says he, 'tis something else, 'for the Bread and Wine are made the Body and Blood of our Saviour. And here he charges his 'Adversaries home, asserting, they must either own, that the Change which is made in the Eucha-'rist is not an outward Change; or, to deny, that it is the Body and Blood of our Saviour, Quod 'nefas est non solum dicere, sed etiam cogitare, the very thought of which is criminal. But they 'granting, says he, that the Body and Blood of Christ are in the Sacrament, which cannot be with-'out a Change for the better, and that Change cannot be made Corporally, into that which falls

'under our outward Senſes, but Spiritually; it neceſſarily follows, that it muſt be made in Fi'gure, becauſe under the Veil of the Corporeal Bread and Wine, the Spiritual Body and Blood 'of our Saviour are really preſent, and do conjunctly exiſt. But we muſt not therefore imagine,
'that they be two Exiſtences of two different Things, viz. Body and Spirit. For, on the contrary,
'tis but one and the ſame Thing, which, in one reſpect, is the Species of the Bread and Wine;
'and, in another reſpect, is the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Now this Bread and Wine, as 'they fall under our outward Senſes, are Species of Corporal Creatures. But, if conſider'd, in 'relation to the Power which has raiſed them into a kind of Spiritual being, they are the Myſte-
'ries of the Body and Blood of our Saviour. By their outward Superficies falling under our Sen-
'ſes, they are Creatures ſubject to Change and Corruption; but, if we look upon 'em with relati'on to the ſtrength, and effect of the Myſtery, they confer Life and Immortality on thoſe who re'ceive them.

This he explains by the Similies of Baptiſm and the Manna, which indeed are not altogether parallel, but ſuch as may be, in ſome ſenſe, apply'd to it. For, as in Baptiſm, there is an outward Sign that falls under our Senſes, and an inward Grace apprehended by Faith, ſo there are in the Euchariſt the Species of Bread and Wine that fall under our Senſes, and the Inviſible Body of our Saviour. And, as the inward Grace and Virtue of Baptiſm for the healing of our Souls is alſo real and true, ſo the Body of our Saviour Chriſt is really and truly preſent under the Species. As to the Manna, this Author ſeems to be ſingular in his Opinion about its Converſion into the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which he affirms in very ardent Terms; but he was forced to do it, the better to adapt his Simile to the Subject in hand; which is a further Proof, that he owned a real Change in the Euchariſt. Next to that he quotes that place of Scripture out of St. John's Goſpel, Chap. 6. If you do not eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood. Upon which he makes this Obſervation, That our Saviour does not ſay, That, to eat his Fleſh, it muſt be cut in pieces, ſuch as it was Crucified, or that his Blood muſt be drunk in the ſame manner as it was ſhed upon the Croſs; but that the Faithful ſhall truly receive by this Myſtery the Bread and Wine converted into the Subſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Thus is clearly explained the Reality of the Body of Chriſt, and the Change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Afterwards he quotes ſeveral Paſſages out of S. Auſtin and S. Iſidorus, upon which he obſerves, 'That the 'Bread and Wine are changed into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, not in a Viſible, but in an In'viſible manner, by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt; and that they are therefore called the 'Body and Blood of Chriſt, becauſe they are not lookt upon by their outward appearance, but as 'they are made by the Divine Spirit; and that by an Inviſible Power they become quite another 'Thing than they appear to our eyes. That Part of the Euchariſt, which is outward and viſible,
'feeds our Bodies, whilſt the inward and inviſible feeds and gives Life to our Souls.

Laſtly, He concludes this firſt Part in theſe words; By what hath been ſaid hitherto it plainly ap'pears, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour received in the Church by the Mouth of the 'Faithful, are Figures, if conſider'd by the viſible and outward form of the Bread and Wine:
'But, if conſider'd by their Subſtance, hidden to our eyes, that is, by the Power of the Divine 'Word, they are indeed the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Therefore, according to the viſible Crea'ture, they are a Food for our Bodies; but, by the Power of a Mightier Subſtance, they nou-
'riſh and ſanctifie the Souls of the Faithful.

After this, he comes to the Second Queſtion, which he expreſſes in theſe words; Whether the ſame Body which was Born of the Virgin Mary, which Suffered, and was Buried, and ſits on the right-hand of the Eternal Father, be the ſame which the Faithful daily receive in the Church by the Myſtery of the Sacraments. The firſt Author he quotes upon this Queſtion is S. Ambroſe, a paſſage out of whoſe firſt Book, De Sacramentis, he ſets down; and, out of it, he draws this Concluſion; That, what we receive corporally, that is, what we touch with our Teeth, ſwallow down, and goes into the Belly, is not the Thing that feeds our Souls; but that it is the Living Bread, the Body of Chriſt, which is perceptible only to our Faith. Which ſhews, that this Queſtion agrees to the former, and that it does not lie in this, to know, Whether the Body and Blood of our Saviour be received in the Euchariſt; but how it is received, and in what manner it is there, whether without any Figure or Veil, and whether it be that very Thing we feel, or break, &c. And here he repeats his Argument drawn from the Change, which muſt be Inward and Inviſible, ſeeing it is not Outward and Apparent. Thus continuing to alledge Paſſages out of S. Ambroſe, he ſtarts this Objection; Thoſe (ſays he) who are not of my Opinion, do object and ſay, That what we ſee is the very Body of our Saviour; and that which we drink is his Blood; and that we ought not to inquire how it comes to paſs, but that 'tis our duty to believe it to be ſo. To which he makes this Anſwer, That this Opinion is reaſonable, and that we ought firmly to believe, that it is the Body and Blood of Chriſt; but that therefore we believe it, becauſe we do not ſee it; for, could we ſee it, we ſhould not ſay, I believe, but I ſee it. That it is not the Eye of the Body, but Faith, that perceives it; and that what is ſeen is not in Specie, but in Operation, and effect, the Body and Blood of Chriſt; that is to ſay, That the Body of Chriſt does not appear in it under a Humane ſhape. Therefore, adds he, S. Ambroſe ſays, That we ought not to mind the Courſe of Nature, but the Power of Chriſt, who changes what ſeemeth good unto him, and in what manner he pleaſes, who created thoſe Things which were not, and changes what he has created into what it was not before. To be virtually the Body of Chriſt, according to our Author, is to be ſo really, but not viſibly, becauſe under another form or appearance. For, as he ſays afterwards, 'tis Bread in Specie; but, in the Sacrament, the Real Body of Chriſt: In Specie Panis eſt, in Sacramento verum verum Christi Corpus. 'Tis the Body and Blood of Christ, but not in a corporal manner. Corpus Christi, sed non corporaliter; Sanguis Christi, sed non corporaliter.

'The difference he makes betwixt the Body of Christ in which he suffered, and that in the Eucha-'rist is, that the first was had under no form, but its own. It was what it appeared to be to the 'Eyes and to the Feeling; what the Jews saw upon the Cross, and afterwards in the Grave. His 'Blood, in the like manner, was invisible, not cover'd with any Veil. Whereas his Blood which 'the Faithful drink, and his Body which they eat, are quite another Kind of Thing, both in the 'Sign and the Thing signify'd. The corporal Flesh that was born of the Virgin, and crucify'd, 'consisted of Bones and Sinews, had Limbs and Parts distinct from each other; shewed Signs of 'Life, and had proper Motions. But the Spiritual Flesh wherewith the Faithful are fed Spiritually, 'according to the outward form, consists of grains of Wheat, and is made by a Baker's hands, no 'part of it distinct from another. It does not appear living, or animated, is not indued with any 'proper and natural Motion, and its virtue of conferring Life is the effect of a Spiritual Power, of 'the invisible and efficacious Power of God. What it appears Outwardly to be is quite another 'Thing from what it is thought to be Inwardly. To which he adds, That the Bread of the Eu-charist is not onely a Figure of our Saviour's Body, but observes by the bye, that it is also a Figure of the Body of the Faithful, and that the Water mingled with the Wine does likewise represent it in a Spiritual manner. In fine, to demonstrate it further, that the Species of Bread and Wine are not the Body of our Saviour, he says, That his Body in Heaven is Incorruptible, Eternal, Indivisible; but that the Sacrament is Corruptible, and Divisible, in its outward and sensible Parts, though Incorruptible in that Part of it which is perceptible to Faith. From whence he draws this Conclusion, Therefore what appears Outwardly is not the Thing it self, but the Image of it, and what the Soul perceives and apprehends in it is the Truth of the Thing.

All which he proves by several Passages of S. Austin, by the Prayers of the Mass, and other Passages, from which he does still infer, That the Body of Christ in the Eucharist differs from that which was Born of the Virgin, that Suffered, and Rose again from the Dead, yet not in Substance, but in Appearance. Lastly, Directing his Speech to the Emperour, he declares, That he has clearly proved by Places of Scripture, and by the Fathers Writings, that the Bread and Wine which are called the Body and Blood of our Saviour are a Figure, because a Mystery; also, that there's a Difference betwixt the Body of Christ in that Mystery, and that which suffer'd Death and was Buried. That here it is Invisible, not being perceiv'd but by Faith; whereas being unveil'd upon the Cross, it was known, and fully discover'd by the Outward Senses. That the Mystery of the Eucharist is likewise a Figure of the Elect People of God. And Lastly, that the Bread and Wine called, and being in effect the Body and Blood of our Saviour, do represent our Lord's Death and Passion. That from some Expressions of his one ought not to infer, That the Faithful do not receive the Body and Blood of Christ in the Mystery of the Sacrament, because Faith does not receive what the Eye perceives, but what is believed by Faith, and that it is a Spiritual Meat and Drink which feeds our Souls in a Spiritual manner, and yields unto them a Spiritual Life, according to our Saviour's saying, 'Tis the Spirit that quickens, the Flesh profiteth nothing.

Johannes Scotus, as well as Ratramnus, was likewise consulted upon the same Question by Charles the Bald, and Writ a Book on the same Subject; In which he Argued against the same Expressions opposed by Ratramnus. But 'tis apparent he went farther than he, delivering such Things as were contrary to the Doctrine of the Church upon the Real Presence. Which Hincmarus charges him with in the 31st Chapter of his Treatise of Predestination; wherein speaking of him and Prudentius, he says, That they set on foot new Tenets, contrary to the Faith of the Church; and amongst others, That the Sacraments of the Altar are not the real Body and Blood of our Saviour, but onely a Commemoration of his Body and Blood. But this cannot be justly attributed to Prudentius, who never was lookt upon to be guilty of any Errour in this Point; but onely to Scotus, whose Book was afterwards quoted by Berengarius, and condemned by the Orthodox. Hincmarus Wrote this in 859, which shews, that the Consultation of Charles about the Eucharist hapned before that year, and serves to fix the Epocha of Ratramnus and Scotus's Book upon this Subject.

Expressions of other Authors of this Age upon the Eucharist.

Amongst the Authors of the same Century that have but cursorily treated of this Matter, Amalarius, Florus, and Druthmarus speak of it like Ratramnus. But Haimo Bishop of Halberstadt, and Remigius Monks of Auxerre, follow Paschasius's way of speaking, and even go beyond his Bounds, denying, after S. John Damascene, that the Eucharist may be called a Figure of the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

About the latter end of this Century, Erigerus Abbot of Lobbes Wrote against the same Proposition which Ratramnus had attempted to overthrow; but still maintaining the Real Presence in the Eucharist. Sigebert and the Author who continued the Chronicle of Lobbes, speaking of him, observe, That he had Collected many Passages out of the Orthodox Fathers against Paschasius Radbertus, touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet 'tis certain, that Erigerus is so far from contending directly with Paschasius, that he doth in effect excuse him, and defend his Cause by the Authority of several Fathers, declaring, That he onely failed in this, that he did not quote word for word the Passage of S. Ambrose, but gave the Sense onely. He charges him not with Errour, but with Simplicity; and observes, that he did not deny but that there was a Figure in the Eucharist. It appears however, that he favours the Opinion of Ratramnus and Rabanus, and that he does not approve of Paschasius his Expression, viz. That it is the same Flesh which was Born of the Virgin that is in the Eucharist, being perswaded, that though it is the same, yet it ought to be conſider'd as different, becauſe 'tis in a different ſtate. And for this reaſon it is that he makes a Collection of Paſſages out of the Fathers againſt Paſchaſius, wherein mention is made of two or three Bodies of Chriſt, by reaſon of the different ſtates of his Body. The ſame Expreſſions are moreover to be found in the Sermons of Alfricus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who ſeems to have copied Ratrammus.

This Way of Explaining the Myſtery of the Euchariſt was ſo far from being condemn'd in the time of Berengarius, even by his Adverſaries, that Lanfrank makes uſe of it in the Dialogue he made againſt him. Wherein he owns, that one may ſay of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt, that it is the ſame which was born of the Virgin, and yet not the ſame; that it is the ſame, as to the Subſtance, Property, and Virtue of its true Nature; and not the ſame, if we conſider the Species of Bread and Wine. After the ſame manner Algerus does reconcile the Fathers, who ſeem to differ in their Opinions on this Matter. The Holy Fathers, ſays he, have obſerved this Duplicity, not of Subſtance, but of Form, when ſpeaking of the Body of our Lord in the Euchariſt, they ſay, that it was the ſame which was born of the Virgin, and in ſome ſenſe not the ſame; the ſame in Subſtance, and not the ſame in Form. Fulbertus Biſhop of Chartres makes the ſame Diſtinction in his Epiſtle to Einardus.

But we ought to obſerve, that Paſchaſius's mode of Expreſſion was not new, as his Adverſaries affirmed. Witneſs * many of the Ancient Fathers, who ſpeak in the ſame manner: As amongſt the Greeks, S. Ignatius, Athanaſius, Chryſoſtom, Cyril of Jeruſalem, Cyril of Alexandria, the Fathers of the Council of Epheſus, Anaſtaſius Sinaita, S. Gregory of Nice, S. John Damaſcene; and amongſt the Latins, S. Hilary, S. Ambroſe, and S. Auſtin himſelf in his Diſcourſe to the Neophites; beſides many others, who deliver Propoſitions equivalent to that of Paſchaſius. So that Paſchaſius cannot juſtly be charged with Innovation, either in the Thing it ſelf, or the Way of expreſſing it. And his Adverſaries ſeem to have fall'n upon him undeſervedly, the more becauſe he rejected the Concluſions they drew from his Expreſſion, and owned that the Euchariſt was both Figure and Reality, and that it contained the Body of Chriſt under the Veil and Species of the Bread and Wine.

[* Many of the Ancient Fathers ſpeak as Paſchaſius.] It is confeſſed, that many of the Ancients did uſe many Hyperbolical Expreſſions about the Sacrament, much like Paſchaſius's, but it was to ſtir up Reverence to their Holy Myſteries, and convince Men that the Elements were not mere Bread and Wine, nor dogmatically to aſſert a Carnal Preſence; for in their Doctrinal Diſcourſes about it, they ſpeak only of a Spiritual and Figurative Preſence.]

The Queſtion of Stercoraniſm.

Another famous Queſtion about the Euchariſt was ſtarted in this Age; viz. Whether any part of the Euchariſt be evacuated, as our other Food? They who ſtood for the Affirmative being called by the odious Name of Stercoraniſts. To underſtand clearly the ſtate of this Queſtion, we muſt remember the Euchariſt conſiſts of two Things, one inward and hidden, the other outward and ſenſible. The firſt is the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which are preſent in the Sacrament after an inviſible manner; and the other conſiſts of the Species of Bread and Wine, which appear to our outward Senſes. None ever did believe that the inviſible Body and Blood of Chriſt was ſubject to the ſame Conditions with our other Nouriſhment, or produced the ſame Effects. But becauſe the Species of Bread and Wine under which 'tis contained feed our Bodies, we ſay without any ſcruple, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt are converted into our Subſtance, and feed our Body. This Expreſſion was ever uſed in the Church. And ſome Fathers have proved the Reſurrection of our Bodies, Becauſe it is not to be thought, ſays S. Irenæus, that our Fleſh being fed with the Body and Blood of our Saviour, ſhould remain for ever in a ſtate of Corruption.

But if the Body of Chriſt has a nouriſhing property, 'tis not the Body it ſelf by its own proper Subſtance; but it is by the outward Signs, the Bread and Wine, which nouriſh us by the Matter which God hath made as it were a Vehicle to us of the Body and Blood of Chriſt which in our Faith and Minds took up before the place of the material Bread and Wine. But notwithſtanding that the Church has made no ſcruple to ſay, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour is converted into our Subſtance, and nouriſhes us by the Species of Bread and Wine, it was ever thought indecent even to think, much more to aſſert, that it was liable to the ſame Evacuation as our common Food, and that any part of it ſhould go into the Draught. The firſt that ſeems to have took notice of this Queſtion is Origen, whoſe Deciſion of it is in theſe Words, that this Food conſecrated by Prayers and the Word of God goes down into the Belly, and ſo into the Draught, as to the Matter it does conſiſt of, meaning the Species of Bread and Wine, not as to what it is made by Prayer. The Author of the Sermon of the Euchariſt, which is in the fifth Volume of the Greek and Latin Works of S. Chryſoſtom, ſeems to differ in his Opinion. Is that Bread, ſays he, which you ſee with your outward Eyes? Is that Wine? Has that food the ſame fate as other ſorts of food? God forbid, and let none of you have ſuch Thoughts of it. This Author ſeems to affirm, that the Body of our Lord is the very Species that we ſee; and does formally deny it to be liable to the ſame Condition with our common Food. S. John Damaſcene embraces this Opinion in the 14th Chapter of the 4th Book of the Orthodox Faith; adding however, that the outward Species of the Euchariſt is converted into our Subſtance. Paſchaſius is of the ſame Opinion, and ſays 'tis a Weakneſs to think that any part of this Myſtery is under the ſame Laws with other Food. Frivolum eſt ergo, ſays he Chap. 20. ſicut in Apocrypho Libro legitur, in hoc Myſterio cogitare de Stercore, ne commiſceatur in alterius cibi digeſtione. And he aſſerts, that all paſſes into our Fleſh and Subſtance, without any Evacuation. Ratrammus indeed does own, that the ſpiritual Body of our Saviour is not under the ſame condition with other Food, and will not ſo much as have it ſaid that it feeds our Bodies, ſeeing it is Food for our Souls. But he affirms, according to his Principles, that the viſible and outward Species are under the ſame Laws with all other Food. This is all that is ſaid by thoſe Authors upon that Queſtion.

But

But Amalarius treats of it on purpose in his Letter to Gontardus a Monk, who took Exception at his spitting presently after his receiving of the Eucharist, supposing he might then spit out some part of our Saviour's Body, the fear of which kept other Priests from spitting at such a time. To which Amalarius answers, that being a phlegmatick Man, he could not long forbear spitting, and that he hoped, that for his Infirmity sake God will not deprive him of the Body of Christ his Saviour as the Nourishment of his Soul, if it be but pure and humble before him, and that what he must needs eject for the Health of his Body, will be no prejudice to his Soul. These are his Words, Et quod exeundum est propter Sanitatem Corporis, faciat exire sine dispendio Animæ. To justifie himself more at large, he thoroughly handles the Question, and makes this Observation, that the Body of Christ is upon Earth as often as he pleases; that nothing but an ill Disposition of the Mind can make the Body incapable of receiving it; so that tho' any part of Christ's Body should come out of his Mouth, unknown to him, one ought not therefore to think him irreligious, or that he despised the Body of our Saviour, nor think that his Body went to any place where God would not have it; that our Saviour's Body quickens our Souls; or rather, is the Life of our Souls; and therefore we do not take its Life away, tho' we part with it. To conclude, he says, "'Tis needless to enquire, whether our Saviour's Body, after it is received with an upright In-"tention, be invisibly raised up into Heaven, or kept in our Body till its Burial; whether it be "exhaled into the Air, or issues out of the Body with the Blood, or through the Pores, the Lord "saying, that whatever comes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and from thence into the "Draught; but the chief thing that we ought to mind is, that we do not receive it Judas-like, "with a treacherous Heart, that we do not slight it, but distinguish it (as we ought) from common Food. Thus Amalarius propounds the Question, without deciding it, and does not declare his Opinion in the Matter.

Amalarius his Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Heribaldus Bishop of Auxerre having propounded the same Question to Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, the Archbishop returned him this Answer; "As to your Question concerning the Eucharist, "Whether being consumed and voided out of the Body as other sorts of Food are, it re-assumes the "Nature it had before its Consecration upon the Altar? This Question, says he, seems to me su-"perfluous, because our Saviour himself says in the Gospel, That whatever comes into the Mouth "goes down into the Belly, and from thence into the Draught. The Sacrament of the Body and "Blood of our Saviour is made of Things visible and corporeal; but it works Sanctification and "the invisible Salvation both of the Body and Soul. There is no ground to think, that what is di-"gested in the Stomach should return into its former state, a Thing avouched by no Man as yet. Here Rabanus supposes, that the Species of Bread and Wine in the Eucharist are under the same Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, and that they do not re-assume their proper Nature which they had before the Consecration. For it is plain, that he does not speak of our Saviour's Body, but of the outward Species of Bread and Wine.

Rabanus's Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Some Authors that were more scrupulous, fansied this Opinion unsuitable to the Dignity of the Mystery, and that it was more decent to think, either that the Species are annihilated, or that they have a perpetual Being, or else are changed into Flesh and Blood, and not into Humours or Excrements to be voided. 'Tis the Opinion of an anonymous Author, quoted by Erigerus under the Character of a certain Learned Man, whose Work is inserted in the second Volume of Dacherius's Spicilegium. "This Author distinguishes two Things in the Eucharist; viz. the invisible Body of "our Saviour, which is spiritual Food to the Soul; and the outward Food, which nourishes the "Body: And telling us what becomes of this, he opposes two contrary Places of Scripture; one "of our Saviour, teaching us, that whatever goes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and "thence into the Draught; and the other of the Apostle, that makes a great Difference betwixt the "Eucharist and other sorts of Food. The first Place makes no Exception at all of the Sacrament; "but the second teaches us to distinguish it from our usual Food. That indeed it is eaten and "swallowed down in the same manner as our usual Food, putting it into our Mouths, and convey-"ing it down into the Belly; but when 'tis come thither, none but the Lord knows how he dis-"poses of it. For we know, says he, that it may be consumed by a spiritual Power, that it may "be kept for ever from Corruption, because God may do what he pleases with his Sacrament. But "God forbid it should be subject to be conveyed into the Draught, or capable of being digested, "corrupted or consumed by Heat, or altered by any other Cause, &c.

The Sentiment of a nameless Author upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Erigerus makes a more strong Opposition against the Opinion of Rabanus, and says, 'twas a scandalous Thing for Heribaldus to propose such a Question to him, but more scandalous for Rabanus to have minded it, and most scandalous to have solved it as he has done. He declares himself against him, affirming that the Symbols of Bread and Wine are not voided out of our Bodies, nor changed into useless Humours or Excrements, but into our Flesh and Blood, to be raised again from the Dead.

Erigerus's Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Guitmondus was of the same Opinion with Erigerus, affirming, That, though a Man may be nourished by the Species of the Eucharist, yet no part of it is turned into Excrements. That they are never putrify'd, corrupted, or any way alter'd, whatever they seem to be, either to try the Faith of the Elect, or to punish the Neglect of those who keep 'em too long. That no Vermin can gnaw 'em, no Beast eat them; and, if such a thing happen, the Sacrament is, by Miracle, convey'd to some other place. Now, to obviate this Objection, That if a Priest should Consecrate one great Loaf, or several Loaves, a Man might live upon it, and shall void his Excrements in the usual manner, he declares, that in this case the Sacrament is also miraculously convey'd away, and an Unconsecrated Loaf substituted in the room of it by the Angels, or by the Evil Spirits, to cheat the Hereticks.

Guitmondus and Algerus their Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Hereticks. Algerus ſpeaks much to the ſame purpoſe, and holds, That the Species do not come out of our Bodies by Excrements, but are annihilated. He utterly denies, that Excrements can ariſe from the Species eaten, and will not allow 'em to be corrupted or putrefy'd, burnt, or alter'd in the leaſt, though they ſeem ſo to be. Laſtly, He taxes the Greeks with an Erroneous Belief, That the Euchariſt is liable to the ſame Laws and Contingencies with other ſorts of Food, becauſe they ſay, That the Faſt ordained by the Church is broken by the Communion; and calls 'em therefore by the Infamous Name of Stercoraniſts. Which Accuſation he got from Cardinal Humbertus, who lays the ſame Thing to the charge of Nicetas Pectoratus. But he fathers upon him that Opinion, as a conſequence of his Aſſertion, that the Faſt was broken by the Euchariſt, and not as a Doctrine formally aſſerted by him. The Truth is, there is nothing of that in the Writings of Nicetas, who blaming the Latins for Celebrating the Maſs in Lent upon other days than Saturday and Sunday, ſays, Their Practice is not well-timed, becauſe Celebrating the Maſs at the Third Hour, which is the time appointed to Offer this Sacrifice, they cannot keep the Faſt till the Ninth Hour. Afterwards he quotes ſome Canons, to prove the Unreaſonableneſs of this Cuſtom, and juſtifie the Practice of the Greeks, who Offer this Sacrifice on Saturdays and Sundays onely at the Third Hour, and Communicate on other days at the Ninth Hour, upon the Preſanctify'd Elements. So that Nicetas does not ſay poſitively, That the Faſt is broken by the Euchariſt; and, though he ſhould ſay ſo, it would not follow, that he believ'd it ſubject to the ſame Laws and Contingencies as our uſual Food, for that one might believe, that to eaſe one from the trouble of Faſting, and feed the Body in any manner of way, is ipſo facto to break the Faſt; which is not the Thing inſiſted on by Nicetas, or the Greeks. Who believed, the Celebration of the Sacrifice broke the Faſt, for that it is an Action full of Joy and Solemnity. This is the Reaſon given for't by Balſamon, upon the Fourth Canon of the Council of Laodicea. "To offer, ſays he, the Sacrifice, is to Celebrate a "Feaſt, and expreſs the Solemn Joy of the Church; and to do this, is not to weep or faſt. Beſides, Nicetas does ſuppoſe, that preſently after the Celebration of the Maſs it is lawful to eat; and conſequently that the Latins having finiſhed in the Morning that Celebration of the Maſs, broke the Faſt preſently after. In which particular he errs; for the Latins did not Celebrate Maſs in Lent at the Third Hour, but in the Evening, and ſo broke their Faſt but late. However, neither Nicetas nor the Greeks did ever ſay, That the Body and Blood of Chriſt were under the ſame Laws as common Food; nay, 'tis probable, they did not believe, that the Species of Bread and Wine went into the Draught, their great Doctor S. John Damaſcene having Taught the contrary. As for Algerus, he accuſed them of Stercoraniſm, only upon the Credit of Humbertus, whoſe words he does but Tranſcribe. And Humbertus charges Nicetas with it by a Conſequence that has failed, and which does not neceſſarily follow. It does not appear, that there has been, ſince that time, any farther Conteſt with them upon this Point; and amongſt the Errors which the Latins afterwards condemned in Michael Cerularius, there is no mention made of this. Therefore this Error can by no means be proved upon the Greeks.

The Greeks Opinion as to Stercoraniſm.

Now, to come back to the Latins, we have ſufficiently proved, that there was no difference amongſt them about the Fleſh and Blood of our Saviour contained under the Species, that none was ſo much Infatuated as to think, that that Myſtical Fleſh and Blood were ſubject to the ſame Laws and Contingencies with our uſual Food; but that they had debated amongſt them this Scholaſtical Queſtion, What becomes of the Species of Bread and Wine? and that many of them being of Opinion, That it was Indecent to conceive, that they were ſubject to the ſame Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, would not have it thought, that any part of it were converted into Excrements, or voided out of the Body, and therefore conceived that they were either Annihilated, or Converted into the Subſtance of our Fleſh, to be Raiſed again from the Dead. This Opinion, which had the Vogue in this and the following Centuries, has been ſince rejected by our Schoolmen, who doubt not but that the Species of the Euchariſt may be corrupted and converted into another Subſtance, God by his Infinite Power producing another * Matter in ſtead of that which is Converted into the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

The State of the Queſtion amongſt the Latins.

[* Another Matter.] What a many Tranſubſtantiations muſt follow upon the firſt Forgery. Tranſubſtantiation on the Altar creates another in the Belly, leaſt Chriſt's Body ſhould be ſubject to Indecent Evacuations. So neceſſary it is to fall into many Abſurdities to maintain one wilful Error.]

[To what is ſaid in Page 78. Paſchaſius is of the ſame Opinion, and ſays, 'Tis a weakneſs to think, 'that any part of this Myſtery is under the ſame Laws 'with other Food, this Note the Author hath added at the end of the Book, viz. This is not without difficulty, for Paſchaſius ſays well, Frivolum eſt ergo, ſicut in Apocrypho libro legitur, in hoc myſterio cogitare de ſtercore. But this will bear two Interpretations; That it is a frivolous opinion to believe, That the Eſſential part of the Euchariſt paſſes or returns; or, It is a frivolous queſtion to trouble our ſelves about, whether it paſſes or not; ſince we need not to fear its mingling with other Aliments. I rather think that Paſchaſius is of the latter opinion; for though he Aſſerts, That the Euchariſt nouriſhes our Body, he does not intend that we ſhould, by that word, underſtand a Carnal Nouriſhment of our Bodies, but a Spiritual Nutriture of our Souls. See the intire Paſſage in Paſchaſius's Treatiſe, Chap. 20. and the 71 Page of this Work.]

CHAP. VIII.

CHAP. VIII.

The Hiſtory of the Controverſie about the Manner in which the Virgin Mary brought forth Chriſt.

Aſchaſius and Ratramnus had another Controverſie about the Manner in which our Saviour came out of the Virgin's Womb. Ratramnus being informed, There were ſome in Germany that maintained, Our Saviour did not come out of the Virgin's Womb per virginalis januam vulvæ, ſed monſtruoſe de ſecreto ventris incerto tramite; he thought ſuch an Opinion dangerous, conceiving it followed from thence, that Chriſt was not truly Born, but Iſſued from the Virgin, quod non eſt naſci, ſed erumpi. He therefore oppoſed it in a ſmall Treatiſe, [Entitled, De partu Virginis] publiſhed by Father Dacherius, in the Second Volume of his Spicilegium; wherein he owns it as an undoubted Truth, That Mary lived all her lifetime a Virgin, ante partum, in partu, & poſt partum; but confutes thoſe who believed, That our Saviour came not into the World per Semitam Vulvæ, but ſome other Way. He brings in againſt them ſeveral Places of Scripture, and Paſſages of the Fathers, which prove, That Chriſt came out of the Virgins Womb; yet he owns withall, that he came out per Vulvam clauſam, as he came into the Place where his Diſciples were met, through the Door, and not through the Wall, yet without opening the Door.

Ratramnus his Opinion of our Saviour's Birth.

Paſchaſius Ratbertus, who had been Abbot of Corbey, and who was then but one of the Private Monks (as appears by the Title he aſſumes in his Epiſtle Dedicatory) thinking that Ratramnus, heretofore his Monk, but who perhaps had, before this, quitted that Abbey, had deliver'd, in his Treatiſe, ſuch Things as ſeemed prejudicial to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; and that he had diſpoſed Men to believe, That ſhe had brought forth our Saviour into the World in the ſame manner as other Women bring forth Children, aperta ſcilicet Vulva; did put out a Book of our Saviour's Birth againſt that of Ratramnus, wherein he Confutes him, without Naming of him, and charges him with the foreſaid Error; rejecting withal that Error of Ratramnus his Adverſaries, quod Chriſtus non fuiſſet natus. Therein he chiefly anſwers to S. Ambroſe and St. Jerom's Paſſages, which might breed ſome Difficulty. This Book is Dedicated to the Abbeſs and Nuns of Soiſſons. And whereas he calls the Abbeſs Matrona Chriſti, that gives us to underſtand, it was Theodrada, and not Emma that ſucceeded in 846, becauſe, as is obſerved by Father Mabillon, that Title was onely beſtowed upon Abbeſſes that had lived in a Married ſtate.

Paſchaſius his Opinion of our Saviour's Birth.

This Anſwer of Paſchaſius proving Ineffectual with the Followers of Ratramnus his Opinion, ſo as to convince them of their Error, who affirmed on the contrary, That they had done no Injury to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; He Wrote another Book upon the ſame Subject, of which we have but a Fragment left. Theſe are the two Treatiſes publiſhed by Feu-ardentius, * under the Name of Ildephonſus of Toledo, which Father Dacherius has reſtored to their true Author upon the credit of ſeveral Manuſcripts, and cauſed them to be Printed in the 12th Volume of his Spicilegium.

A Queſtion upon the Nature of the Soul.

Ratramnus had another Controverſie with a Monk of the ſame Abbey of Corbey, who had aſſerted, That all Men were of one Subſtance, and had but one Soul. This Opinion was grounded upon a place of S. Auſtin's Treatiſe, Of the Quantity of the Soul; but he held it immediately from one Macarius, the † Scot, i. e. an Iriſh-man. Ratramnus ſent him a Letter, to make him quit that Opinion. But this Monk, in his Anſwer, perſiſting ſtill in the ſame, Odo, Biſhop of Beauvais, who had been Abbot of Corbey, ordered Ratramnus to Confute that Monk's Book, which he did; and made it appear, in Writing, to Odo, that Macarius his Opinion was unwarrantable. This Treatiſe has not yet appeared in Print: but Father Mabillon, from whom we have this Information, ſaw it in a Manuſcript of the Monaſtery of S. Eligius near Noyon.

[† The Scot, i. e. an Iriſh-man.] In this Age, the Countrey, that we now call Ireland was called Scotland, and conſequently the Iriſh were Scoti, as our Author rightly Interprets Scotus in this place. Scotland was at this time called Albany, and took the preſent Name from the Iriſh-Scots, who having a long time Infeſted the Picts, at laſt Incorporated about the year 1101. with them, and gave that Countrey the Name, as the Two moſt Learned Prelates, Dr. Uſher, and Lloyd, have fully proved, in their Books de Prim. p. 734. and an Hiſt. Account, &c. p. 7.]

* By Feu-ardentius.] The firſt Treatiſe of Paſchaſius is the ſecond Treatiſe of Ildephonſus, beginning with theſe words, Quamvis omnium Eccleſiarum Virginitas, &c. But from Page the 35, where theſe words are in the Margent, hic aliquid deſideratur, you muſt go to Page the 42d, Line 13, where the Remainder of this Treatiſe is found; though Feu-ardentius has publiſhed it as another Diſcourſe. This ſecond Treatiſe of Paſchaſius is the Sermon which begins Page 47. Inter Sanctarum, &c. The end of the firſt Treatiſe may be part of this; being of the ſame Style, upon the ſame Subject, and likewiſe Dedicated to the Nuns. But the other Sermons attributed to Iſidorus, upon the Aſſumption, the Nativity and Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin, belong to another Author of later date than Paſchaſius, being either of the Twelfth, or the Thirteenth Century.

A Judgment upon Ratramnus.

Ratramnus had yet another Controverſie about the Expreſſion of Trina Deitas, and Writ a Book againſt Hincmarus, to juſtifie it; which Book is loſt. Laſtly, He attempted to Confute the Objections of the Greeks againſt the Latin Church; his Treatiſe upon this Subject is yet extant, and we ſhall ſpeak of it in its proper place. He lived till towards the latter end of this Century, and got himſelf ſuch a Name, that there was no Queſtion debated in his Time, but Ratramnus was deſired to Write upon it.

The Fortune of Ratramnus his Book, concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

His Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour was Printed the firſt time at Colen, in 1532. under the Name of Bertramus; and afterwards at Baſil in 1550. They that were imployed in the Cenſure of Books, in Execution of a Decree of the Council of Trent, did put it amongſt the Prohibited Books. Afterward Sixtus Senenſis, Deſpenſæus, and Genebrardus Santonenſis, lookt upon it as a Book forged by Oecolampadius. Pope Clement the VIII. did likewiſe reject it as an Heretical Book; wherein he was followed by Bellarmine, Quirogo, Sandaval, and Alanus. Yet notwithſtanding, the Divines of Louvain making, in the year 1671, an Index Expurgatorius for Flanders, did not abſolutely Prohibit it, but onely till it were Corrected. This Opinion was followed by Poſſevin, and ſome others. Cardinal Perron did not think it ſpurious, though he was no Friend to the Doctrine of it. In 1657. Monſieur de Marca laboured very hard to make it paſs for Scotus his Book, in the Letter annexed to the Second Volume of the Spicilegium: Which, in proceſs of time, became a common Opinion, defended by Father Paris, in his Diſſertation at the end of the Firſt Part of his Book of Perpetuity, &c. Yet it does not appear, that the Author of this Book was altogether of that Opinion, or that he offer'd to decide who was the Author of that Treatiſe. But he made a Diſcourſe upon that Author's Opinion; wherein he plainly ſhews, that he did not directly oppoſe the Real Preſence; though at the ſame time he owns, there are ſome Paſſages apt to make one believe, that he was no Favourer of it. Father Paris his Opinion in this caſe ſoon became the moſt prevalent amongſt the Roman Catholicks, whilſt the Proteſtants maintain'd firmly, that that Book was Ratramnus's. But in 1680, Father Mabillon did clearly convince the Roman Catholicks of their Prejudice in this caſe, by proving in his Preface to the Second Volume of the Fourth Age of Benedictine Writers, that the Book was Ratramnus's; and defended withall his Doctrine as Orthodox. Which Book was afterwards (viz. Anno 1672.) Printed at Paris, according to the Manuſcript of Lobbes, with a Tranſlation into French, by a Doctor of the Sorbon, who Writ the Hiſtory of the Fortune of this Book, and defended its Doctrine in his Preface. Father Mabillon having thus both by ſtreſs of Argument, and the Authority of the Manuſcripts by him quoted, reclaimed the beſt part of the Roman Communion from their Miſtaken Opinion of Monſieur de Marca, and Father Paris, yet Father Hardouin ſtood it out againſt him; and in his Book of the Sacrament of the Altar, Printed in 1689, endeavour'd to prove, he had a Deſign of deſtroying the Real Preſence. The Proteſtants took care to have this little Book of Ratramnus, at divers times, Printed and Tranſlated. There are extant ſome old Tranſlations of it, Printed in 1558, and 1560; and a New one, publiſhed in 1653. [But the Beſt of theſe is that which was Printed at London 1686, with an Excellent Preface, vindicating Bertram from all Popiſh Objections, with much Reaſon and Learning.]

The Editions of the other Books of Ratramnus.

The other Treatiſes of Ratramnus have not been ſo well known, nor ſo often publiſh'd, and have not appear'd in publick before this Century. His two Books concerning Predeſtination were Printed in the Collection made by Father Mauguin of the Authors of the Ninth Century, upon Grace, publiſhed in 1650. [Tom. I. p. 29. and are ſince put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. XV.] and his two other Works, viz. That of our Saviour's Birth of the Virgin Mary, and the Four Books againſt the Greeks, were put out by Father Dacherius. That of our Saviour's Birth, in the Fourth Tome of his Spicilegium, which came out Anno 1655; and the Four Books againſt the Greeks, in the Second Tome of the ſame Collection, Printed in 1657.

Johannes Scotus Erigena.

Johannes (a) Surnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Native Countrey, had likewiſe a great ſhare in the Conteſts about the Euchariſt and Grace. He came into France about the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald (b.) And being a Man of Parts and Learning, a good Peripatetick, and well skilled in the Greek Language, which few People were then well acquainted with in theſe Parts, (c) he got himſelf a good Fame, and was accordingly

(a) Surnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Countrey.] All the Ancients aſſure us, that this Author was a Scot. Hincmarus ſpeaking of him, L. 1. de Prædeſt. c. 31. has theſe words, Auctor jactitatur à multis Joannes Scotigena. Anaſtaſius the Library-keeper, Joannem imò Scotigenam. And Pope Nicholas, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, Quidam ut Joannes genere Scotus. The other Authors of that Time that Wrote againſt him, call him John Scot, or ſimply Scot. And, 'tis well known, that in thoſe Times Ireland, not Scotland, was called by the Name of Scotia. Trithemius gives him the Name of Erigena, or Eringena, which imports the ſame with Scot; Ireland, in the Language of his Country, being called Eri, or Erin.

(b) He came into France in the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald.] In 851. he had already raiſed his Reputation ſo high, that he was conſulted about the Queſtion of Predeſtination, as we have already obſerved; which is an Argument, that he was come hither before that Time, that is, about the beginning of Charles his Reign. But 'tis not likely that he did not come with Alcuinus to Found the Univerſity of Paris, or that he was a Diſciple of Beda, as ſome Authors have pretended, becauſe he died not till about the year 870.

(c) He became in a little time very eminent.] Pope Nicholas ſays of him, That he was a noted Man in the Univerſity of Paris. Theſe are his words, Aut certè Pariſiis in Studio cujus jam olim capital fuiſſe perhibetur. Certain it is, that Charles had a ſingular eſteem for him, by whom he was Conſulted about the Queſtion of the Euchariſt; as he was by Hincmarus and Pardulus, about the Doctrine of Predeſtination, &c.

dingly regarded by the King, who had a particular reſpect for Learned Men. But, having introduc'd ſome Errors, for which he was Cited by Pope Nicholas I. who Writ to Charles the Bald to ſend him to Rome, or to expel him from the Univerſity of Paris, in which he made a good Figure, he took a diſlike to France, and (d) withdrew into England about the year 864, where he died (e) about the year 874. (f) He ſeems not to be the ſame with Johannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling, who was Grimbaldus his Companion, and Maſter to Alfred.

John Scot his Book concerning the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

One of the Principal Works of Johannes Scotus Erigena, was his Treatiſe concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Which Book is loſt, unleſs it were that which bears the Name of Ratramnus, the Improbability whereof we have ſufficiently proved. In that Treatiſe he aſſerted, that the Sacraments of the Altar were not the real Body and Blood of Chriſt, but onely a Remembrance of both. This Doctrine he did not fully explain. But, if we may give credit to Aſſelin, that was the Drift of it. The Book was Dedicated to Charles the Bald, who had commanded him to Write on this Subject. And Berengarius quoted this Author, as one that had Taught the Doctrine he had ſtood for, wherein his Adverſaries did not contradict him. But they condemned the Book of John Scot, as containing Berengarius's Error; and it was attainted for that Reaſon by the Synods of Vercelli, Paris and Rome, by which means it might come to be loſt. It was Written againſt by Aldrevaldus, a Monk of the Abbey of Fleury, who muſtered againſt it a Collection of Paſſages out of the Fathers, inſerted into the 12th Volume of the Spicilegium.

The Books of Natures by John Scot.

John Scot Writ moreover two Books about Predeſtination; Five Books of Natures, or about the Diviſion of Natures, and a Book of Viſion. We have already ſpoken of his Books of Predeſtination.

(d) Withdrew (or Fled) into England.] Quare & Hæreticus putatus eſt, ſays Simeon Dunelmenſis, cujus Opinionis particeps fuiſſe dignoſcitur Nicolaus Papa, qui ait in Epiſtolâ ad Carolum, Relatum eſt Apoſtolatui noſtro, &c. Propter hanc ergo Infamiam tæduit eum Franciæ, &c. Matthew of Weſtminſter, and William of Malmesbury ſpeak much to the ſame purpoſe. Pope Nicholas I. being dead in 868. if Scot was forced by his Letter to return into England, he muſt have gone thither towards the year 864; which however does not agree with the Teſtimony of thoſe Authors, who affirm, That he was called thither by King Alfred, who did not begin to addict himſelf to Learning till after the year 880, and that he was Companion to Grimbaldus, who quitted France not till after that year; it appearing by a Charter, that he was yet reſiding in his Abbey, Anno 880.

(e) About the year 874.] Anaſtaſius the Library Keeper, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, dated the 10th of the Calends of April, Anno 875. ſpeaks of him, as of a dead Man. Which is another Argument againſt thoſe Mens Opinion, who make this Scotus a Tutor to King Alfred, and Companion to Grimbaldus. What Death he died, is a Thing very uncertain. The forementioned Hiſtorians, and many others, ſay, That he ſuffer'd Martyrdom, and that he was ſlain by Children, that Stabbed him to Death with Pen-knives. But William of Malmesbury, the firſt who related this Story, which was convey'd from him to the reſt, ſpeaks dubiouſly of it. 'Tis true, he relates certain Verſes, made in honour of John the Sophiſter, Written upon a Monument of Malmesbury-Church, where it is ſaid, That he died a Martyr; but there is no certainty, whether that John the Sophiſter be the Perſon we ſpeak of, or another Man. But this is certain, that neither Berengarius, nor his Scholars, who have ſo much magnified John Scot, never contended for his Martyrdom: Nor does it appear, that thoſe Authors who were Contemporary with him, or that Writ ſoon after his Death, did ever give him the Title of a Martyr. 'Tis poſſible, the Abbot of Etheling's Death, who was Stabb'd by ſome Aſſaſſins imploy'd by his Monks, might be appply'd to John Scot; ſo that, by diſguiſing the Story in ſome meaſure, he might be ſuppoſed to be the Man who was with Pen-knives Stabbed by Scholars. And, by dating his Martyrdom on the 4th of the Ides of November, the day on which another John Scot, a Biſhop, was killed, Anno 1050, three diſtinct Johns will be blended into one, with the Epithet of Sophiſta proper to our Scot; that of Martyr proper to the Abbot of Etheling, and the Day of the Biſhop's Death. However we Read in the Book of Engliſh-Martyrs, and alſo in a Roman Martyrology Printed at Antwerp in 1586, theſe Words, Eodem Die (ſpeaking of the Fourth Day of the Ides of November) Sancti Joannis Scoti, qui Graphiis Puerorum confoſſus Martyrii Coronam adeptus eſt. But there's no ſuch Thing to be found in all the other Roman Martyrologies. The Reaſon why I date not his Death before the year 874, is, becauſe in ſome Greek and Latin Verſes, Written upon an Ancient Gloſſary, bearing the Name of John at the head of it, he ſpeaks of Pope John, who was not raiſed to the Papal See till towards the end of the year 872. And if thoſe Verſes be his, 'tis like he was then come back into France.

(f) He ſeems not to be the ſame with Johannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling.] The Reaſons which induce me to believe, that our John Scot was not the Abbot of Etheling, are theſe: Firſt, That the Abbot of Etheling was an Eaſt-Saxon, a Saxon of Germany, or at leaſt of Eſſex, and John Scot an Iriſh-man. Secondly, The firſt was called into England by Alfred, and came thither with Grimbaldus after the year 880; whereas John Scot withdrew from France into England upon a Diſguſt, and died before the year 875. Thirdly, The Abbot of Etheling was both Prieſt and Monk, which we do not read any where of John Scot; and he was himſelf ſo far from owning it, that he calls himſelf only Servus, or extremus Servorum, or extremus Sophiæ Studentium. But 'tis certain that he lived at Court, as appears by the Epiſtle ſent him by Pardulus, and by his Preface to the Book of Predeſtination. Fourthly, The Abbot of Etheling was ſlain by ſome Aſſaſſins in his Abbey-Church towards the year 895. being then a ſtrong Man, and one that could defend himſelf, as Aſſerus avers it, who relates his Death, and ſays, That he ſtood in his own Defence, quod bellicoſæ Artis non expers eſſet; whereas our Scot was dead long before: but put the caſe he had lived till then, he could not then be a ſtrong Man, or able to make any Defence. Fifthly, William of Malmesbury makes a Diſtinction of thoſe two Johns; but he miſtakes in his Suppoſition, that they were both called into England by Alfred. Aſſerus, a Contemporary Author, makes mention but of one Scot called into England by Alfred, deſtination. The Five Books of Natures are Written by way of Dialogue, and in the ſame Style, that is, after a Scholaſtick abſtruſe manner. The Natures he divides into four Kinds, one that creates, and is uncreated; another that creates, and is created; a third that does not create, and is created; and a fourth which neither creates, nor is created. In the three firſt Books he treats of the three firſt Kinds of Nature; and in the fourth and fifth he explains the Return of the created Natures into the Nature uncreated. In the Second Book he handles the Controverſie betwixt the Greek and Latin Churches, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. He tells us, That God has created in his Son, from all Eternity, the Primogenial Cauſes of all Things, the Goodneſs by himſelf, Eſſence by himſelf, &c. That the World was Created after Man had ſinned; and that, if Man and Angels had not ſinned, God would have created no Senſible and Material World. He aſſerts, That our Saviour's Manhood was perfectly changed into his Godhead, after his Reſurrection. That the Malice and Puniſhments of the Infernal Spirits ſhall ceaſe one day, and come to a period. That, after their Fall, they were cloathed with Aereal Bodies. That the Damned ſhall enjoy all Natural Comforts. That all Creatures whatſoever ſhall be at laſt Transformed into the Humane Nature. That our Bodies ſhall be turned into our Souls at the Day of Reſurrection. And Laſtly, That all Things ſhall be converted into their Primogenial Cauſes, and return into God. So that, as before the World was Created, there was no Being but God, and the Cauſes of all Things in God; ſo after the end of the World, there will be no Being but God, and the Cauſes of all Things in Him.

Theſe Books, which are in Manuſcript in the Library of S. Germain des Prez, were Printed at Oxford in 1681. The Book of Viſion doth ſtill remain a Manuſcript. Father Mabillon has found one in a Monaſtery near S. Omar; and ſays, That John Scot Argues in that Book about the very ſame Queſtion which is debated in the 30th Letter of Lopus Abbot of Ferrara.

Joh. Scot's Tranſlations.

John Scot Tranſlated into Latin the Works Fathered upon S. Denys, the Tranſlation whereof he Dedicated to Charles the Bald. Pope Nicholas I. Writ to that Prince about it, and deſired it of him. Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper having peruſed it, found he had followed his Author too cloſe, and that he had not taken a ſufficient care to ſhun Obſcurity. This Work, with Anaſtaſius his Letter, is in a Manuſcript of the Library of the Jeſuits-Colledge at Bourges [and part of it has been Printed with S. Denys his Works, at Colen, in 1536.] Scot has alſo Tranſlated ſome Comments of Maximus upon the Books of St. Denys; and his Tranſlation of Maximus his Comments upon S. Gregory Nazianzen was Printed at Oxford in 1681. Trithemius makes mention of a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, and of a Book of Offices compoſed by John Scot.

What we have hitherto ſaid of John Scot, is a ſufficient Proof, that he had ſome Tincture of Learning, and that he was skilled in Logicks and Metaphyſicks. But it is plain on the other ſide, that he had a Thwarting Diſpoſition, that he was but a weak Arguer, and a ſorry Divine.

To Conclude, what relates to the Subject Matter of this and the foregoing Chapter; all we have to do is, to ſpeak of the Works of Paſchaſius Ratbertus, upon which we have been hitherto ſilent.

He attempted a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, when he was yet a Monk, that is, before the year 844. being choſen Abbot, the Duties of his Place made him diſcontinue it. Yet he began the Fifth Book, where he had left off, and proceeded as far as the Ninth, while he was yet Abbot. Having eaſed himſelf from the Burden of that Station, he went on with the reſt more undiſturbed. However he ſuſpended it yet a while, his Time being taken up with other Works. And then it was he Writ a Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy, and an Explication of the 44th Pſalm. But he took in hand the Eleventh Book again, at the latter end of his Life, ſo that the Letter to Fridegardus was not Written by Paſchaſius till about that Time.

Paſchaſius his Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel is very large. In it having explained the General Sence of every particular Place, he makes long Moral Reflexions, taken, for the moſt part, out of the Works of the Holy Fathers. The firſt four Books are Dedicated to Gontlandus a Monk of S. Riquier; and the laſt, to the whole Body of Monks in that Abbey.

* 'Tis with us the 45*th.*

The Explication of the *44th Pſalm is Dedicated to the Nuns of our Lady of Soiſſons, in Acknowledgment of the Benefits he had received from them. The ſame is divided into Three Parts. The firſt is upon the Title of the Pſalm, as in the Septuagint, For the Beloved; and in the Hebrew, For the Lilies, or, For the Flowers. Whence he takes occaſion to inlarge upon the Praiſe of Virgins. In the Second Part, he Expounds that part of this Pſalm, which exalts the Beauty of the Bridegroom, and applys it to Chriſt. In the Third, he applys to the Church what is there ſaid of the Bride. To expound the Letter, he makes uſe of the Commentary attributed to St. Jerom; often comparing together the Hebrew Text, Symmachus his Verſion, and that of the Septuagint.

His Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy is much more Allegorical than the former. Here you will find Myſteries upon the Hebrew Characters, the Uſe of which is onely for Diſtinction. 'Tis a tedious Work, divided into Five Books, and Dedicated to a Monk called Odilmanus Severus. Therein he deplores the Vices and Licentiouſneſs of his Age; as, amongſt others, Simony, the Covetouſneſs of ſeveral Prieſts, the Corrupt Lives both of the Regular and Secular Clergy, who minded too much the Concerns of this World, the Uſurpation of Church-Lands, and Grinding of the Poor. With Grief does he mention likewiſe, in the Fourth Book, an Invaſion made by Pirates, who had committed great Depredations to the very Gates of Paris. Which ought to be underſtood of the Normans, who, in the year 856, or 857. burnt the Church of S. Germain in the Fields.

Theſe

These are Paschasius his Works, which have been collected and published by Father Sirmondus, and Printed at Paris in 1618. Since which time Father Daubervius has published in the 12th Volume of his Spicilegium a Treatise of our Saviour's Nativity, Dedicated to Theodrada, Abbess of the Abbey of our Lady of Soissons, who died in 846. In which he asserts, That our Saviour coming into the World, came out of the Virgins Womb, by penetrating her Substance, and without any Opening.

To Conclude, Father Mabillon has put out two Books of Paschasius, containing the Life of S. Wala, Abbot of Corbey. The first he composed when he was a Monk, towards the year 856; And the second, after the Decease of his Friend Severus, about the year 859. By this we learn several Particulars of the unjust Deposing of Lewis, Surnamed the Godly, and the State of the Church of France. The Life of Adelardus is also attributed to him.

Paschasius was a Man of great Piety and Learning. He Writes in a clear, neat and elegant Style. He was well-read both in Ecclesiastick and Prophane Authors. He had withall pretty good Parts of his own; onely it may be said perhaps, that he was a little too Mystical. His Book upon the Eucharist is an accurate and elaborate Piece. His Encomium was made in Verse by Eugenoldus, and is to be seen in the beginning of his Works. He died upon S. Riquier's Day, towards the year 860.

CHAP. IX.

The History of the Contest betwixt Photius and Ignatius, about the Patriarchal See of Constantinople.

Ignatius was Son of Michael Curopalata the Emperour, Surnamed Rengabis, and of Procopia, Daughter of Nicephorus the Emperour. Michael, who succeeded his Father-in-Law, Anno 811. had not sat full two years upon the Throne, when he was forced to resign the Empire into the hands of Leo the Armenian. He had Three Sons, Theophilactus, Stauratius, and Nicetas. The first two he had admitted to Govern with him; but Stauratius happened to die, before he had quitted the Empire. Theophilactus was shaven, and turned, with his Father, into a Monastery, and so was Nicetas, his youngest Brother, then but Fourteen years of Age. Theophilactus, upon his coming into the Monastery, had his Name changed into Eustratus; and Nicetas, into that of Ignatius, the Prince we now speak of. Leo the Armenian, being resolved to secure unto himself the Empire he had got by Treachery, Banished Michael, his Wife and Children, and sent them into several Islands, parting them from one another, and keeping them under a strict Guard; and his Two Children he made Incapable of Raising Issue to the Family, to which the Imperial Crown did of Right belong. He declared against the Use of Images, and turned Nicephorus the Patriarch out of his See of Constantinople, to make room for Theodosius, an Enemy of Images. Leo having quietly enjoy'd the Empire some Months above Seven years, was slain by Michael, Surnamed Balbus, or the Stammerer, who raised to the See of Constantinople, after the Death of Theodosius, Anthony, Surnamed Byrsodepsa, who was Metropolitan of Perga. Theophilus, Son of Michael the Stammerer, succeeded his Father, Anno 819. and raised John Iconomachus to the See of Constantinople, in the room of Anthony. At last Theophilus dying in the year 841. the Government fell into the hands of Theodora, as the Guardian of Michael, Son to Theophilus. This Princess expelled John from his See of Constantinople, and caused Methodius to be Ordained again, who was Four years possessed of that See. After his Death, Ignatius, who, till that time, had lived a Monastick Life in the Isles of Hiatres, and Terebinthus, by him Peopled with Monks, was raised to that Dignity in 847. He had been ordained Priest by Basil, Bishop of Perga. At that time there was a Brother of Theodorus, Unkle to Michael, called Bardas, who had a great share in the Government. This Man was desperately in Love with his Daughter-in-Law, with whom he held a secret Commerce. Ignatius offended at so great a Lewdness, Rebuked him for it, with a freedom suitable to his Character. And observing Bardas still persisting in his Wicked Course, he refused to give him the Sacrament upon the Twelfth-day. Bardas, a Mighty Man, and of a Cruel Temper, Incensed at his Refusal, took his time to break out into an open Resentment of it. Not long after this, designing to rid himself of Theodora, who shared the Empire with him, he perswaded Michael, That it was time for him to Reign by himself; and advised him to send away his Mother and Sisters into some Monastery. The Emperour, following his Advice, commanded the Patriarch to see that Business done, who refused to obey that Order. Which Refusal made way for Bardas to Accuse him as an Abettor of the Rebellion of a certain Person, who pretended to be a Son of Theodora by another Husband. Michael, in the mean time, caused his own Mother and Sisters to be shaven, and shut up into a Nunnery; afterwards turns out Ignatius, and Baniſhes him into the Iſle of Terebinthus, requiring him ſeveral times to Reſign; but although he could not obtain it from him, yet he put Photius in his place.

Photius his Character. This Photius was deſcended from a Noble Family of Conſtantinople, and Nephew of Taraſius the Patriarch. He was raiſed to the Chief Dignities of the Empire, being made Principal Secretary of State, Captain of the Guards, and Senator. He was both a refined Stateſman, and a Perſon of profound Learning. So great a Grammarian he was, and ſo well-verſed in Poeſy, Philoſophy, Phyſick, and other Sciences; and (as the Author of the Life of the holy Patriarch Ignatius obſerves it) ſo great a Maſter of Eloquence, that he might paſs, without contradiction, for the greateſt Man of his Age in point of Learning, and might even be compared with the Ancients. In ſhort, he had all the Parts requiſite for an able Man; a happy Genius agreeable to a Studious Life, and a good Eſtate to get him a good Library of Books; but, above all, ſo great a deſire to raiſe his Reputation, that it made him paſs whole Nights in the courſe of his Studies: And, whereas he aimed at the Patriarchal Dignity, he diligently apply'd himſelf to the Reading of ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Writings as might fit him for it.

Photius his Ordination. He was yet but a Layman, when he was choſen Patriarch. But, that he might be, as it were, Gradually raiſed to that Dignity, he was made Monk the firſt Day, Reader the next, and the following days Sub-Deacon, Deacon and Prieſt. So that in the ſpace of ſix days, he attained to that Dignity, which fell out on Chriſtmas-Day, Anno 858. He was Ordained by Gregory Aſbeſtas, formerly Biſhop of Syracuſe, but Degraded at Rome, whereupon he withdrew into Conſtantinople. Ignatius, unwilling that he ſhould aſſiſt at his Ordination, had fore-warned him not to appear in the Ceremony, and ſignify'd unto him his deſire, that his Affair ſhould be examined, and Judgment paſſed upon it, before he held any Correſpondence with him. Which Gregory being much offended at, he, from that time, declared himſelf Ignatius his Enemy, and Separated from the Church, with Peter Biſhop of Sardis, Eulampius of Apamea, and ſome other of the Clergy. Whom therefore Ignatius the Patriarch cited before him, and cauſed to be Excommunicated. They Writ againſt him to the Pope, who required of Ignatius, that he would ſend ſome Perſon to Rome to give him a full Information of that Affair. Ignatius did accordingly ſend one Lazarus; and the Point being duly examined by the Direction of Pope Benedictus, the next Succeſſor to Leo, Ignatius his Sentence was approved of by the Holy See. The Schiſm however continued during the Eleven years Ignatius was in the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople, who could not reduce Gregory, nor thoſe of his Party, to their Duty; becauſe he had ſo great an Intereſt amongſt the Grandees, and with Photius in particular.

Ignatius Expelled and Depoſed. The Metropolitans, ſubject to the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople, acknowledged Photius; but they extorted from him a Promiſe in Writing, that he ſhould reſpect Ignatius as his Father, and ſhould by no means perſecute him. Yet, notwithſtanding this Promiſe, Two Months after Photius was raiſed to that See; Ignatius his Friends were ſecured, and himſelf accuſed of a Conſpiracy againſt the Government. He brought an Information againſt him, and removing him from the Iſle of Terebinthus, whither he had withdrawn himſelf, he was convey'd to another Iſland called Hiera, from thence to Berneta, and afterwards to Numeta, where he was very ill uſed, bound with Chains and caſt into Priſon. From thence he was carried to Mitylene; and, whilſt he was there, Photius having called a Council together, Pronounced his Depoſition, and an Anathema againſt his Perſon.

Pope Nicholas his Letter upon the Ordination of Photius. Photius having thus ſecured himſelf in his Patriarchal Dignity, was not fully ſatisfied; but being deſirous to get this Sentence Confirmed by the Biſhop of Rome, ſent two Biſhops to Pope Nicholas. Whom he pray'd to ſend two Legates to Conſtantinople, to re-eſtabliſh the Church-Diſcipline, and utterly extirpate the reſidue of the Sect that oppoſed Image-worſhip, being reſolved to compell them to approve of Ignatius his Depoſition. For he did not formally deſire of the Pope the Approbation of it, but he gave him to underſtand, that Ignatius had voluntarily quitted the Patriarchal See, by reaſon of his Age and Crazineſs, and had withdrawn himſelf into a Monaſtery belonging to a certain Iſland, and that he was in great eſteem both with the Princes and People. Upon this Requeſt, Pope Nicholas ſent two Biſhops to Conſtantinople, viz. Zachary and Radoaldus, with the Character of Legates a latere, with full power to Regulate the Buſineſs of the Iconoclaſts, and to Inform themſelves ſo far onely of Ignatius his Depoſition, as to make the Report thereof to the Holy See. At the ſame time he Writ both to Michael the Emperour, and to Photius himſelf, about the Depoſition of Ignatius. In his Letter to the Emperour, he expreſſes his Diſlike, that Ignatius had been Depoſed without conſulting the Holy See about it, and that a Lay-man was put into his Place, contrary to the Canons of the Church, and the Decrees of the Popes. He therefore declares to him, That he cannot give his Aſſent to Photius his Ordination, before he is fully informed by his Legates of the whole Matter of Fact; That he deſired, Ignatius ſhould be Cited before them and the Council, to ask him the Reaſon, Why he left his Flock; and to inquire whether his Depoſition was made Canonically; And that, when he ſhould have a True Account of Things, he would decide the Matter by an Apoſtolick Decree, according to the true Merit of the Cauſe. Next, he recommends the Worſhip of the Images of Jeſus Chriſt, the Virgin Mary, and Saints, proving the Lawfulneſs of it by the Tradition of the Church, and ſome Inſtances out of the Old Teſtament. To which he adds, That as Altars are Sanctify'd by Benediction, and as the Bread, after Conſecration, is, in reality, the Body of Chriſt, and the Wine becomes his Blood; ſo the Wood, whereof a Croſs is made, is but common Wood, before 'tis brought into the Form of a Croſs; but when it has once receiv'd that Form, it becomes Holy, and the Horrour of Devils, by reaſon of our Saviour's Figure upon it. He exhorts the Emperour, to reſtore

to the Pope the Authority he formerly had, by his Vicar the Bishop of Thessalonica, over the old and new Epirus, over Illyria, Macedon, Thessaly, Achaia, the Two Dacia's, Mœsia, Dardania, and Prevalitania. And, to assert it as his Right, he sent to the Emperor some Letters of his Predecessors. He farther requires the Restitution of the Papal Patrimonies in Calabria and Sicily; and that the Arch-bishop of Syracuse might be Ordained by the Holy See. Lastly, He tells him, that he sends him, as Legates, Radoaldus Bishop of Porto, and Zachary of Agnania; whom he desires him to receive with a Respect suitable to their Character; to give them frequent and favourable Audiences, to give Credit to their Informations; not to suffer 'em to be ill-intreated, and to send them back under a safe Guard. These are, in short, the Contents of Pope Nicholas his Letter to the Emperour. That to Photius is shorter; wherein he expressed, how joyful he was to understand by his Letters the Stedfastness of his Faith, but that he was grieved on the other side, to see such Violations made of the Canons of the Church, in the Business of his Promotion, being, as it were, all at once raised from a Layman, to the Dignity of a Patriarch; wherein he had transgressed the Canons, and the Decrees of the Popes, so that he could not Approve of his Ordination, before he were fully informed by his Legates he had sent to Constantinople of his Morals, Conduct, and Affection to the Doctrine of the Church; And that, when he should be fully satisfy'd about it, he would Honour him according to his Station, and give him real Proofs of his Brotherly Love. These Two Letters, dated Septem. 25th. 860. being this Pope's second and third Letters, were given to his Legates, upon their departure for Constantinople.

Whilst an Answer was expecting from Rome, Ignatius was Re-manded to the Isle of Terebinthus, where he suffer'd much from the Emperour's Officers, and by an In-road the Scythians made into it, who Plunder'd the Island and all the Monasteries; so that he was constrained to withdraw himself into a private House at Constantinople.

The Council of Constantinople against Ignatius.

The Pope's Two Legates being come to Constantinople, the Emperour called a Council thither in 861. which consisted of 318. Bishops, the Pope's Legates assisting at it. Ignatius was Cited to appear at this Council by the Commissioners, to Answer to the Charge exhibited against him. He demanded of those Officers that came to Cite him, Whether he must appear in a Bishop, Priest, or Monk's Habit? They being startled at it, could give him no Answer, But that he should hear from them about it the next day; when they came back to him, and Cited him a second time, in the Names of Zachary and Radoaldus the Pope's Legates, to appear before the Synod in the Habit which he thought in his Conscience most proper for him. Upon which he put on his Patriarchal Vestments, and Marched forth, attended by Bishops, Clerks, Monks, and a world of People, towards the Church, wherein the Assembly was. Being come over against S. Gregory's Church, at a place where a great Cross stood upon a Marble-Pillar, in the middle of the Street, a Noble Man, sent by the Emperour, came to tell him, That if he did not appear in a plain Monk's Habit, 'twould go near to cost him his Life. Laurentius the Priest, and the two Stephens, did likewise forewarn him, not to come in his Pontifical Habit. Ignatius forced to obey, was dragged alone into the Synod, Habited like a Monk. He was no sooner come in, but the Emperour fell upon him with Opprobrious and Virulent Language; but after a while, being a little cooler, he commanded him to sit down on a Wooden Bench. He begged leave to Salute Radoaldus and Zachary, which was granted him. He asked them who they were, and what their Commission was? To which they Answer'd, That they were Legates from Pope Nicholas, to take Cognizance of his Affair. He farther Asked them, Whether they had any Letter from His Holiness for him? They Answered, They had none: supposing they had not to do with a Patriarch, but with a Man Deposed in a Provincial Synod. Then he charged them to Expel the Adulterer, who had, by Force, possessed himself of his See; declaring withall, that, If they had not Power to do it, they had none to be his Judges. They Answer'd, That they had Power from the Emperour to be Judges in his Affair. Whereupon Ignatius was pressed by the Courtiers to make his Resignation, by which the Metropolitans were awed that sollicited his Restauration. Thus was the first Day spent in Heats and Contests, so that the Assembly was Adjourned to another Day. Mean while Ignatius was pressed very hard to a Resignation, which he would never yield unto. Being cited again to appear before the Council, he Answer'd, He would not appear, and that he would never own for his Judges Men that appeared so visibly prepossessed against him; who were so far from expelling Photius, that they did daily eat at his Table, and to whom he had sent Presents before their Arrival. That he Appealed to the Pope, and was willing to submit himself to his Judgment. Those who stood for him required the same Thing. To make out the Justice of his Demand, he alledged Innocent's Letter to Chrysostom, and the Canon of the Council of Sardis, touching the Review of the Bishop's Causes. Which notwithstanding, being pressed to appear in the Council, he urged, That those who had caused him to be Summoned thither did not understand the Canons, nor the Practice of the Church, that a Bishop must be Cited by two Bishops, not (as he was) by two Persons, one a Lay-man, the other a Deacon. But his Arguments not being able to prevail against Violence, he was forced into the Council; wherein appeared against him several Witnesses, Deposing, That his Ordination was Invalid, because he was Chosen by Favour: He rejected those Witnesses, as produced by the Emperour; adding, That if he were not Arch-bishop, the Emperour was no Emperour, nor any of those Bishops truly so, for that they had been all Consecrated by him. He said further, That Photius being an Adulterer, was no Member of the Church; and that he could not set himself up to Rule, and Feed Christ's Flock. First, Because he was one of those that were Condemned and Excommunicated. Secondly, Because, of a Lay-man he was made a Patriarch so suddenly.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Becauſe he owed his Ordination to an Excommunicated and Depoſed Biſhop. Fourthly, Becauſe having given a Promiſe in Writing, That he would never moleſt him, he had broken his Oath within 40 days after his Intruſion. To which no Anſwer was given: but, in ſtead of it he was preſſed again to Reſign, which he conſtantly refuſed. So that the Aſſembly broke up this ſecond time, as the firſt, re infecta. In the following Seſſions, the Emperour cauſed no leſs than 72 Witneſſes to be heard; who Depoſed, That he was not raiſed to the Patriarchal See according to the Canons; but, with much Bribery, and by the Emperour's Favour. Whereupon was Read the Thirteenth of the Apoſtle's Canons, which Ordains, That if any one becomes a Biſhop by the Secular Power, he ought to be Depoſed. In fine, after a long deliberation, the Council Pronounced his Depoſition; and bringing him before them, his Pontifical Habit was put on, and he was preſently Deveſted of the ſame.

Image-worſhip was another Thing debated in, and Confirmed by this Council; The Acts whereof were accordingly divided into two Parts, one about Images, and the other about Ignatius his Depoſition. Therefore perhaps the Greeks call it, The Firſt and Second Synod; or, if we rather give credit to Zonaras, and Balſamon, 'twas becauſe the Reſolutions taken at the firſt Seſſions being not ſet down in Writing, by reaſon of ſome Troubles, another Sitting was appointed, in which the Determinations of both were reduced into Writing. Theſe two Authors give us an account of XVII. Canons made in this Aſſembly.

The Canons of the Council of Conſtantinople.

The Firſt is, To prevent an Abuſe in the Foundation of Monaſteries. For many of the Founders retained the Property thereof, and diſpoſed of Monaſteries as of their other Eſtates. To prevent which diſorder, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That no Monaſtery ſhall be erected, but with the Biſhop's Advice and Conſent, who is to Conſecrate it; That an Inventory ſhall be made of the Situation, and Appurtenances of the Monaſtery, and all that belongs to it, which ſhall be kept in the Archives of the Biſhoprick; And that it ſhall not be lawful for the Founder to make himſelf Superiour of it, or to make any other that he thinks fit, without the Biſhop's Concurrence.

The Second Canon is levelled againſt thoſe who put on a Monk's Habit, without obſerving the Rules and Conſtitutions of a Monaſtick Life. To redreſs which Grievance, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That a Monk ſhall do nothing but by the Superiour's Direction, to whoſe Rules he is ſubject, and in whoſe Monaſtery he ſhall be bound to live.

The Third injoyns the Superiours to make an Inquiry after ſuch Monks as have left their Monaſteries, and to ſhut them up again.

The Fourth prohibits the Monks to quit their Monaſteries, either to retire themſelves into Secular Houſes, or to change Monaſteries; leaving the Biſhops a full Power to Remove them, if they think it neceſſary.

The Fifth imports, That the Monks Habit ſhall be given onely to ſuch as have been proved Three Years, except in caſe of Diſeaſes, which may allow of a ſhorter Time; or when ſuch as are admitted, have formerly led a kind of Monaſtick Life in the World, it is ſufficient, in this caſe, to keep them in the State of Novices Six Months.

The Sixth Canon declares, That Monks ought to have nothing of their own; that, before they turn Monks, they may freely diſpoſe of their Eſtates; but after they are entered, the Monaſtery has the ſole and intire Property of all they have, and they are diſabled from uſing, or diſpoſing of it as their own. That in caſe it be diſcovered, that any of them has retained an Inheritance to his own proper uſe, it ought to be Sold, and the Money given to the Poor. All which Regulations extend, by Act of the Council, not onely to Monks, but in like manner to Nuns.

The Seventh forbids all Biſhops to Found Monaſteries at the Charge of their Dioceſs. Which was to prevent the Ruin of Biſhopricks, the Biſhops in thoſe Times being apt to beſtow all their Cares and the Incomes of their Biſhopricks, upon Erecting and Founding of Monaſteries.

The Eighth is againſt ſuch as voluntarily aſſumed to themſelves the Office of Biſhop, or cauſed themſelves to be made ſuch, without an Urgent Neceſſity, as in caſe of Diſeaſe. And ſuch it Condemns to be Depoſed, if Clergymen; and if Laymen, to be Excommunicated.

The Ninth is againſt thoſe who ſtrike and abuſe others.

The Tenth ordains, That thoſe ſhall be Depoſed who ſhall take upon them to convert into Prophane Uſes, Veſſels, or Sacred Veſtments, made uſe of at the Altar.

The Eleventh forbids all Clergymen to take upon them Secular Imploys, or Offices.

The Twelfth forbids to Celebrate, or Adminiſter the Sacraments in private Chappels, without the Biſhop's Conſent.

The Thirteenth prohibits all inferiour Clergymen to ſeparate from their Biſhop, before he be Tryed and Condemned by his Judges.

The Fourteenth contains the ſame Prohibition to Biſhops, in relation to their Metropolitan.

By the Fifteenth the ſame Thing is ordered to be obſerved, in relation to the Patriarch; except in caſe of Hereſie, if the Patriarch do publickly Teach it. In which caſe thoſe that forſake his Communion, before the Judgment of the Synod, ought not onely not to be Depoſed, but are worthy of Praiſe for ſo doing. Which ought to be underſtood of a manifeſt and condemned Hereſie.

The Sixteenth enjoyns, That no Biſhop ſhall be Ordained in a Church, the Biſhop whereof is ſtill living, unleſs he has voluntarily Reſigned his Biſhoprick, or has been Depoſed in Due Form. But, if a Biſhop do forſake his Flock, and abſents himſelf Six Months from his his Church, without a lawful occasion, he ought to be Deposed, and another put in his place.

The Seventeenth forbids to raise a Lay-man or a Monk immediately to the Episcopal Dignity.

These are the Canons said to be made by this Council. The first appear to have been made Indirectly against Ignatius; but the two last do plainly condemn the Conduct of Photius. Which might suggest a belief, that they were made by another Synod; but that 'tis usual with Men to appear most severe against those Disorders they themselves have been guilty of.

The Persecution of Ignatius.

Photius was not satisfy'd in Deposing Ignatius, and stripping him unhandsomly of his Sacerdotal Habit; but to extort a Resignation from him, he caused him to be shut up in a close narrow Prison, where he received very ill usage. And there he was forced to make a Cross over a Writing, the Contents of which were, That he owned himself unworthy of being a Bishop, and that he had not been duly raised to the Patriarchal Dignity, but with Bribing and Favour; and that he was not the Lawful Possessor of it, but an Usurper. This Signature being thus extorted from him, he was left undisturbed in the Palace of Pose. Mean while he drew a Petition, by way of Appeal, to the Pope; wherein having represented his Case to His Holiness, as it is related here, he begs of him that he will Commiserate him, and lend him his helping Hand, in Imitation of his Predecessors Fabian, Julius, Innocent, Leo, and all those that have laboured for the Propagation of the Faith and Truth.

But Ignatius his Adversaries, not contented with his forced Resignation, perswaded the Emperor, That it was fit he should Publickly Read it himself in the Church, and Anathematize himself. In order to which, upon a Whitsunday, his House was beset with Guards. Which Ignatius perceiving, made his Escape in a Country-man's habit, with Baskets, and got over into the Islands, where he absconded, shifting frequently his Habitation, for fear of being discover'd. In August following there hapned an Earthquake at Constantinople, which the People attributed to the Persecution of Ignatius. For which reason, the Princes were forced to Promise, That he should no more be molested, nor any harm done him for having concealed himself, or to any Person or Persons that had concealed him. Which Promise being made publick, Ignatius discovered himself, and was sent back into his Monastery, there to live in quiet. Whereupon the Earthquake ceased, and the Bulgarians were converted.

Zachary and Radoaldus being returned to Rome, declared onely to the Pope, by word of Mouth, that Ignatius had been Deposed, and Photius Raised in his stead to the See of Constantinople, but concealed from him the share they had in it.

Pope Nicholas his Letters upon the Deposition of Ignatius.

Two days after came an Ambassador, named Leo, from the Emperour, with two Volumes, containing the Acts of the Council at Constantinople; one concerning Ignatius his Deposition, and the other about Images. He also brought a Letter from the Emperour to the Pope, wherein he desired his Assent, under his own hand, to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Promotion of Photius. At the same time a Monk, by Name Theognostus, came to Rome from Ignatius in a Layman's habit, who informed the Pope of what had passed. The Pope, far from doing what the Emperour desired of him, Wrote immediately a Letter to all the Patriarchs, wherein he declared his Dislike of Ignatius his Deposition, and Photius his Intrusion. He Wrote likewise to Michael the Emperour, that he would never yield his Consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, nor the Ordination of Photius. And, whereas, to justifie this last, Nectarius and S. Ambrose were alledged as two Presidents, being made of Lay-men Bishops; he makes it out, that they had a particular Calling, and that they had not been Ordained to thrust a Bishop out of his See. He answers farther to the same Instances, and that of Tarasius, in the Letter he Writ at the same time to Photius, that it is for the good of the Church, through Necessity, or by a particular Inspiration of God, that the Laws of the Church have been dispensed with upon such Occasions; but that none of those Reasons could take place in his Ordination. He complains, that Photius refuses to own or observe the Popes Decretals, because they condemn his Ordination. He does acknowledge, that some Churches may have particular Customs different from those of Rome. But he maintains withall, that this Way of Ordaining a Lay-man Bishop, contrary to the Canons, and the General Laws of the Church, ought not to be tolerated. His farther Complaints are, That his Legates were not used with that Respect he expected; that they had been detained a long time without the freedom of speaking to any one, and that they had been forced by Threats to consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Intrusion of Photius. These three Letters are under the same Date, viz. March 18th, 862.

A Council held at Rome upon the Ordination of Photius.

The Pope having sent them to Constantinople, and other parts of the World, a Council was called by His Holiness at Rome, in order to have this Business throughly examined. The Pope knew not at first how much his own Legates had contributed to the Deposition of Ignatius, and thought they had been forced to it. But, hearing that they had been corrupted by Photius, and that they themselves had Deposed Ignatius, and owned Photius, he thought himself bound, for the Vindication and Honour of the Holy See, to call this Synod. Radoaldus did not appear, but Zachary did; who being convicted to have had a hand in the Deposition of Ignatius, and to have acknowledged Photius as the Lawful Patriarch, he was Deposed and Excommunicated. He afterwards did acknowledge his Fault, declaring, That he had acted contrary to the Orders he had received from the Holy See, by Consenting to the Deposition of Ignatius. Radoaldus being absent, his Condemnation was put off till another time.

This Council did alſo take into their Conſideration the Difference betwixt Ignatius and Photius, and Confirmed Image-Worſhip, as may be ſeen by the Six Articles inſerted into the Seventh Letter of Pope Nicholas.

The Firſt declares, That Photius being of a Lay-man Ordained a Patriarch by Gregory of Syracuſe, for having Invaded the See of Conſtantinople, and thruſt out Ignatius the Lawful Poſſeſſor thereof; for having held Communion with Perſons Excommunicated by the Holy See; having Corrupted the Pope's Legates; having Baniſhed and Perſecuted the Biſhops who would not acknowledge him, is therefore degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and all Orders Eccleſiaſtical, by the Authority of God, of the Princes of the Apoſtles, St. Peter and St. Paul, of all the Saints, of the Six General Councils, and by the Judgment of the Holy Ghoſt; And if, after this Judgment, he continues in poſſeſſion of that See, he is Excommunicated, with all ſuch as ſhall Abett him, or hold Communion with him.

The Second contains the like Sentence of Depoſition againſt Gregory of Syracuſe, and a Commination againſt him, if he continues to raiſe Troubles againſt Ignatius; and ſuch as hold Communion with him are hereby declared Excommunicated.

In the Third Article, All ſuch as Photius has promoted to its Orders, and have held Communion with him, after his Inſtruction, are declared to have been unlawfully Ordained, and their Orders to be void accordingly.

The Fourth injoyns the Reſtauration of Ignatius, though he never was truly Depoſed, nor juſtly Condemned or Degraded; and declares, that all Perſons that ſhall hinder him from aſſuming again his Sacerdotal Habit, from performing the Duties of his Place, or from the peaceable enjoyment of his See, ſhall be Depoſed and Excommunicated.

The Fifth enjoyns, That all Perſons Exiled upon this account, be Reſtored to their ſeveral Stations; and Declares, all that ſhall obſtruct it to be Excommunicated.

The Sixth confirms what had been Decreed by the Popes touching the Images of Jeſus Chriſt, the Holy Virgin, and the Saints; and pronounces an Anathema againſt John of Conſtantinople and his Followers, who Taught, That they ought to be broken, and trampled under our feet.

To theſe Six Articles, Pope Nicholas adds two Deciſions, made in a former Synod, againſt thoſe who held, That our Saviour's Godhead had ſuffered upon the Croſs. By the firſt it is determined, that our Saviour indeed ſuffered in his Fleſh, but that his Godhead remained Impaſſible. And by the Second pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſhall ſay, That our Saviour ſuffered in his Godhead.

Radoaldus, whoſe Judgment was put off, being returned into Italy from France, the Pope ſent ſome Biſhops, to ſummon him to appear at the Synod. But he concealed himſelf ſo well, that they could find him no where. Anno 863. he came ſuddenly into Rome, where he combined for ſome time with the Pope's Enemies; but durſt not ſtay till the Synod ſat, which was put off by reaſon of the Troubles. He fled from Rome, ſpoiled his Church, and took Sanctuary in another Dioceſs. But in the Year 864. he was Depoſed and Excommunicated in the Synod which then ſat, with Threats of Anathema, if he held Communion with Photius.

Pope Nicholas his Letter to Michael the Emperour.

Michael the Emperour having received the Pope's Letter, ſent him a very ſharp Anſwer, expreſſing his Diſcontent. To which the Pope made a long Reply, Confuting, Article by Article, what the Emperour had Written. Who complaining as if he had been ill-uſed by the Holy See, tho' ſince the Sixth Council, no Emperour of the Greeks had honoured the Holy See ſo much as he had: The Pope makes him this Return, That he has not Abuſed him in any manner, but onely Warned and Rebuked him, as Biſhops ought to doe; and that, if his Predeceſſors did not bear the Honour that was due to the Holy See, 'twas becauſe moſt of them were Hereticks, when thoſe that were good Catholicks had always a Veneration and Reſpect for the Holy See. The Emperour, ſpeaking of the Legates, he deſired the Pope to ſend him, had uſed the Word to Command. Which hard Expreſſion the Pope could not digeſt, and therefore brought in ſeveral Inſtances of Emperours, who Writing to the Popes, had uſed the words to Pray, or to Deſire; and ſays, That in the Letter ſent him by Michael, he himſelf had uſed the word to earneſtly Intreat, Obſecramus. Nor does he paſs by the Epithet of Barbarous, given by the Emperour to the Latin Tongue; but tells him very ſeriouſly, That he ought to have ſpoken better of a Language made by God himſelf, made uſe of in the Inſcription of the Croſs, and in which God is worſhipped amongſt the Latins. To which he adds, That he who glories in being the Emperour of the Romans, ſhould not deſpiſe the Roman Tongue. The Emperour had ſignify'd in his Letter, That he had not required the Legates to be Judges a ſecond time in the Cauſe of Ignatius. And the Pope makes him this Return, That the Event is a Proof, that was his Deſign; that, for his part, he had given them no Power but to get an Information of the Matter, and make him the Report thereof, but not to give Judgment in the Caſe. That thoſe who had Condemned Ignatius, were his Enemies, or Excommunicate, Perſons either Suſpected, or Accuſed, and ſo could not be his Judges; and that they were all Inferiours to him, having conſequently no Power to Sit upon, much leſs to Depoſe him. Upon which laſt Head he does much inlarge, endeavouring to prove by Inſtances, as well as by the Authority of the Popes and Councils, that the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople can be brought to no Judgment but the Pope's. He maintains, That the Emperour could not call a Synod, and much leſs bring his Officers thither.

The Emperour had ſent him word, That the Council by which Ignatius was Depoſed, was as Numerous as the Nicene Council. To which the Pope Anſwers; That it is not the Number, but the the Merit and Worth of the Bishops assembled in Council, which ought to be regarded; That no Patriarch was present at this, and all the Bishops were Suffragans of Constantinople; That the Small Number ought to be no prejudice, provided they act from a Pious Principle; and a great Number availeth nothing, if Ungodliness be at the bottom of their Proceedings. That on the contrary, the greater the Number of the Wicked is, the more easily they may compass their wicked Designs. The Emperour had Writ, That he desired Legates onely upon the account of Images. And the Pope makes him this Return, That he made it onely his Pretence, and that his Aim was to make use of them against Ignatius. But he declines an Answer to what the Emperour had Alledged against the Privileges of Rome, and contents himself to say, That they are Divine and Perpetual; That they may be Assaulted, but not Overthrown; That they were not granted by Councils, but owned and respected. The Emperour had demanded of him Theognostus, and some other Monks of Ignatius's his Party, who had taken Sanctuary at Rome. But the Pope refused to deliver them up. He affirms and proves, by the Example of S. Athanasius, and the Testimony of Pope Julius, that he had a Power to Cite both Photius and Ignatius to Rome, and to be Judge of their Difference. Yet he is willing, if they cannot come in Person, to receive their Deputies. He wishes that Photius should send him, on his part, the Bishop of Syracuse, with others left to his Choice; and names the Deputies that shall appear in behalf of Ignatius. He consents that the Emperour shall send thither Officers from him, and says, The Business shall be Judged at Rome by his Council.

In another Letter Written to the same Emperour, Nov. 13. 866. and sent him by Legates, he exhorts him to yield to his Reasons. He gives him an account, how Zachary and Radoaldus were Deposed, for having exceeded their Power, in Condemning Ignatius. He complains, That the first Letter he had Written had been Counterfeited, and makes it appear, that the Council held against Ignatius had not proceeded in a Legal Manner; and that he should have been Reinstated before his Cause was Judged. He requires from the Emperour, that he would cause that Injurious Letter he had sent him, to be Burnt, and threatens with Excommunication the Inditers of it.

Other Letters of Pope Nicholas upon the Affair of Ignatius.

At the same time he sent to the Clergy of Constantinople an Account in Writing of what had passed at Rome about the Concern of Photius and Ignatius; Photius in particular he charges with several Things, in a Letter directed to him. In another to Prince Bardas he expresses the Dissatisfaction he lies under, to see those Hopes frustrated which he had entertained of him; and advises him to Recollect himself, and to protect Ignatius. Whom he informs on the other side of what he had done for him; and comforts him in his Condition. Theodora the Empress he praises in another Letter, exhorting her to Patience, and assuring her that he would do his utmost to restore Ignatius. He intreats Eudoxia to protect him, and desires the same of the Senators of Constantinople. Thus you have the substance of the Sixteen first Letters of Pope Nicholas, collected by himself, and sent into all Parts, to inform the whole World of this Affair, and of his Conduct in it.

Ill Treatments made to Ignatius.

But whilst Pope Nicholas laboured hard to Reinstate Ignatius in his See, Photius and Bardas were no less active and industrious to bring him to a fatal end. Photius suborned a Man, and caused him to be Intercepted with two Counterfeit Letters; one to the Pope, subscribed by Ignatius, and the other under the Pope's Name to Photius. Whence he took occasion to Impeach Ignatius for keeping Correspondence in the West, and Writing thither against the Emperour. Whereupon Ignatius was Apprehended, who remained in Custody, till the Letter-bearer was manifestly proved to be an Ill Man, and an Impostor. After this he had some Respit; till Bardas, frighted by a Dream, in which he saw the Patriarch imploring the Pope's Assistance against him, kept him under so strict a Guard, that he could not so much as say Mass, or speak to any Man. At last Bardas was slain, in April, Anno 866. by the Emperour's Order, who set up Basilius Cæsar in his place the 26th following, being Whitsunday.

The Council of Photius against the Pope.

Photius, resolved to be revenged of the Pope, exasperated as much as in him lay, the Emperour against him, and perswaded him to call a Council, in order to Condemn the Pope, as the Pope had Condemned him. He Summoned to Constantinople all the Bishops of his Patriarchate, and set up others, who pretended themselves to be sent as Deputies from the other Patriarchs. Pope Nicholas was Accused before this Council, his Deposition pronounced, and his Person Excommunicated. This done, Photius sollicited the Emperour Lewis King of Italy, and the Princess Ingelberg, to declare themselves against the Pope, promising to procure him the Imperial Crown of the East, should they but Expel that Pope from his See. The Acts of this Council he sent into the West by Zachary. But, soon after this, Michael the Emperour was slain by Basilius his Order, who thereupon was Declared Emperour, Sept. 23d, 867.

Ignatius Re-instated.

The first Thing Basilius did, after he had settled himself upon the Throne, was the Expulsion of Photius, and Restauration of Ignatius. He sent Orders for Zachary to Return, banished Photius into a Monastery, sent for Ignatius to Constantinople, and Reinstated him in his See, Novemb. 23d, in the same Year.

This is Observable in the Life of this Patriarch, that he came now into his Church, whilst the Priest Offering the Sacrifice, was Singing these Words in the Quire, Giving Thanks unto the Lord. Ignatius being in Possession of his See, Excommunicated presently Photius, those that had been Ordained by him, all his Followers, and such as held Communion with him. He likewise begged of the Emperour, that he would Summon a General Council, to remedy those Evils the Church did lie under. And several Deputies were immediately dispatched to the Pope at Rome;

John,

John, Biſhop of Pergos, from Ignatius; Peter of Sardis from Photius; and an Officer, Named Baſilius, from the Emperour. Peter of Sardis periſhed by a Ship-wrack, in the Gulf of Dalmatia; the other two had better luck, and came ſafe to Rome. Where they found Pope Nicholas dead, and Adrian raiſed into his Place, who received them very graciouſly. They ſhewed him the Acts of the Councils held by Photius againſt Ignatius, and Pope Nicholas I. Adrian called a Synod, which Condemned them to be Burnt, and Excommunicated Photius a ſecond time. Next he preſented to them two Biſhops, by Name Donatus and Stephen, for his Legates, to Act in his Name in the Council to be held at Conſtantinople.

The Council of Conſtantinople, being the VIII. General Council.

This Council was Summoned by Baſilius the Emperour in the Third year of his Reign, and the Second of that of Conſtantine Ind. 3. Anno 869. of the Common Account. They met in the Church of S. Sophia, on the right ſide, where the Catechumeni were commonly inſtructed. In the midſt of the Aſſembly were placed the Holy Goſpels, with a Croſs. It began the Fifth of October, and ended the laſt day of February following. During which time they had Ten diſtinct Seſſions. As to the Number of Biſhops aſſiſting thereat, it vary'd very much. At firſt it conſiſted onely of the Pope's Legates, viz. Donatus Biſhop of Oſtia, Stephen Biſhop of Nepi, and Marinus a Deacon, Thomas Arch-biſhop of Tyre repreſenting the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, and Ignatius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. With them did 12 Biſhops ſit, by their Order, who had firmly adhered to Ignatius his Cauſe and Intereſt. In the Second Seſſion they admitted Ten Biſhops, who begged Pardon for having ſided with Photius. The Third conſiſted onely of 23 Biſhops, and the Fourth of 21. In the Fifth there was Two Metropolitans, to wit, of Epheſus and Cyzicus, who had not been in the former; but on the other ſide ſome of the Biſhops that had been in the former, did not appear in this. The Sixth conſiſted of Thirty ſeven Biſhops, their Number increaſing as the Biſhops that had ſtood for Photius came in and ſubſcribed a Writing, whereby they rejected him, and owned Ignatius. The next Two were not more numerous. But the Ninth, at which Joſeph was preſent, as Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, was compoſed of above 60 Biſhops; and the laſt of above 100, who all ſubſcribed to the Deciſions of the Council. At all their Sittings there were Senators, Noblemen, and Officers of the Emperour, with Bahanes at the head of them, who ſpoke to the Biſhops in the Name of all. The Emperour was there in Perſon at the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Seſſions. Conſtantine came thither with him at the Ninth, at which were preſent alſo Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper, and Eberard, as Ambaſſadors from Lewis Emperour of Italy, beſides Two Ambaſſadours from the King of Bulgaria. Almoſt all the Biſhops were of Aſia, Thracia and Greece.

The firſt time they ſat was October the 5th. The Pope's Legates, Ignatius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, a Deputy from the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, Thomas, Metropolitan of Tyre repreſenting the Patriarch of Antioch, that See being then Vacant; and the Noblemen being met, they ſent for the Biſhops in, who had been perſecuted for the Cauſe of Ignatius, being 12 in Number, viz. Five Metropolitans of Greece, and Seven Biſhops, who accordingly took their places in the Council. Then Bahanes, the Chief of the Noblemen, Read aloud the Emperour's Exhortation to the Council; wherein he declared, That having purpoſed to put an end to the Differences that troubled the Peace of the Church, he had ſent for Legates from the Biſhop of Rome, and Deputies from the other Patriarchs, to hold an Oecumenical Council; that he exhorted the Biſhops to come with a Spirit of Peace, and to ſeek out Remedies for the preſent Evils. Whereupon Bahanes, turning to the Pope's Legates, deſired them, in the Biſhop's Name, to declare unto them whence they came, and what Power they had. They anſwered, That it was never done before in any Synod, to examine the Power of the Pope's Legates. To which Bahanes reply'd, That what he did was not for want of Reſpect to the Holy Apoſtolick See; but becauſe the late Legates Radoaldus and Zachary had deceived them, by abuſing their Power. This Reaſon being allowed of, they preſented the Pope's Letter to the Emperour; which was Read in Latin by Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, and turned into Greek by Damian a Clergy-man, the Emperour's Interpreter. In this Letter Adrian, having Congratulated Baſilius, concerning his Elevation to the Imperial Throne, Commends his Deſign of reſtoring Peace to the Church, and his Application to the Holy See to find out a Remedy for the Evils the Church of Conſtantinople did lie under: He approves of what he had done in the behalf of Ignatius, and againſt Photius; and returns him his Thanks for his proceeding in that Matter, according to the Judgment of the Holy See, and the Modern Biſhops. As to thoſe Biſhops, and other Perſons, that had Troubled the Peace of the Church, and continued to hold Communion with Photius, after his Condemnation, he ſays, They ought to be differently uſed according to the difference of their Faults, which he leaves to the Judgment of his Legates and Ignatius. And, whereas the Emperour had deſired, they ſhould not be proceeded againſt to the utmoſt rigour; He tells the Emperour, That he is very much concerned at it, becauſe not onely by the Judgment of Nicholas his Predeceſſor, which he has Subſcribed to, but alſo by the Laws of the Church, they ought to be moſt ſeverely Puniſhed, without any hopes of their Reſtauration. However, for Peace-ſake, and to ſave a great many Men, his Opinion was, That Moderation might be uſed, and ſome favour may be ſhewed them, as has been practiſed on the like occaſions by the Popes his Predeceſſors, of which he gives ſome particular Inſtances. That therefore he deſires the Meeting of a Council, wherein his Legates ſhall preſide; who, upon their knowledge of the Perſons and their Faults, may be competent Judges thereof. That a Declaration of Abhorrency ſhall be made againſt the Council held againſt the Holy See, and all the Acts thereof ſhall be Burnt.

He likewise exhorts the Emperour to make all the Bishops subscribe to the Decrees made in the Synod of Rome against Photius, and for Ignatius. In conclusion, he prays him to send him back four Monks, fled from Italy into Constantinople; and recommends unto him his Legates, together with John Bishop of Silea, Ignatius his Deputy, and Basilius his Envoy. He prays him to excuse their long Tarrying, as being none of their Fault; for he could not possibly dispatch them sooner, having upon him the Care of so many Churches.

This Letter being Read, the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were likewise desired to read their Letters, that Information might be had both of their Qualities and Power. Elias, Deputy of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, said, They could not be ignorant who they were, and that they might know it by the Emperour's Exhortation; However, to satisfie the Desire of the Assembly, he declared, That Thomas Bishop of Tyre represented the Patriarch of Antioch, during the Vacancy of that See, being the first Metropolitan of that Patriarchate, and consequently had no occasion to bring Recommendatory Letters; and that he spoke for him, because he could not speak Greek without some difficulty. As for himself, that he had a Letter from Theodosius his Patriarch to Ignatius, which had been already read, and might be read again. The Contents of which Letter were, That he durst not before Write unto him, or send any body to him, for fear of incurring the Suspicion and Persecution of the Prince of the Saracens, whom Jerusalem was then subject to, and who treated the Christians with a great deal of Humanity, suffering them to Build Churches, and to have a Free Exercise of their Religion, without any Violence or Hardship put upon them; but, that having receiv'd his Orders to Write to him, he sends him Elias to Represent his Person, a Man of Eminent Parts, able to give a sound Judgment of Things under debate; that the Prince of the Saracens appointed Thomas Bishop of Tyre to bear him Company; and that he desires him to obtain from the Emperour the Liberty of some Saracens who were his Prisoners, whereby the Saracens Anger might be appeased, who otherwise threatned the Christians.

Then was Read the Paper sent by the Pope to be Subscribed by all the Bishops, containing an Excommunication of all Hereticks, particularly of Photius, and all the Opposers of Image-worship, with a general Approbation of all the Proceedings against Photius, and Gregory Bishop of Syracuse, by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, a Condemnation of all that had been done by Photius against the Holy See; and lastly, an Acknowledgment of Ignatius as the Lawful Patriarch. This Form was approved of by all the Bishops, and the Deputies from the East. Thomas and Elias said, They agreed to it, and desired to hear it Read. The like Form was drawn up at Constantinople, before the Legates came thither, and contained Six Articles. In the first, they acknowledge Ignatius as the Lawful Patriarch. In the second they declare, That all the Bishops who had stood by Ignatius, and therefore Deposed by Photius, ought to be restored to their respective Sees. In the third, they give it, as their Opinion, That all Priests, or other Clerks Ordained by Methodius, or Photius, who joyned with Photius, and are returned into the Church since his Expulsion, may be admitted and restored, after they have performed such Penances as shall be laid upon them. In the fourth, they declare Photius Degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and incapable of Restauration, and do farther Anathematize him, in case he do not submit to the Pope's and their Judgment. In the fifth, they declare Gregory, Bishop of Syracuse, Condemned and Deposed, and all that have been Ordained by Photius unworthy of the Sacerdotal Office. In the last, They recommend the Execution of these Things, declaring they have, in all Points, conformed themselves to the Judgment of Pope Nicholas, and Excommunicating all Persons that do not submit to His and their Judgment. Which Articles were approved of by the Pope's Legates, and the whole assembly in General. Whereupon the Pope's Legates, and the Deputies from the Patriarchs of the East, being Asked by the Commissioners, Why they had Condemned Photius in his ablence; They gave their Reasons why they refused either to see or hear him, together with the Reasons which had induced them to own Ignatius, whom all the Patriarchal Churches had acknowledged to be the Right Patriarch. This done, the Session concluded with Acclamations for the Emperour, the Empress, and the Patriarchs.

In the Second Session, the Pope's Legates, Thomas of Tyre, Elias the Deputy from Jerusalem, and the Twelve Bishops that had firmly adhered to Ignatius, being met with the Emperour's Commissioners, Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, said, That the Bishops that had stood for Photius Pray'd to be Admitted. Which being granted, they declared, That they had been Ordained by Methodius, or by Ignatius; acknowledged their Error in siding with Photius, Begged Pardon for the same, and presented a Petition, the substance whereof is as followeth. That having been drawn in by the Artifices of Photius, or prevailed upon by the fear of Persecution, and the Punishments he had threatned them with, and inflicted upon Ignatius his Friends, they had been forced to own and support him; that they Acknowledged their Fault, and begged pardon for it; protesting, They should never adhere to Photius, or any of his party, as long as they should continue in their Obstinacy. This Petition of theirs being presented, the Pope's Legates declared, That they received them. The Form was read unto them; who, having approved of, and subscribed unto it, their Petition being laid upon the Gospel and the Cross, they presented it to Ignatius the Patriarch, who restored unto them their Pontifical Habit, and then they took their places in the Council. Though the number of the Bishops be not expressly mention'd, yet Ten of them are named in this Session.

The Priests Ordained by Methodius and Ignatius, who had sided with Photius, were likewise admitted; who, having presented a Petition to the same purpose as the former, and subscribed to the Form, were alſo reſtored. The ſame was done with the Deacons, Sub-Deacons, and other Clerks, theſe Penances being inflicted upon them all. That they that eat Fleſh, ſhould forbear it, together with Eggs and Cheeſe; and they that eat no Fleſh, ſhould abſtain from Eggs, Cheeſe, and Fiſh, on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and eat nothing but Pulſe with Oyl, and a little Wine; to fall upon their knees Fifty times a day; to ſay a Hundred times Kyrie eleeſon, My God, I have ſinned, forgive my ſin, O Lord; to repeat the Sixth, Thirty ſixth, and Fiftieth Pſalms, until Chriſtmas-day; and to forbear, till that day, all Sacerdotal Function. Thus ended this Seſſion, with the uſual Acclamations.

In the Third Seſſion, which was held on the 11th of October, the Pope's Legates, the Deputies from the Eaſt, the Commiſſioners, and 23 Biſhops being met together, the Arch-biſhops of Ancyra and Nice, who had been Ordained by Ignatius and Methodius, and had favoured Photius, were Summoned to ſubſcribe unto the Form, in order to be Reſtored. But they declared, That having ſufficiently ſuffered for having formerly Subſcribed, whether to good or ill purpoſe, they were reſolved to Subſcribe onely to the Profeſſion of Faith they had Subſcribed unto when they were Ordained, and pray'd the Council to be ſatisfy'd with their Reſolution. After this, the Emperour's Letter to Pope Nicholas was read, wherein he ſignify'd unto him the Depoſing of Photius, and intreated him to let him know, how he ſhould deal with thoſe who had eſpouſed his Quarrel, or had been Ordained by him, expreſſing his deſire, That they ſhould be pardoned who came in firſt to Acknowledge their Fault. He gave him notice withall, that he ſent Deputies from Ignatius and Photius, with Baſilius one of his Gentlemen-Uſhers, that he may order Things in their Preſence as he ſhall think moſt expedient, or ſend them back with Commiſſioners from him, that he may know his clear Intention.

This Letter was followed by another from Ignatius to the ſame Pope; In which, having Extolled the Holy Apoſtolick See, and commended the Emperour's Zeal, he ſays, That he ſends him a Metropolitan and a Biſhop, to expreſs his Thankful Acknowledgment, to give him a faithful Account of all Paſſages, and know of him what Meaſures he muſt take in the preſent Juncture, concerning the Biſhops of Photius his Faction; Whom he divides into two Claſſes, viz. thoſe Ordained by himſelf, and thoſe Ordained by Photius. He puts amongſt theſe Paul Biſhop of Ceſarea in Cappadocia, who oppoſed him at firſt, but afterwards returned to his Duty. With this Letter was Read Pope Adrian's Anſwer, in which this Pope having promiſed Ignatius the Patriarch, that his Affection for him ſhall not fall ſhort of his Predeceſſor's, and praiſed God for his Reſtauration; he gives him, for a Standard, the Decree given by Pope Nicholas againſt Photius and Gregory; and, confirming the ſame, declares them Degraded of all Sacerdotal Offices, and not to be regarded as Biſhops, no more than Gregory and Photius, who took upon him a Power he had not; Gregorium Syracuſanum & Photium Tyrannum, & eos quos idem Photius in Gradu quolibet Ordinaſſe putatus eſt, ab Epiſcoporum numero, vel Dignitate, quam uſurpative ac fictè dedit, merito ſequeſtrantes. To prove Photius his Ordinations to be void, he gives theſe following Reaſons. Firſt, Becauſe Photius was like Maximus, and his Ordination, or rather Intruſion, in all points like unto his. Secondly, Becauſe Pope Nicholas his Predeceſſor had ſo Decreed it. Thirdly, Becauſe Photius being a Great Man, a Courtier, a Novice, an Intruder, an Adulterer, Excommunicated, having no lawful Power, could not conſequently confer it upon his Followers. A Maxim which he afterwards confirms, as owned by Photius, and thoſe of his Party. He therefore requires that the ſame Rigour be uſed, with relation to thoſe who had been Ordained by Photius, and even to Paul himſelf, who was recommended unto him by Ignatius, who (ſays he) muſt expect an everlaſting Reward for the Perſecution he had ſuffer'd, beſides the Temporal Rewards of the Church, and the Honour he has acquired by his Sufferings. As to thoſe who had been Ordained by Methodius, or Ignatius, he commends the Zeal of thoſe who had withſtood Photius, and ſuffer'd conſtantly for the Cauſe of Ignatius; but, for the reſt, who ſubmitted to Photius, either of their own accord, or by force, he declares, That, provided they come in, and Sign the Form he ſends by his Legates, they ought to be Pardon'd, and left in poſſeſſion of their Church-Dignities, notwithſtanding their Oppoſition againſt the Patriarchal Dignity, and the Holy Catholick See. Yet he declares withall, That thoſe who aſſiſted at the Illegal Council held at Conſtantinople againſt the Holy See, ſhould be incapable of Pardon, were not the Compaſſion of the Holy See invaded by them as great as their Demerit. He exhorts Ignatius to ſee the Articles drawn up at Rome againſt Photius and his Council Subſcribed unto. Laſtly, He commends John of Silea his Charity and Zeal for Ignatius. This Letter being read, was highly Commended by all the Biſhops, and ſo this Seſſion ended with the uſual Acclamations.

The Fourth Seſſion was held Octob. 13th. In which two Biſhops were Accuſed, Theophilus and Zachary by Name, who were both Ordained by Methodius, and continued obſtinate in Photius his Party. Theſe Biſhops being called into the Council, required that the other Biſhops that ſtood it out for Photius ſhould alſo be called in. There was ſome time a Debate upon the matter, whether or no they ſhould be admitted. But the Pope's Legates did at laſt conſent, That Three of them ſhould be called in in the Name of the reſt, to hear the Sentence paſſed againſt them. When they were to be called in, they had all withdrawn themſelves, except Theophilus and Zachary. Who being come before the Council, maintained, That Pope Nicholas had Communicated with them. The Legates convinced them of Falſhood, by Nicholas his Letters againſt Photius, which they cauſed to be read. Thomas and Elias made it appear likewiſe, That they had never owned Photius for a Patriarch. Which appearing undeniable, Theophilus and Zachary were preſſed upon to Subſcribe ſcribe to the Form againſt Photius. But they would not ſo much as hear of it, and ſo were turned out of the Council. This is the Sum of what paſſed in this Seſſion.

In the Fifth, held Octob. 20th, Paul, the Emperour's Charter-Keeper, had ordered Photius to be brought before the Council. Some Lay-men being ſent to know of him, Whether he was willing to appear? He anſwer'd, That he came not willingly, but was carry'd by force. The Biſhops however order'd, That he ſhould come in. He proteſted againſt it, refuſed to Anſwer the Queſtions made unto him, and would, by no means, acknowledge his Fault. Pope Nicholas his Letters, containing the Sentence paſſed againſt him, were Read, and the Deputy of the Church of Jeruſalem proteſted again, That the Patriarchs of the Eaſt had never owned him, exhorting him to do Penance. This done, the Pope's Legates declared him Excommunicated; and the Council did approve of it. He was exhorted to do Penance, and to acknowledge his Fault, there being no Refuge left for him, now that Rome and the Eaſt had declared againſt him. To which he Anſwer'd, That his Plea was not of this World. He was again warned to think ſeriouſly of his Caſe, and had time given him for it.

The Emperour himſelf was preſent at the Sixth Seſſion, which was held Octob. 25th. Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, made him a Compliment. After which a Memoir of the Pope's Legates was Read, containing the ſubſtance of what had paſſed againſt Photius. Then were called in the Biſhops Ordained by Photius, and Pope Nicholas his Letter to Michael the Emperour was Read. Upon which the Council told them, That they ought to forſake Photius, and ſubmit to their Judgment, who had declared his Ordinations void. They endeavour'd to defend Photius his Ordination, and their own, againſt the Decree of Pope Nicholas, by ſome Inſtances of Biſhops Condemned or Rejected by the Popes, who, notwithſtanding, were owned to be lawful. To which the Emperour himſelf gave this Anſwer; That thoſe Biſhops had been owned and defended by other Patriarchal Sees, whereas Photius was forſaken by all; that he pitied their Caſe, and exhorted them to ſubmit themſelves to the Mercy of the Council. The Pope's Legates told them, That if they would ſubſcribe to the Form, and doe Penance, they ſhould be received into the Church-Communion; and, at the ſame time, Anſwered to the Inſtances by them alledged, to ſhew, that the Pope's Deciſions concerning Condemned Perſons, had not been always followed. After this, the Emperour cauſed a long Exhortation to be Read, directed to thoſe who were of Photius his Faction, whereby they were exhorted to ſubmit themſelves, and had Seven days time to conſider of it.

The Seventh Seſſion was held Octob. 29th, in the Preſence of the Emperour. The Time allowed to Photius, to conſider what he would do, being elapſed, he was called in, with Gregory Biſhop of Syracuſe. Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, cauſed his Croſier to be taken away from him; and the reſt of them adviſed him to ſubſcribe unto the Form, that he might be received as a Lay-man, into the Church-Communion. In ſtead of returning them an Anſwer, he directed his Speech to the Emperour, wiſhed him a long Life, and declared he had no Anſwer to give to the Legates. Being asked by Bahanes, Whether he had any thing elſe to ſay? he anſwer'd, That Queſtion might have been ſpared, had they but minded what he had told them a few days ſince, and that he exhorted them to doe Penance themſelves. The Council was Incenſed at this Anſwer of Photius; whereupon the Biſhops Ordained by him, or who adhered ſtill to him, were immediately called in, and the Form brought from Rome offered unto them to ſet their hands to it. But all the Arguments which the Biſhops and the Emperour himſelf did make, to induce them to it, proved inſignificant. Pope Nicholas his Letter to the Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, and the Clergy of that City, containing the Sentence paſſed againſt Photius and his Adherers, was Read unto them; together with Adrian's Letters to the Emperour, to Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Acts of the Synod held at Rome, under that Pope againſt Photius, in the preſence of the Deputies ſent from Conſtantinople. Which Acts begin with three Diſcourſes of the Pope to the Council; the firſt containing a Compendious Hiſtory of the Intruſion and Attempts of Photius. In the ſecond, the Pope requires the Condemnation of the Acts of the pretended Council of Photius againſt the Holy See. And the third contains a Complaint of his Preſumption, in paſſing a Judgment againſt the Pope, whom he pretends to be liable to the Judgment of no Man, which he proves by the Inſtance of Symmachus: And, in anſwer to the Example of Honorius, who was Anathematiz'd by the Eaſtern Biſhops after his Death; he ſays, That he was Accuſed of Hereſy; for which cauſe onely 'tis lawful for Inferiours to reſiſt their Superiours, and forſake their Errours; and that neither the Patriarchs, or Biſhops, could have ſet up for his Judges, if the then Biſhop of Rome, as firſt Biſhop, had not himſelf conſented to it. To which he adds, That the Council of Epheſus had Cenſured and Condemned John of Antioch, for his attempting to paſs Judgment againſt S. Cyril Patriarch of Alexandria, whoſe See precedes that of Antioch. Which Maxim was approved of, and confirmed by this Council, praying the Pope to Pardon thoſe who ſhould acknowledge their Fault, and return to their Duty, and to regulate that Matter in the preſence of the Deputies ſent from Conſtantinople. Upon which the Pope declared, That all the Acts of the Council held by Photius againſt the Authority of the Holy See, ought to be utterly deſtroyed, and thrown into the fire; That all the Aſſemblies he held againſt Ignatius, ought likewiſe to be had in deteſtation; That he reiterates and confirms the Sentence paſſed againſt him by his Predeceſſor, yet willing to admit him, as a Lay-man, into the Church-Communion, if he will but conſent to all the proceedings of the Holy See againſt him, and condemn his own againſt his Predeceſſor; That he grants Communion to all ſuch as have given their Conſent or Approbation to that Council, provided they approve of what was done by the Holy See. And, whereas the Name of Baſilius the Emperour is put into the Acts, he declares, That it was falſly put in, being aſſured, that Prince had always had a great Reſpect for the Holy See; For which reaſon he declares him a moſt Orthodox and Religious Prince. Laſtly, That he Excommunicates all Perſons that ſhall in time to come adhere to, or approve of the Acts of that Council, and that ſhall not approve of the Decrees of the Holy See. Which Judgment was Signed by more than Thirty Biſhops of Italy. Nine Cardinal-Prieſts, the Arch-Deacon of Rome, and Four Deacons.

Theſe Acts of the Roman Synod being Read over in the Council of Conſtantinople, Nicetas ſaid, That, ſeeing Photius refuſed to ſubmit, he thought it fit that the Excommunication pronounced againſt him ſhould be Reiterated. Ignatius the Patriarch having made a Speech thereupon to the Council, Stephen, Deacon and Notary, pronounced ſeveral times the Anathema againſt Photius, and made ſeveral Acclamations to the Proſperity of the Emperour, the Empreſs, the Pope, and the Patriarchs Deputies.

The Eighth Seſſion was held upon the 8th day of November; the Acts of the Council of Photius againſt Pope Nicholas being firſt burnt by the Emperour's Order. There appeared Three Perſons bearing ſuch Names as Photius had given to the pretended Deputies from the Pope and the Patriarchs. Who declared, That they had not ſubſcribed to thoſe Acts, and knew not what they were about. Being preſſed to pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe that had ſubſcribed thereunto, they did it. This done, one Theodorus Erithimius, an Iconoclaſt, being ſummoned to appear at the Council, was called in. The Emperour preſſing him to own the Lawfulneſs of Image-worſhip, to convince him thereof, asked him, Whether he honoured his Image upon a Medal? He proteſted, That he had for it all the Reſpect and Veneration which he ought to have. If then, ſaid the Emperour, you reſpect the Image of a Mortal Man, much more ought you to honour the Image of Chriſt, of the Virgin, and the Saints. Theodorus being puzled with this Objection, deſired Time, but he was preſſed to declare. The Decree of Pope Nicholas, relating to Images, was read to him, yet he refuſed to yield. Three others, Iconoclaſts, acknowledged their Error, and pronounced an Anathema againſt all ſuch perſons as ſhould refuſe to honour Images. Theodorus, and all other Iconoclaſts, were Anathematized by the Council, which repeated again their Excommunication againſt Photius and Gregory. And ſo ended this Seſſion, with the uſual Acclamations.

The Ninth Seſſion was held Feb. 12th, in the year following. There was admitted a Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, who brought a Credential Letter from him to the Emperour; in which he ſignify'd, that he could not give his Judgment in the Difference betwixt the two Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, becauſe by reaſon of his Remoteneſs he had no certain Information of it; that the Biſhops, and other Clergy-men, under that Patriarchate, were the more proper Judges; that there was formerly two Patriarchs of Alexandria, when Narciſſus having withdrawn himſelf into the Wilderneſs, another Patriarch was Ordained in his place; that Narciſſus being returned, he Ruled ſome time with him, after whoſe Deceaſe, Alexander, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, was choſen to Govern together with Narciſſus the Church of Alexandria. After the reading of this Letter, this Deputy (named Joſeph) was admitted as Vicar of the Patriarch of Alexandria; and was asked, Whether he was informed of what related to the Ordination of Ignatius, and the Depoſition of Photius? His Anſwer was, That he was not onely informed of the Matter, but had himſelf examined all paſſages relating to it, and approved of the ſame; and, to aſſure the Council of it, he tendered a Writing, which was read in full Council; whereby he formally declared his Opinion in the Thing. Next, the Witneſſes were called in, who had appeared againſt Ignatius in the Synod held before Zachary and Radoaldus. One of them, called Theodorus, was examined firſt of all; who confeſſed, That he had been forced by an expreſs Order of Michael the Emperour, to Swear falſly, and to Depoſe againſt the Ordination of Ignatius; that he had confeſſed his Fault to an Abbot, who had therefore impoſed upon him a Penance, which he had performed. But, being asked, Whether the Party who had laid that Penance upon him was a Prieſt, or not? he anſwer'd, He knew nothing on't; but that he was an Abbot, and had great confidence in him. In ſhort, he owned this Council to be Lawful. Another Witneſs, named Leo, did alſo averr, That he had Falſly Depoſed againſt the Ordination of Ignatius. Being asked, Whether he had done Penance for his Fault? he anſwered, He had not; but, if any were laid upon him, he would ſubmit to it: Declaring, That he owned this Council to be Lawful. But being asked, Whether he did Anathematize Photius, and all thoſe againſt whom the Council had pronounced an Anathema: Who am I (ſays he) to pronounce an Anathema? This is onely done, adds he, in caſe of Hereſie, whereas Photius is Orthodox. Wherefore, ſays he, ſhould I then Anathematize him? The Patriarchs Legates anſwer'd, That his Actions were worſe than Hereſie it ſelf. Upon which Leo did Anathematize him, and all thoſe whom the Council had Anathematiz'd, when he ſaw that it might be done for other cauſes than Hereſie. Eleven Witneſſes more were Examin'd, who all confeſſed, They had been compelled to bear Falſe Witneſs againſt Ignatius. Some of them had done Penance for it, and thoſe who had not, received it from the Council. As to the other Falſe Witneſſes then abſent, they had a General Penance laid upon them, To be Two years out of the Church, two years with the Hearers without receiving the Communion, and to abſtain from Fleſh and Wine during theſe four years, except Sundays and Holy-days; to ſtand up Three years with the Faithful, performing three times a Week the like Abſtinence; and were declared Excommunicated, unleſs they came to acknowledge their Fault, Faults, and submit to that Penance. 'Tis true, the Council left it to Ignatius the Patriarch, to moderate, as he should think fit, the Rigour of the Penance.

After this another Business was brought in before the Council, relating to some Officers of Michael the Emperour, who had took upon them to wear the Sacerdotal Habit, and to perform the Office of a Priest; one named Theophilus, the Emperour's Master of the Horse, having laid the Gospels upon their heads, and said Prayers in derision of Ordination. Theophilus was dead; but three of those Officers were found guilty of this Sacrilege. Who being brought before the Council, the Patriarchs Legates obliged them to confess their Crime, the Enormity whereof they exposed unto them; and they freely submitted to what Penance should be laid upon them. Lastly, The false Deputies of the Patriarchs, whose Names Photius had put in the Acts of his Council, were examined before the Deputy of the Patriarch of Alexandria.

In the Tenth Session, at which assisted both the Emperours; the last day of February, the Canons were read that were to be Authorized by this Council.

The First confirms the Canons and Rules set down by the Apostles, by the general and particular Councils, and by the Holy Fathers and Doctors of the Church.

The Second exacts a due Observation and Execution of what had been Decreed by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, upon pain of Deposition of Clerks, Delinquents, and Excommunication of Lay-men.

The Third requires the same Adoration to our Saviour's Image, as to the Book of the Gospels; because, as our Salvation is to be obtained by the words contained in that Holy Book; so in Images, we learn by the Features and Colours, what the Scripture Teaches by the Letters; and therefore they ought to be honoured according to ancient Tradition, with Worship relating to the Original; and as we honour the Gospel, and the Figure of the Cross, so ought we to honour the Virgin Mary's, and the Saints Images. This Canon ends with an Anathema against such as shall not do it.

In the Fourth Canon, the Council condemns Photius, and declares, That he never was a Bishop; That those Ordained, or raised to any Church-Dignity by him, shall be degraded; that the Churches Consecrated by him, or those whom he had Ordained, shall be Consecrated anew; and that all the former Acts of his Sacerdotal Functions shall be null.

By the Fifth, 'tis prohibited to ordain a Man, who leaves the World and turns Monk, in order to become a Bishop, or Patriarch, though he has continued some considerable time in each degree of the Orders. And as to those who left the Secular Life without any such Ambition, it is Ordained, that none shall be raised to that Dignity, till they have been Readers the space of one year, Sub-Deacons two years, Deacons three, and Priests four years. A Time not requisite to observe, in respect of those that have been, from the very first, Clerks or Monks.

The Sixth pronounces an Anathema against Photius, for having Intruded False Deputies, and against all those who shall hereafter Impose thus upon the Publick.

By the Seventh, it is prohibited to suffer any Person, condemned by this Council, to Paint Images, or Teach in the Churches.

The Eighth contains a Prohibition to the Patriarch of Constantinople, to exact Declaratory Subscriptions from Bishops, that they shall own him for their Patriarch.

By the Ninth it is determined, That those who have thus Subscribed for Photius, are not bound to stand to it.

By the Tenth it is prohibited to separate from the Patriarch's Communion, or to refuse to Name him in the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, before he has been Condemned in a Council, how conspicuous soever be his Crimes. Which extends likewise to Bishops, in relation to their Metropolitans, as it does to these in relation to their Patriarch.

The Eleventh pronounces an Anathema against such as hold, That Man has Two Souls.

The Twelfth doth injoyn the Deposition of Bishops, that shall prove to have been chosen by the Intrigues or Violence of Princes.

By the Thirteenth 'tis Order'd, That the Principal Dignities of the Church of Constantinople shall be conferred upon such Clerks of that Church, as have served in lesser Offices, and not to Strangers, or Persons having Secular Imployments.

The Fourteenth provides for the honour of Episcopacy, by enjoyning the Bishops not to meet Great Men and Princes at a distance from their Churches, or to Light when they meet them, or to Prostrate themselves before them.

The Fifteenth prohibits all Bishops, upon pain of being Deposed, to Sell, or Alienate what belongs to their Churches, and pronounces an Anathema against the Purchasers or Retainers thereof. If a Bishop erects a Monastery out of his Church-Revenues, he ought to leave it to the Church. But, if it be out of his own Revenues, he may dispose of it; provided nevertheless, that it shall not become a place of Habitation for Lay-men.

The Sixteenth is to prevent the Impiety of such as take upon them, in Derision, the Priestly Habit. Which Sacrilege is strictly forbidden by this Council, enjoyning, That if any Emperour, or Prince, should attempt for the future to do any such Thing, he shall be therefore liable to a Penance, and Anathematized, if he refuse to submit to it; And if the Patriarch of Constantinople, or his Suffragan Bishops, should wink at it, they shall be Deposed; And that all those who shall prove to have been any ways Inſtrumental in ſuch an Impiety, ſhall do Penance, and be excluded during the ſpace of Three years, from the Communion of the Church, viz. one year in each degree of publick Penance.

The Seventeenth renewing the Sixth Canon of the Nicene Council, concerning the Rights and Prerogatives of the Patriarchs, declares, That both at Rome, and in the Patriarchates of Antioch and Jeruſalem, the Patriarchs ſhall be Impowered to Summon to their Councils all the Metropolitans whom they Ordain, or Confirm, by giving them the Pallium, and likewiſe to Reprove and Correct them. That it ſhall be no lawful Excuſe for the Metropolitans to alledge, That their Princes will not give them leave to go out of their Dominions, or that they are bound to hold a Synod twice a year, becauſe they ought to perform the Good of a Whole Dioceſs, that is, of ſeveral Provinces, procured by a Patriarchal Synod before that of one Province. That it is needleſs for Princes to be preſent at thoſe Synods, becauſe it does not appear, that they have aſſiſted at any but General Councils. It is therefore ordered by this Council, That the Metropolitans which are Summoned by their Patriarch, and ſhall not appear Two Months after his Summons, ſhall be Excluded from Church-Communion, and Depoſed, in caſe they continue a whole year in their Obſtinacy.

The Eighteenth doth pronounce an Anathema againſt all thoſe that ſhall take away from any Church her Rights or Privileges, obtained by the Grant of Princes, or enjoy'd during Thirty years.

The Nineteenth prohibits all Metropolitans to remove from their own into other Dioceſſes, abuſing their Authority, to conſume the Revenues of the Churches of their Suffragan Biſhops. Yet it enjoyns, That Hoſpitality ſhall be uſed towards them, when they ſhall be obliged to go through any Dioceſs; but that they ſhall be provided only of ſuch Things as ſhall be found there; that they ſhall proceed on their Way, without making any long ſtay, or exacting any thing, either from the Biſhop, or Church. For, if all Biſhops be bound to uſe their Revenues with Parſimony, and not ſpend them for their own uſe: How great is their Fault, who improveriſh, or burden the Churches of other Biſhops?

The Twentieth enjoyns, That thoſe who are in poſſeſſion of Church-Lands, paying Rent for the ſame, ſhall not be turned out by force, and without a due Courſe of Law, for want of Payment, but ſhall be ſummon'd; and, if in Three years time they pay not what they owe, application ſhall be made to the Judges, that by vertue of a Judgment, the Church may be put into poſſeſſion of her Land.

The One and twentieth declares, That all due Reſpect muſt be ſhewed to Patriarchs, and all Attempts to turn them out of their Sees are unlawful; That the Pope of Old Rome ought to be Honoured and Reſpected in the firſt place, and next to him the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antioch and Jeruſalem. That none ought to attempt to Write againſt the Pope, under pretence of ſome Crimes, which they falſely impute to him, as Photius, and, before him, Dioſcorus, have done; that all thoſe, who, in imitation of them, ſhall caſt any Obloquy, by word of Mouth, or in Writing, againſt St. Peter's Holy See, the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſhall be Condemned, as thoſe two Hereticks are; and that if any Prince attempt to Depoſe him, he ſhall be Excommunicated. But if a General-Council being met, there happens any Difference with the Biſhop of Rome, he ought to be conferred with about the Matter, and his Anſwers be had, to make the beſt of it on either ſide, and no raſh Judgment to be paſſed againſt the Supream Biſhop.

By the Two and twentieth it is ordered, That Princes and Great Men ſhall have no hand in the Election of Patriarchs, Metropolitans, or Biſhops, but ſhall receive him whom the Biſhops have Choſen. Yet if any Lay-man be invited to joyn his Aſſiſtance in the Election, he may lawfully do it.

The Three and twentieth charges the Biſhops not to give away what belongs to other Churches; nor to Ordain thoſe Men Prieſts or Clerks in Churches, that have no Dependency upon them, nor to perform their Functions in any other Dioceſs, without the leave of the Biſhop of the Place.

The Four and twentieth is againſt the Metropolitans, that ſend for their Suffragan Biſhops to perform their Functions, while they are taken up with Secular Imploys. The Patriarch is ordered to puniſh them; and, if they perſiſt in their Delinquency, to Depoſe them.

The Five and twentieth declares, That all Biſhops and Prieſts, Deacons and Sub-Deacons, Ordained by Ignatius, or Methodius, who ſtill adhere to Photius, ſhall be Depoſed, and made Incapable for ever of all Sacerdotal Functions; but, if they Repent hereafter, they ſhall be received into the Church-Communion, but not reſtored to their Dignity.

The Six and twentieth allows the Freedom to any Prieſt or Deacon, Depoſed by his Biſhop, to Appeal to his Metropolitan, who ſhall ſend for the Biſhop, and Examine the Clerks Caſe in a Synod, in order to confirm or annul the Judgment given againſt him. It gives likewiſe to Biſhops, Judged by their Metropolitans, the liberty of a Recourſe to the Patriarcha, as the Judge of the Cauſes of the Metropolitans within his Patriarchate; and excludes both the Provincial Biſhops and the Neighbouring Metropolitans, from taking any cogniſance thereof.

The Seven and twentieth, being the laſt of all, enjoyns all Biſhops to make uſe of their Pallium at proper Times and Places; and not to abuſe it through pride or ambition, by wearing it at all Times, and uſing it in all their Functions; and that all ſuch as have been Monks ſhall keep ſome Marks of their Profeſſion.

These Canons being read, the Legates proposed, That the Definition of the Council should be Read, which contained a Confession of Faith, or a Symbol of a pretty large extent; an Acknowledgment of the Seven first General Councils; the Condemnation of some Hereticks therein condemned; the Condemnation of Photius, and the Approbation of what had been Enacted in this Council. This Definition being unanimously approved of by all the Bishops, the Emperour Asked, Whether any one amongst them had any thing to say against the Canons and Decrees of this Eighth General Council, because whoever should oppose them, after the breaking up of the Assembly, should be condemned to Banishment. At the same time he exhorted the Bishops to give wholsome Instructions to their Flocks, and all Clergy-men to keep Peace amongst them, and not to depart from the Council's Decisions. The Lay-men he charged to forbear Disputing about Church-Matters, the Cognizance whereof belongs to the Patriarchs, Bishops, and Doctors of the Church. Which Exhortations were approved of by all the Bishops. Lastly, The Pope's Legates proposed, That the Acts of this Council should be Subscribed unto, and Invited the Emperours to do it in the first place. But Basilius answer'd, That he ought not to Subscribe, but after the Bishops, in Imitation of Constantine; yet, seeing they did him that Honour, he was willing to Sign next to the Deputies of the Patriarchs. So Donatus Bishop of Ostia Signed first; next to him the other Deputies from Rome, then the Deputies of Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Constantinople; and next to these the Emperours Basilius, Constantine, and Leo; and, lastly, all the Bishops, every one according to his Rank. Five several Copies were Subscribed unto. The Officers and Noblemen who had assisted at this Council, declared their Abhorrency of all the Actings of Photius against Pope Nicholas and Ignatius the Patriarch; and that they freely submitted to the Decisions of the Council. Which was accordingly Recorded by the Registers; and so the Council broke up, with the usual Acclamations.

The Pope's Legates did not Subscribe, till after a Review made of all the Acts, by Anastasius the Library-Keeper, who was well-skilled in the Greek Tongue; Who, having observed, that the Commendations given in Pope Adrian's Letter, to the Emperour of the West, were razed out, they made a Scruple to Subscribe, and complained of it. The Greeks, unwilling to own the Emperour of the West, refused to have them Inserted; and, to palliate the Matter, alledged, That in a Council, God's Praise onely, not the Commendations of Princes, ought to be mentioned. A Pretence not very taking from Persons that continually repeated their Acclamations in Honour of the Emperours. This Debate however obliged the Legates, fearful to do any Thing that might displease the Pope, to Subscribe, with this Restriction, that they gave their Consent to the Acts of this Council.

The Council afterwards caused Circular Letters to be drawn, to Acquaint the whole World with the Condemnation of Photius, and the Restauration of Ignatius. One was particularly directed to Pope Adrian, full of Thanks and Approbation of the whole Proceedings of the Holy See in this Matter. The Emperours Writ likewise Two Letters about this Council; one to the Patriarchs, to let them know the Success of their Meeting; and the other to the Pope, full of Thanks and Commendations.

Ignatius the Patriarch Writ in particular a Letter to Pope Adrian, wherein he prays him to Consent, That the Readers Ordained by Photius might be admitted into Holy Orders, and desired favour for Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, and for Theodotus Metropolitan of Caria.

The Council being ended, some Bishops of the Patriarchate of Constantinople went to wait on the Emperour, and complained, The Church of Constantinople was made too much subject to the Church of Rome; adding, That the Uncertainty that was observed in the Legates Subscriptions, might give occasion to alter what was passed, and that they could not recover their Liberty, if they did not recover the Forms they were fain to subscribe unto. Whereupon those Forms were taken out of the hands of those to whom the Legates had committed the care of them; and they found it exceeding difficult to recover them, though they made use of the Interest of the Ambassadours of the Western Empire, who pressed it so hard upon the Emperour, that he found himself obliged to get them returned into their hands. Three days after this, the Emperour sent for the Pope's Legates into a place where Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were met together. An Envoy of Bulgaria, Peter by Name, was called in; who acquainted the Assembly, That the Prince of Bulgaria was very joyful to learn, that they had met in Council for the good of the Church; and, that he Thanked the Legates of the Holy See of Rome for having Writ to him in their Way hither. After these Compliments, he asked the Patriarchs Vicars, in the Name of the Bulgarians, What Church they must be subject to? To which the Pope's Legates answer'd immediately, That the Bulgarians had been first Instructed in the Christian Faith by the Church of Rome, which had sent unto them Bishops, and Priests, according to their desire. The Envoy owned, That it was true, the Bulgarians had first apply'd themselves to the Church of Rome, which they had owned hitherto; but that this was the Time to decide with the Patriarchs Legates, to which of the Two Churches it was most reasonable they should submit themselves, the Church of Rome, or that of Constantinople. The Pope's Legates answer'd, They had made an end of those Things they were sent for; and that they could not regulate any Thing farther, or consent to any Regulation prejudicial to the Church of Rome, concerning such Matters as they had no power to Treat of: But, the whole Countrey of Bulgaria being full of Latin-Priests, their Opinion was, That they ought to submit themselves to no Church but that of Rome.

Contestations upon Bulgaria.

The

The Deputies of the Patriarchs of the Eaſt asked the Bulgarians, Whoſe Country Bulgaria was, when Conquer'd by them? Whether they had, at that time, Greek or Latin Prieſts? To which they anſwer'd, That they Conquer'd it from the Greeks, amongſt whom they found Greek Biſhops. Whence the Patriarchs Deputies inferred, That thoſe Biſhops were Ordained by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. But it was reply'd by the Pope's Legates, That, though they were Greeks, it did not follow, that they were Ordained by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; that the Difference between Lay-men did not make any confuſion in the Eccleſiaſtical Order; and that the Latin Church had Greeks in ſeveral places who were ſubject to her. The Deputies of the Patriarchs retorted, They cou'd not deny but that Bulgaria was a Member of the Greek Empire, which the Legates granted; but affirmed withall, That the Diviſion of the Church does not agree therein with that of the Empire. Being asked, Upon what they grounded the Right of the Church of Rome, They anſwer'd, Firſt, That it was plain by the Decretals of the Biſhops of Rome, that the Two Epyrus's, Theſſaly and Dardania, to which the Bulgarians gave the Name of Bulgaria, had formerly belonged to the Church of Rome. Secondly, That the Bulgarians had voluntarily ſubmitted themſelves to the Holy See. Thirdly, That the Holy See had ſent unto them Latin Prieſts and Biſhops, and that they had yet actually a Latin Biſhop. That the Right of the Church of Rome being ſo well grounded, and her Poſſeſſion ſo long, ſhe ought not to be deprived of it. The Deputies of the Patriarchs asked them, Upon which of thoſe Pretences they grounded themſelves. To which they anſwer'd, They did not own them for Judges, who were under the Holy See, and that they had no power to Treat of this Matter. Notwithſtanding which Proteſtation, the Deputies of the Patriarchs made this Deciſion; That it was unreaſonable for the Romans, who diſowned the Greek Empire, and were Confederated with the French, to pretend to a Right of Ordination in their Emperour's Dominions; and therefore their Judgment was, That that part of Bulgaria which formerly belonged to the Empire, and had received Greek Prieſts and Biſhops, ſhould be reſtored to the Church of Conſtantinople. The Pope's Legates on the other ſide declared, That they made void that pretended Judgment given by the Deputies of the Eaſt, and Conjured Ignatius the Patriarch to forbear ſending Prieſts or Biſhops into Bulgaria; and preſented to him, at the ſame time, a Letter from Pope Adrian upon that Subject. Which being read by Ignatius, not without ſome reluctancy, he anſwer'd in general terms, That he would not ingage himſelf in that Affair.

The Pope's Legates taken by the Sclavonians.

The Emperour, although he was provoked by the Oppoſition of the Pope's Legates, concealed, for ſome time, his Reſentment. Having treated them ſumptuouſly, he diſmiſſed them with Rich Preſents; but took no care to provide for their Safety, and ſent them away without a Convoy. So that they were intercepted by the Sclavonians, who ſeized upon all they had, and (amongſt other Things) of the Authentick Acts of the Council. In ſhort, they were very ill treated, and kept ſome time in Captivity: But, being at laſt releaſed, upon preſſing Letters from the Pope, and the Weſtern Emperour, they returned to Rome at the latter end of the year. They gave the Pope an account of their Voyage, and deliver'd unto him Ignatius his Letter, and ſome Writings they had recover'd from the Bulgarians, with thoſe they had put into the hands of Sippo, Miniſter of State, and Anaſtaſius the Library-keeper, which fell not into the ſame danger, but preſerved, and brought the Acts of the Council intire to Rome.

Pope Adrian's Letter.

Pope Adrian was very well pleaſed with the Tranſactions of the late Council, but no leſs diſſatisfied with what had paſſed ſince, as he expreſſed it in the Letter he Writ to the Emperour, dated Nov. 10. 871. In which, having praiſed their Piety and Zeal, he makes great complaints of their neglect of his Legates, as to their ſafety, being left, without a Convoy, to the Mercy of Barbarians, by whom they were ſtript, made Captives, and very ill uſed. But that which touches him moſt to the quick, is the buſineſs of Bulgaria, complaining of the Attempt made to extort it from the Juriſdiction of the Holy See, and that Ignatius has had the confidence to Ordain a Biſhop, in order to ſend him thither. To which he adds, That, if they continue in that Reſolution, he muſt vindicate his Right, and make void the Ordination of all ſuch as ſhall perform any Epiſcopal or Eccleſiaſtick Functions in that Countrey by the Miſſion of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. As to Ignatius his Requeſts to him, he declares, That he cannot alter any thing in that Matter, nor derogate from the Ordinances of his Predeceſſors, or the Council; for, it was not the practice of the Popes to abuſe (according to their Fancy) the Decrees of their Fathers, as did ſome Greeks, who uſed the Pope's Decrees as long as they favoured their Deſigns, but laid them aſide, when they found them contrary.

New Troubles upon the account of Bulgaria.

This however hindred not the Greeks from taking poſſeſſion of Bulgaria, and turning out of it the Latin Prieſts and Biſhops. But the Popes did not loſe all hopes to recover it. In order to which, John VIII. next Succeſſor to Adrian, ſent in the year 878. Two Legates to Conſtantinople. viz. Peter and Eugenius; the firſt, Biſhop of Ancona, this of Oſtia. The pretence was, To bring the Church of Conſtantinople into a peaceable temper, then ſtill divided by the Faction of Photius. But he charged them to go to the Prince of Bulgaria, and Writ, at the ſame time, a very poſitive Letter to Ignatius the Patriarch, the ſubſtance of which was, That he now warned him the Third time to yield up Bulgaria to the Holy See of Rome, and Thirty days after the Receipt of this Letter, to call from thence all Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Eccleſiaſticks by him Ordained. If not, he would Exclude him from the Communion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as long as he perſiſted to keep that Countrey under his Juriſdiction; and, if he continued in his Obſtinacy, he would declare him Deprived and Fallen from the Patriarchal Dignity, wherein he had been kept by the Favour of the Holy See. At the ſame time the Pope Writ Two Letters to Michael King of the Bulgarians.

Bulgarians, Exhorting him to ſubmit to the Church of Rome; and required of Count Peter, that he would uſe his utmoſt endeavours to perſwade that Prince to it. Laſtly, He commanded all Greek Prieſts, and Biſhops, then in Bulgaria, to withdraw themſelves within the ſpace of Thirty days, declaring them Deprived of their Functions, if they refuſed to do it within that Time.

Photius, relying upon this Diviſion between the Pope and Ignatius, attempted his Reſtauration; and, having by his Artifices procured the Emperour's Favour, with the Aſſiſtance of Theodorus Santarabenus, he returned to Conſtantinople, Ignatius yet living. 'Tis ſaid, This Patriarch offer'd him to Write in his behalf to all the Biſhops under his Patriarchate, and procure, that he ſhould have his Abſolution, provided, he would forbear all Sacerdotal Functions; but Photius refuſed it, being reſolved to attempt his Reſtauration to the Patriarchal Dignity. Thus, in ſtead of Reconciling himſelf with Ignatius, he Declared againſt him, and Ordained in Magnaurus his Palace, Ignatius yet living. But this Patriarch dying, Octob. 23d. 878. Photius went into St. Sophia's Church with Armed Men; forcing a great many Biſhops, Clerks and Monks, to Communicate with him, and to own him as their Patriarch; Depoſing, and Perſecuting all that refuſed; turning out all that had been Ordained by Ignatius, and reſtoring them to their reſpective Stations, after he had Re-ordained them. At the ſame time he took care to confer the principal Dignities of the Church upon his own Creatures. And, to prevent all Oppoſition on the Papal ſide, with Threats and Preſents he prevailed with the Two Legates, to tell publickly, both the Clergy and People, That they were come to Depoſe Ignatius, and to declare Photius their Patriarch.

Photius returns into Conſtantinople, and is reſtored.

To bring the Holy See to conſent to Photius's Reſtauration, Baſilius the Emperour ſent Ambaſſadours to Pope John the VIII, to deſire of him, That he would receive Photius into his Communion, and own him as Patriarch. Three Monks were alſo ſent to deſire the ſame Thing, in the Name of the Patriarch of Jeruſalem; and Photius ſent Theodorus Santarabenus, to bring about this Accommodation. Who were all well received, and had a favourable Audience from the Pope. The Eaſtern Emperour, whoſe Forces began then to be conſiderable in Italy, promiſed him to ſecure the Coaſt of Campania from the Irruptions of the Saracens, and to yield him up Bulgaria. To juſtifie the Reſtauration of Photius, the Neceſſity of it was urged, for the good of the Peace, and the Re-union of Mens Minds. To which his Partiſans added, That Ignatius himſelf was for it; and a Paper was produced, under his Name, whereby he deſired the Pope's Conſent to it.

Pope John the VIII. gives his Conſent to Photius his Reſtauration.

The Pope, in Anſwer to the Emperour, ſent him word, That Ignatius of happy Memory being dead, he conſented, by reaſon of the preſent Neceſſity, and for the good of the Peace, that Photius ſhould be owned as Patriarch, provided that he gave Satisfaction, and begged pardon before a Council; That he declared him Abſolved, with all the Church-men of his Party, from all Cenſures and Condemnations againſt them; and that he thought it convenient, to have him Reinſtated in the See of Conſtantinople; but that he expected, no Lay-man or Courtier ſhould, for the future, be raiſed to the Patriarchal Dignity of Conſtantinople; and that Cardinal-Prieſts, or Deacons of that Church, ſhould be choſen for that See. To which he added, That he granted this, but on condition that Bulgaria ſhould be Reſigned up to him, and that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſhould make no Claim to it. Laſtly, He exhorted the Emperour to own, and bear reſpect to the Patriarch, and to endeavour the Re-union of the Biſhops, and the whole Clergy with Photius; Declaring all thoſe Excommunicated, That ſhould refuſe to hold Communion with him, after Three ſeveral Notices. This Letter, bearing date the 16th of Auguſt, 879, was carried by one Peter, a Prieſt, who was ſent to Conſtantinople, with the Deputies come from thence. He had alſo, under his Care, a private Letter to Photius, wherein the Pope expreſſed unto him, the Joy he received by the Re-union and Peace of the Church of Conſtantinople, and his conſent to his Reſtauration, provided that he begged Pardon in a Synod, and reſtored Bulgaria to the Holy See. Other Letters he was charged with, one directed to the Clergy of Conſtantinople; another to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, upon the ſame ſubject; and a Third, directed to thoſe who ſhould refuſe to hold Communion with Photius, wherein he warned them to acknowledge him as their Patriarch; if not, that he had charged his Legate to Excommunicate them.

He Writ in particular to the Two Legates he had ſent to Conſtantinople, and let them know he was not ſatisfy'd with their raſh Approving of Photius, without his Order or Knowledge; that however he joyned unto them Peter, Cardinal-Prieſt, that they might labour together for the Peace of the Church, according to the Letters and Inſtructions he had given him. By which Inſtructions, they were to make their firſt Viſit to the Emperour, and deliver him the Letter they had for him; the next day to viſit Photius, and give him his Letter, with Salutations from him, and a Declaration of the Command they had received from him, to own him, for Peace-ſake, as Patriarch, and to make all the Churches own him, provided he received all thoſe that ſhould be willing to hold Communion with him, though his Adverſaries before. That a Council ſhould be called, in which they ſhould preſide with the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, and wherein ſhould be preſent the Metropolitans and Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople. In it he order'd, That there ſhould be Read his Letter to the Emperour, and the Biſhops be asked, Whether they approved of it; which done, they ſhould declare, That the Holy Father having the Care of all the Churches, and being deſirous to procure Peace amongſt them, had ſent them thither to make up their Breaches, to Reconcile thoſe that were at Variance, and Raiſe up them that are Fallen; That they might all with one accord Glorifie the Father, the Son, and the the Holy Ghoſt. Then they were to propoſe the following Canons, viz. That after Photius his Deceaſe, no Lay-man ſhould be raiſed to the Patriarchal Dignity; that Photius ſhould ſend no Pallium into Bulgaria, nor make any Ordination there. 'Tis very probable, the Pope had enjoyned Photius to beg pardon of the Council, as is mention'd in the Pope's true Letters. But this Article is not found in the Memoir which we have onely from Photius, nor in the Letters of Pope John the VIII, which he cauſed to be Read in the Council, and out of which he had razed this Article with ſome others, as he had added unto it an Article againſt the Eighth Council, to be found alſo in this Memoir, falſify'd by Photius in the like manner. All this was done by the Pope in a Synod held at Rome, conſiſting of 17 Biſhops of Italy, 4 Cardinal-Prieſts, and Two Deacons, whoſe hands are to be found at the end of this Memoir.

The Council Confirms the Reſtauration of Photius.

Peter being arrived at Conſtantinople in 879, Photius ſummon'd thither a full Council, to which he gave the Name of the VIII. Oecumenical Council; which, by his Account, conſiſted of 383 Biſhops. The firſt thing he declared, at the Opening of the Aſſembly, was, That Pope John the VIII. had received him into his Communion; firſt, by his Two firſt Legates, Paul and Eugenius; next by Peter the Prieſt, whom he had ſent purpoſely for it. Whereupon John, Biſhop of Heraclea, complained, That the Church of Rome had occaſioned all the Troubles befallen to the Church of Conſtantinople, blaming the Conduct of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and exalting that of John the VIII.

In the Second Seſſion, held the 16th of November, the Pope's Letters to the Emperour and to Photius were read. But ſo falſify'd, that what concerned Ignatius was razed out, as were alſo the Injunction to Photius, to beg pardon before the Council, ſome advantageous Expreſſions about the Holy See, and what related to the Reſtitution of Bulgaria. Which was ſupply'd with high Commendations of the Emperour and Photius, and the Condemnation of the Eighth Council. Theſe Letters being read, Photius extolled his kindneſs which he pretended himſelf to have to Ignatius the Patriarch, and promiſed that he would honour his Memory. After this, a Letter from Michael the Patriarch of Antioch, upon this ſubject, was read; wherein he required alſo the Condemnation of the Eighth Council. Then was called in Thomas, Arch-biſhop of Ceſarea, the onely Deputy from the Eaſt, that had Aſſiſted at the Eighth Council. Photius cauſed him to Renounce what he had both ſaid and done in that Council. The Letters from the Patriarchs of Jeruſalem and Antioch to Photius, were likewiſe read; wherein they gave him very high Commendations, and owned him as Patriarch. This Seſſion ended with the reading of a Letter from Abramius Arch-biſhop of Amydus, who Writ very ſharply againſt the Eighth Council.

In the Third Seſſion, held Nov. the 18th, the Letters from Pope John the VIII. to the Church of Conſtantinople, to the Biſhops of that Patriarchate, and to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, were read. In which, expreſſing his deſire to procure the peace of their Church, the Biſhops of that Patriarchate declared thereupon, that they had Peace amongſt them, before the coming of that Letter; and ſome mention being made of Bulgaria, they judged it reaſonable that Affair ſhould be referred to the Emperour, the Bounds of the Empire being concerned therein. A Letter from the Patriarch of Jeruſalem to the Emperour was likewiſe read, wherein having deplored the Miſeries and Calamities of his Church, he prayed that Prince to aſſiſt it with his Princely Charity. Laſtly, The Pope's Inſtructions to his Legates, an Abſtract whereof we have already made, came alſo to be read.

In the Fourth Seſſion there appeared a Deputy from the Patriarch of Antioch, who brought ſome Letters from that Patriarch, and that of Jeruſalem, both Written in the behalf of Photius. Wherein they declared, That the Deputies, who had aſſiſted at the Eighth Council, in the Name of their reſpective Churches, had been ſent by the Saracens. Theſe Letters being read, the Noble-men came in who had aſſiſted at the ſaid Council, and expreſſed their ſorrow for what they had done, being (as they pretended) impoſed upon by the falſe Deputies of the Patriarchs. Five Articles were read, which were propoſed in the Name of the Pope's Legates. The firſt, about the reſtitution of Bulgaria to the See of Rome; The ſecond, that for the future no Lay-man ſhould be elected Patriarch of Conſtantinople; The third, that no Clerk of another Church ſhould be choſen; The fourth, to abrogate the Council held againſt Photius; And the fifth, that thoſe ſhould be Excommunicated who refuſed to hold Communion with Photius. All which Articles, except the firſt about Bulgaria, were approved of by the Council.

In the Fifth Seſſion, held Jan. the 26th, 880. Photius complained, That the Church of Rome ſeemed unwilling to receive the Seventh General Council. But the Pope's Legates having ſatisfy'd the Council in that Matter, it was decreed unanimouſly, That that Council ſhould ſtand for the venth Oecumenical.

After this, Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, was ſummoned to appear, for refuſing to hold Communion with Photius. Whereupon the Pope's Legates required a Canon to be made, diſabling Photius from receiving ſuch as had been Excommunicated or Depoſed by the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhop of Rome from receiving thoſe that had been Condemned, or Excommunicated by Photius: This was the firſt Canon. The ſecond was made upon the Remonſtrance of Photius, and Order'd, that Biſhops that turned Monks, ſhould not retain their Biſhopricks, and diſabled them from the Recovery thereof. A third Canon was added, againſt ſuch as ſhould Impriſon, or abuſe Biſhops. This done, the Acts of the Council were ſigned by the Legates, and all the Biſhops.

May the 10th, they met together in the Emperour's Palace, in whoſe preſence was read the Symbol, or Creed of the Council of Conſtantinople, with a Prohibition to add any thing to it; which which, was against the Latin Creed, to which was added the Filioque. Basilius the Emperour, with the Princes his Sons, subscribed to this, and disapproved, by his subscription, all that had been Transacted against Photius.

May the 13th, the Bishops met again in the Great Church, to whom was read the Creed agreed upon in the last Meeting, and repeated Anathema's pronounced against all persons that should either add to, or take any thing from it. Thus you have an Abstract of the Acts of this Council, published by Baronius, and taken out of the Acts themselves, the Manuscripts whereof are to be found in the Vatican Library, and that of the Colonni's.

The Pope's Legates returned to Rome, with Letters from the Emperour and Photius to the Pope; to whom they made their Report of Photius his Restauration, and of the peaceable State wherein they had left the Churches of Constantinople. The Pope, in his Answer, Congratulated the Emperour for it, and returned him his Thanks, at the same time, for his Care in sending Galleys for the Defence of the Territory of Rome against the Saracens; for his restoring to the Church of Rome S. Sergius his Monastery in the Neighbourhood of Constantinople; and, lastly, for having restored Bulgaria to the See of Rome. He prays him to continue his Good Will to that See; and adds, at the end of the Letter, That he allows of the Acts of the Council at Constantinople for the Restauration of Photius; but, if his Legates had any way trespassed upon his Orders, he disowns all such Actings, and declares them void. This Letter bore date, August the Thirteenth, 880.

He also Congratulated Photius upon his Restauration, for which he told him he was obliged to the Holy See; but blamed him for refusing to make a Publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and beg the Council's Pardon. He enjoyns him to submit himself, and be faithful to the Holy See; and ends his Letter with the same Clause contained in that to the Emperour: Which shews, that he was not, as yet, fully informed of all those Things the Legates had consented to. And indeed, when he understood how they had been surprised, he went up to the Choire of his Church, from whence he fulminated his Excommunication against all Persons that should not receive the Condemnation of Photius; and, having Deposed his Legates, he sent Marinus, who had been twice already Legate in the East, to Repair the Mischief done by the late Legates. Marinus being arrived at Constantinople, did strenuously maintain what had been done under Pope Nicholas, and in the Eighth Council against Photius, refusing to consent to the Abrogation of the Acts of that Council. The Emperour incensed at his Presumption, in Disannulling what the other had Ratified, caused him to be cast into Prison; and having kept him there the space of Thirty days, thinking that Mortification would make him change his Mind, he sent him back to Rome, where his Constancy was soon requited. For Pope John dying in the beginning of the year 882, he was Chosen to be his next Successor on the First of February.

Pope John disowns what his Legates had done.

Being raised to that High Station, the first Thing that he did, was, to Condemn Photius again; to declare void all the Episcopal Functions he had took upon him; and to Abrogate all the Acts of the False Council of Photius. His Pontificate having lasted but one year and odd days, he had for his Successor Adrian, the Third of that Name, to whom Basilius the Emperour made present Applications, to get him to own Photius. But this Pope, on the contrary, did openly declare against him, and Confirmed what his Predecessor had done. Basilius, provoked by this Denial, Writ Adrian a Letter full of Invectives against the Bishops of Rome, but chiefly against Marinus; affirming, That he could not legally be Chosen Bishop of Rome, because of his being Bishop of another Church. This Letter was deliver'd to Pope Stephen the Vth, who succeeded Adrian in 885. Stephen made a Sober, but Smart Answer to the Emperour; in which he tells him, That he wonders how he could Write in so violent a Style to his Predecessor; for he could not be ignorant, that the Sacerdotal Dignity was not any way subject to the Regal Power; That, though the Emperour represented Christ upon Earth, 'tis onely in respect to Civil and Temporal Things; And that, as God has given him a Supream Power over the Things of this World, so has he given, by St. Peter, to his Successors, a Supream Authority over Spiritual Things. That it was the Emperour's part to destroy with the Sword the Impiety and Barbarity of Tyrants; to doe Justice to his Subjects; to make Laws; and to have Armies both by Sea and Land; but that the Care of Christ's Flock is committed to the High-Priests; a Dignity as much above that of Kings, as Heavenly Things are above Spiritual. He exhorts him to follow the Pope's Decrees, and to respect their Dignity. He charges with Blasphemy all that have offer'd to Calumniate his Predecessor Marinus, and sharply rebukes him for his giving credit to such Calumnies. He asks him, By whom he was Constituted a Judge of the Holy High-Priests? And how he knows that Marinus was not a Bishop? He excuses his being Translated, by several Instances. Moreover, he affirms, That the Pope is not liable to any Man's Judgment; and says, That Pope Sylvester caused a Declaration of it to be made by his Legates in the Nicene Council: A Fact that cannot be proved. He justifies all the Proceedings of Marinus and his Predecessors against Photius, exhorts the Emperour to put him out of his See, and to fill his Place by another Patriarch. He complains of the ill usage Marinus had at his Court. Lastly, He commends the Emperour for designing one of his Sons for the Sacerdotal Office; and requires his Assistance for the defence of Rome and all Italy, both by Sea and Land, against the Descents and Inrodes of the Barbarians.

The following Popes are against the Restauration of Photius.

This Letter came to Constantinople after Basilius's Decease, and was delivered to his Son Leo, who succeeded him in 886. This Prince was an Enemy to Photius, upon a Jealousie he had that Photius had made use of Santarabenus to put him out of his Father's favour, who had forced him to

to a private Life. Glad therefore of this Opportunity, at his Acceſſion to the Imperial Throne, to be revenged of his Enemies, he preſently turn'd out Photius, and baniſhed him into a Monaſtery in Armenia; cauſed Santarabenus's Eyes to be put out, ſent him into Exile to Athens, and cauſed Stephen, his own Brother, to be choſen Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Which Election was approved of by Stylianus Biſhop of Neocæſarea, and by the other Biſhops that were Photius's Adverſaries: who in their own Names, and the Names of the Clergy of Conſtantinople, together with the Abbots and Monks of the Empire, ſent a Letter to Pope Stephen. In which having related all that had paſſed from the beginning, in Photius's Caſe, and how Leo the Emperour had no ſooner aſcended the Throne of his Father, but he preſently turn'd him out, and by that means delivered them from the Miſeries they groaned under for not ſubmitting to him; they earneſtly entreat him to pardon thoſe who had held Communion with Photius a ſecond time: by which Indulgence, he would ſave a world of people, proving that it had been practiſed by the Church upon ſeveral Occaſions. However they acquaint him, that they would not ſuffer the Biſhops of Photius's Faction to perform any Sacerdotal Functions, whatever Permiſſion they pretended to have from the Holy See, till they had a certain Account of the Pope's pleaſure in it; and that the reſt who had ſubmitted to Photius, and were compelled to do it, were the more excuſable. The Emperour writ alſo to the Pope; but only acquainted him by his Letters, that Photius had withdrawn himſelf of his own accord, and had embraced a private Life.

Letters from Pope Stephen to the Greek Biſhops.

Pope Stephen, in his Anſwer to the Biſhops that had writ to him, told them, they had juſt cauſe to turn out Photius, as by their Letters he was informed they had done; but that the Emperour having ſignified unto him, that he had withdrawn himſelf, he was perplexed what Anſwer to give. That there was a vaſt Difference betwixt being turned out, and quitting a Dignity of his own accord. Therefore not being able to paſs his Judgment upon the Matter without a full Information, he had put it off; and thought it neceſſary that Biſhops ſhould be ſent on both ſides, that all Things being duely examined, and the Truth found out, he might order that which ſhould be moſt acceptable unto God.

The Biſhops Anſwer to Pope Stephen.

The Biſhops anſwered Pope Stephen, that the Difference found in their Letter and that of the Emperour, came from hence, That Photius's Friends, who acknowledged him for Patriarch, were obliged to give it out, that he had voluntarily quitted his Patriarchate: which they did not, who followed the Judgment of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and their Legates; for they look'd upon him only as a Lay-man, and ſaid, he would never have voluntarily left it. They wondered, that having ſaid in the beginning of his Letter, that Photius had been rejected, he ſhould ſay at the latter end, that he muſt be brought into Judgment, as if it were doubtful whether he is a Biſhop or not: that, if he were brought again into Judgment, he would be found ſtill more guilty; and, to paſs by other Matters, they did not think it convenient to pardon what the World knew he had done againſt Marinus. Laſtly, They repeat their former Entreaties in behalf of thoſe whom Photius had forced into his Communion, and pray him to ſend Circular Letters to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, that they may approve of and confirm the Condeſcenſion which he had uſed towards thoſe perſons. To which they add, that it was the Emperour's Deſire, who by rejecting of Photius had delivered them from his perſecution; and that it was no way repugnant to the Canons, Photius being rejected, to admit to Penance ſuch as had been compelled to hold Communion with him. This Letter was delivered to Pope Formoſus, who ſucceeded Stephen, Anno 891.

Formoſus his Reply to the Biſhops Letter to Pope Stephen.

This Pope anſwered to Stylianus, that he was not plain enough in his Letter; that he deſired Favour, without telling the manner, or for whom, whether for Lay-men or Biſhops. If for Lay-men, he was willing to grant it; but if for Biſhops, and that they might remain in their Dignity, he ought to obſerve, that Photius could not confer an Epiſcopal Dignity which he had not; that he could confer nothing but the Condemnation he had received; that praying in behalf of thoſe he had Ordained, was to countenance him, who had Ordained them; that on the contrary, the Church of Rome ought to inflict ſevere penalties upon ſuch perſons, to purge throughly by that means the Church of Conſtantinople; that however his Clemency and Lenity inclined him to the Toleration of ſome things, but that there were others that could not be diſpenſed with; that he had appointed Landulphus Biſhop of Capua, and Romanus his Legate à Latere, with whom they ſhould conſult about Matters, joyning with them Theophiladus Biſhop of Ancyra, and Peter in whom he repoſed a great Truſt, provided nevertheleſs that the Condemnation of Photius ſhould ſtand; and as to thoſe whom he had Ordained, they might be received as Lay-men into the Church-Communion, if they acknowledged their Fault in Writing, and begged to be admitted to Penance; that done, he might do in conjunction with his Legates what he ſhould think moſt expedient, theſe two Articles remaining untouch'd.

The laſt Anſwers of the Popes to the Greeks.

But, whereas the Number of Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Clerks ordained by Photius was ſo great, that all the Churches almoſt had been left deſtitute, if the Clergy ordained by him had been made Lay-men, therefore this Regulation could not be put in Execution in the Eaſt: So that Stylianus and others were forced at laſt to tolerate them, and hold Communion with them; but ſince they ſhould have been better ſatisfied if they could get the Conſent of the Holy See to it, Stylianus endeavoured ſeven Years after to get it, and writ to the Pope for it. Then was John IX. raiſed to the Papal See, who declined to return an Anſwer himſelf, but ordered one to be ſent him in his Name, to this purpoſe, That he thanked him for his firm Adherency to the Church of Rome, that he hoped at laſt the Obſtinate would ſubmit, that Peace would be reſtored to the Church, and an End put to a Schiſm that had continued the ſpace of 40 Years. That he expected his Predeceſſors Decrees ſhould be inviolably obſerved; that he had the ſame Sentiments of Ignatius, Photius, Stephen,

Stephen, and Anthony, as his Predeceſſors Nicholas, John, Stephen, and the whole Roman Church; that he would deal with them, and look'd upon them as they had done, and received into the Church-Communion all thoſe he had Ordained, upon the ſame Conditions they had preſcribed. This was the laſt Anſwer of the Popes upon this Matter, whoſe Judgment the Greeks did not follow, for they left in their reſpective Stations not only ſuch as had ſided with Photius, but alſo thoſe whom he had Ordained. From which time the Latin and Greek Churches held no good Intelligence, though it ſeems they did not break off Communion altogether. For both the Emperour, and the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, uſed to write to the Pope, and the Pope to return Anſwer; who alſo ſent his Legates into the Eaſt, as in the Buſineſs of Nicholas the Patriarch upon the fourth Marriage of Leo the Emperour; who, having loſt three Wives without Iſſue, reſolved to marry again. But meeting with ſtrong Oppoſition againſt it from the Patriarch, he in the Year 901. deſired Legates from Pope John IX. and made them approve of his fourth Marriage. Whereupon he turned out Nicholas the Patriarch, and put Euthymius in his place. This Buſineſs renewed the Troubles of the Church of Conſtantinople: for, after Leo's Death, Nicholas was reſtored to his See in 912, and writ a Letter to the Pope concerning it, praying him to puniſh thoſe who had ſtirred up thoſe Troubles againſt him. Some time after, having reconciled the Minds of Men, and reſtored Peace to the Church of Conſtantinople, he deſir'd Pope John X. by another Letter, to endeavour a Re-union of their reſpective Churches, the Peace whereof ſeemed to have been for ſome time interrupted, and to re-ſettle a ſincere Correſpondence betwixt them by ſending Legates on both ſides, and declaring with one accord that fourth Marriages are unlawful, and therefore prohibited. It does not appear that the Pope made any Anſwer to it; but an Aſſembly was held at Conſtantinople in 921. which abſolutely prohibited ſuch Matches for the future, and Excommunicated all perſons ſo contracted, till ſuch time as they were parted. As for third Marriages, they were not abſolutely forbidden; but a penance was ordered for five Years to all perſons that ſhould marry three times after forty Years of Age, or even before that Age, provided they had had Children by the firſt Marriage. We find that John XIII. ſent Legates in 968. to Nicephorus the Eaſtern Emperour, to treat of a Match with his Daughter-in-law and Otho the Weſtern Emperour; but thoſe Legates were ſlighted and abuſed by the Greeks, as was alſo Luitprandus, Otho's Ambaſſadour. In ſhort, 'tis very plain, that there was in thoſe Times no good correſpondence betwixt the Latins and the Greeks; that the Latins were hated and ſlighted by the Greeks, and theſe but little regarded by the Latins. But as little Friendſhip as there was amongſt them, yet they did not openly condemn each other, nor did their Enmity break out openly till the time of Michael Cerularius, as will appear in its proper place.*

Broils of the Church of Rome with the Greek Churches.

Before we conclude this Chapter, it will not be improper to ſpeak of the Works of Photius.

The moſt conſiderable Fruit of Photius's Studies and Labours, is his Library entituled Myriobiblon, compoſed by him at the Requeſt of Taraſius his Brother, being yet a Lay-man, and Ambaſſadour in Aſſyria. It contains the Argument or Abſtracts of 279 or 280 Volumes of many Authors, upon various Subjects. Wherein we find Grammarians, Criticks, Poets, Orators, ſacred and prophane Hiſtorians, Phyſicians, Philoſophers, Divines, &c. not ranked according to their ſeveral Arts or Profeſſions, but brought in confuſedly, and as they came firſt into his Memory. As he goes forward in this Work, he ſeems to encreaſe his Labour by the length of his Abſtracts. For in the beginning he ſets down in few Words the general Argument of the Works he ſpeaks of, and delivers his Cenſure upon them. Then he attempts a larger Account of the Matters therein contained; and towards the end he makes long Abſtracts thereof, without Choice or Reflections. Thus, as his Work ſwells, he falls ſhort in his Exactneſs; and his Spirits being wearied with the length of the Work, he grows careleſs and negligent, producing nothing of his own, but contenting himſelf to tranſcribe faithfully what comes in his way. And indeed the end of his Work is ſo unlike the beginning, that ſome eminent Scholars have thought it could not be Photius's. There is nothing to be ſeen of that Exquiſiteneſs, of that fine critical Wit, of that free and impartial Judgment upon the Character and Style of the Authors, or of that inimitable Exactneſs which appears in the beginning. Yet it is very probable, the Wearineſs and Negligence of Photius were the Reaſon why he was not ſo accurate towards the end as he was in the beginning. For the Number of Works mentioned in the preliminary Letter being only found compleat at the end, 'tis not credible that what Photius had done ſhould be taken out, to ſubſtitute in lieu of it the productions of any others. Nay, it ſeems that Photius had purpoſely altered his Method, thinking it more uſeful to give larger Abſtracts of the Works he went upon, than barely to tell the Subject. For there are ſome Authors of which he ſpeaks but ſuccinctly in the beginning, and ſpeaks of 'em again towards the end, to give larger Abſtracts of their Works. But whatever Reaſon induced him ſo to do, whether it was to make his Work leſs tedious or more uſeful, it cannot be denied but that it had been more proper to joyn the general Argument and the Cenſure to be given upon each Work, to Abſtracts of particular places worth taking notice of. 'Twere to be wiſhed, that Photius had performed both the one and the other in all the parts of his Work, and that he had not contented himſelf to do one of them only. The World however is very much indebted to him, and his Work a very rich Treaſure nevertheleſs, including what is moſt curious in every Science, and preſerving to us both the Memory of Authors, and ſome Fragments of abundance of Works, which had been unknown to us, and nothing whereof had remain'd with us, had it not been for this Learned Man's Work.

Photius's Library.

This ſo uſeful a Work was found out by the Jeſuit Andrew Schot, who cauſed it to be tranſcribed from a Manuſcript of Cardinal Sirlet's Library, and to be compared with a Copy thereof in the Vatican, taken out of a Manuſcript at Venice, written by the hand of Cardinal Beſſarion. He communicated this Copy to David Hoeſchelius, a Printer of Ausburg, who cauſed it to be Printed in 1601; being firſt compared with three other Copies, one in the Duke of Bavaria's Library, and the two other being procured for him by Margunius, and the Son of Henry Stephen, who had a Copy Written by his Father's own hand, and Reviſed by an Ancient Manuſcript. Andrew Schot, a Man extraordinary well skilled in the Greek Tongue, conſidering the Uſefulneſs of this Work, undertook to Tranſlate it into Latin; and having happily compaſſed his Deſign, cauſed his Tranſlation to be Printed alone at Ausburg, Anno 1606. Afterwards, both the Text and the Tranſlation were Printed together at Geneva in 1611; and laſtly, in the year 1653, this Work was Reprinted at Rouen by the Berthelins. This Edition is the largeſt and faireſt.

The Nomocanon of Photius.

Photius his Nomocanon is another Proof of this Author's great Ability. 'Tis a Collection digeſted in an excellent Method, and brought under 14 different Titles, of the Canons of the Councils and Canonical Epiſtles, and of the Emperour's Laws about Eccleſiaſtical Matters. Balſamon has made Comments upon this Work, and with theſe Comments it appeared in publick by the care of Monſieur Juſtel, being Printed at Paris in Greek, with a Latin Verſion at the end, in 1615; the Verſion being firſt Printed both at Paris and Baſil, in 1501. This Work is alſo found amongſt Balſamon's Works (Printed at Paris in 1620.) and in the Pandects of the Canons of England, [put out by Juſtellus at Paris, 1662.]

The delicateneſs of Photius his Style, and fineneſs of his Wit, as well as his Learning, and his particular Knowledge of Holy Scripture, are in a ſpecial manner conſpicuous in his Letters, which appeared firſt long after his Works before-mentioned. They were publiſh'd from a Manuſcript brought from the Eaſt into England, Tranſlated by Richard Montague Biſhop of Norwich, and Printed at London, Anno 1651. They are in number 248.

The firſt, Written to Michael King of Bulgaria, is an Inſtruction directed to that Prince. To whom he propoſes the Creed in the firſt place, as the Foundation of our Chriſtian Faith; after which, he brings in the Deciſions of the Seven General Councils, of which he makes a Compendious Hiſtory. He tells him, We cannot depart from the Purity of the Doctrine ſetled by thoſe Councils, without indangering our Salvation. He exhorts him firmly to adhere to the Faith, and to joyn Vertues and Good Works to a Lively true Faith. In ſhort, he lays before him the chief Duties of a Chriſtian Prince, the Vertues that are moſt neceſſary for him, and the Manner how he ought to govern himſelf. 'Tis one of the beſt and compleateſt Inſtructions that were ever given to a Prince; and, 'twould be a hard matter to find a larger, exacter, or more ſolid Collection of Precepts.

The Second is the Circular Letter which he ſent to all the Patriarchs of the Eaſt againſt the Roman Church in 866. Wherein he takes occaſion to reproach her with what had paſſed in Bulgaria, which was but newly Converted to the Chriſtian Faith, where ſome Perſons were found come from the Weſt, who ſpread ſuch Doctrines as were repugnant to the Purity of the Faith. Firſt, by making the Bulgarians Faſt on Saturdays, againſt the Laws of the Church which forbid it. Which might occaſion a Contempt of the Doctrine; becauſe when Men take upon them to ſlight Tradition, even in the leaſt Things, they are eaſily prevail'd with to ſlight the Doctrine it ſelf. Secondly, by diſtinguiſhing the firſt Week in Lent from the reſt, and permitting them to eat in that Week, Milk, Butter, Cheeſe, &c. Thirdly, by detecting Married Prieſts. Fourthly, by cauſing them to be Anointed again with the Chriſm, that had been already Anointed with it by the Prieſts; affirming, That Unction ought not to be made by Prieſts. He exclaims againſt the Prohibition, affirming, That there is no Law reſerving that Unction to the Biſhop, or prohibiting the ſame to the Prieſts. Laſtly, he charges the Latin Church with breach of Faith, and falſifying of the Creed; by Teaching, that the Holy Ghoſt does not onely proceed from the Father, but from the Father and the Son. Upon this Article he doth inlarge very much, and alledges many Objections againſt the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son. Then he breaks out againſt thoſe who had Taught the Bulgarians this Doctrine, and does Excommunicate them, by vertue of the Canons, about the Saturdays Faſt, and the Celibacy of Prieſts. He exhorts the Patriarchs to joyn with him in Baniſhing that Doctrine, to ſend Biſhops to Conſtantinople, to have thoſe new Tenets exploded, and put a ſtop to thoſe evils, that the Bulgarians may receive the true Faith. He acquaints them, That he has received a Letter from Italy, againſt the Tyranny of the Church of Rome. He admoniſhes them to receive, and cauſe to be received, in all the Churches of their Patriarchates, the Seventh General Council, in the ſame manner, and with the ſame Authority as the firſt Six.

In the Third Letter, which is to Bardas, he complains of what he was to ſuffer in the Place where he was, and ſeems to ſpeak much like a Chriſtian.

In the following Letters he alſo makes his Complaints of the Wrongs done him.

In the 18th he Writes to Michael the Emperour, about the Death of Bardas. He owns he deſerved it, if he had actually conſpired to make himſelf ſole Maſter of the Empire, as he could not doubt of it upon the account of the Letters Michael had ſent him. But he laments his Death, becauſe he had not time to do Penance for his ſins. He very much flatters Michael, and expreſſes to him the great deſire he has to ſee him again ſhortly at Conſtantinople. The ſame Thing he inſinuates, but in more flattering and pathetick Terms, in the next Letter.

In the 20th, he congratulates a Monk, for having brought over a Biſhop to his Party.

In the 27th, he Writes againſt certain Monks, who had took upon them to depoſe their Abbot; and obſerves, that Monks ought not to ſet up themſelves as Judges of their own Abbots, but that they ought to refer their Cauſe to their Superiours.

In

In the 30th, he proves the Perpetual Virginity of the Bleſſed Virgin; and explains that place of Scripture, where it is ſaid, That ſhe knew not Joſeph till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born; obſerving, that the Particle Donec (till) doth not always imply, that the contrary to that which had not hapned before, doth happen afterwards.

In the 31ſt, directed to Taraſius a Nobleman, whom he calls his Brother, he Treats of Providence; and ſhews, why Good Men ſuffer in this Life, whilſt the Wicked wallow in Proſperity.

In the 32d, and the Seven next following, directed to Theotiſtus the Abbot, he explains, in ſhort, the Faith of the Myſterious Trinity, and of the Incarnation, againſt Hereticks. He alſo ſpeaks ſmartly therein againſt the Iconoclaſts.

The next Ten conſiſt of Moral Exhortations to ſeveral Perſons.

The Fiftieth is upon the Covenants of the Law and Goſpel.

The next Three conſiſt of Reprimands to a Collector of Taxes, for his Covetouſneſs.

In the 54th he proves, that the Holy Myſteries ought not to be given to Infidels, or Hereticks, nor to Ill-Livers, but onely to Orthodox Perſons, who live according to the Rules of Chriſtianity.

The 55th is againſt a Liar.

In the 63d he gives the Reaſons for the Darkneſs of Prophecies.

In the Sixty fourth he Confutes the Iconoclaſts, and Anſwers to ſome of their Objections.

In the 72d he ſhews, how Contemptible our Temporal Life is.

In the 74th he pretends, That Abraham made his Servant Swear, by putting his hand under his Thigh, in honour to the Circumciſion, and as a Figure of the Meſſias to come out of his Seed.

The 97th was Written to Baſilius the Emperour, after he had turned him out of his See of Conſtantinople. He complains, in this Letter, of the Ill Treatment he had received, and particularly, That his Books were taken from him. He gives a very pathetick Account of the Perſecution he ſuffer'd, and Writes ſmartly to the Emperour.

In the next Letters he continues to deplore his Misfortunes, and ſpeaks of the Earthquake that hapned at Conſtantinople upon his Expulſion.

In the 102d he examines, how St. Paul could be both a Roman of Tarſis, and a Jew.

The 111th is directed to Gregory of Syracuſe, his old and conſtant Friend. Wherein he exhorts him to ſtand firm under his preſent Ill Circumſtances, and not to diſcontinue his Epiſcopal Functions.

In the 115th, he ſays, That the Council, which he calls Heretical, and which was made up of the Enemies to Image-Worſhip, has Excommunicated him, to raiſe a Man to the See of Conſtantinople, who lay under an Anathema. He ſpeaks of the Eighth Council.

In the next Letters, he Writes againſt that Council, but chiefly in the 118th.

In the 125th he gives Myſtical Reaſons for the Tearing of the Veil of the Temple, when our Saviour died.

In the 127th he explains that place of Scripture, where it is ſaid, That the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall never be pardon'd.

In the following Letters, he expounds ſome other places of Scripture, for which he brings Myſtical Reaſons, well invented, and happily apply'd.

In the 137th he affirms, That what is ſaid in St. Luke's Goſpel, that our Saviour ſweated drops of Blood, is not to be underſtood literally; but that it is a Proverbial Expreſſion, to ſignifie, that the Pains he felt were ſo very violent, that he Sweated great drops. To which he adds, That this Hiſtory of the Goſpel has been left out of the Goſpel by ſome, and particularly by ſome Syrians; but his Opinion is, That it ought to be received as Canonical, and to be put amongſt the Scriptures of Divine Inſpiration.

In the 139th he ſhews, That it is not impoſſible, as ſome pretended, to look upon a Woman without ſinful Thoughts.

The 144th is againſt Euſebius of Cæſarea, whom he charges with Arianiſm.

In the 147th, Photius examines what it is to take God's Name in vain; and ſays, That among the Jews, taking of God's Name in Vain, was to give it to the Idols, or make uſe of it for a falſe Oath, or prophane it in idle Diſcourſes. That among Chriſtians, thoſe take God's Name in Vain, who Swear againſt that which is eſtabliſhed by Law, or who attribute God's Name to Creatures, as a Being which they believe Created, as alſo, thoſe who confound Images with Idols, and all Hereticks who abuſe that Name.

In the 152d, he expounds, as the Pelagians do, that place of St. Paul's Epiſtle, where it is ſaid, in which all have ſinned; pretending, after Theodoret, that it ought not to be thus Tranſlated, but whereas all have ſinned.

In the following Letters, he Treats of divers Critical Queſtions.

In the 162d, he treats of the Names of God; and ſhews, by ſeveral Inſtances, that the Name of God is ſometimes given to Creatures, with relation to their Excellency, Juſtice, or Power. He obſerves, the Jews were forbidden to Name God by his proper Name, and that none but the High-Prieſt bore it, which he did in his Forehead, Written in extraordinary and ſtrange Letters. He adds, that the Hebrews pronounce it Aia, and the Samaritans, Jabe; that it is Written with theſe Four Letters, Jeth, Aleph, Vau, He, ſignifying That is, viz. He that is, and indures for ever.

In

In the next Letter, he demonſtrates, how it was not abſolutely forbidden among the Jews, to hear or pronounce that Name, ſeeing Moſes heard it, and taught it the High-Prieſts, who wore it Written upon Plates of Gold; but that they were forbidden, upon pain of Death, to pronounce it before Strangers.

In the 164th, he examines what may be the ſence of the 13th Verſe, Chap. 1. of St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans.

The 165th contains a Fine Encomium of St. Paul's Wiſdom and Eloquence.

In the 166th he explains ſeveral places of St. Paul's Epiſtles ſomething dark, by reaſon of their Hyperbata, or Ellipſis, i. e. Tranſpoſitions, or Defects of words uſual in them.

The 174th contains Photius his Apology againſt one of his former Friends, who now inveighed againſt him for his Contradictious Humour, charged him with betraying the Catholick Church, and violating her Laws. Photius, to vindicate himſelf from his Aſperſions, maintains, That he has not undertaken, done, ſaid, or writ any thing that might give any juſt ground to that Accuſation; and that he could be reproached with nothing but the Hardſhips he had indured, and the Miſery he was reduced to by the Perſecution of his Enemies. Which he gives an Account of in the moſt ſenſible manner; affirming, That his Misfortunes had neither Deſpirited, nor made him ſlight the Divine Truth. His Adverſary pretended, That it was ill done of him, to draw that Perſecution on himſelf for Things of ſmall conſequence. But Photius, to juſtifie himſelf, affirms, That his Enemies are our Saviour's Enemies, who rendred contemptible (as far as in them lay) the Blood of his Covenant, prophaned his Altars, and Ridiculed the Holy Chriſm, or rather the Holy Ghoſt, who had Conſecrated it. He proteſts, he will never hold Communion with ſuch Men, nor with thoſe who ſhall receive them. Next, he deplores the Miſeries of thoſe who ſuffer Perſecution for his ſake; and complains, that he is abandon'd almoſt by all the World. He concludes, ſaying, That he ever offers Sacrifices and Prayers to God for his Prince.

In the 176th Letter, he recites the different Expoſitions of this Place of Scripture given by the Fathers, viz. My Father is greater than I.

In the 177th, ſpeaking of St. Peter's Fall, he owns his Primacy.

In the 180th, and the Two next, he explains ſome places of the Goſpel.

In the 182d, he deplores his Misfortunes.

In the 187th, he defends ſtrongly, and rationally againſt Julian's Railleries, our Saviour's Advice, To ſell a Man's ſubſtance to give it to the Poor.

In the 188th, he congratulates himſelf for his Sufferings.

In the 192d, he obſerves upon the Word Ephod, that it ſignifies, 1. A Prieſtly Habit. 2. A Habit like unto that worn by Lay-men. 3. The Habits of the Prieſts of the Heathen Gods, who imitated the Ceremonies of the Prieſts of the True God.

The 201. is a Letter of comfort to George of Nicomedia, upon the death of a Clerk Ordained a Prieſt by him. He ſays, That his Soul is in Abraham's Boſom, where it injoys the Heavenly Glory.

In the 211th, he expounds a difficult place of Geneſis, about the Sacrifices of Cain and Abel.

The 223d, and the three next, are likewiſe upon ſome difficult places of Scripture.

In the 228th he expounds that place in the Goſpel, ſo frequently objected by the Arians, That none but the Father knows the Day of Judgment.

The 234th is a long Epiſtle, no leſs Chriſtian than Eloquent, directed to Taraſius his Brother, to comfort him upon the Death of his Daughter.

In the 240th, he handles Two Critical Queſtions upon Scripture. The firſt, who was Ethan the Zeraite. The ſecond, concerning David's Two Unctions. The third, about Samuel's ſerving Saul.

The 243d, and 244th conſiſt of Ingenious Reproofs to a Friend of his, who forſook him through Timorouſneſs.

The 245th, is a piece of Comfort directed to a Nun, upon the Death of her Siſter. Wherein he ſuppoſes her Soul to be in the Company of Angels.

The 246th, and 247th, are upon the Birth-place of St. Paul.

In the 248th, he Diſcovers the Myſtical Reaſons of the Circumciſion.

Monſieur Cotelerius was publiſhed in the Second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church, [Page 104.] a ſhort Letter of Photius to Smaracus, Governour of the Iſle of Cyprus, againſt that Miniſter's Avarice and Extortions; With a Compendious Diſcourſe of the ſame Photius, ſhewing, that we ought to take care but of one Thing in this Life, that is, to forbear Sin; and, as we ought not to regard the Caſualties and Misfortunes of this Life, nor look upon them as Evils; ſo Honour, Riches, Power, Eloquence, and other Advantages, either of Nature or Fortune, ought not to be regarded as a real Good.

Photius his Letter to the Patriarch of Aquileia, is much beyond the former. Baronius has inſerted a Tranſlation of it in his Annals [ad An. 883.] but it came out ſince in Greek by the care of Father Combefis, in the laſt Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum [at Paris, 1673.] In this Letter, having firſt highly extolled that Arch-biſhop, and Complimented him about the Deputy he had ſent unto him, he Argues againſt the Doctrine of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Son, as an Error contrary to Tradition. He ſays, that the Popes, Leo the I. and Leo the III. have rejected that Doctrine. The firſt, by ſaying in his Letter, againſt Neſtorius and Eutychius, cius, that the Holy Ghost doth proceed from the Father; and the last, by disproving those that had added the Filioque to the Creed, and causing it to be Ingraven on Plates without that Addition. He afterwards brings in many Arguments, grounded upon some places of Scripture, against the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son. He answers to the place alledged by the Latins, The Holy Ghost shall receive from me, and will declare it to you. He objects to himself, That S. Ambrose, S. Austin, S. Jerom, and some other Fathers have said, That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son. He owns it to have been their opinion, and that they ought not therefore to be called Hereticks. But he pretends, their Authority must not be preferred before that of a greater Number, who spoke according to the Councils and the Holy Writ. He adds, that some Fathers of the Church may have swerved from the Truth; but, whatever respect we have for their persons, we ought not to follow their Errors. As for Instance, though Dionysius of Alexandria be ranked amongst the Fathers, the Arian Expressions he used are not to be approved; as well as some Tenets of Methodius, S. Irenæus, and Papias. Lastly, he dares affirm, That if all the Men in the World should oppose us, we ought still to adhere to our Saviour's Words, and those of the Gospel; and, if we do seek after Proofs, next to our Saviour, we have the Suffrages of Oecumenical Councils, the greatest Number of the Fathers, the Bishops of Rome, and amongst these S. Leo, and Adrian the I. That the Legates themselves of the Holy See, which lately have been in the East Three several times, have alledged nothing contrary to that Doctrine; and that in the Council held by him, the Legates of Pope John had Subscribed unto, and approved of the Creed, without that Addition. Thus much is alledged by Photius in his Letter, to make good his Opinion.

His Work containing a compendious History of the first seven General Councils, which has been several times published separately, is nothing but part of the first Letter directed to Michael King of the Bulgarians.

But, as Photius had skill in Composition, so he was no less versed in Preaching. We have many Manuscript Homilies of his, whereof Father Combefis has printed the Titles and Beginnings in the last Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum. But there are only two whole ones extant: one upon the Virgin's Nativity, inserted by the same Author into his first Continuation of the Biblioth. Patrum, and written with much Eloquence and Politeness. The other containing the Description and Encomium of a new Church in the Emperour's Palace at Constantinople, published by Codinus and Combefis in their Collections. Photius's Sermons.

In fine, Photius had joyned all the Subtilty of the most refined Schoolmen to his other sorts of Learning. In Canisius's Collection we have some small Treatises of his in Latin, which are a convincing proof of his great Ability in School-Learning. The principal of which, is that of our Saviour's Wills, which are called Gnomical; found in the Tome added by Stuart to Canisius's Collection. It was in Greek in the Emperour and the Duke of Bavaria's Libraries, out of which Turrian took it, and put it into Latin. The state of the Question is to know, whether our Saviour had, besides a general Will to do a Thing, a particular Will to do it in such and such manner, whether he has chosen and affected the one more than the other. Photius in the first place says, That this Question, having been but slightly handled by the Fathers, is the more difficult to solve; but that 'tis an easie matter to find out all that has been written upon it, S. Maximus being the only Father that he found treating of this Question. And, to expound him, he distinguishes many sorts of Wills. The first, a Natural Will, which he calls Θέλησις, being nothing but a Desire of doing a Thing, without any Reason for it. The second, a General Will, by him called Βούλησις, being an Effect of Reason. The third, called Γνώμη, is an Inclination to one Thing rather than another. The fourth, is the Choice one makes of one Thing rather than another. The fifth, is the Determination of the Will to do this or that Thing. And lastly, the Execution. The Matter being thus stated, he says, that our Saviour had unquestionably a general Will attended with Reasoning, but that he has not a Will of Choice, nor of Deliberation or Design to do one Thing rather than another, because having a perfect Knowledge of all Things by his Nature by reason of the Hypostatical Union, and his humane Will being wholly subject to the divine Will, he cannot deliberate upon what he must do, nor will any Thing but what pleases the divine Will. That there being two Natures in Christ, there ought to be likewise two Wills, that is to say, two Faculties; but by reason there is but one Hypostasis, or but one person that wills, he therefore wills but one Thing, and has but one general Will, that is, but one sole Affection, because the humane Will does in all Things concur with the divine Will. This is the Opinion of Photius in this Matter, which he backs with many Reasons; and gives shrewd Answers to all Objections against it. Photius's Treatise concerning the Wills of Christ.

In the fifth Tome of Canisius we find moreover seven short Dissertations of Photius, upon several Scholastick Questions. In the first he puts this Question, How God is every where, and answers the Objections made against his Omnipresence. He shews, that God is not in the World as created Beings are, but in a more sublime manner; that he is in every Thing, and above all Things; that he is in all Things by his Operation, but that his Act being his Substance, one may truly say he is both in Act and Substance every where; that he is every where, without being of the same Substance with the Things in which he is; that he makes no part of them, not being tied, mingled, confounded, or any way changed by them. Photius's Theological Treatises.

In the second Dissertation he shews how we know God in this Life; and says, that we cannot perfectly define, or know him, but that he is known to us by a small beam of his Majesty shining upon his Creatures, and by way of Negation, that is, by denying that he is any of those Things we ſee. That all Men naturally know, that there is a God; becauſe there ought to be an Eternal Being, a Soveraign Lord of all Things, and a Supream Good by his own proper Subſtance.

In the third Diſſertation he explains the Terms proper to the divine Nature, both in common, and ſuch as are proper to each perſon.

In the fourth, he ſhews how we may ſay, that God is one, and that there are three perſons in the God-head.

In the fifth, he treats of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and ſhews, that though the Word be every where, yet 'tis united hypoſtatically only to the humane Nature he took upon him.

In the ſixth, he brings in the Reaſons why it was expedient the Word ſhould become Man. The firſt is, That Men being led by their Senſes, might be raiſed by the ſight of his humane Nature to the Knowledge of a Deity. The ſecond, Becauſe our Saviour had not overcome the Devil, had he not been in a condition to ſuffer. The third is, Becauſe when a Man does both preach and give good Example, it is more effectual than uſing the Miniſtry of others; and that it is eaſier to imitate the Vertues we ſee practiſed, than thoſe the practice whereof is required, without giving a Model of them. Thus it was requiſite, that God ſhould aſſume our Nature, to preach unto us himſelf the true ſaving Doctrine, and by teaching us by his own Example the practice of Vertues, to ſet himſelf up for a Model thereof.

Manuſcripts of Photius.

In the Libraries of Ausburg, the Vatican, and of Monſieur Colbert, there are Manuſcripts of a Treatiſe of Photius, entituled Amphilochia, from the Name of Amphilochius Biſhop of Cizycus, who had propoſed unto him a hundred Queſtions, which he ſolves in this Anſwer. [Some Fragments of this Treatiſe are extant at the end of Amphilochius's Works, printed by Father Combefis at Paris in 1644. and in his Auctuar. Tom. I. and by Turrian and others.] This Book was never yet in Print, nor theſe following Works of Photius, viz. his Commentary upon St. Paul's Epiſtles, of which there is a Manuſcript extant in the Publick Library of Cambridge [but defective;] his Notes upon the Prophets, to be found in the Vatican Library; a Treatiſe againſt an Heretick, called Leontius, Biſhop of Antioch, and quoted by Suidas [in the word Leontius.] To which add a Treatiſe againſt the Latins; [a fragment of which is extant in Biſhop Uſher, de Symbolis, p. 25.] a Collection upon the Rights of the Metropolitans and Biſhops, with a Lexicon; a Commentary upon Ariſtotle's Categories; and ſome other Works, which never yet ſaw Light.

A Cenſure upon the Genius and Qualifications of Photius.

We have nothing to add to what has been already ſaid, concerning the Learning, the happy Genius, and Sublime Qualifications of Photius. Had he made uſe of 'em for the good of the Church, and not corrupted them by his Unjuſt Attempts, by unheard-of Violences, by Tricks and Artifices unworthy of an honeſt Man, he might have been happy. But his exceſſive Love of Glory, and his Unbounded Ambition, prompted him to thoſe Exceſſes, which have blaſted all his Indowments. 'Tis needleſs to repeat what we have already ſaid of the various Editions of his Works: But it were to be wiſhed, that we had a New Edition larger, and more Correct.

Theodorus Abucara.

Having ſpoke hitherto of Photius his Writings, I ſhall add a word of Theodorus Abucara, ſuppoſed to be that Metropolitan of the Province of Caria, who was Ordained by Methodius. Who, having ſided with Photius, acknowledged his Fault in the Eighth Council, at their Second Seſſion; and was received with the other Biſhops Ordained by Methodius, who left Photius to ſubmit to Ignatius. We have, under his Name, many ſmall Doctrinal Treatiſes, publiſhed both in Greek and Latin by Gretzerus, and Printed at Ingolſtadt in 1606, together with a Treatiſe of Anaſtaſius Sinaita, [Entituled, Ὁδηγὸς; or, A Guide in the Right Way. As alſo in Auctuario Duceano, at Paris, 1624. Tom. I. p. 367.]

The Works of this Author are almoſt all Compoſed by way of Dialogues; wherein he brings in a Chriſtian ſpeaking with Infidels, Saracens, Jews and Neſtorians, whom he Teaches the Truths of our Chriſtian Faith, and anſwers their Objections. Therein he handles ſeveral Scholaſtick Queſtions upon the Myſteries of Chriſtian Religion, and expounds the Meaning of the Philoſophers Terms, which they made uſe of to explain them. He inſiſts particularly upon the Trinity, and the Incarnation. Having, by Natural Reaſons proved God's Exiſtence, he endeavours to prove the Trinity after the ſame manner. He ſhews, That Chriſt is the Meſſias; tells the Infidels, That he is God; and demonſtrates Mahomet to be an Impoſtor. He proves the Neceſſity, and explains the Effects of the Incarnation; Confutes the Errors of the Neſtorians, Eutychians, Jacobites, and Theopaſchites in that Point; and proves, that there is in Chriſt but one Hypoſtaſis, and two Natures. In his Anſwer to the Saracens Queſtion upon the Euchariſt, he ſays, in plain Terms, That the Bread and Wine ſet by the Prieſt upon the Holy Table, are changed by the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. He Confutes the Error of the Origeniſts, as to the Duration of the Pains inflicted upon the Damned. He ſhews, againſt the Saracens, that it is more decent and rational to have but one Wife, than many. He ſhews, That God is by no means the Author of Evil. He affirms, That the Bleſſed Virgin never died. Laſtly, he treats of ſeveral of the moſt ſubtile Queſtions of Divinity.

CHAP. X.

An Account of the Controversies raised by Photius, with the Church of Rome.

PHotius was not satisfy'd with having divided the Greek Church by his Ambition, and laid the foundations of a Division between the Greek and Latin Church; but he also opposed the latter about several Points of Doctrine and Discipline, contain'd in a Letter which he Writ against it. Pope Nicholas the First seeing himself so vigorously Attack'd, desir'd the Assistance of the Bishops and Clergy of France, to Answer the Objections of Photius; and sent to Hincmarus, and the other Arch-bishops of Charles his Kingdom, the Ten Chief Heads objected against the Latin Church; that when they had examin'd them, they might furnish him with suitable Answers. Odo, Bishop of Beauvais, was pitch'd upon by the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, to make a Collection of the Answers which they thought sufficient to obviate the Objections of the Greeks. Æneas, Bishop of Paris, was chosen for the same matter by the Bishops of the Province of Sens. We have the Treatise of the last; Odo's is lost: unless some will say, That 'tis the Treatise of Ratramnus, which Odo put out in his Name. But, there is more likelihood, that the Bishops also order'd Ratramnus to Write on that Subject; for, he ends his Work with these words; We have Treated as well as we could on those Matters, contain'd in the Writings you sent to us. If our Answer please you, we give God Thanks; and, if it displease you, we submit it to your Censure and Correction: Which words were, in all probability, addressed to the Bishops, who had given him order to Write on this Subject.

The Charge of the Greeks consisted of Ten Articles, which Ratramnus and Æneas Answer in their Works.

Ratramnus's Preface is very short: He says, That the Objections made by the Emperours, Michael and Basil, against the Roman Church, are either False, Heretical, Superstitious, or Irreligious; and ought to be Contemn'd, were it not, that they give an Offence to the Weak. Æneas's Preface is a great deal longer. He begins it with an Encomium of the Church, which is always Victorious over her Enemies; and then he laments the Division which was growing up between the Churches; for the Greeks had begun to Attack the Roman Church in the Reign of Lewis the Godly. He adds, That almost all the Heresies were hatch'd in Greece; that oftentimes the Eastern Patriarchs were Hereticks; but, that the Roman Church was so happy, as never to have had an Author of Heresie for its Bishop: That indeed Liberius yielded to the violence of the Arians, but did not altogether forsake the Faith of the Church. That the Objections which the Greeks make at present, are unjust; that they start unnecessary Questions, which are like to be the occasion of Trouble and Scandal; that he is oblig'd to prepare to Answer and Refute 'em.

Answers to the Heads of Accusation of the Greeks.

The first chief Objection of the Greeks is concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Greeks ask the Romans, Why they hold that He proceeds from the Father and the Son, and not from the Father alone? As this is the principal head, and a Fundamental Point, Ratramnus treats of it very fully; and, of the Four Books which compleat his Work, Three are intirely Written on this Subject. In the first he proves the Doctrine of the Romans, by several Texts of Scripture; and, in the Two other, he urges some passages of the Fathers. Æneas onely Collects those passages of the Fathers, which confirm the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and from the Son.

Ratramnus observes, in the beginning of his Fourth Book, that the other Heads of the Exceptions, made by the Greeks, don't at all concern matters of Faith, but merely the Ceremonies and Usages of the Church, insomuch, that it had been better not to have mention'd 'em; Since no Man is either oblig'd to approve of 'em, or reject 'em; for, the Ceremonies of the Churches may be different; which he proves by the Practices of the Primitive Church, which made use of others, than what have been since practised, and by the various Customs of the Churches among themselves, concerning which he cites the passage of Socrates: Whence he concludes, that it is without cause, that the Greeks inveigh against the Ceremonies of the Latins, for differing from theirs; observing, that this Exception cou'd not proceed from a motive of Piety, but from Envy or Pride. After this general observation, which Æneas has not made, he examines distinctly the Exceptions of the Greeks, against every Article of Discipline.

The First, in Ratramnus, which is the Second in Æneas, is concerning the Fast on Saturdays. Ratramnus observes, That all the Western Churches do not agree with the Church of Rome in this Article; and that the number of those Churches, who do not Fast on Saturdays, is greater than of those, who keep this Fast: Besides that all the Eastern Churches do not abstain from Fasting;

Faſting; ſince, in the Church of Alexandria, they Dine not on this day, no more than in the Church of Rome. He ſays, That the Cuſtom of Faſting on Saturdays is of long ſtanding in the Church of Rome; and he deduces the Original of it from St. Peter and St. Paul, who ('tis ſaid) Faſted on this day, before they undertook the Diſpute with Simon Magus; whence ('tis thought) this Cuſtom among the Romans came. He grounds this Aſſertion on a paſſage in the Life of St. Sylveſter, of which he will have Euſebius to be the Author: But this Apocryphal Work does not ſo well juſtifie the practiſe of the Roman Church, as the paſſages in St. Auguſtin about this Faſt, and the Reflexions that he makes on the Liberty which the Churches ought to have of following their Ancient Cuſtoms. Æneas juſtifies the practice of the Church of Rome by the Teſtimonies of Pope Innocent the Firſt, of S. Hierom and S. Iſidore.

The Second Article of Diſcipline, which is of like nature with this, is, concerning the Length of the Lent-Faſt. The Greeks were offended, that the Latins did not Faſt Eight whole weeks, during which they were to abſtain from eating Fleſh, and, during ſeven weeks, from Eggs and Cheeſe. Ratramnus anſwers, That there is a great deal of difference, as well in the Eaſtern, as the Weſtern Churches, about the number of Weeks in Lent; that ſome begin it ſix, ſome ſeven, others eight, and others even nine weeks before Eaſter: That if the Faſt were to be kept exactly Forty days, thoſe who Faſt all the other days, except Sundays, muſt Faſt alſo four days of the ſeventh week: That they who Faſt not on Saturdays, or Sundays, ought to begin their Faſt the eighth week; and that thoſe who likewiſe, except Thurſdays, ought to begin nine weeks before Eaſter, to make up the number of Forty days; and, in fine, that the Roman Church begins a kind of Faſt nine Weeks before Eaſter, as well as the Greek Church, in that they leave off Singing of Hallelujah nine weeks before Eaſter: But, after all, though there are ſome Weſtern Churches that Faſt no more than ſix weeks before Eaſter, except Sundays, and, in which, by conſequence, there are but Thirty ſix days of Faſting; nevertheleſs, for the moſt part, there are added four days more of Faſting in the Seventh week before Eaſter, and that thus they Faſt more exactly than the Greeks, who keep but half a Faſt in the firſt week, ſince they do not abſtain from things made of Milk; and in the ſeven others are Three days in each week without Faſting, ſo that thus they Faſt but 36 days. Æneas ſays the ſame in his Anſwer; but he obſerves farther, that this kind of Abſtinence is various in different Churches; that in Egypt and Paleſtine they Faſt nine weeks before Eaſter; that in ſeveral parts of Italy, three days in a week they abſtain from Eating any Boil'd, Bak'd, or Roaſted Meat, their Meals being only of Fruits, Herbs and Pulſe; that in Germany they don't uſually abſtain from Milk, Butter, Cheeſe, and Eggs; that ſome do not Faſt on Holy Thurſday; and that the Roman Church ſeems more reaſonable in Faſting ſix weeks together, except Sundays, and in adding four Days to compleat the number of Forty days of Faſting.

The Fourth Objection made by the Greeks is of very little conſequence, as Ratramnus obſerves. They are offended that the Prieſts ſhave their Beards. Ratramnus makes this appear to be a matter of no moment, which wholly depends upon Cuſtom: That ſome do not ſhave their Beards, but cut the hair of their heads; That others ſhave their beards, and the Crowns of their heads, letting the hair grow that is about their Temples, and the under-part of their heads: That others ſhave off one part of their hair, and keep on the other: In fine, That the Cuſtom of the Clergy is not uniform in this matter, but different; and that there had never been any diſpute on this occaſion; that the Apoſtle St. Paul ſeems to condemn thoſe Men, who, in ſhaving their heads, put themſelves under a neceſſity of Covering them with a Veil: That nevertheleſs they are not to be blam'd, who do it out of Humility: That he does not accuſe the Greeks, nor ſhould they find fault with the Cuſtom of the Latins, who imitate the Nazarites, in ſhaving their Beards, and cutting their Hair. Æneas makes uſe of this Example, and of ſome paſſages in the Fathers that ſpeak of it, to juſtifie the Cuſtom of the Romans; and adds, That it might more reaſonably be objected to the Greeks as a Fault, that they ſuffer their hair to grow, & ſic comam nutriant, againſt the prohibition made by the Apoſtle and the Church.

The Fifth Article is, concerning the Celibacy of Prieſts. Ratramnus ſays, That if the Greeks ſeem'd Superſtitious in the other Objections, they are either very blind, or were worthy Compaſſion in this; blind, if they do not ſee that Continency is very much to be commended in Miniſters of the Altar; and, worthy of compaſſion, if, knowing it, they condemn what they are ſenſible in their own Conſciences deſerves to be prais'd. He makes it appear, that the Latins do not by this condemn Marriage; but that they prefer Continency, and eſteem it more becoming Prieſts, who ought onely to be taken up with Divine Service. Then he quotes ſome Canons, which oblige Biſhops and Prieſts to Continence. Æneas, after he has alledg'd the Texts of St. Paul, in praiſe of Celibacy, cites the Canons of Councils, Decretals of Popes, and Paſſages of Fathers, in Favour of Celibacy.

The Sixth Article is, touching the Prohibition to Prieſts of the Roman Church, to Anoint the Foreheads of thoſe that are Baptiz'd with Chriſm. Ratramnus ſays, That there is no better ground for this Objection, than for the other; ſince the Greeks have no other reaſon for doing it, beſides the Cuſtom of their Church, and no Law at all. On the the contrary, he maintains, that the Cuſtom of the Romans is grounded upon the Goſpel, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, where the Impoſition of Hands, for beſtowing of the Holy Ghoſt, is reſerv'd to the Apoſtles, and conſequently to Biſhops, who are much above Prieſts, and who have particular Offices, as conferring Holy Orders, Conſecrating the Holy Chriſm, Holy Oils, &c. He adds, That it was upon the account of their Dignity, that it was forbidden to Prieſts to Anoint the Forehead of the Baptized with Holy Chriſm. He affirms, That this was eſtabliſh'd by St. Sylveſter, as it is Written in the Pontifical, and quotes a Paſſage of Pope Innocent on this Subject. Theſe two Authorities are likewiſe urg'd by Æneas, with a paſſage of Gelaſius.

The Seventh Objection which the Greeks make againſt the Latins, is falſe in matter of Fact; They charge 'em with ordaining Biſhops and Deacons, without conferring on them the Order of Prieſthood. Ratrammus denies that this is practis'd in the Weſt. He owns, that their Deacons are choſen in order to be made Biſhops; but, he makes it appear, that this is not contrary to the Canons of the Church; whereas the Greeks violate 'em, in chooſing Lay-men to make 'em Biſhops. Æneas does not abſolutely deny, that there are ſome among the Latins who allow of this Ordination; but he excuſes their Practice upon this account, that it ſeems that he, who receives the Pontifical Benediction, is likewiſe honour'd with the other Benedictions, and that (it may be) they believ'd, according to S. Jerom, that the Miniſtery of a Prieſt makes part of a Biſhop, on which he quotes the paſſage in S. Jerom on the Epiſtle of Titus.

The Eighth Objection of the Greeks is againſt the Primacy of the Patriarch of Rome, to whom they wou'd prefer, or at leaſt equalize the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; becauſe that City was then Equal, if not Superiour to Rome. Ratrammus aſſerts this Primacy; Becauſe Jeſus Chriſt, who is the Head of the whole Church, ſaid to St. Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon This Rock will I build my Church: And St. Paul tell us, That he was among the Gentiles, as St. Peter among the Jews: That theſe two Apoſtles having receiv'd of Jeſus Chriſt the Supremacy of the Church, Quos ambos Eccleſiæ principatum à Chriſto poſitos, were ſent to Rome, as appears both by undoubted Hiſtory, and by the Monuments of their Martyrdom: That it was reaſonable, that the Prince of the Apoſtles ſhould be ſent to the Chief City of the World, to the end, that as it had ſubdued all the World to its Empire, it ſhould likewiſe preſide over all the Kingdoms of the World, by its Primacy of Religion, and the Dignity of Apoſtleſhip. He alledges ſome Paſſages of Councils and Popes to eſtabliſh this Preheminence of the Church of Rome. He affirms, That the Popes were always Preſidents at General Councils by their Legates. He makes it appear, that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, is neither to be preferred, nor equalled with that of Rome; and that he ought to be ſatisfied with the ſecond place, which was allowed him by the Council of Conſtantinople, without entrenching on the Rights of other Churches, and the Determination made by the Council of Nice. Æneas makes a Collection of the Canons of ſome Councils, and the Decretals of Popes about the Prerogatives and Dignity of the Church of Rome: He quotes ſome Spurious Tracts attributed to S. Sylveſter, as alſo the Donation of Conſtantine, and ends his Treatiſe with an Invective againſt the Condemnation of Ignatius, and the Advancement of Photius to the Patriarchate of the Church of Conſtantinople.

The Greeks made two more Objections againſt the Latins, which theſe two Authors think worth their Anſwering, becauſe they plainly appear to be falſe; however, they ought not to be forgotten. The Firſt is, that they made uſe of River-water to make the Chriſm. The Second is, that they offer'd a Lamb at Eaſter with the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the Cuſtom of the Jews. Walafridus Strabo relates, that there were ſome particular perſons, who Conſecrated and offer'd a Lamb at Eaſter. An example of this uſage, is found in the Life of S. Uldarick, and a Prayer is to be ſeen in the Roman Order, for the Benediction of the Lamb on Eaſter-day; but this was not a general Cuſtom, nor Authoriz'd by all the Latin Churches. There is much more of Argument in Ratrammus's Work than in Æneas's, which is little elſe but a Collection of paſſages on the Queſtions propos'd.

CHAP. XI.

Several Constitutions made in Ecclesiastical Assemblies, about the Discipline of the Church.

NO Princes and Bishops were ever so careful in making Rules for the Discipline of the Church, nor have so frequently renew'd and confirm'd them, as the Kings and Bishops of France in the Ninth Century. These Rules were made by them in several Assemblies, of which here follows a particular Account.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, held in 809.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle

IN this Council the Question about the Procession of the Holy Ghost was debated, which was started by a Monk of Jerusalem, called John; and, it was there determin'd, That He proceeded from the Father and the Son: And, to confirm this Determination, Charles the Great Wrote a Letter to Pope Leo the Third, in which he confirms this Doctrine by many passages out of the Fathers. He also sent Bernarius, Bishop of Wormes, Jesse, Bishop of Amiens, and Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, to that Pope, to oblige him to confirm this Definition, and to allow that the Creed might be Sung with the Addition of the Filioque. A part of the Conference, which these Deputies had with Leo on that Subject, is yet extant; by which it is evident, that this Pope did allow of their Definition; but that he was not pleas'd with this Addition made to the Creed, or that it should be Sung with it. It was also propos'd in this Council, to make some Orders concerning the Discipline of the Church, and the Lives of the Clergy, but it was not put in Execution.

The Sixth Council of Arles, in the year 813.

The Sixth Council of Arles.

IN the year 813, Charles the Great Assembled several Councils for the Reformation of the Church, design'd in the Council of Aix la Chapelle; Eginhard speaks of Five; One held at Mentz, Another at Rheims, a Third at Tours, the Fourth at Chalons, and the last at Arles: In this order these Councils are reckon'd by this Author and Regino. Nevertheless, that of Arles, and that of Rheims, are dated in the Month of May; and that of Mentz not till June; and, the two other have no date at all. We follow the Order in which they are found in the Collection of Councils, among which the Council of Arles is the first. The Bishops met in St. Stephen's Church at Arles, on the Tenth of May, and after they had taken their places, according to the time of their Ordination, and Prayed for the Emperour Charles, who had Assembled them; John, Arch-bishop of Arles, and Hebridius, Arch-bishop of Narbonne, who were the Emperour's Deputies, told them, That His Majesty earnestly pray'd and desir'd them to Instruct the Churches that were committed to their Charge, with Saving Doctrines, and to be Exemplary to them for the Sanctity of their Lives and Manners. They added, That in Acknowledgment of the King's Kindness and Favours, it was fit that Prayers should be order'd to be daily made in the Church for the Health and Prosperity of His Majesty. The next day the Bishops being met again, began their Constitutions with a Profession of Faith: Then they order'd, that Prayers should be made for the Emperour, which were the Two first Articles of this Council. In the Third, the Metropolitans were order'd to take care, that their Suffragans should be well Instructed in Sacred Things; That they should understand what belonged to Baptism, The Holy Scripture, and the Canons, that they might be able to Teach, Preach to, and Edify all the World by their Knowledge and Piety. In the Fourth, the Laity is forbidden to turn the Priests out of their Churches, without the Bishops Sentence, who ought not to prefer them to any Churches, unless he be well assur'd of their capacity. The Fifth forbids the Laity to take Bribes of Priests for presenting them to Churches. The Sixth enjoyns Bishops to Regulate the Lives of Monks and Canons. The Seventh says, That none but persons of known Honesty, and of considerable Age, shall have leave to come into Nunneries; and that those who shall come in there to Celebrate Divine Service, shall withdraw as soon as it is over; That neither young Clerks, nor Monks, shall be permitted to come thither, unless it be to see some of their Relations. The Eighth ordains, That no Monastery shall receive a greater number of Maids than it can maintain. The Ninth, that Tithes shall be paid. The Tenth, that the Rectors and Vicars shall take care to Preach, and Instruct their Congregation. The Eleventh forbids Marriages between Relations. The Twelfth recommends Peace and Unity. The Thirteenth Obedience to the Bishops, and Concord between Priests and the Civil Magistracy. The Fourteenth regards the Relief of the Poor in time of Famine. The Fifteenth is against False Measures. The Sixteenth forbids keeping Markets on Sundays, and Working Working in Servile Employments. The Seventeenth enjoyns Bishops to Visit their Dioceſſes every year, and to hinder Oppreſſion and Violence. The Eighteenth commands, that Prieſts ſhall keep the Holy Chriſm under Lock and Key; that they ſhall give none of it to any perſon as a Medicine, or for any other Reaſon whatever; becauſe it is a kind of Sacrament which ought not to be touch'd but by the Prieſts. The Nineteenth recommends to Fathers and Godfathers Care of the Inſtruction and Education of their Children, both Natural and Spiritual. The Twentieth declares, that the Churches ſhall not be depriv'd of their Tithes, nor of the Goods belonging to them. The One and twentieth forbids Burials in Churches. The Two and twentieth ordains, that no Pleadings nor Aſſemblies ſhall be held in Churches, or in the Porches of Churches. The Twenty third is to prevent the Frauds and Cheats that are us'd in the Sale of the Goods of the Poor. The Twenty fourth forbids Biſhops to permit any ſtrange or fugitive Prieſts in their Dioceſſes, and enjoyns 'em to ſend 'em back to their own Biſhops. The Twenty fifth orders, that thoſe who hold any Benefices, or have Goods belonging to Churches, ſhall be obliged to contribute to the Repairing of thoſe Churches. The Twenty ſixth, That Publick Sinners ſhall doe Publick Penance.

The Council of Mentz, in the ſame year.

THis Council was more famous and numerous than the preceding, and made more Canons: It was holden in St. Alban's Church, the 8th of June, in the year 813. There were four Deputies from the Emperour preſent at it, Hildebaud, Riculphus, Arnoldus, and Bernarius. The Aſſembly divided themſelves into three Claſſes: The Biſhops made up the firſt, who had before them the Holy Scripture, the Canons, and the Paſtoral of St. Gregory: The ſecond conſiſted of Abbots and Monks, who examined the Rule of S. Benedict. The laſt was compoſed of Noblemen and Judges, who conſider'd what concern'd the Civil Government. After a Faſt of three days, they made Fifty ſix Canons. In the Three firſt they ſpeak of the Three Vertues, Faith, Hope and Charity. In the Fourth it is ordain'd, That Baptiſm ſhould be Adminiſtered, according to the Roman Ritual, and that it ſhall not be Adminiſtered, but at Eaſter, or Whitſuntide, unleſs there be a neceſſity for it. The Three following Canons are for ſetling Peace, and to prevent the taking away another Man's Goods unjuſtly. The Eighth grants to the Biſhop the diſpoſal of the Revenues belonging to the Church. The Ninth, and the following, contain ſeveral Orders concerning the Lives of Prebendaries and Monks, to whom they prohibit Worldly Pleaſures, and the Secular Employment. The Prebendaries or Canons are there diſtinguiſh'd from the Monks, and the Canoneſſes from the Nuns, who are of the Order of S. Benedict. The Two and twentieth is againſt Vagabond Clerks. The Three and twentieth ſets at liberty the Clerks and Monks who have been ſhav'd, and Cloiſter'd by force. The Twenty fifth enjoyns Biſhops to appoint ſome others to Preach in their ſtead, when they can't perform this Duty. The Twenty eighth commands Prieſts to wear Stoles always as Badges of the Sacerdotal Office. The Thirty Second and Thirty third recommend the Obſervation of Litanies, or of Rogations. The Thirty fifth that of Emberweeks. The Thirty ſixth the Celebration of High Holy-days, which are Eaſter-Day, and all the Week, Aſcenſion-Day, Whitſuntide, the Feaſts of St. Peter and St. Paul, the Nativity of St. John, the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael, the Holy-days of S. Remigius, S. Martin, and St. Andrew; Four days at Chriſtmas, and the Octave of Chriſtmas-day, the Epiphany, the Purification, with the Holy-days of Martyrs and Confeſſors, in each Dioceſs, where the Body of any one of them lies, and the Day of the Dedication of the Church. The Fortieth maintains the ancient Right of Churches, in being made Sanctuaries, and forbids that thoſe ſhall be deliver'd up, who come thither for Refuge, till their Lives are ſecur'd. The Three and fortieth declares, that one Prieſt cannot Sing Maſs alone. The Four and fortieth reminds the People, that they ought to make frequent Offerings in the Church, and to give one another Pax. The Five and fortieth exhorts the Faithful to be careful in the Inſtruction of their Children. The Six and fortieth threatens thoſe with Excommunication, who ſhall not refrain from Drunkenneſs. The Eight and fortieth forbids the Singing any Lewd or Immodeſt Songs, in going round any Churches. The Fiftieth appoints the Titles of the Vidames, and Defenders, or other Officers of Biſhops, Abbots, or their Clergy-men. The One and fiftieth forbids the Tranſlation of Reliques without leave. The Four and fiftieth orders, that Relations in the Fourth Degree ſhall not be allow'd to joyn in Matrimony. The Five and fiftieth forbids Parents preſenting their own Children at the Font, or Marrying one's God-daughter, or one's Partner in the Suretyſhip at a Child's Baptiſm, or even the Perſon, whoſe Son or Daughter one has brought to be Confirm'd. I have omitted ſome Canons that are mention'd in the foregoing Council.

The Council of Mentz.

Vidames] were ſuch perſons, as ſupplied the Biſhops places, as Temporal Lords: Judges of Biſhops Temporal Juriſdiction. Now they are become Lords, holding of the Biſhoprick they belong to.

The

The Council of Rheims, in the ſame year.

The Council of Rheims. AFter a Profeſſion of Faith had been drawn up in this Council, and the Clergy had been admoniſh'd to doe their Duty, the Goſpel was Read. The manner of Celebrating the Divine Service, and of Adminiſtring Baptiſm, was explain'd. The Canons, the Rule preſcribed by S. Benedict, the Book Written by S. Gregory, concerning the Duty of Paſtors, and ſome Sentences out of the Fathers were Read. What relates to Penance was examin'd, that the Prieſts might know how they were to hear Confeſſions, and what Penances they were to enjoyn. Eight of the Chief Vices were alſo diſcours'd of in this Council; and the Biſhops were told what they ought to Study, and how they ſhould Preach. They were directed to lead a Chaſt, Sober, and Modeſt Life, and to doe Juſtice. As for Prieſts, they were enjoyn'd not to Remove from a Meaner Benefice to one that was Greater; and it was order'd, that ſuch as ſhould obtain any by Preſents, or Money, ſhould be depos'd. Several Canons were made concerning the Lives of Clergy-men and Monks, as alſo concerning the preſervation of the Goods of the Church, and the keeping the Sabbath-day Holy. This is all that is contain'd in the Four and forty Articles, or Canons of this Council, which are nothing but the Summary or Abridgment of the Matters that were tranſacted there.

The Third Council of Tours, in the ſame year.

The Council of Tours. THe Prelates of the Province of Tours took no leſs care than the other Biſhops to Reform the Lives of the Clergy, and the Diſcipline of the Church. In a Council that was conven'd in that Town, in the ſame year 813, they made Fifty one Canons upon the ſame Subjects. The Biſhops are charg'd by them, to Inſtruct themſelves and others; to lead a Sober, Modeſt Life; to abſtain from Games, Shows, and Hunting; to take care of the Poor, &c. The ſame is enjoyn'd the Prieſts, and other Clergy-men. 'Tis forbidden to beſtow the Order of Knighthood on any Man, before he be Thirty years of Age. In ſhort, moſt of the Canons mention'd in the foregoing Councils are treated of in this.

The Second Council of Chalons, in the ſame year.

The Council of Chalons. THis Council is the beſt of the Five, held that year by Charles the Great's Order, for Reforming the Church, and particularly the Clergy; but it is the moſt conſiderable for the number of Canons, and for the Matters of which it treats. In the firſt Canon, it condemns, with a great deal of ſtrictneſs, the Avarice, Sordid Gain, and Exactions of the Biſhops, and other Clergy-men. Among other things, it enjoyns the Biſhops not to be a Charge to the Rectors of Pariſhes in their Viſitations; and their Arch-deacons not to demand of them any Fees, or any thing for the Holy Chriſm. It will not have them to oblige the Clerks, whom they Ordain, to Swear that they are worthy, nor that they will never doe any thing contrary to the Canons, and will be obedient to their Ordinaries. It does not preſcribe many things to the Monks, becauſe it obſerves, that thoſe of that Province are to follow S. Bennet's Rule, and conſequently need but to keep exactly to their Rule to live as they ought. It requires the Reeſtabliſhing of Publick Penance, for Publick Sins. To ſtop, or prevent the Differences that happen among Heirs, concerning the Right of Patronage of a Church, it orders, that it ſhall not be divided, and that none of the Clergy, nam'd by different heirs, ſhall be ſuffer'd to perform their Function there, till they are agreed together, and have Elected one and no more. Some perſons were ſo devout as to be Confirm'd many times; this Council forbids this abuſe in the 27th Canon. In the Thirtieth it is forbidden to diſſolve the Marriages of Slaves. Some Women, with a deſign of being Divorc'd from their Husbands, brought their Children, at the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, or Confirmation: Now, this Council orders, that theſe Women ſhall be oblig'd to doe Penance, and not be Divorc'd. The 32d intimates, that we ought not to make Confeſſion of our Corporeal Sins onely, but alſo of the Spiritual. Theſe are the words of the 33d. Some ſay, That we ought to Confeſs our Sins to God alone; others affirm, That they ought to be Confeſs'd to Prieſts: Both are done with great Benefit in the Holy Church; ſo that we Confeſs our Sins to God, who does forgive them; and, according to the Apoſtle's Inſtitution, we Confeſs them to each other, and Pray for each other, that we may be Sav'd. So the Confeſſion which is made to God Purges from Sin; and that which is made to the Prieſt, informs us, how we ought to be Purged from them: For, God is the Author of our Salvation, and grants it us, ſometimes in an Inviſible manner, by his Omnipotence, and ſometimes by the Operation of Phyſicians. Which Canon only proves, that the Confeſſion which is made to Prieſts ought to be attended with an Humble Confeſſion of Sins to God; or, it is to be only underſtood of Venial Sins; it being certain, that it is neceſſary, that Mortal Sins be Confeſs'd to Prieſts, that we may obtain a Forgiveneſs of thoſe Sins. This Counril, in the next Canon, exhorts the Prieſts to act like Phyſicians, and like Judges, and to enjoyn Salutary and Suitable Penances to Sinners. It lets Penitents know, after this, that Repentance, if it be true, ought to be attended with a Change, both in the Heart, and Courſe of Life. It enjoyns all Confeſſors to take their Meaſures, concerning the Injunction of Penances, from the Holy Writ, and the Canons, Canons, or from the Cuſtom of the Church; and, to reject ſuch Penitential Books, the Errors of which are unqueſtionable, and their Authors uncertain, which have occaſion'd the Death of many, becauſe they onely injoyn ſlight Penances for great Sins. In the Nine and thirtieth Canon it is order'd, that Prayers be ſaid for the Dead at every Maſs. The Fortieth orders, that ſuch Clergy-men as have been, or ſhall be degraded for their Crimes, be ſhut up in Monaſteries, that they may lead there a Penitent Life. The One and fortieth is againſt ſuch Prieſts as change their Church. The Two and Fortieth is againſt thoſe who give Churches to Prieſts, or take Churches from them, without the Conſent of the Biſhops. The Three and fortieth is againſt certain Iriſh-men, who giving themſelves out to be Biſhops, did ordain Prieſts and Deacons, without the conſent of the Ordinaries: Their Ordinations are here declared to be void. The Four and fortieth is againſt thoſe Prieſts, that follow ſuch Trades as are forbidden them. The Five and fortieth is againſt thoſe who go in Pilgrimage to Rome or Tours, thinking, by this means, to obtain more eaſily the Remiſſion of their Sins; and who, in hopes of this, the more freely commit them: But the Council approves the Piety of thoſe, who, having firſt Confeſs'd their Sins at the place of their abode, and there done Penance, and begun a new Courſe of Life, go afterwards in Pilgrimage, by a motive of real Devotion, and with a ſincere deſign of expiating their ſins. The Six and fortieth imports, that a great deal of caution ought to be us'd in what relates to the Receiving of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. That 'tis to be fear'd on one ſide, if it be too long put off, this delay ſhould occaſion the loſs of the Soul; but that on the other ſide, if 'tis receiv'd Unworthily, not conſidering the Lord's Body, thoſe that Receive, are like to eat and drink their own Damnation. So that all perſons ought to try, and examine themſelves before, abſtaining, for ſome time, from Carnal Works, and cleanſing the Body and the Soul. The Seven and fortieth orders, that all Chriſtians ſhall receive the Eucharift on Holy Thurſday, except thoſe to whom it is forbidden to take it, on the account of the great Crimes which they have committed. The Eight and fortieth recommends the Anointing of the Sick, which ought to be perform'd by Prieſts, with an Oil Conſecrated by the Biſhop; adding, that a Remedy ſo fit to cure the Infirmities of the Soul and the Body, ought not to be neglected. The Nine and fortieth renews the Inhibition made by the Council of Laodicea, to Celebrate the Sacrament in private houſes. The Fiftieth orders the keeping of the Lord's Day Holy. The One and fiftieth recommends Charity between Superiours and Inferiours. The Two and fiftieth commands the Abbeſſes to Rule the Nuns committed to their Charge, with Holineſs and Piety, and to be themſelves a good Example to them. The following Canons are ſome Directions for Abbeſſes and Nunneries. There are, in all, Sixty ſix Canons of this Council.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 816.

Lewis the Godly having Conven'd a Numerous Council at Aix la Chapelle, in the year 816, caused two Rules to be drawn up there, by Amalarius, out of the Writings of the Holy Fathers, the one for the Canons, and the other for the Canoneſſes. They were Read and Approv'd in this Council; which order'd, they ſhould be follow'd and practis'd by all Canons and Canoneſſes. The Emperour confirm'd them with his own Authority, and ſent Copies of them to the Biſhops, that they might take care to have them put in Execution. I do not here give the Abridgment of thoſe two Rules, becauſe they wholly conſiſt of ſome Extracts of the Canons of the Councils, and of the Writings of the Latin Fathers. The Council of Aix la Chapelle.

'Twas not the French alone that were endeavouring to reform the Diſcipline of the Church; The Engliſh, mov'd by their Example, did the like. Kenwolfe, King of the Mercians, caus'd a Council to Meet in the ſame year 816; The Arch-biſhop of Canterbury preſided in it, and Twelve Biſhops of the different Kingdoms in England were preſent; Eleven Canons were made in it: In the Firſt, the Biſhops declare, That they will preſerve the Faith and Orthodox Doctrine in their Purity, which they receiv'd from their Fathers. In the Second they ſay, That when a Church is built, it ought to be Conſecrated by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs; that afterwards the Eucharift ought to be ſet there, with Relicks in a Cheſt; and that 'tis requiſite the Figure of the Saint to whom it is Dedicated, be placed in ſome part of it. The Third is an Exhortation to Concord and Unity among the Biſhops. The Fourth gives a Biſhop Power to Elect an Abbot, or Abbeſs, yet with the Advice and Conſent of the Society. The Fifth enjoyns that no Iriſh-man be ſuffer'd to diſcharge any Eccleſiaſtical Function out of their own Country. The Sixth confirms the Ancient Canons, and all Acts ratified and confirmed with the Sign of the Croſs. The Seventh is to prevent the Alienation of the Goods of the Church. The Eighth charges Layicks, or Secular perſons, not to take poſſeſſion of Monaſteries, or alter their Inſtitution. The Ninth directs each Biſhop to have a Regiſter, in which the Orders of the Synods, which he is to obſerve, are to be ſet down, with the Name of the Arch-biſhop, on whom he depends, and of the other Biſhops in the Province. The Tenth imports, that after the Death of a Biſhop, the Tenth part of his Eſtate ſhall be diſtributed to the poor, or to pious Uſes; and that Prayers ſhall be ſaid for him throughout his whole Dioceſs, that he may obtain the King- The Council of Celichith.

dom of Heaven, and dwell with the Saints. The Eleventh orders the Biſhops to do nothing in the Dioceſſes of their Brethren without their leave. The Arch-biſhop is excepted, becauſe he is the Head of the Biſhops. It charges the Prieſts not to perform any other Functions than ſuch as are left to them by the Biſhops, as that of Baptizing, and giving the Extreme-Unction. It eſtabliſhes ſome Penalties againſt thoſe that did neglect to adminiſter Baptiſm; and finally it orders, that this Sacrament ſhall not be perform'd by Sprinkling, but by Dipping.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 817.

The Council of Aix laChapelle

IN the following year Lewis the Godly held an Aſſembly of Abbots and Monks at Aix la Chapelle, and cauſed ſome Conſtitutions for Monks to be prepar'd by Benedict of Aniane, charging that Abbot to ſee them kept. Theſe Conſtitutions are Eighty in all. An account of Abbeys, and of what they were to pay to the Crown was alſo drawn up in that Aſſembly.

The Council of Thionville.

The Council of Thionville.

IN the year 821, there was an Aſſembly at Thionville, which made ſome Laws againſt thoſe who ſhould offer to Miſuſe or beat a Clerk, and the time of their Penance is fixed. Theſe Eccleſiaſtical Laws were confirm'd by an Edict of Lewis the Godly, which is at the end of them.

The Capitularies, or Sanctions of Lewis the Godly.

The Capitularies of Lewis the Godly.

Lewis the Godly following his Father's Pious Example, made ſeveral Laws, and Wrote ſome Letters about Eccleſiaſtical Matters.

In the Firſt year of his Empire he paſs'd an Edict in Favour of the Spaniards who fled into France from the Perſecution of the Saracens. Another Edict made in his Third year, on the ſame Subject, is extant.

In the year 816, he Confirmed the Conſtitutions that were made at the Council of Aix la Chapelle, and gave Orders, that they ſhould be follow'd by Letters to Magnus, Arch-biſhop of Sens; to Frotarius, Arch-biſhop of Bourdeaux; to Arnaldus, Arch-biſhop of Salsburgh, and to other Metropolitans. In the ſame year he alſo made Twenty nine Capitularies on the Diſcipline of the Church. In the firſt he takes care to ſecure to the Church thoſe Revenues that belong to it. In the Second, he leaves to the Clergy and the People the Liberty of chooſing their own Biſhops. In the Third he confirms the Rules of Prebendaries. In the Fourth he orders, that a good uſe be made of the Oblations given at Church. In the Fifth he leaves to the Monks the power of chuſing their own Abbots. In the Sixth, he forbids the conferring Holy Orders on Slaves. In the Seventh, he enjoyns the Clergy not to receive ſuch Oblations, as might cauſe the Children, or Relations of thoſe that make them, to be depriv'd of their Inheritance. In the Eighth, the Prieſts are forbidden to give the Tonſure to any Perſon, with a Deſign to get a part of his Eſtate. In the Ninth the Laity are charg'd not to turn the Prieſts out of their Churches, or Inſtall any there without the Biſhop's conſent. In the Tenth, he orders, that every Church have a piece of Ground belonging to it, and that no Prieſts apply their Revenues but to the Service of the Church. In the Eleventh, that every Church have its Prieſt: That the New Villages, where New Churches ſhall be built, pay Tythes to thoſe Churches. The Thirteenth forbids to Pawn the Holy Veſſels, unleſs it be for the Redemption of Captives. The Sixteenth is againſt the Simoniacal Exactions, that were practis'd by ſome Biſhops of Italy. The Seventeenth renews the Canon which forbids Prieſts to dwell with Women. In the Eighteenth, 'tis ordered, that the Biſhop ſhall ſend the Chriſm to ſuch Rectors of Pariſhes as are remote, by one of thoſe in their Neighbourhood; but that all thoſe who dwell but a League, or a League and a half out of Town, ſhall come to fetch it as uſually. In the Nineteenth, the Biſhops are exhorted not to be a charge to the People, when they go either to Preach, or to Confirm. In the Twentieth 'tis decreed, that none preſume to make young Maids, Nuns; or Boys, Monks, i. e. without the conſent of their Relations. The One and twentieth obliges Widows not to take the Veil, till Thirty days after their Husbands deceaſe. The Three following Canons are concerning Raviſhers. The Five and twentieth renews Gelaſius's Canon, againſt thoſe that either debauched any of the Virgins who had been Conſecrated to God, or ran away with them. In the Six and twentieth 'tis enjoyn'd, that no Maid ſhall receive the Veil before ſhe be Five and twenty years of Age, according to the Canons of Africa. The Seven and twentieth forbids the Tryal by the Croſs. In the Eight and twentieth the Biſhops are charg'd to Inſtruct the people of their Dioceſs. The laſt forbids Marriages between Relations, and the ſharing of Churches between Co-heirs, and promiſes to take care to prevent this and many other things.

It

In the year 817, this Emperour publiſhed ſome Conſtiturions for the Monks; which Orders were drawn up at Aix la Chapelle by Benedict of Aniane.

Some mention an Edict of Confirmation made by Lewis the Godly, which, they ſay, he confirmed in favour of Pope Paſchal II. the pretended Donations made by his Father to the Roman Church; but that Piece plainly appears to be ſuppoſititious, and does not deſerve the leaſt credit.

The Capitularies of the year 819, are almoſt all of them Civil Laws. Some of them, nevertheleſs, relate to the Church; particularly in the laſt Capitulary, publiſhed by Baluzius, page 619.

In the year 821, he Wrote a Letter to the Monks of Aniane, to exhort them to follow the Rules that had been eſtabliſhed in their Monaſtery by their Abbot Bennet. He promiſes them his protection on the account of the Love he had for him, and confirms their Abbey in a Free Tenure, and the liberty they had of chuſing their Abbot.

In the year 822, at the Requeſt of the Biſhops Conven'd at Thionville, he made ſome Laws, by which he enjoyned very ſevere puniſhments for thoſe, who calumniate, revile, miſuſe, or put to death any Clergy-man.

In the ſame year he made a Capitulary in favour of the Nuns of S. Croſſe at Poictiers.

In the year 824, he cauſed ſome Inſtructions to be compoſed for Jeremiah, Arch-biſhop of Sens, and Jonas, Biſhop of Orleans, his Deputies at Rome, in the Affair of Images, according to the preſcription of the Council of Paris; and he Wrote a Letter to Pope Eugenius the Second on that Subject.

In the year 826, there was an Aſſembly at Inghilheim, where ſome Laws were publiſh'd againſt thoſe that ſhould offer any violence to perſons conſecrated to God.

In the year 828, he appointed Four Councils, viz. at Mentz, Paris, Lions, and Tholouſe; commanded a Solemn Faſt, and ſent Deputies to theſe Councils, to whom he gave ſome Inſtructions; and, on this occaſion, he Wrote two Letters, which were addreſs'd to the People.

In the year 829, he caus'd the Decrees of theſe Four Councils to be examin'd in an Aſſembly held at Wormes, and extracted ſome Capitularies out of them.

In the year 832, he made an Edict, to confirm the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Monaſtick Rule in the Abbey of St. Denys, which Monaſtery was originally made up of Benedictine Monks. The Monks had taken the Habit and way of living of Canons, except ſome of them, who had retir'd within a Houſe that belong'd to the Abbey, by the Advice of Benedict and Arnoldus, who, being come to Reform that Abbey, had not been able to effect it; and had advis'd thoſe who had a mind to follow S. Bennet's Rule, to withdraw from the reſt. After this, Hilduin having demanded, that the Rule ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd in that Abbey, a Council held at Paris deputed Aldricus, Arch-biſhop of Sens, and Ebbon, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, to doe it. Now when theſe were come to the Abbey, they found three ſorts of Religious Men there; ſome of them ſaid, They never profeſs'd a Monaſtick Life, and that they deſir'd ſtill to live like Canons; Some others confeſſing, they had profeſs'd a Monaſtick Life, were ſorry that they had left it, took again the Habit of Monks, and led a life conformable to its Rules; and a third ſort had always lived like Monks in a ſeparate Houſe. Theſe two Arch-biſhops ſettled again the Monaſtick Order in the Abbey of St. Denys. But, afterwards, many of thoſe who had reſum'd the Monaſtick Habit and Way of Living, repented the doing it, proteſted againſt it, and preſented their Petition to the Emperour againſt Hilduin, and againſt Aldricus and Ebbon; but, it being rejected, they reſolv'd to return to their Duty, and made three Charters, by which they bound themſelves to follow S. Bennet's Rule; one of which was preſented to Lewis the Godly, who confirmed it by the Edict of which we are now Treating.

In the year 834, he made the City of Hamburgh an Arch-biſhoprick, as ſoon as Anſcharius ſhould be ordained Biſhop of it; and he aſſign'd him all the People in the North of the Elbe, by his Declaration of the 15th of March in the ſame year.

The Sixth Council of Paris, held in the year 829.

The Sixth Council of Paris.

Lewis the Godly imitating his Father Charles the Great's piety and zeal, caus'd four Councils to be conven'd in the year 829, to reform all the Churches in France. Theſe Councils met at Mentz, at Lyons, at Tholouſe, and at Paris; but we have nothing left of them all, but the Conſtitutions of that at Paris, which are excellent and very well Written. The Biſhops begin with an Expoſition of the True Faith, in which they ſhow, That Good Works ought to be joyn'd with Faith, that it may become Saving. They add, That it muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Church is but one Body, which is divided into two principal parts, the Sacerdotal and the Regal. On this point they quote the paſſage in S. Gelaſius, and S. Fulgentius. Then they enlarge on the Learning and Vertues that are requiſite in a Miniſter of the Church. They order, that unleſs neceſſity require it, none ſhall be Baptized at any other times but thoſe preſcribed by the Canons; and that the God-fathers ſhall take care to inſtruct their God-children in the Faith. They renew the Inhibition made, to hinder ſuch as were Baptized out of the Solemn Times, being ſick, from entering into Holy Orders. They exhort all Chriſtians to remember the Promiſes they have made at their Baptiſm. They enlarge upon the Qualities and Vertues which thoſe ought to have that enter into Holy Orders. They enjoyn the Biſhops not to Alienate the the Revenues of the Church, and preſcribe to them the uſe they ought to make of them. They alſo order, that they recite the Canonical Hours with their Clergy, and hold Spiritual Conferences. They forbid them to prefer to any Church ſuch Clergy-men as are preſented to them by Laities, unleſs they find them duly qualified, and of ſound Morals. They exhort them to doe their duty towards the Flock that is committed to their Charge, and not uſe it as their own, but as belonging to Chriſt, and to aſſiſt it Corporally and Spiritually. They complain, that Provincial Councils were not ſtill holden every year; and ſhow, how beneficial that Practice was to the Church. They reprove the attempts of the Suffragan Biſhops. They condemn the Prieſts that become either Farmers, or Men of Buſineſs, and wandring Clergy-men and Monks. They charge the Biſhops not to ſend to ſeveral diſtinct parts ſuch Prieſts as belong to ſome particular Church. They recommend Reſidence to the Prieſts, and a conſtant attendance to Inſtruct their Flocks. They charge the Biſhops not to put their Clergy to expenſe in their Viſitations. They condemn ſeveral Penitentials to be burnt, and charge the Prieſts to fulfil, as they ought, the Miniſtery of the Keys. They order the Biſhops not to give the Sacrament of Confirmation, after they have eaten, and believe that Sacraments ought to be Adminiſtered Faſting, unleſs on extraordinary occaſions. They would not have them beſtow the Holy Ghoſt by Impoſition of hands, which is the Sacrament of Confirmation, at any other times than at Eaſter, and on Whitſunday. They renew the Ancient Canons againſt the Crimes of Uncleanneſs. They will have Degraded Prieſts put into a ſtate of Penance. They forbid the Admiſſion of Foreign Clergy-men. They adviſe the Abbots to be an Example to their reſpective Societies. They exhort the Clergy to behave themſelves Modeſtly, Decently, and Honeſtly. They will not have ſuch Women as have newly left a Worldly State to be Superiors [i. e. Abbeſſes] of Nuns. The Prieſts are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows without the Biſhops conſent, and alſo Conſecrating Virgins; and the Abbeſſes are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows or Maids. They will not have the Veil to be given to Widows, till ſome time after the death of their Husbands. They do not permit Women to touch the Sacred Veſſels, nor to give the Sacerdotal Habits to the Prieſts, and much leſs to give the Euchariſt, as, through a great abuſe, they did in ſome places. They charge all Prieſts and Canons not to go into any Nunnery, nor will they have Maſs ſaid in any other place than Publick and Conſecrated Churches, ſaying, That 'tis better not to hear Maſs, than to hear it where it ought not to be ſaid. Prieſts are order'd not to ſay Maſs when they are alone. They order, that, as there is a Biſhop in each City [or Town] there ought to be a Prieſt in each Church; and they forbid one Prieſt Officiating at ſeveral Churches. After they have ſpoken of keeping the Lord's-Day Holy, according to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, they reſolve that an Addreſs be made to the Prince, to deſire, that he may Command, that no Pleadings, nor Markets be kept on that Day; and that neither Husbandmen, nor Day-labourers Work on that Day in the Countrey. They forbid all Vexations and Uſury. Finally, they will not allow thoſe Penitents, who are not yet reconciled to the Church, to ſtand God-fathers to Children. This is what is handled in the firſt part of this Council, ſo far as it relates to the Clergy, and to the Prieſtly Office. The Second concerns Princes, and the Laity. The Biſhops give ſome very good Inſtructions to Kings concerning their Duties. They recommend to them Juſtice, Moderation, Clemency, and other Royal Vertues. They declare to their Subjects, that they ought to obey them, and revere their Power which comes from God. They exhort the Faithful to come to Church, to joyn in the Prayers, and admoniſh them to behave themſelves reverently there. Finally, they charge thoſe who cannot come to Church, nevertheleſs to pray to God, and perform the Duties which they owe him. Theſe Articles being fram'd, they ſent them to the Emperour Lewis, and added Twenty ſeven Chapters to them, which they pray'd His Majeſty to Enact, and cauſe them to be put in Execution, that the aforeſaid Articles might continue and be in force.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 836.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle.

IN the year 836, in the Month of February, there was an Aſſembly of Biſhops at Aix la Chapelle, in which ſome Conſtitutions were made, which are divided into three parts. The Firſt is, concerning the Vertues of Biſhops: The Second, touching the Learning, Manners, and Doctrine of other Clergy; And the Third, of the Vertues and Duties of the Emperour, and his Children, principally in what relates to Church Affairs. A Remonſtrance was prepar'd afterwards by the ſaid Council, Addreſs'd to King Pepin, and the Great Men of His Kingdom, on the occaſion of their having ſeiz'd, to their own uſe, the Goods of the Church; and, that the ſaid Remonſtrance might be more effectual, it was attended with three Books, that contain'd the Examples and Paſſages in the Old and New Teſtament; as alſo, ſome Eccleſiaſtical Laws, which make it appear, that 'tis a Crime to take away, by force, thoſe Goods that are Conſecrated to God and the Church. Eginhard tells us, That this Remonſtrance wrought the deſir'd effect, and that Pepin yielded to theſe Advices which were given him by his Father and the Biſhops; ſo that he cauſed the Goods which had been taken from the Churches, to be reſtor'd.

The

The Council of Thionville.

IN the year 844, Lewis the Godly's three Sons met at Thionville, and held there an Aſſembly of Biſhops, of which Dreux, Biſhop of Metz, was Preſident. They exhorted theſe Princes, Firſt, To keep a Peaceable, and Friendly Correſpondence with each other. Secondly, To Name Biſhops to the Vacant Churches. Thirdly, To reſtore to ſome Monks the Places and Revenues that ought to belong to them. Fourthly, to hinder the Laity from taking into their poſſeſſion the Goods of the Church. Fifthly, That if ſome Reaſons of State obliged them to give ſome Abbeys, or Houſes of Canons, or Nuns, in Commendam; at leaſt they ſhould give order, that the Biſhop, with ſome Abbot, might take care of thoſe Monaſteries and Religious Houſes. Sixthly, To reſtore to the Whole Eccleſiaſtical Order, the Authority which they had, to cauſe the Diſcipline of the Church to be put in Execution, and oblige Sinners to doe Penance. The Council of Thionville.

The Council of Verneuil.

IN the ſame year 844, a Council was held at Verneuil, in which, Ebron, Biſhop of Poictiers was Preſident, with Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, Hincmarus, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, and the Abbot of S. Dennys, who aſſiſted at it, bore the Character of the King's Commiſſioners. The Council addreſſes their Conſtitutions to King Charles. Firſt of all they exhort him to mix Severity with Mercy, and Govern his people with Juſtice. They pray him to ſend his Commiſſioners to apprehend, and puniſh thoſe diſorderly Clergy-men, who contemn Apoſtolick Diſcipline, and break the Holy Canons, to hinder ſeveral Monks, that they abandon not their Profeſſion, to compel certain wandring Monks, and Clergy-men to return to their Monaſteries and Churches, to Nominate a Biſhop for the Church of Rheims, and confirm the Ordination of Agius to the Church of Autun; to Adjourn the Debate about the preference granted to Dreux the Biſhop of Metz, to a more Numerous Council out of France and Germany; and laſtly, to cauſe thoſe Revenues of the Church to be Reſtored, which Lay-men have unjuſtly poſſeſſed themſelves of. The Council of Verneuil.

The Council of Beauvais.

IN 845, Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, Erchanraus, and Nine Biſhops, or Arch-biſhops of Charles's Kingdom, with Hincmarus, Arch-biſhop Elect of Rheims, met in April at Beauvais, and compoſed Eight Canons, which they preſented to that Prince, to require of him a Reſtitution of the Revenues and Privileges of the Church. In this Synod Hincmarus was Ordain'd. The Council of Beauvais.

The Councils of Meaux, in 845. and Paris, in 846.

THE Biſhops of France being very earneſt to perfect the Reformation of Diſcipline, which they had begun, met in May 845, at Meaux; and in February following at Paris, where they compoſed 80 Canons for that end. The Six firſt were the Decrees made at Couleine, near Mons, concerning the Honour of the Church, and Peace of the State, which had the Approbation of the King, and Biſhops. Thoſe that follow, to the 13th, are the Canons made at the Synod at Thionville. The Four next are taken out of the Council held at Lorris in Anjou, about the Authority of the King. To theſe are added the Decrees of the Council of Beauvais, concerning the Revenues of the Church. The reſt were made either at Meaux, or Paris. In them the Biſhops declare, that their Manſion-Houſes ought to be Holy, and not frequented by Secular Men, or Women. And for this reaſon it is, that they deſire the King, that when he takes up his Lodgings in them, in his Journeys, that he would not bring any Women into them. They alſo earneſtly beg of him, that he would not ſuffer his Retinue, or Guards, to Pillage the Towns they paſs through, or take what they pleaſe of the people without paying for it: They exhort him to maintain the Biſhops in their right of doing their Office, without Moleſtation, and executing the Holy Canons. They condemn the cuſtom of certain Biſhops, who very ſeldom, or never Viſit their Dioceſſes. They revive the Ancient Laws concerning the Tranſlation of Biſhops, the Honour due to Metropolitans, holding Provincial Councils, and Reſidence, &c. They forbid taking Oaths about things Sacred. They demand a Reſtitution of the Ancient Hoſpitals, and the Freedom of Monaſteries. They condemn them that are Simoniacally Ordain'd. They forbid the Suffragan Biſhops to execute the Functions of Biſhops. They command the Biſhops to Conſecrate the Chriſm upon Holy Thurſday onely, and not to take any thing for the Diſtribution of it. They forbid Lay-men making themſelves Maſters of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, or chooſing a Steward of them without the Conſent of the Biſhop, to whom the Diſpoſal of them doth properly belong. They ſtrictly prohibit any Prieſts to Adminiſter Baptiſm in any other places than in the Churches where the Fonts ſtand; and that Clergy-men ſhould be employed in any other buſineſs beſides what belongs to the Church. They ordain, that the Prieſts, or Clergy of another Dioceſs ſhall not be received without Letters Dimiſſory. They forbid, that any Strangers ſhall be admitted into Holy Orders, till they have The Councils of Meaux and Paris.

continued one year in the Communion of ſome Church, or Monaſtery, or in the City, and declare themſelves againſt all Ordinations without a Title. They require all Prebendaries to live in one Houſe together, and to have the ſame Hall, and Dormitory. They order the Biſhops to have ſpecial care of the Cardinal-Titles eſtabliſhed in the Cities, or their Suburbs. They forbid Uſury to all Chriſtians. They order, that a Biſhop ſhall Excommunicate no Man, but for a Publick and certain Crime, and then ſhall not pronounce that Anathema againſt any Man, but with the conſent of his Metropolitan; and after he hath given the Admonitions commanded in the Goſpel. They charge the Monks to abide in the Monaſteries, and not to meddle with Secular Affairs. They petition the King not to entertain any Prebendaries in his Service, though they preſent themſelves to him, unleſs the conſent of their Biſhop be firſt had, and deſire, that he may be the perſon that Ordains them. They forbid, that a Monk ſhould be put out of his Monaſtery, till his Biſhop be conſulted about it, or be either himſelf, or Deputy preſent. They repeat the Laws againſt thoſe that invade the Revenues of the Church, as alſo againſt Raviſhers, and ſuch Nuns as live a diſorderly life. They revive the Ancient Laws againſt the Jews. They forbid Burying the Dead in the Church, as by an Hereditary Right. They agreed, that the Biſhop ſhould ſue to the King for a Commiſſion, engaging the Judges to obey them in every thing that reſpected the Miniſtery. They exhort the Great Men not to ſuffer any Diſorders in their Houſes, and to be particularly careful that the Prieſts of their Chapels ſhould live pious Lives. They teſtifie their earneſt deſires, that the King would beſtow thoſe Chapels onely upon ſuch Prieſts as would exact the Tithes that belong to them, leaving the Pariſh-Churches to a Curate, with a charge to uphold the Chapels, and Celebrate Divine-Service in them. And they add, that if the King gives them to Lay-men, they ought not to receive the Tithes, but they ought to be given to the Curates, who Officiate in thoſe Chapels. They pray him to give order, that no Pleas be held in any Court, during Lent, or Eaſter-week. Laſtly, They deſire him to confirm the Conſtitutions of Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly.

Theſe Conſtitutions being preſented to King Charles, then at Epernay, and the Nobles oppoſing ſome of them, The King having commanded the Biſhops to retire, till he conſulted about them, confirmed onely Nineteen of them, which ought to be underſtood of the laſt of thoſe Conſtitutions, which were made in the Councils of Meaux, and Paris. For the Canons of the Councils of Couelines and Thionville, were confirmed, and publiſhed by his Authority before, and are met with at the Head of his Capitularies.

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

AFter the Conſtitutions before-mention'd, there follow Nine made at Toulouſe, An. 843. upon the complaints of certain Prieſts, who were over-charged by their Biſhop.

In the Firſt of them the Emperour orders, that the Biſhop ſhould do nothing againſt the Prieſts, by way of Revenge, becauſe they have complained againſt them.

In the 2d he commands, that the Biſhops ſhould exact no more every year of the Prieſts, than a Muid of Wheat, and as much Barley; † a Muid of Wine, with a Pig of Six pence, or Two Sols-value, which was before determined by the Councils of Toledo, and Brague.

† A Muid is a large French Meaſure, for Corn, containing Five Seam and Five Buſhels of London Meaſure; and, for Wine, it contains 36 Gallons.

The 3d obliges them that dwell within one League, or a League and half of the City, to ſend this Preſent by their Servants; but in all places at greater diſtances, the Biſhop ſhall appoint a place in every Deanery to have them brought to. He exhorts the Biſhops not to ſuffer thoſe Officers, whom they ſhall appoint to receive thoſe Preſents, to exact them with force, but they ſhould kindly accept what the Prieſts ſhall bring of their own accord.

The 4th adviſes the Biſhops, in their Viſitations, not to ſtay at every ſmall Church, but to make choice of ſome of the Principal Churches, where the Curates of the Leſſer ſhall meet them, and bring their People to be Inſtructed and Confirmed. So that they ſhall Viſit but one Church in five, and the Curates of the other four ſhall come to them, with their People, and bring with them every one Ten Loaves, a Rundlet of Wine of 16 Gallons, a good quantity of Oats, a fat ſucking Pig, two Pullets, and ſome Eggs for the Maintenance of the Biſhop and his Attendants. That the perſon where the Biſhop Lodges ſhall accommodate him with nothing, but Wood, and Houſhold Utenſils; and that the Biſhop ſhall be careful that his Servants do his Hoſt no damage, either in his Houſe or Gardens.

In the 5th he confines the Biſhops, that they ſhall not Viſit above once in the year; and, if they do it oftner, they ſhall be no Charge to their Curates in their other Viſits.

In the 6th he orders, that if the Biſhops do not Viſit in perſon, they ſhall not exact any thing of their Curates for it, nor oblige them to be at any expence to entertain others; and that they ſhall not carry along with them a great number of ſervants.

The 7th exhorts the Biſhops not to multiply Pariſhes without neceſſity.

The 8th declares, that the Biſhops ſhall have no power to decline the obſervation of the Orders, under a pretence that it belongs to them to make and explain Canons; That they ought to explain them in their genuine ſence, and not elude them by corrupt gloſſes; and, if they doe otherwiſe, he will teach them, by the Judgment of a Synod, and his own Royal Authority, how they ſhall explain them aright.

The

The 9th ſays, that the Biſhops ſhall oblige the Prieſts not to come to above two Synods a year, at the ſet-times for them, appointed by the Canons of the Church, and that they ſhall judge Prieſts with Juſtice.

King Charles publiſhed alſo, at the ſame place, another Conſtitution in favour of the Spaniards and Goths, who were then fled into Catalonia. ---He likewiſe publiſhed at Epernay the 19 Canons made at the Councils of Meaux and Paris, in 846.

In 853, he confirmed the Canons of the Council of Soiſſons, and made ſeveral Conſtitutions for the better ſupport of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, of which I ſhall ſpeak afterwards. Which were publiſhed and confirmed at the Synod held at Verbery the ſame year; which made ſome other Canons alſo, confirmed by Charles's Authority. ----In December, the ſame year, he nominated ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical and Lay-Commiſſioners, in all the Provinces of France, and gave them ſeveral Heads of Inſtruction to act by in their Office; among which the Second concerns the Honour of the Church.

There are alſo one or two about the Revenues of the Churches and Monaſteries in the Conſtitutions made at Attigny, in 854. ----In his Letters-Patents of the ſame year, given at Verbery, Aug. 23d. King Charles confirms to the Prebendaries of the Church of Tournay, the property of the Revenue ſhe was poſſeſſed of, and limits the number of them to 30.

In an Aſſembly of Biſhops and Lords, held Anno 856, at Bonnevil, they petition the King to put the Monaſteries in Order, and to execute the Conſtitutions made at Couleine, Beauvais, Thionville, Verneuil and Soiſſons, and declare all thoſe things Null, that ſhall be made in prejudice to thoſe Laws. They threaten him with God's Judgments, if he doth not perform their deſires.

In 857, King Charles made two Conſtitutions at Quiercy, which he ſent to the Commiſſioners of his Realm; by which he gave them power to bring all Offenders to Civil or Eccleſiaſtical puniſhments, and particularly Raviſhers.

In 862, he put out a ſevere Edict at Piſta againſt Robberies, and other publick Diſorders, very common at that time, in which the Biſhops joyn with the King, and condemn thoſe Malefactors to Canonical puniſhment, which the King condemned to Civil. In 866 there was a Conſtitution made at Compeigne, about the Liberties and Privileges of Churches, and the Authority of Biſhops.

But, above all, his Edict of 869, made at Piſta upon the Seine, is the moſt conſiderable of all that he made about Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. In it he declares himſelf the Defender of the Biſhops Authority, and Liberty of the Churches. He orders all his Miniſters to reſpect their Power, execute their Commands, and preſerve the Churches in the enjoyment of their Privileges. He requires all Earls, great Lords and Judges, to give the Biſhops their due ſubjection; and, on the other ſide, that the Biſhops ſhould not encroach upon the Rights of the Earls, Lords and Judges. He commands the Biſhops to doe no Injuſtice, either to the Clergy or Laity, under their Juriſdiction; and that their Curates ſhould give the Lords of their Pariſhes the reſpect due to them. He enjoyns the Biſhops not to reject thoſe Clergy-men that are preſented to them by Abbots, Abbeſſes, or Lords, to ſerve in their Churches, if they are not worthy of blame for their Converſation, or Doctrine. He renews the Conſtitution, which forbids the Lords requiring any thing of the Clerks they preſent. He forbids them Excommunicating any perſons, who were not full convicted of the Faults they were accuſed of; and, who after admonition to amend and repent, have not obſtinately refuſed to ſubmit. He recommends Peace, Union and Friendſhip among his Civil Magiſtrates, Biſhops and Clergy. He orders his Biſhops to defend the Privileges granted to their Churches by the Church of Rome, and by the Charters of his Royal Progenitors, and that they be careful to have the Rents paid that are due to them.

The King having received Intelligence at Piſta, that Lotharius was dead, went immediately to Lorrain to be Crown'd King of it. And being arrived there in Sept. 869. after Adventius, Biſhop of that City, had declared in the Name of all the Biſhops and People, that they all accepted him for their King, he took an Oath to preſerve the Honour and Privileges of their Churches, to doe Juſtice impartially to every Man, according to the Laws, and protect that Kingdom. After this Hincmarus, who performed the Ceremony of the Coronation, and Ordain'd ſome Biſhops, being Admoniſh'd by Adventius, and other Biſhops, which belonged to the Province of Treves, that this Action would prejudice the Rights of their Metropolis, made a Declaration, That it would be no prejudice to the Rights of the Province of Treves, becauſe that Province, and that of Rheims were like Siſters, ſo firmly united, that they made, but as it were, one Province; ſince the Biſhops of both met at one Synod, obſerved the ſame Canons, and, among the Arch-biſhops of Treves and Rheims, the moſt Aged always took place: but yet, were it not ſo, he ought not to be accuſed for medling with the Juriſdiction of another Province, by his own Authority, or of putting his Sickle into the Harveſt that did not belong to him, ſince he had not concerned himſelf with that Province, but at the Requeſt of the Biſhop, and out of Charity. Laſtly, That they ought to look upon it, as a ſpecial Favour of God, that Charles was Crowned King at Metz, becauſe heretofore his Father Lewis the Godly, who was deſcended of Clovis the French King, who was Converted by S. Remigius, and Baptized in the Church of Rheims, where he was Anointed and Conſecrated King, by a Chriſm ſent down from Heaven, which they ſtill have at Rheims: That Lewis the Godly was Crowned Emperour in that City, and after he was Depoſed from his Imperial Throne by the Conſpiracies of his Enemies, he was reſtored, and was Crowned again in the ſame City, and in St. Stephen's Church, whoſe Name was a good Omen, becauſe it ſignifies a Crown.

After

After this Declaration, he asked the People, If the Coronation ſhould be Celebrated before the Altar, and whether that Prince ſhould be Conſecrated by the Holy Unction. The People having teſtified their Approbation by their Acclamations, they Sang Te Deum, and the King was Crowned by the Prieſtly Benediction of the Biſhops. This Conſtitution is very remarkable.

In the year 874, Charles Judged ſome Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes at Attigny, at the Requeſt of the Biſhop of Barcelona. The Firſt was about a Complaint made to him, That one Thyrſus, a Prieſt of Corduba, had called the People together at a Church of Barcelona, and had taken away from him almoſt two thirds of his people; That he Celebrated Maſs, and Adminiſtred Baptiſm without his permiſſion. That he cauſed thoſe people to go to his Church on the Feaſts of Nativity and Eaſter, which ought to be at his Cathedral, and gave them the Sacrament. The King Recited the Canons, which condemned the practice of that Prieſt. The Second complaint, made by the Biſhop of Barcelona, was, That another Prieſt had engaged the Inhabitants of the Caſtle of Terracine, not to ſubmit to his Juriſdiction. The King order'd, that the Canons in that caſe ſhould be obſerved. The Third was againſt two private perſons, who having Intercepted the King's Letters, had poſſeſſed themſelves, the one of St. Stephen's Church, and the other of certain Lands belonging to the Church of S. Eulalia. The King commanded, that if this cou'd be prov'd, his Commiſſioners ſhould give an Account what Letters had been Intercepted, that being reported to the Council, it might be Examined by them.

Lewis, the Emperour of Italy, being dead, Aug. 8. 875, Charles was Crowned Emperour at Rome on Chriſtmaſs-Day of the ſame year, by Pope John the VIII; and, at his return, received the Crown of Lombardy at Pavia, and the Confirmation of his Imperial Crown in an Aſſembly of the Nobles and Biſhops of that Countrey, held Feb. 876, at which the Pope was preſent in perſon. After this, to acknowledge the Obligations he had to the Pope, he made a Conſtitution, in which he decreed, That all perſons ſhould pay an eſpecial Veneration to the Holy Roman Church, the Head of all other Churches; that no Man ſhould dare to attempt any thing in violation of her Power and Privileges; but ſhould enjoy her full Authority, and exerciſe her Paſtoral care over all the Church; that they ſhould particularly honour the Supreme Biſhop, and Univerſal Pope John; that his Decrees ſhould be received, with all due regard, and Obedience be given him in all things he hath right to: He forbids all perſons encroaching upon the Lands and Revenues of the Church of Rome. He then commands, that due reſpect be paid to the Sacerdotal Authority and Clergy; that all ſhould ſubmit to the Imperial Authority, and none ſhould be ſo bold as to reſiſt his Orders. That Biſhops ſhould freely exerciſe their Function, and puniſh Offenders; that they be careful to Preach. He enjoyns the Lay-men which dwell in the Cities, to be preſent at the Aſſemblies of the Church on Feſtival-days, and forbids them having private Chapels in their Houſes. He requires, that Biſhops ſhould have Colleges for their Prebendaries near the Church; that Prebendaries ſhould live according to the Canonical Rules, and be ſubject to their Biſhop. He forbids Clergy-men dwelling, or converſing with Women, as alſo Hunting. He provides for the preſervation of the Church-Revennes, and payment of Tithes. He commends Friendſhip between the Nobility and Clergy. This was publiſhed and received at Pontigon in July 876.

Laſtly, Charles the Bald held an Aſſembly of his Nobles at Quiercy, June 877, in which he made ſeveral Conſtitutions by his own Authority, and propounded others to his Nobles for their Advice. The Conſtitutions now made about Diſcipline, are theſe. The Firſt was about the Honour and Liberty of Churches, ſo often repeated. By the 2d he confirms the Privileges of the Abbey of S. Mary of Compeigne, granted by the Pope, received by the Biſhops, and Authorized by the King's Letters. The 8th ſecures the Revenues of Vacant Arch-biſhopricks, and Biſhopricks. In the 12th he nominates ſeveral Biſhops, Abbots and Earls to diſpoſe of his Alms, which he ſhould give by Will, after his Death. The reſt contain ſeveral Directions for doing what is neceſſary for the good of his Kingdom and Children after his Deceaſe. Two days after he renewed again the Conſtitution about the Honour of Churches, and Authority of Biſhops; he confirmed ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws, and promiſed to put them in Execution. He provides for the preſervation of the Eſtate of an Earl lately deceaſed, till his Son was in poſſeſſion of it; and for the ſecurity of thoſe Churches who have loſt their Biſhop, Abbot, or Superiour, till they have a Succeſſor. Theſe are the laſt Conſtitutions of Charles the Bald, who died Auguſt the 28th following at Frankfort, in the 70th year of his Age, and 59th from his firſt Coronation. He was a Lover of Juſtice, Religion, and of the Church, and was the neareſt of any Prince of his Race, to Charles the Great, in his good Qualities and Vertues.

The Council of Mentz held Anno 847.

The Council of Mentz.

THis Council was held under Rabanus, An. 847. It was made up of 12 Biſhops, ſome Suffragans, ſeveral Abbots, Monks, Prieſts, and others of the Clergy. The Biſhops and Clergy made one body, and had the Goſpels, Canons, and Fathers laid before them; The Monks the Rule of St. Benedict, that they might unanimouſly endeavour a Reformation of the Clergy, and the Monaſtick Life. —Firſt, They particularly recommended it to the Biſhops, that they ſhould take care that the people be well-inſtructed in the Fundamentals of Religion; and, for that end, certain Homilies ſhould be compoſed in the Vulgar Tongue. Secondly, That Baptiſm ſhould be adminiſtred according to the Rites of the Church of Rome, and at the times appointed by the Pope's Decretals.

They

They exhort all Men to Peace; and order, That not onely those Men should be Excommunicated, who attempt any thing against the King, or State; but those, who, by surprize, contrary to his good affection to Religion, obtain of him the Lands and Revenues that belong to the Church.

They leave the whole disposal of the Church's Revenues in the power of the Bishops, and forbid the Clergy to make use of them, to augment their own Estates, or dispose of them. They secure their Tythes, and other Rights, to the Churches. They revive the Canons concerning such Employments as are forbid Clergy-men and Monks.

They forbid Monks to have any possessions of their own, to covet the enjoyment of worldly things, which they have renounced, and to take on them any Cure of Souls, without the consent of the Bishop.

They forbid Abbesses to go out of their Monasteries without great necessity, and without the leave of the Bishop.

They revive the Ancient Canons of the Council of Ancyra against Man-slayers. They declare, touching the Administration of the Sacraments to the Sick, that the Priests ought to require of them a sincere Confession, without imposing on them any rigorous Penance, but onely to bring their sins to remembrance, and comfort them under them, by the Prayers of their Friends, and by their Alms, and so Absolve them, upon condition nevertheless, that if they recover their health, they shall undergoe what Penance shall be imposed on them; after which they may Administer the Unction, and then the Communion, as their Viaticum.

They are not afraid to grant such Malefactors, as suffer for their Crimes, if they confess their sins, and are penitent, the honour of a Christian Burial; and that their Offerings be received, and Masses said for them.

Lastly, After they have forbidden all Contracts of Marriages, either Incestuous, or within the Degrees of Consanguinity, prohibited by the Laws; they command, that Penances, proportionable to Mens Crimes, shall be imposed upon them; that publick Sinners shall do publick Penance; and they, whose sins are secret, shall undergoe private Penance.

This is almost all that is contained in the One and thirty Canons of this Council. We shall not here speak of the Council of Mentz held the next year, against Goteschalcus, nor of those that concern his Affair, nor Ebbo's, because we have spoken of them at large in another place.

The Council of Pavia.

THe Emperour Lotharius, and his Son Lewis, held an Assembly at Pavia, Anno 850. in which the Bishops made 25 Articles, or Constitutions. The Council of Pavia.

In the First they order, that the Bishops should have some Priests, or other Clergy-men witnesses of their most secret Actions.

In the Second, That they should not neglect not onely to celebrate Mass publickly on Sundays and Festivals, but, if it be possible, offer that Sacrifice every day in private.

In the Third they order, that their Meals should be temperate, and that they should entertain Pilgrims and Strangers at them; whom they should entertain with Pious Discourses and Exhortations.

In the Fourth they forbid the Pleasures and Luxury of the World.

In the Fifth they advise them to Study the Holy Scripture; to explain it to their Clergy, and to Preach upon it to the people.

The Sixth imports, that the Bishops should be careful that the Priests discharge their Duties well in the Government which is entrusted to them. That the Arch-Priests should go to the Heads of Families, to exhort publick Offenders to doe publick Penance: That in difficult cases they should apply themselves to the Bishops, and the Bishops should consult their Brethren.

The Seventh orders, that the Priests should examine whether the Penitents perform the works of Penance; That the Absolution of publick Penitents is reserved to the Bishops, and that no Priest shall Absolve them but in the absence of the Bishop, and with his Allowance, because the Imposition of hands was reserved to the Apostles.

The Eighth engages them to Instruct the People in the saving nature of the Sacrament of Unction, of which the Apostle St. James speaks [c. 5. 14.] and make them sensible, that they can hope to receive the wished-for effects of that Mystery, viz. Remission of sins, and health, onely when they desire it with a sound and full Faith. That because it often happens, that sick persons know not the force of that Sacrament, or think their Distempers inconsiderable; or forget to desire it, because their Minds are taken up with the pains of their sickness; the Priests of the place ought to put them in mind of receiving it, and invite the Priests of his Neighbourhood to be present at the Administration. But if the sick person be in a state of Penance, he ought not to bestow it on him, till he be reconciled to the Church; because he that is not allowed to receive the other Sacraments, is not in a capacity of receiving this.

The Ninth advises Fathers of Families to Marry their Daughters as soon as they are of Age, and condemns them to Penance, if they happen to be debauch'd, either by their Negligence, or Connivance; and forbids, that the Benediction be given them, who Marry after they are Deflowered. It also says, that Marriage is forbidden those, who are in a course of Publick Penance.

The Tenth is againſt Raviſhers, and declares, that they cannot lawfully Marry the perſons they have forced; and allows ſuch perſons no Abſolution, but juſt at the point of Death.

The Eleventh orders, that they who commit a publick crime in any place, ſhall be excluded from Communion by the Biſhop of that place, and put to Penance, and not be received to Communion by any other.

The Twelfth declares, that they who are deprived of Communion, and put to Penance for their Crimes, may not exerciſe any publick Offices, but can't be prohibited from taking care of their Domeſtick Affairs. That ſuch perſons as refuſe to doe Penance, ought to be Excommunicated and Anathematized, after all proper means is uſed to make them ſubmit to their Duty. Yet this is not to be done without the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Biſhops of the Province.

The Thirteenth orders the Biſhops to commit the care of Prieſts of ſmaller Pariſhes to the Arch-prieſts.

The Fourteenth commands thoſe Biſhops who have ſuffered the Monaſteries of their Dioceſſes to be demoliſhed, to have them immediately repaired and re-built.

The Fifteenth imports, that ſuch Hoſpitals, as are ſubject to Biſhops, ſhall be govern'd according to the Orders of their Founders: That thoſe that are under the protection of the Church, ſhall be Govern'd by the Heirs of the Founders, according to the Rules of their Inſtitution, who ſhall hinder all embezelling the Revenues, and miſ-employment of them.

The Sixteenth reſolves, that they will repreſent to the Princes the Miſdemeanour of thoſe Hoſpitals, that are under their protection.

The Seventeenth orders, that all Chriſtians ſhould pay their Tythes, which ſhall be employed for the Maintenance of the Clergy, and the Neceſſities of the Church, according to the Diſpoſal of the Biſhop.

The Eighteenth importeth, that they will not ſuffer any of thoſe Prieſts, or Clergy-men, who are called Acephali, not under the Diſcipline of any Biſhop; and that thoſe Prieſts, that celebrate Divine Service in Noble-mens Chapels, ſhall be ſuch as are approved by the Biſhop; or if they be out of other Biſhopricks, ſhall have Commendatory Letters from their own Biſhop: That they will not ſuffer wandring Clerks, nor any other perſons without a Miſſion.

The Nineteenth forbids putting Clergy-men upon Secular Employments.

The Twentieth imports, that they ſhall be Excommunicated, who ſuffer Jews to be either the Judges, or Receivers of Tribute.

The One and twentieth forbids Uſury, and obliges ſuch, as have made advantage by it, to Reſtitution.

The Two and twentieth imports, that they who neglect the care of Orphans and Widows committed to their charge, ſhall be admoniſhed of it, and exhorted to be very diligent and watchful for them; but if they will not doe it, they ſhall petition the King to appoint them other Guardians.

The Three and twentieth is againſt thoſe Clergy-men and Monks, who, going up and down the Cities, ſtir up unprofitable Queſtions, and diſperſe Errors. They order, that ſuch Men ſhall be apprehended by the Biſhop of the place, and carried to the Metropolitan; and if it be found that they have vented ſuch Doctrines through Ambition, and not for the Inſtruction, or Edification of the Faithful, they ſhall be puniſhed, as the Diſturbers of the Church's Peace.

The Twenty fourth forbids the ill practices of certain Peaſants, who Marryed their Sons very young to full grown Women, to be abuſed by them, and prohibits ſuch Marriages.

The laſt condemns certain Magicians to very ſevere penance, and deprives them of Abſolution till the point of Death, who boaſted, they could make perſons Love, or Hate one another by their Art; and, whom they ſuſpected of having killed ſome Men by it.

The Council of Soiſſons, Anno 853.

The Council of Soiſſons.

THis Council hath Three parts. 1. Some Canons. 2. The Acts of Eight Seſſions, about the Affair of Ebbo, and the Clerks Ordained by him. 3. Some Conſtitutions publiſhed by the Emperour. What is contained in the Acts of this Council, we have related in the Hiſtory of Hincmarus. So that there remain onely the Canons and Imperial Conſtitutions.

The Firſt is nothing elſe but an Abridgment of the Judgment given againſt Ebbo.

The Second is concerning Heriman, Biſhop of Nevers; who, being a Man of a weak Judgment, had committed ſeveral Miſdemeanors in his Office; and, notwithſtanding that, deſired to continue in his Function. They order Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, his Metropolitan, to go to Nevers, to put that Church in order, and bring away Heriman to Sens along with him, till the Summer, in which he was worſt in his Mind, was over, and ſend him again when he was grown ſomething better.

In the Third they reform what had paſſed in the buſineſs of the Biſhop of Chartres. They queſtion'd the Validity of his Election, and maintain, that he is not fit to be a Biſhop. It was order'd, that he ſhould either juſtifie himſelf, or retire; and they charged Hincmarus, Pardulus and Agius, to certifie him of their Reſolution. He thinking himſelf Innocent, and being confirmed in that Opinion by the Teſtimony of the Clergy and Laity of Chartres who were preſent, he thought it his beſt time time to appear, which he accordingly did, and said, That it would be a great piece of pride in him to assert himself worthy of so great a Dignity, but if any Person accused him of any Crime, he was ready to defend himself. No Man appearing, the Council order'd, that certain Commissioners chosen by Wenilo, should be sent to Chartes, to examine the ordination of Burchard, give in their Report, and ordain him Bishop.

In the Fourth they relate, that the Bishop of Mans being troubled with the Palsie, wrote to the Council to be excused for not coming to it, and to desire the Bishops to pray for him, both so long as he lived, and after his Death. That the Bishops promised to do their Duty, and gave Order to Amaricus, Arch-bishop of Tours, his Metropolitan, to go to the City of Mans, and to do what he saw convenient for the advantage of that Church in this juncture.

In the Fifth they declare, that they had deposed and banished into remote Monasteries, those Monks and Priests of the Abby of St. Medard, who had conspired to secure Pepin, Charles's Nephew, who was shaved and shut up in that Abby.

The Sixth is against a Deacon of the Church of Rheims, who was accused of putting out Edicts in the Emperour's Name, they debarr him going to any Synod, and confine him within the Diocess of Rheims, till he should clear himself.

The other Canons are some Propositions, which they intended to make to the King; That he would send Commissioners to set up Divine Service in the Monasteries. That he would permit the Churches to enjoy their Ancient Privileges. That he would pay to the Church the Ninth and Tenth part of those Revenues, which belonged to it of old. That he would not hold any Courts in any place Consecrated to the Service of God. That none should protect those, whom the Bishop would punish by the Laws of the Church. That on the contrary, incestuous Persons, and others guilty of like Crimes, should be referr'd to the Bishops by the Civil Judges. Lastly; That there should be no exchanges made of the Churches Lands or Revenues, without the Consent of the King. In Answer to these Demands, the Emperour made Twelve Constitutions, in which he granted them more than they had desired of him. For in the First, he orders that his Commissioners shall make inquiry, with the Bishop of the place, and in the presence of him who hath charge of the Monastery, concerning the Life and Behaviour of those that dwell in it; that he will regulate the Discipline, and cause them to make the Repairs carefully. That the Churches shall be adorned, and furnished with Tapers and Books, &c. That he will compose a Verbal process, in which he will put the Name of the Abbot, or Superiour of each Monastery, the time of his enjoyment of it; the number of the Canons and Monks, or Religious Persons, to increase or diminish it, &c. That they should inquire, whether the Heirs of such as founded the Monastery, did not detain the Revenues their Ancestors had given them. That they should inform themselves of the Revenues of Chapels, and several Monasteries farmed out,—and if they had a care to keep up the Buildings, and provide all things necessary for Divine Service. That they should inform themselves of such Estates of the Church, as are given in Fee-simple; and of those Persons which pay Ninths and Tenths: That they shall forbid, that any pleading be had in Church Porches, Quires, or any other places, or in Lent. That they shall declare, that those that study to revenge them whom the Bishops have chastised for their Faults, shall be excommunicated, and pay a large Fine. That they shall order the Judges to assist the Bishop in his Visits, and constrain the excommunicated to do their Penance. That they shall declare, that he will give no Letters to set Farm to the Church Revenues. Lastly; That they shall forbid making any exchange of the Church Land, or Slaves, without the consent of the King.

The Council of Verbery, anno 853.

THE same Bishops that were convened in the Council of Soissons in February, met at Verbery in August the same Year, where they wrote a Letter, in which they declare, that they would settle Heriman in his Bishoprick of Nevers, and that he was not deprived of it for any Fault he had committed, but only for the Infirmity of which he was cured. They prevented the giving by a precarious Title, an Abby and Farm which belonged to the Abby of St. Denys. Lotharius in this Assembly, caused the Constitutions which had been made at Soissons, to be read over and received. The Council of Verbery.

The Council of Rome, under Leo the IV.

IN 853 Pope Leo IV. called a Council at Rome in December, in which he confirmed the Canons of a Synod held under Sergius II. in 826. and made some Additions to them. He also composed some new Canons, and deposed Anastasius a Priest of the Church of S. Marcellus, who having left his Church, fled out of the Countrey, and would not return after several Admonitions given him, nor justifie himself before the Council. There are Thirty Eight Canons made by the Synod held by Sergius. The six first concern the Lives, Knowledge, and Manners of the Bishops. The Eight following contain some Constitutions about the Life of Priests. The Fifteenth forbids all Familiarity of Clergy-men and Bishops with Women, and chiefly any Woman with whom they are suspected to deal carnally. The Sixth forbids alienating the Church Revenues. The Seventeenth prohibits, that the Offerings of Sinners be accepted. The Eighteenth The Council of Rome.

Eighteenth orders, that no Letters dimiſſory be given to any Clergy-men, but ſuch only as are deſired by ſome other Biſhop. The Nineteenth and Twenty firſt, are about the Advocates, who ought to have Biſhops to patronize their Cauſes. The Twentieth enjoyns the Founder of a Monaſtery or Chapel, to name a Prieſt approved by the Biſhop to it. The Two following Canons concern the Adminiſtrations and Uſage of the Church's Revenues. The Twenty Fourth orders, that Divine Service be ſettled again in the Churches, where it had been diſcontinued. The Twenty Fifth, commands that ſacred places be built again. The Twenty Sixth forbids the Biſhops exacting any thing againſt Law. The Twenty Seventh imports, that they ſhould chooſe Abbots fit to govern the Monaſteries. The Twenty Eight injoyns Biſhops to take Care, that thoſe that profeſs themſelves Monks, ſhould live regularly. The Twenty Ninth commands, that young Women who have taken on them a Religious Life, ſhould not marry. The Thirtieth and Thirty Firſt, concerns the Sanctification of the Sunday. The Thirty Second commands, that ſuch as are ſhut up in the Monaſteries for their Crimes, ſhould not be ſuffered to go out. The Thirty Third ſays, that 'tis not allowable for Lay-Men, to place themſelves with the Prieſts or Clergy, at Divine Service. The Thirty Fourth ſays, that there ſhall be in all Cathedral Churches and other places where 'tis neceſſary, Maſters and Tutors to teach the Liberal Sciences. The Thirty Fifth forbids Balls, Dancing, and other Sports upon the Feaſts of the Martyrs. The Thirty Sixth prohibits Men putting away their Wives and marrying others, unleſs in caſe of Adultery and Orders, that if a Man and his Wife are willing to part, to embrace a Religious Life, they muſt do it with the conſent of the Biſhop, who ſhall examine both the Man and his Wife, whether they do both indeed conſent to it. The Thirty Seventh forbids Polygamy. The Thirty Eight is againſt Marriage within the Degrees of Conſanguinity forbidden.

Leo IV. made ſome Additions to theſe Canons, which were nothing elſe but Explications of them, or ſome Clauſes to confirm them. But he added four new Canons. The Firſt imports, that no greater number of Prieſts or Clergy-men be ordained in every Church, than is juſt neceſſary. The Second, that Prieſts ſhould preſent themſelves at the Council of their Biſhops. The Third orders, that Lay-men who retain Prieſts that are Strangers, and employ them againſt the conſent of their Biſhop, ſhall be themſelves excommunicated, and the Prieſts depoſed; if upon Admonition, they will not return to their Dioceſs. The Fourth ſays, that no Man ſhall ſettle Prieſts in the Churches, but he that hath right to ordain in thoſe Churches, and puniſh thoſe that are in it, i. e. none but the Biſhop of the Dioceſs.

The Third Council of Valence.

The third Council of Valence.

IN January 855. the Emperour Lotharius called a Synod at Valence, of Fourteen Biſhops belonging to the Province of Lyons, Vienna and Arles, over whom their Metropolitans preſided, and Ebbo Biſhop of Grenoble, to judge the Biſhop of Valence, who was accuſed of ſeveral Crimes. In this Council, the Deciſions about Grace above mentioned, were made, which make up the firſt ſix Canons of this Council. The Seventh is about the Election of Biſhops. They declare in it, that to prevent, that ignorant and unfit Perſons be not preferr'd to Biſhopricks, they would petition the King, that the Biſhop of every Dioceſs ſhall be choſen by the Clergy and People who ſhall be obliged to chooſe a Perſon out of the ſame, or a Neighbouring Church, fit to fill the See, and that if the Emperour ſhall ſend any of his Officers to be Biſhop, they ſhall examine his Life and Doctrine carefully, that the Metropolitan ſhall have a care, that the Biſhop who is ordained, be a perſon fit for that Charge. The Eighth is againſt thoſe who invade the Revenues of the Church. The Ninth is againſt thoſe that take the Revenues of Chapels. The Tenth orders, that they pay the Ninth and Tenth of the Revenues of alienated Churches, and condemns Uſury. The Eleventh forbids taking the Oaths of both parties in juſtice, and excommunicates him that doth the contrary. The Twelfth forbids the Combats, which were in uſe to prove Mens Innocence. The Thirteenth imports, that ſuch as are diſobedient to their Biſhops, ſhall do Penance, and ſuch as are excommunicated in one Church, ſhall not be received in another. The Fourteenth forbids all vexatious Troubles, and commends Union and Love in Clergy-men. The Fifteenth enjoyns the Biſhops to live an Exemplary Life. The Sixteenth orders them to preach and inſtruct their People. The Seventeenth commands them to viſit their Dioceſs, without being a charge to any Man. The Eighteenth requires, that Schools be ſet up for Learning and Singing. The Nineteenth imports, that the Metropolitans and Biſhops ſhould take care that the Clergy live orderly. The Twentieth enjoyns, that the Ornaments of Churches be preſerved, and uſed only according to the Canons. The Twenty Firſt ſays, that Church Revenues ſhall not be alienated. The Twenty Second ſays, that a Biſhop ſhall not receive the rights of the Viſitation, when he doth not Viſit. The Twenty Third is in Favour of the Arch-Deacon of the Church of Vienna, whom they had redeemed from Slavery. They aſſert he was not a Slave, and threaten Excommunication to them, who ſhall perſecute him upon that account.

The Council of Quiercy.

IN November, 858. the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims and Roüen being Aſſembled at Quiercy, compoſed a Letter, directed to Lewis King of Germany, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom of Charles, Surrendred to him at Attigny, by Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, and Ercanrau Biſhop of Chalons. After they had excuſed themſelves for not being preſent, according to the Orders they had received at the Aſſembly held at Rheims, becauſe they had not ſufficient Warning to provide for their Journey, and get leave of their Metropolitans, they paſſionately repreſent to that Prince the Diſorders of the People of his Realm, and the lamentable ſtate the Church was in. They exhort him to maintain the Rights and Privileges of the Churches, the Authority of the Biſhops, and honour of the Prieſts; to put in Execution the Canons and Conſtitutions, which concerned the Liberty of the Church; to reſtore their Revenues to the Church and Clergy; to put the Monaſteries and Abbeys of the Monks and Nuns into their Ancient condition; and to take them from the Lay-men, to whom his Brother was forced to grant them. They give him many Inſtructions about his own Carriage, and how he ought to govern his Kingdom. They let him know, that they thought he had no Right to mind the King his Brothers Countreys; and, at laſt, Proteſt, that they could not take the Oath he deſired of them; nor ſubject their Churches to him, or their Revenues, as if they were Temporal Eſtates. This Letter is Written with much Elegance and Freedom. In it they Threaten that Prince with the Judgments of God, and terrifie him, with repreſenting to him his ſad condition at the hour of Death. They give him ſeveral Inſtructions and Precepts about Civil matters, and ſpeak to him in a Majeſtick Style. They relate to him a fabulous Story of the Damnation of Charles Martel, for having taken away Church-goods. There is ſome probability that Hincmarus compoſed this Letter; for which Reaſon 'tis Printed among his Works. The Council of Quiercy.

The Council of Metz.

Lewis of Germany being obliged to retire in 859, the Council aſſembled at Metz ſent Nine Prelates to him, to exhort that Prince to beg peace of his Brother, to acknowledge and confeſs his Fault, oblige him to promiſe to live peaceably for the future, and never hereafter to cauſe Schiſm, or Diviſion, to puniſh them who were the Authors of this War, to engage himſelf to maintain the Rights of the Churches, and procure a Reformation: That if he did theſe things, although his Faults deſerved a long penance, they could abſolve him, although they did not joyn with him. Theſe Meſſengers, who had for their Leaders, Hincmarus, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, and Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Rouen, finding Lewis of Germany at Worms, June the 4th. the Prince ſpake to them firſt, and being deſirous to appeaſe them, ſaid to them, That if he had offended them, he begged their pardon. Hincmarus, who ſtood the firſt on his left-hand, anſwered, That he came to offer him what he deſired; that, as to his own particular, he had nothing againſt him; that he pardon'd him what he had done; and as for the Miſchief he had done his Church, he adviſed him, as he tender'd his own Salvation, to make it up. Guntharius, Arch-biſhop of Cologne, who was alſo one of the Meſſengers, told him what ſatisfaction they demanded of him, and read the Inſtructions to him they had given them. Lewis of Germany was diſpleaſed with them, and told them for Anſwer, That they came provided with full Inſtructions, that they might ſurprize him: That the Biſhops of his Kingdom not being preſent, he could do nothing in that Affair without conſulting them. So that this Embaſſage had not that good effect which they hoped for by it. The Council of Metz.

The Council of Savonieres.

IN June, the ſame year 859, the Biſhops of both Kingdoms met at Savonieres, near Toul, where they made up a Peace and Agreement between the Kings. In it alſo they Regulated ſeveral other Affairs. Tortoldus Deacon of Sens, who had taken upon him to exerciſe the Epiſcopal Functions at Bayeux, was left to the Judgment of Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, and three other Biſhops. They ordained, that the Sub-deacon Anſcharius, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Church of Langres, ſhould make Oath, that he would not attempt the like for the future. King Charles accuſed Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, as the cauſe of his Rebellion; and it was order'd, that his Proceſs ſhould be made according to the Canons. Atto, Biſhop of Verdun was ſummoned, becauſe his Ordination was accuſed as faulty. They alſo charged the Biſhops of Bretany not to withdraw themſelves from the Juriſdiction of the Arch-biſhop of Tours, their Metropolitan. They admoniſhed them not to communicate with perſons under Excommunication; and to exhort their Prince Solomon, to be faithful to King Charles. They alſo allow the perſons Excommunicated till the next Council, to amend and reform themſelves; and, if they did not do it, they would pronounce a ſolemn Anathema upon them at the next General Council. This Synod earneſtly entreats the King, and Ralph, Arch-biſhop of Bourges, to maintain the privileges of the Abbey of S. Benedict, which that Arch-biſhop had poſſeſſed himſelf of, upon condition, that if the Abbot The Council of Savonieres.

were found negligent, or irregular, by the King's Commiſſioners, he ſhould be depoſed, and another put in his place. They ſet in order ſeveral other private Affairs, of which there is no mention in the Canons, and ordered Prayers. This Synod was very numerous: At it were Eight Metropolitans, and moſt of the Biſhops of the Twelve Provinces of France. We have, beſides the Thirteen Canons, or Articles, already mention'd, Three Letters, one to Wenilo, Arch-biſhop of Sens, and two others to the Bretons, with a Remonſtrance, containing an Acculation of that Arch-biſhop, brought againſt him by Charles the Bald.

They read alſo in this Council the Six Conſtitutions of Valence about Grace; and Ten other Canons made Fifteen days before, by ſome Biſhops met at Langres. We will not repeat what we have ſaid about the Conſtitutions of the Council of Valence, and how Hincmarus oppoſed the Reception of them; but we will give the ſubſtance of the other Ten Canons.

The Firſt imports, that they would petition their Kings to call Synods every year in every Province, and every ſecond year a General-Council in their Palaces.

The Second ordains, that the Biſhops ſhould be ordained according to the Canonical Laws; that is to ſay, by the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Neighbouring Biſhops; and ſuch perſons ſhould be choſen, as are of good life, and known probity.

The Third commands, that Biſhops viſit Religious Houſes, and take care, that all things be managed and diſpoſed in good order.

The Fourth enjoyns them to ſet up Schools, or Teach the Holy Scripture, and good Learning.

The Fifth requires them to repair their Churches.

The Sixth orders, that every Congregation ſhould have an Head of their Profeſſion.

The Seventh declares, that the alienated Revenues of the Church ſhall pay their Ninth and Tenth parts, and that for the future nothing ſhall be taken from the Church.

The Eighth enjoyns, that the Revenues of Hoſpitals ſhall be employed according to the intent of the Founders.

The Ninth declares, that they will cauſe Juſtice to be done to the Poor by the Civil Judges.

The Tenth contains their Reſolve to puniſh Raviſhers and Adulterers.

The Council of Coblentz.

The Council of Coblentz.

THe Peace which was made between the Kings at the Council of Savonieres in 859, was confirmed and ſworn to, Anno 860, at an Aſſembly held at Coblentz; at which, Ten Biſhops, and ſeveral Lords were preſent. In it it was agreed, that publick ſinners ſhould be put to penance; and, that no Biſhop ſhould Excommunicate any Man, till after Admonition and Reproof; That they would pardon thoſe Rebels that accepted a pardon, and promiſed Fidelity for the future; That they would put the Laws and Canons againſt Criminals in Execution. Some other Eccleſiaſtical Laws and Civil Conſtitutions were made in it.

The Second Council of Tullium, or Toul.

The Council of Toul.

IN October 860, a General Council was held at Touſſy, in the Province of Toul. There were preſent almoſt Sixty Biſhops out of Twelve or Fourteen Provinces of France. They compoſed a Paſtoral Letter againſt thoſe that invaded the Churches Revenues; and, becauſe it ſeemed too tedious to ſome of them, they made Five Canons, which were ſigned by all the Biſhops.

In the Firſt they Excommunicate, and deprive of Burial all thoſe, that take, or receive the Oblations of the Church without the conſent of the Biſhop, or the Perſon, who is entruſted with the care of the Church Revenues; and condemn thoſe of the Clergy or Laity who ſhall do it, to reſtore three or four-fold.

In the Second, it is ordained, that Widows, or Virgins, devoted to the Service of God, who Marry, or ſuffer themſelves to be Deflowered, ſhall be Impriſoned, and put to Penance till their Death: and they that ſo Debauch them, ſhall alſo be forced to undergoe Penance.

The Third pronounces Excommunication againſt all Perjured Perſons, and Falſe Witneſſes.

The Fourth excludes from the Communion of the Faithful, and from Divine Service, all Raviſhers and Man-ſlayers, till they ſhall ſubmit to a courſe of Penance.

The Fifth enjoyns all wandring Clergy-men, and Monks, which are out of employ, becauſe their Churches, or Monaſteries, are burnt by the Normans, to betake themſelves to their Duties, and ſubmit themſelves to their Abbots, or Biſhops.

We have ſpoken about the conteſt between the two Hincmarus's, concerning theſe Canons; the Arch-biſhop of Rheims maintaining, that they were not made by a Council, and that he did not ſign them: the Biſhop of Laon affirming the contrary. It is probable, that Hincmarus, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, compoſed the Large Letter; but, that not being liked, ſome others digeſted the Five Canons, which were ſigned by ſeveral of them. This Council order'd Hincmarus marus to Write to the Arch-biſhops of Bourges, and Bourdeaux, and Biſhops of their Provinces, about the Affair of Earl Raimond, which we have explained in the Hiſtory of Hincmarus's Work. And becauſe we have alſo ſpoken of the Councils of Aix la Chapelle, Metz and Rome, held about the Divorce of Lotharius and Thietberga, we ſhall paſs them over here; as alſo thoſe held about the buſineſs of Rothadus, Hincmarus of Laon, Ebbo, Wulfadus, of which we have ſpoken in the Hiſtory of the Controverſies, in which Hincmarus was chiefly concerned.

The Council of Worms.

IN 868, in June, Lewis, King of Germany, Aſſembled a General Council of his Kingdom at Worms: in it, the Biſhops firſt of all compoſed a Confeſſion of their Faith; in which they aſſerted the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt form the Father, and the Son; and rejected the Opinion of thoſe, who affirmed, That it proceeded from the Father by the Son, or from the Son onely. They deliver, That the Reſurrection ſhall be in the ſame fleſh, in which we live, and that the Catholick Church ſhall Reign with Jeſus Chriſt for ever. The Council of Worms.

After they had made this Confeſſion of Faith, they compoſed, or rather revived ſeveral Canons. The 1ſt Imports, that Baptiſm ſhall be ſolemnly Adminiſtred onely at Eaſter and Whitſuntide. The 2d, that it belongs to the Biſhop onely to Conſecrate the Chriſm. The 3d, that a Biſhop ſhall not require any Preſent for the Conſecration of Churches; and that they ſhall uſe nothing but Bread and Wine, mingled with Water, in the Sacrament of the Altar. The 5th contains a Rule of S. Gregory's, about Dipping once, or thrice in Baptiſm. The 6th, that the Diſpoſal of the Church Revenues belongs to the Biſhops, and not to the Founders. The 7th, that they ſhall divide the Church Revenues into four parts. The 8th is an Extract of the Seventh Canon of the 2d Council of Seville. The 9th contains a Law of Cælibacy, for all in Sacred Orders. The 10th concerns a Biſhop accuſed of a Crime. The 11th declares, that Prieſts, who have been guilty of carnal ſins, ought not to enjoy their Dignity. The 12th, that they that are accuſed of that crime, but can't be convicted, ſhall clear themſelves by their Oath. The 13th, that Biſhops ſhall not Excommunicate any Man for ſmall faults. The 14th, that if they do, their neighbouring Biſhops ſhall not communicate with them, till a Synod ſhall meet. The 15th orders, that if there be any Robbery done in any Monaſtery, and the Author is not known, all the Brethren ſhall communicate at one Maſs, that by that means it may be known that they are innocent. The 16th Excommunicates the Biſhops that refuſe to come to a Synod, or withdraw before 'tis ended. The 17th forbids Clergy-men keeping Hunting-dogs, or Hawks. The 18th orders, that ſtrange Clergy-men ſhall not be ſuffer'd to exerciſe their Eccleſiaſtical Functions, unleſs they have a Letter from their Biſhop. The 19th ſays, that thoſe that will not obey their Biſhops, nor execute their Miniſtery diligently, in the Church which ſhall be allotted them, ſhall be Excommunicated and Degraded. The 20th appoints, that thoſe Women, who are devoted to God by the Sacred Veil, and fall into any carnal crimes, ſhall not leave their profeſſion, but ſhall be put to ſevere penance. The 21ſt obliges thoſe Widows, who have taken the Veil, and have Prayed in the Church among the profeſſed Nuns, offer'd Oblations with them, and promis'd to continue in that Eſtate, never to leave it. The 22d holds, that it is not lawful for them, who have by their Parents been put into the Monaſteries in their Infancy, and have been brought up in a Regular Diſcipline, to leave or forſake that ſort of Life, when they are come to a Riper Age. The 23d Revives that Maxim of the Councils of Spain, That a Man may be made a Monk, either by the Devotion of his Parents, or by his own proper Profeſſion; and declares, That both ways equally oblige: and thoſe, that are made ſo either way, may not return to a Secular Life. The 24th is againſt them that doe any Injury to Clergy-men or Churches. The 25th Commands Prieſts to impoſe penances proportionable to Mens Crimes, and agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The following Canons contain the puniſhments of different ſorts of Manſlaughter. The 31ſt gives Lepers a liberty of receiving the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but not with thoſe that are in perfect health. The 32d ſays, that the number of Children, which a Man may have, can't be determin'd; yet no Man may Marry his near Relations. The 33d forbids Marrying Two Siſters. The 34th a God-mother, or God-daughter. The 35th condemns to the penance of Murtherers, thoſe Women, who cauſe Abortions in themſelves; and thoſe to ſomething leſs puniſhments, who ſmother their Children in their ſleep, though not thinking of it. The 36th ſubjects to penance, and ſeparates him from his Wife, who hath layn with his Wife's Daughter by another Husband. The 37th imports, that Marryed perſons, though under penance, are not to be parted. The 38th and 39th impoſe penance upon thoſe that kill their Slaves. The 40th appoints, that a Biſhop, who ordains a Slave, knowing him to be ſuch, without the conſent of his Maſter, ſhall pay double the worth of him to his Maſter; but, if he were ignorant of it, the Sum ſhall be paid by them who were Witneſſes for him. The 41ſt orders, that they ſhall be Excommunicated who live in Enmity, and will not be reconciled. The 42d conſtitutes, that no Man ſhall be Condemned, who is not formally Convicted. The 43d ſentences them to Deprivation of their Goods, and Excommunication till Death, who ſide with the Enemies of the State. The 44th condemns Adulterers to a Seven years penance.

Theſe

Theſe are the 44 Canons, which are all, but the 40th, in an ancient MS. under the Name of the Council of Wormes. There are alſo 36 other Canons, that bear the Name of this Council. But ſince they are not to be found in any ancient MS. and ſome of them are already among the 44 preceeding; and Labbé hath aſſured us, that the order of the firſt is very different in a MS. which he hath conſulted; And there are ſome Canons cited by Ivo Caarnutenſis, under the Name of the Council of Wormes, which are not found among theſe Latter; it may be rationally doubted, whether this Collection of 44, or 80 Canons, were made in this Council of Wormes. However that be, theſe Canons are, almoſt all of them, found either in more ancient Councils, or in thoſe about this time.

The Second Council of Douzy.

The Council of Douzy. AN Aſſembly of Biſhops, who met the 13th of June at Douzy, in the Dioceſs of Rheims, Wrote a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of Aquitain, which contains ſome Laws of the Councils and Popes about Marriages between Relations, and againſt them who poſſeſſed themſelves of the Churches Revenues, that they might deterr the Great Lords from thoſe two diſorders, which reigned among them. This Aſſembly alſo Tried Duda the Nun, who, being ambitious to become an Abbeſs, combined with the Prieſt Huntbertus, and engaged him to Write Slanderous Libels againſt her Abbeſs, and preſent them to the King's Commiſſioners, by whom he was convicted of Falſehood and Calumny. After this, he returned to his Monaſtery, and had ſuch private commerce with the ſaid Nun, that ſhe became with Child by him: She confeſſed her fault, and ſaid, That it was done by the Prieſt Huntbertus; but he denyed it. The Council, in the firſt place, declared, That that Prieſt, being already convicted of Perjury, and to be a Falſe Accuſer, ought not to be believed upon his denial, nor ought they to refer themſelves to his bare Affirmation. Secondly, That before he be judged in the place, where the Crime was committed, the King ſhould ſend certain Commiſſioners into the Monaſtery, who may examine all the Nuns apart, and inquire out particularly of Duda, the time and place, where ſhe committed the Crime with Huntbertus; who may alſo examine her Companions, and ſo make that Prieſt ſenſible that his Oath is not to be truſted; That if he perſiſt in the Denial, they ſhall bring him before the Deputies of the Synod, King's Commiſſioners, Prieſts, and Clergy of the Monaſtery, with the Abbeſs, and her Society. That Duda, and her Companions, being alſo ſummon'd thither, ſhall endeavour to make him own his Crime. But, if he ſtill reſolutely deny it, they ſhall Swear Duda and her Companions, and make them bear Witneſs againſt him; That, upon their Teſtimony, he ſhall be depoſed by the Deputies of the Synod, Baniſhed by the King's Commiſſioners, and Impriſoned in ſome Monaſtery. As for Duda, they ordered, That ſhe ſhould be put to Penance, and Scourged by the Abbeſs, in the preſence of her Siſter-Nuns, and ſhall not be received into Communion till after Seven years Penance. And, as for the two Nuns, who being conſcious of Duda's Fault, did not diſcover it, they judged them Blameworthy; becauſe the Prieſts, to whom they diſcover'd that ſin, by ſecret confeſſion, are obliged to keep them ſecret; yet there is not the ſame Obligation of Secreſie upon them, who attain the knowledge of others Crimes ſome other way. Nevertheleſs, they dealt more mildly with theſe Nuns, and ordered, that after they have been moderately chaſtiſed with a Rod, they ſhall endure but Three years Penance. This is the ſubſtance of the Relation of this Council, which is full of choice paſſages out of the Councils and Fathers, very handſomly and fitly alledged.

The Council of Ravenna.

The Council of Ravenna. JOhn the Eighth appointed a Council at Ravenna, where he was to meet the Biſhops at the end of May, 877. He came and held a Council there in the beginning of Auguſt, where they made Nineteen Canons for the good of the Church.

The Firſt enjoyns, and obligeth all Metropolitans within three Months after their Ordination, to ſend a Confeſſion of their Faith to the Holy See, demand the Pall; and they that ſhall neglect this Duty, ſhall have no power to Ordain Biſhops till they have performed it; and that other Metropolitans ſhall have liberty to ordain the Biſhops of their Province, after three Admonitions, and having taken the Advice of the Pope.

The Second orders, that if thoſe who are choſen Biſhops do not procure Ordination within three Months after their Election, they ſhall be Excommunicated till they doe; and if they do not do it within Five Months, they ſhall neither be Ordained for the Church, to which they are choſen, nor to any other.

In the third 'tis forbidden to make uſe of the Pall in the Streets in Proceſſion, or in any other Ceremonies, than what are appointed by St. Gregory.

The Fourth forbids the Nobles and Judges to contemn or abuſe the Biſhops, or exact any thing of them. It reſerves the cognizance of the cauſes of the Clergy, Nuns, Orphans and Widows, to the Biſhops.

The Fifth is againſt thoſe that take away the Revenues of the Church.

The Sixth is againſt Raviſhers.

The

The Seventh is against Murtherers, and Incendaries.

The Eighth is against those that pillage and steal other Mens Goods.

The Ninth declares them Excommunicate, who voluntarily keep company with persons Excommunicated; and requires, that all Audience be denied them who are Excommunicated a whole year, and trouble not themselves to take off their Excommunication; if they die in that condition, it forbids to accept them to Communion.

That the former Decree may be put in execution, it is ordered in the following Article, That all the Bishops should send to their Neighbours, and people of their Dioceſs, the Names of such as are Excommunicated, and cause them to set up a List of them upon their Church-doors.

The Eleventh imports, that those, who, to avoid deserved punishment, fly to other Lords, shall not be received, till their Master hath Justice done him.

The Twelfth is, that they that absent themselves Three Sundays together from the Assemblies of the Faithful in their Parishes, shall be Excommunicated.

The Thirteenth enjoyns the Defenders, Preservers and Managers of Church-Revenues, to doe their Duty, under the pain of Excommunication.

The Fourteenth shews, that he shall not be Ordained a Priest, that is not diligent in the Service of the Church.

The Three following are for the preservation of the Laws and Revenues of the Church of Rome.

The Eighteenth orders, that Tythes shall be paid to the Priest that serves the Parish; and forbids the Priest of another Dioceſs, or Parish, to meddle with them.

The Nineteenth forbids the Judges, or King's Commissioners to hold any Pleas, or Lodge in Churches.

At this Council there were present, besides the Pope, the Arch-bishop of Ravenna, Patriarch of Grado, Bishop of Verona, and Six and Forty other Bishops of Italy; who signed a Grant, by which they confirmed the Donation of certain Lands and Revenues given to the Church of Autun by King Charles.

The Council of Troyes.

John the Eighth being come into France, to desire the Assistance of Charles the Emperour, called a Council at Troyes in 878, at which were present with the Bishop of Porto, and Three other Bishops of Italy, the Arch-bishop of Rheims, Sens, Lyons, Narbonne, Arles, Tours, Besancon, Vienna, and Eighteen other Bishops of France. In it they treated of several matters. The Bishops approved of the Excommunication of Lambert, and Adelbert; and declared, that they would look upon all those as Excommunicated, who had been so by the Pope. They pronounced an Excommunication against those, that had invaded the Goods of the Church. They confirmed the Judgment given against Formosus. They made a Canon, forbidding all Christians to Marry a Second Wife, while the First is living; and Bishops removing from one Church to another; and, in the conclusion, made Seven Canons. In the First it is commanded, that Secular Noble-men should pay respect to the Bishops, by not sitting down before them; and, that Lay-men should not meddle with Church Revenues. The Second enforces the same prohibition. The Third orders, that the Canons made the year before at Ravenna, should be observed. The Fourth enjoyns the Bishops to assist each other in the defence of the Revenues and Interests of their Churches. The Fifth requires, that those persons, who have been Excommunicated, or subjected to Penance by one Bishop, shall not be received by his Brethren. The Sixth asserts, that they will not receive another Man's Servant without his consent. The Seventh says, that they will not entertain a private Accusation against any Man. The Pope having seen the Body of the Gothick and Spanish Laws, brought by the Arch-bishop of Narbonne, and finding no Law in it against Sacrilege, Wrote to them to observe the Law made by Charles the Emperour, who Fined such as were guilty of it Thirty pounds. He sent also a Letter to the Bishop of Poictiers, forbidding him to encroach upon the Revenues of his Church; and, enjoyning all those, that had invaded it, to make Restitution. By another Letter he confirms the Privileges of the Church of Tours, and grants a Privilege to the Monastery of Fleury. Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, presented a Petition to this Synod, and his Affair was here determined, as we have said. In this Synod King Lewis the Stammerer was Crowned by the Pope. They made a Motion to put out Gozelin, Abbot of S. Denys, but 'twas not put in execution. Lastly, They determined some affairs concerning the Bishops of Avignon, Troyes, and Besancon. This Council was ended at Five Sessions, or Actions, which have we have Abridged with the Seven Canons, and the Decisions of John the Eighth, of which we spoken.

The Council of Troyes.

The Council of Fiſmes.

The Council of Fiſmes. IN 881, ſeveral Biſhops of France met at Fiſmes, April the 2d, where, after they had recited that excellent paſſage of Gelaſius, about the Diſtinction between the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Power; and, another place out of S. Gregory, concerning the Epiſcopal Vigilance, they admoniſh King Lewis to preſerve, and increaſe the Honour and Revenues of the Church, and to maintain the Authority of the Biſhops. They require, that Monaſteries and Nunneries be viſited by the King's Commiſſioners, who ſhall repreſent the ſtate of thoſe places. They exhort the King to puniſh Raviſhers ſeverely. They alſo exhort the King's Officers and Judges to hinder Diſorders, and puniſh Crimes. They invite Sinners to Penance; and, Laſtly, addreſſing their Speech to the King, they adviſe him to provide wiſe, diſcreet, and impartial Counſellors, who love Juſtice and Religion, and will employ their knowledge and zeal to ſuppreſs Vice.

The Council of Cologne.

The Council of Cologne. IN the year 887, there was an Aſſembly held at Cologne, made up of the Arch-Biſhops of Mentz and Cologne, Four or Five Biſhops, ſome Abbots, ſeveral Prieſts and Deacons, and ſome Lay-men, in which Drogo, Biſhop of Metz was Ordained. Afterward they renewed ſome Conſtitutions made againſt them, who had taken away ſome Revenues belonging to the Church. Nevertheleſs they gave them to the end of June, to be received to Penance, if they would come in. They alſo revived divers other Canons of Councils about unlawful Marriages.

The Council of Mentz.

The Council of Mentz. THis Council was called by King Arnoldus at that time, when Germany was much afflicted by the Inroads of the Normans. The Arch-biſhops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with ſeveral of their Suffragans: In it, after they had declared, by way of Preface, the miſerable condition that Germany was reduced to, they made the following Canons.

The Firſt obliges, to Pray continually in the Church for King Arnoldus, his Queen, and all Chriſtians.

In the Second, they give the King a ſhort Abridgment of the chief Duties incumbent on him.

The Third ſhews him, that he is obliged to Adminiſter Juſtice impartially both to great and ſmall.

The Fourth ſays, that they who are Founders of Churches, ſhould leave the diſpoſal of the Revenues they give, to the Biſhops, according to the Nineteenth Canon of the Third Council of Toledo.

The Fifth enjoyns, that no Prieſts be put into any Church, without the permiſſion of the Biſhop.

The Sixth requires, that thoſe ſhall be puniſhed as Murtherers of the Poor, who detain the Revenues of Churches, Monaſteries, or Hoſpitals.

The Seventh declares, that thoſe, who do any injury to Clergy-men, ſhall be put out of the Church, till they have made a proportionable ſatisfaction.

The Eighth orders, that they who had cut off the Noſe of a Prieſt of the Church of Wirtzburg, ſhould be Excommunicated.

The Ninth commands, that Maſſes ſhall not be celebrated in all places; but either in ſuch places as are conſecrated by the Biſhop, or are allowed by him for that uſe. That in the places, or Churches Burnt by the Normans, Maſs may be celebrated in the Chapels, till they are Re-built; and that in a Journey, if Men can't find a Church, they may ſay it in the open Field, or in a Tent, provided they have a Conſecrated Table for an Altar, and other things neceſſary for that Service.

The Tenth enjoyns Clergy-men abſolutely to have no Woman to co-habit with them.

The Eleventh ſays, that all that Invade the Lands of the Church, ſhall be Excommunicated and Baniſh'd.

The Twelfth is a Canon falſely attributed to Pope Silveſter, about the Accuſations of Clergymen.

The Thirteenth imports, that ancient Churches ſhall not be deprived of their Tythes and Revenues to Endow New Chapels.

The Fourteenth holds, that no Biſhop can retain, ordain, or judge a perſon, that belongs to another Biſhop's Dioceſs.

The Fifteenth aſſerts, that he that doth ſo, ſhall not be received at a Council, till he hath had a Reproof.

The Sixteenth impoſes a ſevere and long Penance upon him that ſhall kill a Prieſt.

The Seventeenth orders the Payment of Tythes.

The

The Eighteenth is againſt a perſon that had Marryed his God-mother, and being divorced from her, had taken her again.

The Nineteenth revives ſome old Laws againſt Unchaſt Prieſts.

The Twentieth is againſt them, who, by their Petitions, get the Revenues of the Church into their poſſeſſion by a precarious Title.

The One and twentieth revives the Prohibitions made by Charles the Great, to hold Meetings about Secular Affairs in the Churches, or Church-porches.

The Two and twentieth is againſt thoſe, who defraud the Church of part of their Tithes.

The Three and twentieth ordains, that Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes ſhall be judged by the Biſhop, either according to the Depoſition of Witneſſes, or by the Oath of the Accuſed, and none ſhall be admitted for a Witneſs, unleſs they be 14 years of Age.

The Four and twentieth recommends Peace, Unity, and Loyalty to their Prince.

The Five and twentieth orders thoſe, who have the Patronage of Monaſteries committed to them, to place ſuch Superiours over them as may doe their Duty, and will govern ſuch as are ſubject to their power, as they ought.

The Six and twentieth forbids, that Widows ſhould be eaſily admitted to the Veil; and declares, that they ought to be left at liberty, either to Marry, or embrace a ſingle Life, till their converſation be approved. If they embrace a Single Life, it orders, that they be put into the Monaſteries, where they ſhall live regularly with the Nuns. If they violate their Profeſſion, they ſhall be puniſhed Canonically: They renew the Canon of Elvira, made concerning Virgins devoted to God, which violate their Virginity.

The Council of Metz.

I Place this Council after the preceeding, becauſe we do not preciſely know the year of its Meeting; yet it was held under the ſame Prince by Rathbodus, Biſhop of Trevet, and Robert, Biſhop of Metz. The Biſhops of Verdun, and Toul, were preſent at it, with one Abbot, and ſeveral Prieſts. Many Earls, Lords, and other Perſons of worth were alſo at it. The following Conſtitutions were made at it. The Council of Metz.

The Firſt is a reſolution to endeavour to eſtabliſh Peace in the Church, promote Piety and Diſcipline, and hinder the Poor from being pillaged.

The Second provides, that Tithes ſhall be paid to the Prieſt that ſerves the Church, to which they were anciently due, to maintain him; to furniſh the Church with Lights, and Ornaments, and to make neceſſary Repairs for the Buildings.

The Third requires, that every Prieſt ſhall have but one Church, unleſs there hath been a Chapel annexed to it, time out of Mind.

The Fourth forbids, that any Tribute ſhall be exacted for a Farm, or Four Slaves belonging to the Church, or for Lands given for a Burial-place; and that nothing ſhall be paid for a Burial.

The Fifth orders, that Prieſts ſhall have no Women with them; no, not ſo much as their Mother or Siſter.

The Sixth enjoyns, that Prieſts ſhall ſhew their Biſhop the Books, and Sacerdotal Habits; that they ſhall keep the Throne under a Key; that Clergy-men ſhall not bear Arms, nor wear Lay-mens Habits; nor Lay-men Prieſts; that none ſhall be admitted for God-fathers, but ſuch as underſtand the Confeſſion of Faith; and, that one God-father is ſufficient.

The Seventh forbids Chriſtians eating with Jews.

The Eighth orders, that Maſs ſhall not be celebrated in places which are not Conſecrated; and that Biſhops ſhall Conſecrate thoſe Churches a-new, which have been conſecrated by Suffragan Biſhops onely.

The Ninth commands, that they ſhall veil, and ſhut up, in ſome Monaſtery, two Nuns of the Monaſtery of St. Peter, who had been put out of it, and unveiled for their Crimes; and that a Deacon convicted of Sacrilege ſhall be put in priſon.

The Tenth pronounces Excommunication againſt ſome perſons who had Guelt a Prieſt, who would oblige one of their Kinſwomen to return to her Husband.

The Eleventh Excommunicates thoſe perſons, who exerciſed pillaging in the Province, and did not come to the Synod to acknowledge their Crime. It iſſues out, in particular, an Excommunication againſt two private perſons, the one guilty of a Rape committed upon a Nun, the other of Man-ſlaughter.

The Twelfth aſſerts it to be unlawful to Communicate with Excommunicate perſons, or give any tokens of Communion to thoſe, who died under the Bonds of Excommunication.

The Thirteenth orders prayers to be made for King Arnoldus, with a Faſt of three days, and ſome Proceſſions to obtain of God the Peace and Quiet of the State.

The Council of Vienna.

THe Biſhops of the Province of Arles made, in 892, ſome Conſtitutions like thoſe, which had been made in Germany. Two Legates from Pope Formoſus were preſent at that Aſſembly. In it they Excommunicated, 1ſt. thoſe who invaded, or unjuſtly detained the Revenues of the Church. The Council of Vienna.

2dly, Thoſe,

2dly, Thoſe, who injured, or abuſed the Clergy. 3dly, Thoſe, who miſemployed the Alms given by a Biſhop, or Prieſt, in their Sickneſs. 4thly, It was forbidden Secular perſons to beſtow Churches without the conſent of the Dioceſan, and to exact any Preſent of the Prieſts they put into them. By the 5th 'tis ordered, that Prieſts have no Women with them.

The Council of Tribur.

The Council of Tribur.

OF all the Councils held at this time, there were none ſo numerous, or that made more conſiderable Conſtitutions, than this, which was held in 895, under King Arnoldus, at his Palace called Tribur, ſituate near Mentz. The Arch-biſhops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with 19 German Biſhops. The Conſtitutions of it are contained in 58 Articles, or Canons, which are ſet after a long Preface.

The Firſt is onely an Invocation of the Spirit of Peace..

In the Second, upon occaſion of a Prieſt, who complained, that a Lay-man had put out his eyes, and his Biſhop pronounced him Innocent, and becauſe the Lay-man would not appear before him, nor undergoe Penance for his crime, they renewed the Canons which forbid to receive perſons Excommunicated by their Biſhop, or communicate with them. And, in the following Article they enjoyn all the Counts to apprehend the Excommunicate, who will not ſubmit themſelves to Penance, and bring them before their Biſhop; that thoſe who are not afraid of the Judgments of God, may be terrified by the Severities of Men. They promiſe Impunity to them, who ſlay them, when they defend themſelves againſt their apprehenſion, and will not have them obliged to pay the Fine in that caſe uſually impoſed.

The Fourth directs, how the Fine which is to be paid, for hurting and wounding a Prieſt, ſhall be employed. If he ſurvive, he ſhall have it all; if he dies, it ſhall be divided into three parts, and given, one part to the Church, in which he was Ordained, the other to his Biſhop, and the third to his Relations.

In the Fifth, they impoſe upon him that kills a Prieſt, Five years Penance; during which time he ſhall eat no Meat, nor drink any Wine, unleſs it be on Feſtivals and Sundays. He ſhall carry no Arms, go always on foot, and never come into the Church. After theſe years are expired, he may come into the Church, but ſhall not Communicate till Five years more be expired; in which time he ſhall keep three days of Abſtinence weekly.

The Sixth condemns him, as guilty of Sacrilege, who enters into the Church-porch with a naked Sword.

The Seventh is againſt ſuch as violently extort the Goods of the Church.

The Eighth is againſt thoſe, that will not perform the Penance impoſed on them by the Biſhop.

The Ninth ſhews, that if the Biſhop and Count call an Aſſembly both in one day, it is juſt that the People and Count both ſhould meet at the Biſhops; nevertheleſs, to prevent ſuch an accident, and for the good of Peace, it was ordained, without any prejudice to the power and dignity of the Biſhop, that he that firſt ſends out his Summons, ſhall hold his Court.

The Tenth renews the Canon of the Council of Carthage, which orders, that no Biſhop ſhall be depoſed, unleſs it be by 12 others, a Prieſt by 6, and a Deacon by 3.

The Eleventh inflicts the puniſhment of Depoſition upon thoſe Deacons and Prieſts, who have committed Murther, although againſt their Wills.

The Twelfth orders, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm ſhall not be adminiſtred but at the Solemn Times, i. e. at Eaſter and Whitſuntide.

The Thirteenth commands, that the Tithes and Oblations of the Church ſhall be divided into Four parts, one for the Biſhop, two for the Clergy, the third for the Poor, and a fourth for the Reparation of the Church.

The Fourteenth preſerves the Tithes to the ancient Churches, and annexes the Tithes of new broken-up Lands to them; but if new Houſes be built Four Miles from other Churches, in a Wood, or other place, and a Church be built there by the conſent of the Biſhop, they may put in a Prieſt, and give him the new Tithes.

The Fifteenth ſays, that the Dead ſhall be Buryed, if poſſible, in the City, or ſome Monaſteries; but, if that can't eaſily be done, then in the Church, to which they pay their Tithes.

The Sixteenth forbids exacting any thing for a Burial.

And the Seventeenth prohibits the Burying of Lay-men in Churches.

The Eighteenth forbids the uſe of Wooden Patins and Chalices.

The Nineteenth orders, that Water and Wine be mixed in the Chalice, but twice as much Wine as Water.

The Twentieth is againſt them that Miſuſe Clergy-men.

The One and twentieth provides, that no Oaths be required of Prieſts.

The Two and twentieth ſays, that thoſe that are accuſed of any Crime, which they have no proof of, ſhall clear themſelves by Oath. But if there be any juſt cauſe of ſuſpicion, they ſhall undergo the Proof of Red-hot Iron, in the preſence of the Biſhop or his Commiſſioner.

The Three and twentieth revives the Laws againſt thoſe who Marry Virgins Conſecrated to God.

The Four and twentieth imports, that a Maid, who hath taken the Veil by her own deſire, and without without any Conſtraint, before ſhe is 12 Years old, ſhe is obliged to retain her Virginity, if ſhe hath worn that Habit a Year and a Day, and no Body may take her out of the Monaſtery.

The Twenty Fifth forbids Biſhops to give the Veil to Widows, and obliges them to a ſingle Life, who have taken it before.

The Twenty Sixth allows Monks, who will not go out of their Monaſtery to preſerve themſelves, or others, to do it with the conſent of the Biſhop, Abbot, and their Brethren; but orders thoſe to be puniſhed, who get out to avoid the ſeverity of the Diſcipline.

The Twenty Seventh forbids the Clergy to forſake their Office, and gives the Biſhops power to keep them to it, and take them up, if they are fled to take a ſecular Habit.

The Twenty Ninth forbids that a Slave be ordained till he hath gotten perfect Liberty.

The Thirtieth appoints, that in Memory of St. Peter, the H. Roman and Apoſtolick See ought be honoured, it being juſt, that that Church, which is the Mother of the Prieſtly Dignity, ſhould be the Miſtreſs of Eccleſiaſtical Order, ſo that 'tis fit, that Men bear and endure the Yoke ſhe lays upon them, although it be almoſt inſupportable. Nevertheleſs 'tis ordered, that if any Prieſt or Deacon be accuſed of carrying forged Letters from the Pope to ſtir up any Troubles, or lay any Snares for the Miniſters of the Church, the Biſhop may with due Reſpect to the Pope, ſtop his Proceedings, till he hath written to the H. See.

The Thirty Firſt is againſt Thieves.

The Thirty Second orders, that if the Right of Patronage to any Church be diſputed by ſeveral Co-heirs which can't agree, to hinder the Diſorders which may follow upon it, the Biſhop ſhall remove the Reliques out of the Church, ſhut it up, and provide that no Maſs be celebrated in it, till all the Heirs ſhall agree together to preſent one Prieſt, and that they ſhall neither put in, nor remove any Prieſt without the Biſhop's conſent.

The Thirty Third revives thoſe Canons, which exclude ſuch Perſons from H. Orders, as have made themſelves Eunuchs, or maimed themſelves; but it excepts ſuch from this Law, as have loſt any of their Members, or are made Lame by any Diſtemper, or other Accident.

The Thirty Fourth treats thoſe Men gently, who in the Wars with the Barbarians have ſlain by chance ſome Chriſtians, which they took for Pagans, by impoſing on them only 40 Days Penance.

The Thirty Fifth forbids that any Pleadings or other Civil Aſſemblies be held on Sundays, Holidays, Faſts, or in Lent, and commands that all Chriſtians be preſent on Holy-days and Sundays, at the Vigils, Divine Service, and Maſs; and that in Lent, and other Faſts, they faſt with Devotion, pray with Zeal and Fervour, and give Alms according to their Abilities.

The Thirty Sixth declares, that if it happens that a Man, who is cutting down a Tree, and ſeeing it ready to fall, bids his Companion ſtand out of the way, and he doth not do it, but it falls upon him, he that cut down the Tree ſhall not be reproved or blamed for it.

The Thirty Seventh is a like Caſe: If a Woman leaves her Child near boiling Water, and the Water ſtill boiling ſcalds the Child, the Woman ſhall be put to Penance for her Negligence, but ſhe that ſet the Water on the Fire hath committed no fault.

The Thirty Eighth orders, that every Free-man that marries a Woman made Free, ſhall keep her as his Wife.

The Thirty Ninth orders the ſame thing to ſuch as marry Strangers.

The Fourtieth declares the marriage of a Man and a Widow null, who have committed Adultery together in the Life of her Husband, if he hath promiſed to marry her at that time.

The Fourty Firſt imports, that if a Perſon who is unable to do the Duties of Marriage, marry a Woman, and his Brother abuſe her, they ſhall be parted, and ſhe ſhall not have Commerce with either of them; nevertheleſs the Biſhop may permit her to marry again, after the Guilty Perſon hath done Penance.

The Fourty Second aſſerts, that if any Perſon change his Dioceſs, after he hath committed inceſt, he ſhall be taken up, and put to Penance by the Biſhop of the Place where he committed it.

The Fourty Third is, that if a Perſon commit Fornication with a Woman, who hath had carnal knowledge of his Son or Brother without his Knowledge, and he depoſeth upon Oath, that he is not Conſcious of any ſuch thing, he may be allowed to marry, after he hath done Penance.

The Fourty Fourth ſays, that if one Brother marry a Woman, with whom another Brother hath had carnal Commerce, a ſevere Penance ſhall be impoſed upon this laſt, becauſe he did not tell his Brother of it, after which they may Marry. As to the Woman, they revived upon her account the Law of the Council of Neocæſarea.

The Forty Fifth orders, that he that lies with two Siſters, and the Siſter which lies with him laſt, if ſhe knows that he hath had Commerce with her Siſter, ſhall be put to Penance, and obliged to live a ſingle Life to their Death.

The Forty Sixth importeth, that if a Woman be proſecuted at Law by her Husband for Adultery, and ſhe hath recourſe to the Biſhop, he ſhall endeavour to obtain of her Husband not to put her to Death, but if he can't prevail, he ſhall not deliver her into her Husband's Power, but ſend her whither ſhe deſires for her Safety.

The Fourty Seventh allows him, who is God-father to a Man's Child, to marry his Widow, if ſhe was not his God-mother.

The Fourty Eighth imports, that if a Man by chance marry the Daughter of his God-mother, he may keep her and live with her, as with his Wife.

The Fourty Ninth forbids, that ſuch as have committed Adultery together, ſhould ever Marry, Dwell, or have Society together. If they have any Eſtate, it ſhall be preſerved for the Adulterous Off-Spring.

The Fiftieth is againſt thoſe who pervert Chriſtians, and deſtroy them by their evil Arts.

The Fifty Firſt repeats the Prohibitions made to an Adulterer, to marry the Woman with whom he hath committed Adultery, after her Husband's Death.

The Fifty Second leaves it in the Power of the Biſhop, to regulate the time of Penance for involuntary Man-ſlayers.

The Fifty Fourth to the Fifty Eighth, which is the laſt, appoint the time and manner of Penance for wilful Murtherers, viz. Seven Years. For the firſt Forty days, the Guilty ſhall not go into the Church, eat nothing but Bread and Salt, and drink nothing but Water. He ſhall go bare Footed, having his Thighs only covered, he ſhall not lie with his Wife, he ſhall not converſe with other Men; after this, he ſhall not enter into the Church for a whole Year, all which time, he ſhall abſtain from Meat, Cheeſe, drinking Wine, Metheglin and Beer, unleſs upon Holidays, or in a journey, or in Sickneſs, in which caſe he ſhall buy off the Faſts of Tueſday, Thurſday and Saturday, by giving a Penny to the Poor, and maintaining Three poor People. After this year, he may go into the Church, with other Penitents, but he ſhall obſerve the ſame Abſtinences, for the Second and Third Years, ſaving that he may for all that time buy off the Three Days aforeſaid. In the Four laſt Years, he ſhall make three Lents, the one before Eaſter, in which he ſhall abſtain from Cheeſe, Fiſh and Wine. The Second before the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, and the Third before the Nativity of Chriſt, in which he ſhall practiſe the ſame abſtinences. He may eat the reſt of the year, what he pleaſes, on Tueſdays, Thurſdays and Saturdays, and buy off Munday and Wedneſday for a Penny, but he ſhall keep a ſtrict Faſt on Friday. When the Seven Years are over, if he hath obſerved theſe Penances exactly, he ſhall be reconciled as the Penitents are, and be admitted to partake of the Communion.

The Council of Nantes.

The Council of Nantes.

THE Canons which bear the Name of the Council of Nantes, are only a Collection of ſeveral Conſtitutions made at different places.

The Firſt orders, that the Prieſts on Sundays and Holy-days ſhall demand of the People before they ſay Maſs, whether there be any perſon of another Pariſh, who is come to hear Maſs in Contempt of his own Prieſt; and if they find any, they ſhall put them out of the Church, and oblige them to return to their own Pariſh. They ſhall alſo ask, if there be any Perſon at Variance, and in Quarrels, and if they find any, they ſhall cauſe them to be Reconciled immediately, which if they refuſe to be, they ſhall alſo put them out of the Church, till they ſhall be Reconciled, becauſe they cannot bring their Offering to the Altar, till they be reconciled to their Brother. This being done, the Prieſt ſhall ſay Maſs.

The Second forbids all Prieſts to receive the Pariſhioners of another, unleſs he be in a Voyage, or come to ſome Court.

The Third forbids a Prieſt to have any Woman with him, yea, thoſe that are accepted by the Canons. It forbids alſo Women to approach the Altar, officiate as Prieſts, or to ſit within the Rails.

The Fourth contains Directions, what a Prieſt ought to do when he hears that any Perſon is ſick in his Pariſh. He ought to go immediately to ſee him, and when he enters into his Chamber, ſprinkle Holy-Water, ſinging the Anthem, Aſperges me Domine, Thou ſhalt ſprinkle me, O Lord, &c. Pſal. 51. 7. Then he ſhall ſay the Lord's Prayer, the Seven Pſalms, and the Prayers for the Sick. After this, he ſhall cauſe all that are in the Chamber to go out, and coming to the Bed of the Sick-Man, he ſhall ſpeak comfortably to him, and exhort him to put his whole Truſt in God, to bear patiently the Afflictions he hath laid upon him, to confeſs his Sins, and to reſolve fully upon a thorough Converſion; if God reſtores him to his Health, to promiſe, that he will do Penance, to diſpoſe of his Goods, and ſet his worldly affairs in order, while he is of a ſound Mind, to redeem his Sins by Alms, to pardon thoſe that have injured him, to make a Confeſſion of the Faith of the Church, and not to deſpair of the Mercy of God. After he hath given him theſe Exhortations, he ſhall give him his Bleſſing, and then ſhall retire to leave the Sick Man to think of his Sins.

The Fifth imports, that the Prieſt who ſhall receive the Confeſſion of a Sick-Man, ſhall not beſtow Abſolution upon him, but upon Condition, that if God ſhall reſtore him to his Health, he will undergoe Penance proportionable to his Faults.

The Sixth forbids taking any thing for Burials, and Burying in the Church, near the Altar.

The Seventh forbids all Miniſters of the Church to favour ſecret and clandeſtine Ordinations of any of the Clergy of another Dioceſs.

The

The Eighth forbids a Prieſt to have more than one Church, unleſs he have other Prieſts under him in every of thoſe Churches, who ſhall recite the Office day and night, and celebrate Maſs in them every day.

The Ninth commands, that the Bread be Bleſſed that is diſtributed to the People. This is one of the Articles of Hincmarus's Conſtitutions made 852.

The Tenth is about the Revenues of the Church, what uſe they ought to be put to, and how diſtributed into Four parts.

The Eleventh Orders, that when the Biſhop deſigns to make an Ordination, he ſhall cauſe all thoſe who are to be Ordained, to come to the City the Wedneſday before the Ordination, with the Arch-Prieſts who are to preſent them. That afterward he ſhall ſend ſome Prieſts, and other diſcreet perſons, to get information of their Life, Education, Birth, Manners, and Capacity; that he ſhall have them examined Three days together, and on Saturday Ordain thoſe he finds worthy.

The Twelfth allows a Man to put away his Wife for Adultery, but not to Marry another in her Life-time. He may be Reconciled to her, but on condition that he doe Penance with her.

The Thirteenth impoſes Three years Penance for ſingle Fornication.

The Fourteenth impoſes Seven years Penance upon a Married perſon, that hath committed Adultery; and Five on him that is not Married.

The Fifteenth regulates the practiſes of Fraternities, and takes away Abuſes. This is Copyed out of Hincmarus's Conſtitutions.

The next is an Extract from the ſame Author, In it a Prieſt is forbidden to ſue for another Church beſides what he has, and give Preſents to the Lord to attain it.

The Seventeenth lays 14 years penance upon a Voluntary and Publick Murtherer, viz. Five years in which he ſhall be ſeparated from the Church; the reſt of the time he may be at Prayers, but without Offering, or Communicating.

The Eighteenth impoſeth Five years penance upon an Involuntary Murtherer; Forty days Faſt with Bread and Water, Two years ſeparation from the Prayers of the Faithful, and Three years without communicating. It leaves it to the Prieſt to preſcribe the Abſtinence as he thinks convenient.

The Nineteenth forbids Nuns and Widows to be preſent at Pleadings, or any publick Aſſemblies, if they are not ſummon'd by the Prince or Biſhop, or have no neceſſary buſineſs, in which caſe they ought to have the permiſſion of the Biſhop.

The Twentieth commands, that Biſhops and their Miniſters ſhould uſe their utmoſt endeavours to aboliſh the Remainders of Idolatry in all places.

A LETTER from the Clergy of Ravenna to Charles the Younger.

CHARLES the younger had conſulted the Clergy of Ravenna, to know, whether the Monks, which were raiſed to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, ought to wear Clergy-men's habit, or keep to their Monks Garb. In Anſwer to him, they brought ſeveral Authorities of the Popes, to ſhew, that Clergy-men and Monks ought not ſo much to be diſtinguiſhed by their Habits, as by their holy Lives and Profeſſion. Then they ſay, that it doth not ſeem contrary to the Laws of the Church, that the Monks who are made Biſhops, may not wear the ſame Habits with other Biſhops, according to the practice of the Church of Rome; and they think, that ſuch an Uniformity is much better, than if they were diſtinguiſhed, as they are in the Greek Church. That nevertheleſs they do not think that it ought to be a Law to all Churches, becauſe every one may have its particular Cuſtoms. But yet they can't condemn the practice of the Italian Biſhops, and that it is convenient to uphold it, and to oblige all Monks that are Ordained Biſhops, to wear the Stole, i. e. a Long Garment, in Honour to the Prieſthood; although they are not thereby diſpenſed with to neglect the practice of their Rule. Laſtly, That we muſt follow in ſuch things the Cuſtom that is anciently ſetled in the Church.

The LETTER of the Biſhops of Germany to John the VIIIth.

THis Letter is Written in the Name of the Biſhops, Clergy, and People of Bavaria. They tell the Pope, that having heard of their Predeceſſors, that the Biſhop of Rome hath been always careful to promote the Peace, Union, and Diſcipline of every Church; they cannot believe that which is daily reported, That there is lately come out from the Holy Apoſtolick See, which is the Original of the Chriſtian Religion, and the Source of the Prieſtly Dignity, a Decree both unjuſt in it ſelf, and contrary to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church; but that three Biſhops, who pretend themſelves his Legates to the Sclavonians and Moravians, have raiſed that Report. That theſe People were heretofore ſubject to their Prince and the Biſhops, that had Converted them; That the Biſhop of Paſſau had always converſed freely with them, and held Synods there, till they revolted, and forſook Chriſtianity; That ſince they brag, that they have obtained of the Pope, by their Money, to ſend three Biſhops, who have attempted to doe a thing in the Biſhoprick of Paſſau, which they could not think the Holy See would be the Author of, and which is directly contrary to the Order of the Canons, viz. To divide that Biſhoprick into Five parts, and place an Arch-biſhop, and three Biſhops in that Dioceſs, without the conſent of the Biſhop. They cite the two Canons of a Council of Africa, and ſome places in the Pope's, Leo, and Celeſtine's Letters. They add, that his Predeceſſor Conſecrated Wicberius Biſhop at the deſire of the Duke Zuetbaldus; but that he ſent him into a Conquer'd Countrey, and not into the Dutchy of Paſſau. They complain alſo, that his Legates giving credit to the Relations of the Sclavonians, accuſed them of many falſe things. They take notice, that their Prince is deſcended of the Family of the Kings of France, who are Chriſtians; whereas the Moravians and Sclavonians are Originally Pagans, and Enemies to the Chriſtian Religion. They commend their King Lewis, and ſhew the great inclination he hath to the Holy See, and for Religion. They Confute the Reports the Sclavonians had given out, that they had made a League, in a prophane manner, with the Hungarians, who have pillaged, burnt and ſacked the Countrey. That, on the contrary, they had a deſign of hindring them from entring into Italy, and to ſend ſome Succours into Lombardy; and to put themſelves into a condition to doe it, they had deſired a League with the Sclavonians, but could not obtain it. They conclude, with an earneſt Requeſt to the Pope, not to believe the Calumnies which the Sclavonians ſpread abroad againſt them, and to endeavour the Peace of the Church.

CHAP. XII.

CHAP. XII.

The Constitutions of some Bishops, and Collections of Canons, concerning the Discipline of the Church.

BEsides the Constitutions made by the Bishops Assembled in Councils for the Reformation of Church-Discipline, several Bishops were at the pains to make particular Constitutions for their own Dioceses, and Treatises for the Instruction of their Clergy. They also, at the same time, made several Collections of Canons about Penance, and other Ecclesiastical Matters. The chief Tracts, which relate to the Matters, and the Authors of this Age, which composed them, are these that follow.

Hatto, or Hetto, chosen in 796 Abbot of the Monastery of Augia Dives, of which he was a Monk, and afterwards Bishop of Basil in 801; was sent, by Charles the Great, in the year 811, to the Greek Emperour, to make a Peace, and settle the Bounds of both Empires. He Wrote a Relation of his Voyage, but it is lost. He Composed a Book of Constitutions for the Instruction of the Priests of his Dioces, put out by Father Dacherius, in Tom. 6. of his Spicilegium, and inserted in the last Collection of the Councils. Hatto.

This Book contains 25 Articles. 1. That Priests shall understand well the Doctrine of the Faith. 2. That they shall Teach the People the Creed, and Lord's Prayer in Latin, and their Mother-Tongue. 3. That they shall Teach them to say the Responses after the Priest in Divine-Service. 4. That the Priests shall understand the Nature of the Sacraments, of Baptism, Confirmation, and the Lord's Supper; and that by the Mysterious use of a Visible Creature, the Salvation of the Soul is further'd. 5. That they shall have Books necessary for their Office, viz. A Book for Celebration of Sacraments, a Book of the Lessons, Anthems, Administration of Baptism, a Calendar, and Homilies for all the year. 6. That they shall recite S. Athanasius's Creed at the Prime. 7. That they shall have notice of the Solemn time for Baptism, as H. Saturday, and the Saturday before Whitsuntide, although in cases of necessity, Baptism may be administred at all times. He observes, that they used Three Dippings, and had in their Fonts a Vessel, which they used onely to Baptize in. 8. That they should know all the days in the year, which they are to keep Holy, viz. All the Sundays in the year, from Morning to Night; our Lord's Nativity, St. Stephen's, St. John's, St. Innocent's, Circumcision, Epiphany, Purification, Easter, Ascension, H. Saturday, Whitsuntide, St. John Baptist, the XII Apostles, and chiefly St. Peter and St. Paul. The Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael's Church, and all other Churches; the Feast of every Saint, in Honour of whom any Church is Founded. That they ought to observe the Fasts appointed by the Prince; but as to the Festivals of S. Remedius, S. Maurice, and S. Martin, the People ought not to be forced to keep them, nor hindred, if their Devotion lead them to it. 9. That Clergy-men ought not to have Women, that are Related to them, with them. 10. Nor go to Taverns. 11. Nor frequent Courts of Judicature, nor be Bail, nor go a Hunting. 12. That they should know, that none ought to be Ordained for Money, and if any Man be, he ought to be deposed, as well as he that Ordained him. 13. That no body ought to receive, nor employ a Clergy-man of another Dioces, without the consent of his Bishop. 14. That they ought not to celebrate Mass in private Houses, or Unconsecrated Churches, unless in respect to the Sick. 15. That Tithes ought to be paid, the third part of which belongs to the Bishop, according to the Council of Toledo; that, as for himself, he was contented with a Fourth part, according to the Constitutions of the Roman Bishops, and the use of the Church of Rome. 16. That Women ought not to come near the Altar, nor doe any Offices about it. That when they are to wash the Vessels, and Church, the Clerks shall take them from the Altar, and deliver them to the Women at the Rails of the Altar, whither they shall bring them again; and the Priests shall also receive there the Offerings of the Women, to carry them to the Altar. 17. That Priests shall Preach both by their Word and Example, That Men ought not to be Usurers. 18. That no Clergy-man, Ordained, or to be Ordained, shall go out of his own Dioces, either to Rome, or to Court, or to obtain Absolution, without the allowance of his Bishop; and that they shall admonish them, that will go to Rome out of Devotion, that they ought not to go, till they have confessed their sins in their Dioces, because they ought to be bound, or loosed by their own Bishop, and not by a Stranger. 19. That nothing shall be Sung, or Read in the Church, which is not taken out of Scripture, or the Writings of the Orthodox Fathers. That they shall not honour any unknown Angels, but onely S. Michael, S. Gabriel, and S. Raphael. That Priests shall all have one way of Administring Penance, and shall impose it according to the nature of Mens Faults. 20. That they shall put the Offerings of the Faithful to a Good Use. 21. That they shall not suffer a Contract of Marriage between Relations to the Fifth degree; but nevertheless those that are Married in the Fourth degree shall not be parted, but put to Penance so long as they continue together. That it is not lawful to Marry the Relations of a First Husband, or First Wife; also a God-son, or God-daughter at Baptism, or Confirmation: That they who have committed Fornication with a Relation in the First degree, may not continue together, that they ſhall be put to penance, and parted; but they may Marry others. That Slaves may not Marry, without the conſent of their Maſter; and if they doe, the Marriage is null. 22. That Prieſts ſhall Teach their People to doe Works of Mercy, Inſtruct them in Vertue, and win them from Vice, but chiefly from Perjury. 23. That they ſhall Officiate in the Churches they are appointed, and ſhall not fail to ſay the Canonical hours both by day and night. 25. That they ſhall admoniſh God-fathers and God-mothers, that they are obliged to make their God-ſons and God-daughters, when they are at Age of Diſcretion, to be ſenſible of the Promiſe they have made for them. Theſe Conſtitutions ſhew, how prudent and wiſe a Man this good Biſhop Hatto was. Being very Aged, he laid down the Government both of his Dioceſs and Monaſtery, which he had always held with it, in 823, and lived a private Monk the reſt of his Life. He died in 836. He alſo Wrote a Relation of the Viſions of St. Wettinus, or Guettinus, a Monk of the ſame Abbey, which are alſo mention'd by Strabo. [This Tract is printed among the Viſions of Hildegardes, and other Religious Men, at Paris, 1513. and by F. Mabillon, Sæc. Benedict. 4. p. 1.]

Agobard. This is a proper place to Treat of the Writings of Agobardus, which, for the moſt part, concern the Diſcipline of the Church. The Life of this Author is very obſcure; ſome think him a Frenchman, though they have no clear proof of it. He was Coadjutor, (a) or rather a Suffragan of Leidradus, Arch-biſhop of Lyons; who being deſirous to retreat into the Monaſtery of Soiſſons, in the beginning of the Empire of Lewis the Godly, Argobardus was put in his place by the conſent of the Emperour, and (b) a whole Synod of France, which approved of the Choice, that Leidradus had made of him for his Succeſſor. But this Ordination was afterward found fault with, becauſe 'tis againſt the Canons for a Biſhop to chooſe his Succeſſor; a Rule, which it is very dangerous to break. Nevertheleſs Agobard enjoyed his See peaceably, till he was put out by Lewis the Godly for taking part with his Son Lotharius, and having been one of the Principal Authors of his Depoſition, at an Aſſembly of Biſhops held at Compeigne, in 833. for Lewis the Godly puniſhing the Injuſtice, and Violence, which had been done to him by Lotharius, and the Biſhops of his party, had a Proceſs drawn up againſt them at a Council of Thionville held in 835. Ebbo, who was Arch-biſhop of Rheims, was forced to confeſs his fault, and ſubmit himſelf to his Depoſition. Agobardus, who fled into Italy, with the other Biſhops of his party, was cited to the Council three times; and, not appearing, was Depoſed. The Examination of their cauſe was began the next year, at an Aſſembly held near Lyons, but was left undetermined, by reaſon of the abſence of the Biſhops, to whom alone it belonged to depoſe their Brethren. Laſtly, The Children of Lewis the Godly having made peace with him; they obtained, that Agobardus ſhould be Reſtored; and he was preſent at a Synod held at Paris, by the Order of Lewis the Godly. He likewiſe obtained the favour of that Emperour, with whom he Died at Xaintonge in 840, on the 15th day of June.

This Biſhop had no leſs ſhare in the Affairs of the Church of his time, than in thoſe of the Empire, and hath ſhown, by his Writings and Government, that he was not more Learned and Skilful in Divinity, than expert in Politick Affairs. The Catalogue, and Extract of his Works follow.

His Treatiſe againſt Felix Orgelitanus is dedicated to Lewis the Godly. In it he explains the Tract of Felix, which he Compoſed by way of Queſtion and Anſwer, and publiſhed, againſt what Agobardus had aſſerted in the City of Lyons, where he was then in baniſhment, after the Recantation he had made of his Error at the Council of Aix la Chapelle. Agobard obſerves, that Felix had ſuppreſſed ſeveral Expreſſions, which he had uſed before, and had added new Errors. He acknowledged, that that Biſhop lived a very Holy Life; but ſays, that we muſt judge of a Man's Faith, not by the Holineſs of his Life, but of his Manners by his Faith. Non eſt vitâ hominis metienda fides, ſed ex fide probanda eſt vita. He excuſes the plainneſs of his Style, and prays them, who will take the pains to read his Writings, to content themſelves with the conſideration of the paſſages of the Fathers which he hath cited, and to compare Felix's Opinion with them. After he hath ſpoken in general of the Error of Neſtorius and Eutychius, he ſays, that he hath heard that Felix in his Life-time, did Teach, That Jeſus Chriſt, as Man, was ignorant of many things; as of the place where Lazarus was Buried; becauſe he asked his Siſters, where they had laid him; the Day of Judgment; the Diſcourſe which the Diſciples, that went to Emmaus, had together; the Love St. Peter had for him. That Agobard, knowing that he Taught theſe things, found them out, reproved him for them, explained thoſe places to him, and ſent him ſeveral paſſages of the Fathers, contrary to thoſe Errors; that having read them, he promiſed to amend them; that things remaining thus, he did not think it his Duty to publiſh the Errors aſſerted by him, becauſe it did not concern him to doe it. But, after his Death, ſome of the Faithful told him, That he had aſſerted, That it was not certain that the Son of God Suffer'd, or was fixed to the Croſs, but that ought to be affirmed of the Manhood onely, which he had aſſumed; an Error, which ariſes from the ignorance of the Subſtantial Union of the Word with the Fleſh, although he ſeemed to admit but one Perſon onely in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. He ſhews, that Neſtorius ſpake after the ſame manner. He conſults that Aſſertion of Felix, That in the Nativity of the True Son of God, of the Subſtance of his Father, his Nature preceded his Will; ſo that he is neceſſarily the Son of God: but in his Humane Nativity, it was from his Will, and not from Neceſſity. That he was the Son of God---Agobardus affirms, that this Expreſſion makes Jeſus Chriſt to be believed not (a) Or rather a Suffragan.] We ought to Read Chorepiſcopus in Ado, as it is in the Chronicon of Hugo Flaviniacenſis, and not Co-epiſcopus; becauſe if he had been Co-epiſcopus, or Coadjutor, there had been no need of Ordaining him a-new, when Leidradus retired. And 'tis certain there were at this time Suffragans in France.

(b) A Whole Synod.] What Synod it was is not known. M. Baluzius believes it was that of Mentz, in 813. but this Synod was under Charles the Great; and Leidradus did not retire, and ſo Agobard could not be Ordained, till the Reign of Lewis the Godly.

not to be the true and natural Son of God. He alſo blames Felix for teaching, that though the Virgin Mary be the Mother of God, yet ſhe is otherwiſe the Mother of the Man, than of God. He ſays, that this Expreſſion is not only new, and not heard of before, but impious. That the Virgin can't be one way the Mother of the God-head, and another of the Manhood in Jeſus Chriſt, ſince ſhe was the Mother of a God-man at the ſame time, and the Divinity and Humanity make but one Perſon in Jeſus Chriſt. He alſo oppoſes that opinion of Felix, that Jeſus Chriſt was different ways the Son of God according to his different Natures; That according to his Divinity, he was a Son by Nature, in Truth and Subſtance, whereas according to his Humanity, he was a Son only by Grace, Election, Will, Predeſtination and Aſſumption. From this Principle, he draws this Conſequence, That ſince Jeſus Chriſt is a Natural Son in one Senſe, and an Adoptive in another, we muſt acknowledge two Sons and two Perſons. 'Tis true, that Felix diſowns this Conſequence, but Agobard affirms it to follow directly from his Doctrine, and ſays, that Neſtorius uſed that very Expreſſion. He confutes this principle, and the Conſequences Felix draws from it by ſeveral paſſages of the Fathers. And Laſtly, anſwers to thoſe that Felix had alledged to prove the Adoption of Jeſus Chriſt; ſhewing that the Fathers never ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was an Adoptive Son, but that the Humane Nature was adopted by the Divine, i. e. the Divine Nature was united with the Humane, ſo that the Perſon made up of both Natures, was the true and natural Son of God, and not meerly by Adoption and Grace.

The Book of Agobard concerning the Inſolence of the Jews, is a petition addreſſed to Lewis the Godly, in which he Complains, that the Commiſſioners which he had ſent to Lyons, took part with the Jews againſt the Church, and had ſealed Letters and Ordinances bearing his Name, which were favourable to them. They had carryed the Buſineſs ſo far, that they ſpoke openly in favour of the Jews, and ſo threatned ſome Biſhops. Agobard, who was abſent when this happened, being gone to the Monaſtery of Nantonè to accommodate a difference that had happened among the Monks, wrote about it to the Commiſſioners, but they had no regard to his Letters; whereupon he addreſſed himſelf to the Emperour, and repreſented it to him, that the Jews did perſecute Him and his Fellow-Biſhops, becauſe he preached to the Chriſtians, that they ſhould not ſell any Slaves to the Jews, nor ſuffer the Jews to ſell Chriſtians into Spain, nor keep Chriſtians for their Houſhold Servants, not to ſuffer Chriſtian Women to keep the Jewiſh Sabbath, nor the Jews to labour or trade on the Lord's Day, not to eat in Lent with them, not to eat any Fleſh they have killed, nor drink any Wine that they ſell. Laſtly, not to converſe familiarly with them, nor trade with them, becauſe they daily Blaſpheme the Name of Chriſt. Then he deſcribes the inſolence of the Jews, becauſe they found themſelves upheld by the Authority of the Commiſſioners. He beſeeches him to hear the humble entreaty of Himſelf and Brethren, and rectifie this diſorder.

To this Petition he joyns a Letter written in his Name, and in the name of Bernard, Arch-biſhop of Vienna, and another Biſhop called Eaof or Taof, in which they produce the Authorities of the Fathers and Scripture, to juſtifie the Severity they treated the Jews withall. They relate the example of S. Hilary, who would not ſalute them; of S. Ambroſe, who writes, that he would rather ſuffer Death, than rebuild a Synagogue of the Jews, which the Chriſtians had burnt. They add to theſe two Fathers, S. Cyprian and S. Athanaſius, who wrote againſt the Jews: Then they alledge the Canons of the Councils of Spain and Agda, which forbid Chriſtians to eat with the Jews, and the Conſtitutions of the firſt Council of Maſco, which declares, that according to the Edict of Childebert, it is not permitted to the Jews to be Judges, or Receivers of the publick Revenues, nor to appear in publick in the H. Week, and renew the prohibition given the Chriſtians not to eat with them. This is Confirmed by the Canons of the Firſt and Third Councils of Orleans, and the Council of Laodicea, which forbids Chriſtians to converſe with them. They forget not the Action of St. John, who fled from the Bath, in which he ſaw Cerinthus the Heretick entered, who was an Heretick of the Sect of the Jews. They accuſe the Jews of their time to be worſe than Cerinthus, becauſe they believed God Corporeal, and had groſs and falſe Notions of the Divinity, allowed an infinite number of Letters, and believed the Law to be written ſeveral Years before the World, were perſwaded that there are ſeveral Worlds and Earths, introduced many Fables about the old Teſtament, and uttered Blaſphemy againſt Jeſus Chriſt, publiſhed the falſe acts of Pilate, uſed the Chriſtians as Idolaters, becauſe they hated the Saints, and did infamous Actions in their Synagogues, from whence they conclude, that if they ought to ſeparate themſelves from Hereticks, they ought with more Reaſon to have no commerce with the Jews, which they maintain by ſeveral paſſages of H. Scripture.

'Tis very probable, that Agobard went to Court about this Buſineſs. He applyed himſelf to Three Perſons, who were in great Favour at Court, viz. Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, Vala the Son of Bernard, Brother of Pepin, and a Relation to the Emperour, and Heleſacharius Abbot of S. Maximus at Treves, having complained before them of thoſe that defended the Jews, they brought him into the King's preſence to relate it, but he received no Satisfaction, and was ordered to with-draw. Being returned, he conſulted thoſe Three Perſons by a Letter, what he ſhould do with thoſe Jewiſh Slaves, who deſired to become Chriſtians and be Baptized. He ſhews by ſeveral Reaſons that he could not refuſe to do it; and that the Jews might have no ground of Complaint, he ſays that he offer'd to pay them for thoſe Slaves, what was ordered by the ancient Laws. But ſince the Jews would not receive that Price, becauſe they were perſwaded that the Court Officers were their Friends, he prays them to whom he wrote to direct him what to do upon that occaſion, about which he was much perplexed, fearing on the one Side Damnation, if he denyed Baptiſm to the Jews, or their Slaves who deſired it; and on the other Side, being fearful of offending the great Men, if he granted it to them.

In Agobard's Letter to Nebridius Arch-biſhop of Narbonne, he ſhews how dangerous it is to hold a familiar converſe with the Jews, and tells him, that he hath admoniſhed his People of it all along his Viſitation of his Dioceſs, and boldly oppoſed the attempts of the Emperour's Commiſſioners.

Agobard preſented another Petition to Lewis the Godly, in which he prays him to aboliſh the Law of Gundobadus, which ordered, that private Contentions and Differences ſhould be decided by a ſingle Combat, or ſome other proofs, rather than by the Depoſition of Witneſſes. He ſhews that that Law which was made by an Arrian Prince, is contrary to the Spirit of the Goſpel; to that Charity, that Chriſtians ought to have one for another, and to the peace both of Church and State. He obſerves, that it came neither from the Law nor Goſpel; That the Chriſtian Religion was not eſtabliſhed by ſuch ſort of Combats; but on the Contrary, by the Death of him that preached it; That the moſt Wicked and Guilty have often overcome the more Juſt and Innocent. He adds, that Avitus Biſhop of Vienna, who had ſome Conferences about Religion with Gundobadus, and converted his Son Sigiſmond, diſallowed this Cuſtom. He complains of the little Regard had to the Canons of the Church of France. Laſtly; he ſays, he could wiſh that all the Kings Subjects had but one Law, but becauſe he believed that impoſſible, he deſired he would aboliſh at leaſt, that Cuſtom, which was ſo unjuſt and ſo prejudicial to the State.

In the Treatiſe of the Privileges and Rights of the Prieſt-hood, dedicated to Bernard Biſhop of Vienna. Agobard Treats of the Excellency of the Prieſt-hood. He ſays, that all Chriſtians being Members of Jeſus Chriſt, who is our Chief Prieſt, are Kings and Prieſts of the Lord. That in the beginning of the World, the Firſt Born were Prieſts, and Sacrificers. There he produces ſeveral Examples taken out of the Holy Scripture, and many Authorities to ſhew that God hath often heard wicked Prieſts, and had no regard to the Sacrifices of good ones, becauſe he looks chiefly upon the Diſpoſitions of the Heart of thoſe for whom they offer Sacrifices, and that otherwiſe 'tis not the Merit of the Prieſt, nor his Perſon that God reſpects, but his Miniſtery and Prieſthood. For this Reaſon it is, that wicked Prieſts may adminiſter Sacraments, which the moſt H. Lay-men cannot do. And upon this account, Men ought to hear and believe what the Prieſt teacheth, if he do not corrupt the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, for if he teach any thing that Chriſt hath not Commanded, he that hears him, ſaith Agobard, is a Leper, that follows another Leper, a Blind Man, lead by another Blind Man, and conſequently both of them ought to be driven out of the Camp, and ſhall both fall into the Ditch. This gives him occaſion to cite ſeveral Texts of Scripture, to exhort the Prieſts of the New Teſtament to behave themſelves worthy of their Miniſtery, and to complain of the Irregularities of his time. He obſerves that the Great Lords of his time, kept Domeſtick Prieſts in their Houſes not to obey them, but to employ them as they pleaſed, as well in Temporal as Spiritual Services; inſomuch ſays he, that ſome Prieſts wait at Table, provide Meat and Drink, look after Dogs and Horſes, and take care of their Farms in the Country. And becauſe they can't find any good Clergy-men, who will ſo diſhonour their Calling, they take ſuch as come next, without regarding whether they are ignorant and worthleſs, and guilty of many Crimes. They only deſire to have ſome Prieſts with them, that they may leave the Churches and publick Offices to them. And when they have a mind to have them ordained, they come and ſay in an imperious way, I have a little Clergy-Man whom I have brought up, who is the Son of one of my Waiting-Men or Tenants, I deſire you to make him a Prieſt, and when they have got him ordained, they think that they have no need of the Curates, and never come to the Service of a Pariſh-Church, nor Exhortions made there. He crys out againſt this abuſe, and bewails the badneſs of his time, in which the Biſhops were not allowed to reprove their irregularities, as by their Office they are obliged. Laſtly, he exhorts the Laity to have reſpect to the Sacraments, which are adminiſtred by the Prieſts. For ſays he, the Holy Sacraments, Baptiſm, and the Conſecration of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and the reſt, which give Life and Salvation to the Faithful, are ſo Great and Holy, that they cannot become more Excellent, by reaſon of the Holineſs of good Miniſters, nor worſe by the impiety of wicked ones, becauſe they operate not by the Virtue of Men, but by the Majeſty of the Holy Spirit, when the Prieſt hath made his Invocation; whereupon he cites ſeveral paſſages of S. Auſtin, Gelaſius and Pope Anaſtaſius, and adviſes the Biſhops to be careful, that they be not partakers of other Mens Sins, by ordaining ſuch Perſons Prieſts, as are vicious, ignorant, and unable to diſcharge their Miniſtery well. He ſays, that the Learning of Miniſters is more to be regarded than their Manners, becauſe though a Prieſt ought to be blameleſs in both, yet 'tis leſs dangerous, to have a Prieſt that teaches well and lives ill, than to have the ignorant though they live well. Laſtly, he diſtinguiſhes Miniſters into four ſorts, 1. Such as are to be loved, who live well and teach well. 2. Tolerable, ſuch as teach well but live ill, or who live well, but have not learning enough to inſtruct others. 3. The Contemptible, who live ill and are ignorant. 4. Such as are accurſed, who live either well or ill, and teach Hereſies. In the Concluſion, he prays God to pour his Graces upon the Prieſts of his Church, that they may carry themſelves ſo, as becomes their Miniſtery.

Nothing is more judicious, than the next Treatiſe of Agobard's, which he wrote to undeceive the People, and remove the Opinions they had, that Sorcerers could raiſe Tempeſts, cauſe Thunder, and bring Hail by their Inchantments. He proves by ſeveral Texts of Scripture, that it is great Folly, and a kind of Sacrilege to attribute to Men, that which belongs to God. He laughs at the fancy of ſome, who ſuppoſed that there was a Region in the Air, whither they conveyed the Corn and Fruit, which the Hail beat down. He ſhews by ſeveral Texts of Scripture, that God only is the cauſe of Thunder and Hail, that he puniſhes Men by theſe Plagues; That all that is done in the Air, is the effect of his Power, whether done by Himſelf or Angels, or Men; That he alone is the Mover and Creator of the Univerſe; That if wicked Men had power to afflict and deſtroy other Men, all their Enemies would be ſo dealt with; That he underſtood not how Men had power to diſturb the Air, or Heaven, whoſe Nature they are ignorant of; That moſt of the Hiſtories written upon this Subject being examined, will be found falſe, although there be ſome People ſo ignorant as to expoſe themſelves to Death to maintain them, as it happen'd a little before, when they accuſed Grimoaldus Duke of Beneventum, of having ſcattered a Powder through the whole Countrey, which made all the Oxen die. As if, ſays he, he could make a Powder, which ſhould kill Oxen only, and not other Beaſts, or could make ſuch quantities of it, and have Sowers enough to ſcatter it through the whole Countrey.

Fredegiſus Abbot of S. Martins at Tours, having found fault with ſome paſſages in one of Agobard's Books, he thought himſelf obliged to defend himſelf and anſwer that Abbot's Objections. The firſt Expreſſion of Agobard's which he reproved was, That the humble Man who hath mean Thoughts of himſelf, is ſubject to errour. Fredegiſus ſays, That Jeſus Chriſt was humble, and yet 'tis certain, he was not ſubject to errour. Agobard anſwers, That his Maxim ought not to be underſtood of Jeſus Chriſt, who abaſed and humbled himſelf voluntarily without ceaſing to be Omnipotent and Sinleſs; but he confirms it in reſpect of all other Men, who are ſubject to Errour and Sin.

Secondly, Fredegiſus accuſes him of weakning the Authority of Scripture, and of the Interpretation of it, becauſe he had obſerved, that they did not always obſerve the rules of Grammar. Agobard anſwers, that that ought not to make thoſe things doubted of, which are related in Holy Scripture, that the Interpreters have uſed ſo to do, either to accommodate themſelves to the capacity of the Simple, or to expreſs the Senſe of the Original the better. That it is not allowable to doubt of the authority of thoſe Authors, of whom the Holy Spirit hath made uſe to write the Canonical Books, or believe that they ought to have written otherwiſe than they have. That next to the Original, the authority of the Tranſlation of the Seventy ought to be acknowledged, and the fidelity of S. Jerom's Latin Verſion upon the Hebrew Text, and that the Latin Verſions made by Orthodox Chriſtians out of the Seventy, are not to be contemned, but there are ſeveral Tranſlations which are juſtly to be corrected and reproved, as thoſe of thoſe famous Hereticks, and Baſtard Jews, Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, as alſo certain Latin Interpreters reproved by St. Jerom. And Laſtly, as to Commentators, Men ought to follow the Rule of St. Auſtin, who gives all Liberty to judge of them, and reject what is not orthodox and true in their Writings. Afterward examining particularly the queſtion about the Holy Books, he ſays, 'tis abſurd to believe, that the Holy Ghoſt did inſpire the Prophets and Apoſtles, with the Words and Terms which they uſed; and to prove this, he alledgeth the Example of Moſes, who ſays, that he was of a ſlow Speech. He produces the Teſtimonies of S. Jerom, who acknowledgeth, that there is a difference in the Style in the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, ſome of whom wrote more Loftily and Eloquently, others with leſs Elegancy and Loftineſs, and ſometimes there is the ſame difference in different Writings. This difference may not be attributed to the Holy Spirit, but to Men, and conſequently 'tis they, not the Spirit, which are the Authors of the Words and Expreſſions which they uſe, although he inſpires them with the Senſe and Doctrine they ought to write.

In his Anſwer to the Third Objection, he oppoſeth the Opinion of his Adverſary, who maintain'd, that the Souls of Men were Created, ſeparated from the Bodies; he affirms, that we ought to believe, that they are created in and with the Body, although the Philoſophers delivered the contrary, and Auſtin doubts of it.

In the next place he anſwers a queſtion put to him by his Adverſary, Whether Truth be any thing but God. He anſwers, That Truth is not always taken for God himſelf, although 'tis not to be doubted, but that God is Truth. The Fourth Queſtion concerns the Righteous Men of the old Law. Agobard maintains that they may be called Chriſtians, although they were not called ſo, becauſe they believed in Jeſus Chriſt, and belonged to him, being anointed with the inviſible Ointment of his Grace, as well as thoſe who were good Men among the Gentiles.

The Jews who were in credit at Court, becauſe they had Money, obtained an Edict from the Emperour, which contained many things in their Favour, and among the reſt, that none of their Slaves ſhould be baptized, but with their Maſters Conſent. This Edict being very prejudicial to Religion, and contrary to Chriſtian Piety. Agobard addreſſed a Writing to Hilduin the King's great Chaplain, and to the Abbot Vala, who was at Court, in which he ſhews the injuſtice and impiety of that Prohibition, being evidently contrary to the Deſign of the Goſpel, and the intention of Jeſus Chriſt, who will have all Men to be ſaved, and hath commanded his Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel to all Creatures, and baptize all that believe, whether Bond or Free. He deſires them to whom he writes, to endeavour all they can to get this Edict recall'd, which he hoped might be done more eaſily, becauſe he offered to pay the Jews the Ranſom of thoſe Slaves, according to the appointment of the Canons made in that Caſe.

In the Letter written by Agobard in his own Name, and Hildegiſus and Florus's, who were Clergy-men of Lyons, to Bartholomew Biſhop of Narbonne, he ſpeaks of a certain Diſtemper, which took Men ſuddenly, and threw them down like the Falling-Sickneſs. Some alſo felt a ſudden Burning, which left an incurable Wound. This ordinarily happen'd in the Churches, and the a-ſtoniſh'd People to guard themſelves from it, gave conſiderable Gifts to the Churches to ſecure them. Agobard diſallows this practice, and ſearching into the Cauſe of this Plague, he ſays, 'twas nothing elſe but the will of God, who puniſheth Men by the Miniſtery of an Angel. After which, he relates ſeveral Examples of the like Chaſtiſements out of Scripture, in which God hath exerciſed his Juſtice by Angels and other Creatures. He affirms, that theſe ſort of inflictions are not from the power of the Devil, although he owns that God ſometimes ſuffers the Devil to diſquiet and torment Men. Returning then to the Queſtion of Bartholomew, viz. what we ought to think of the practice of thoſe, who coming into the Churches, where they were ſeized with this Diſtemper, bring preſents to them. He ſays, that fear cauſes theſe people to do what they ought not, and hinders them from doing what they ought; for it were better, ſays he, to give Alms to the Poor, or Strangers, to addreſs themſelves to the Prieſt to receive Unction, according to the Command of the Goſpel and of the Apoſtle, to faſt and pray, and do works of Charity. It is true, adds he, that if the Offerings given to the Church be employed as they ought, they are an Action of Charity, but becauſe at preſent, they are uſed only to ſatisfie the Covetouſneſs and Avarice of Men, and not to honour God, or relieve the Poor, it is a ſhame to give them to ſuch covetous Wretches to be kept, or ill imployed by them.

The Injuſtice and Violence which was practiſed among the people of Lyons, and could not be reſtrained, obliged Agobard to write to Matfredus, a powerful Man in the Emperour's Court. He begs of him to uſe his Intereſt with his Prince, to hinder thoſe Diſorders, and cauſe juſtice to be done. This Compliment is ſhort, but urgent. The Letter to the Clergy of Lyons concerning the manner, how the Biſhops and Paſtors ought to govern, is an excellent inſtruction for them. He ſays, that thoſe who are entruſted with the Government of the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt, who is Peace, Truth, Juſtice, and the Author of all Good, ought to love that his Spouſe ſingularly as himſelf, and apply himſelf entirely to the ſpiritual good of his only Spouſe. That thoſe who neglect to do their Duty, and place all their Pleaſure and Affections upon Riches, Finery, Hunting, and Debauchery, are the deſtroyers of God's Work, and the Aſſiſtants of Antichriſt; That though they ſeem to be Biſhops in the Eyes of Men, they are not ſo in the Eyes of God, no more than Hypocrites, who affect to appear outwardly Holy, but whoſe Heart is full of Impurity, who ſeek not the Edification and Inſtruction of the Faithful, but their own Intereſt and Glory, ſuch are thoſe, who ſeek to get into the ſacred Miniſtery, only to obtain Honour and Riches, or to live finely. He adds, that all thoſe, that make it their main Buſineſs to gain themſelves the Love and Reſpect of thoſe that are under their Charge, and not to make Jeſus Chriſt be loved and honoured by them, who is the only Spouſe of the Church, are Adulterers and unworthy of the ſacred Miniſtery, becauſe they deſign rather to feed themſelves than their Flock. Nevertheleſs he adviſes, that the Sheep ſhould endure wicked Paſtors, through Prudence, when they can't reform them.

His Book concerning the Diſpenſing of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, was not written againſt the ill uſage, which Clergy-men might make of them, but againſt the Laity, who took them away and kept them unjuſtly. Lewis the Godly, having called an Aſſembly of Clergy-men and Lords at Attigny, in 822. for the Reformation of Church and State, Agobard adviſes Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, and another Abbot called Heliſſicarius, that they ought to rectifie the Diſorder, that was in the Church about the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, which the Laity had appropriated to themſelves, that they might ſpeak to the Emperour of it. He zealouſly repreſents to them, that the Churches having been enriched by the Gifts of the Emperours, Princes and Biſhops, had made an abundance of Laws and Canons for the preſervation of the Revenues, and to hinder Lay-men from encroaching upon them; That the neceſſity which they alledged, was not a ſufficient Reaſon to over-look thoſe Laws, nor to authorize the Uſurpations they had made of them. The year following, this matter was more fully debated in an Aſſembly held at Compeigne, where the Clergy again repreſented that the Laity were not to be ſuffered in the quiet Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of the Church, which they had uſurped. The Lords would not agree to the Reſtitution of them. The Emperour thought to accommodate the matter between the Biſhops and Nobles, by cauſing a part to be reſtored only, but the Nobles not contented with it, declared at Length, that they would not hear of any accommodation, and complained grievouſly againſt Agobard, as a Man who had raiſed a queſtion, which was fit to trouble both Church and State. In this Book he defends himſelf by bringing Authorities out of the Old and New Teſtament, to ſhew, that it is a great Crime to meddle with the Goods Conſecrated to the Temple, Altars, maintenance of Miniſters, and relief of the Poor. To them he joyns the Authority of the Canons, and chiefly thoſe of the French Church. He obſerves, that ſome would not receive them, becauſe the Popes and Emperours Deputies were not preſent at the Councils that made them, but 'tis his Judgment, that wherever Orthodox Biſhops are met in the name of Jeſus Chriſt for the good of the Church, the Deciſions they make ought to be reſpected and followed, which ſays he, is eſtabliſhed upon the Authority of the Popes, who have ordained that every two Years, two Councils ſhall be held in every Province, and have commended great Councils. Laſtly, Agobard not only condemns the Lay-men, who make uſe of the Revenues of the Church to maintain Dogs and Horſes, and great Retinues of Servants, or to ſatisfie their Pleaſures and Paſſions, or ſpend them in Sports and ſuperfluous Gallantry, but he involves in the ſame Condemnation the Biſhops, Abbots and Clergy-men, who put thoſe Revenues to any other uſe, than is allowed by the Laws of the Church and Doctrine of the Fathers.

Ago-

Agobard's Treatise against the Judgment of God (i. e. the proofs made of Mens Innocency, either by single Combat, or by holding a red-hot-Iron, or by standing immoveable by a Cross, or by any other proof of like Nature) contains several Maxims taken out of the Holy Scripture, and chiefly out of the New Testament; by which he proves, that this usage is contrary to the Gospel, Christian Charity, Right Reason, and the Principles of our Religion.

In his Discourse of the Faith, Agobard runs through the chief Articles of our Belief, as the Trinity, Incarnation, Redemption; the Union of Jesus Christ with his Church; the Necessity of the Grace of Jesus Christ; to doe Good, and Resist Temptations; Patience in Adversity; Obligation to Prayer, &c. and sets down on every point Texts of Scripture, or Fathers: 'Tis rather a Sermon, than a Doctrinal Treatise.

The Letter of Lamentation about the Division of Europe, Dedicated to Lewis the Godly, was Written by Agobard in 833. when that Emperour made War against his Children. Agobard, who wished for peace, although he was of Lotharius's party, sent this Letter to him. He first of all represents to him, that it is the duty of a faithful Subject, and chiefly of a Prelate, to admonish his Prince, when he sees him ready to engage in a bad Cause, where his Soul is endanger'd. He calls God to witness, that this was the onely cause of his Writing to Lewis the Godly. Lastly, After he hath lamented the Calamities and Disorders which the War had caused, he tells him, That he did some time since part his Countrey between his Children, and made Lotharius a Partner in the Empire: That it was done with all the Solemnity possible, and with the consent of the Nobles and Bishops; That to consult the Will of God about it, he had commanded a Fast, continual Prayers, and Alms for three days; That the thing being finished, he sent the Act to Rome, to have it confirmed by the Pope. Lastly, That he obliged them all to Swear, that they approved the Election of Lotharius, and Division of the Empire. That, at first, all Letters and Edicts bore the Name of the Two Emperours in the front of them; but afterward he put out the Name of Lotharius without any Reason, and attempted to dispossess him of it. He beseeches Lewis the Godly not to persist in that design. He lets him know, that the Oath he had taken obliged him to be of Lotharius's party; and he endeavours to terrifie that Prince, who was of a fearful spirit, by threatning the Judgments of God, and hatred of Men upon him.

About the same time he sent a Treatise to Lotharius, Entituled, A Comparison between the Ecclesiastical and Civil Government; in Answer to an Order, which the Emperour had given to the Nobles, as well of the Clergy as Laity, to be ready to fight for him; the one with the Sword, and the other with the Tongue. Agobard tells him, That he ought in War to put his trust in God's help, more than his own Forces; and that in all Disputes we should seek for Truth, rather than Eloquence. Since he was one of those that Lotharius had Commanded, not daring to come himself, he Admonished him by Writing, of the Respect he ought to give the Holy See; and, to perswade him to it, he Cites a Passage of Pope Pelagius, against some Bishops, who would not recite the Pope's Name at Mass: And another passage out of St. Leo, about the Primacy of Peter. Agobard touched upon this string, because Lotharius carried Pope Gregory the IVth along with him, to Authorize his own party, and make his Father's odious. He knew what the other Bishops of France said, That if he came to Excommunicate them, he should return Excommunicated himself. Si Excommunicaturus veniret, Excommunicatus abiret Agobardus. That if Gregory came, with an ill design, to foment the War, he deserved to be sent away with Disgrace: but he maintains, that if he came to procure the Peace and Quiet of the Empire, they ought to obey him, and not resist him. Now, he affirms, that this is the end of his Voyage, since he came to settle what was done by the will of Lewis, and consent of all the Members of the Empire; and confirmed by the Authority of the Holy See. He adds, That he had received Letters from him, commanding, that Prayers and Fasting be made for the Restoration of the Peace, and Agreement of the Empire, and in the Emperour's Family. Lastly, Agobard exhorts Lewis the Godly to be of that Mind.

This Writing is followed by a Letter, or rather a Fragment of a Letter of Gregory the Fourth to the Bishops of France, who would not receive him. It serves for an Answer to a Letter which they Wrote to him. In the beginning of it he finds fault, that they had called him Father, and Pope, in the Superscription of their Letter. He requires them to give him the Name of Father, as if the Bishops were not his Brethren, and had not that Title given upon many occasions; yea, in those very Letters he sent to them. The Second thing that Gregory finds fault with in the French Bishops Letter, is, That they declare their Joy for his Arrival; being perswaded, that it would be profitable for their Prince and his Subjects; and that they would have paid their Respects to him, had they not been prevented by an Express Order from the Emperour. He complains, That they preferred the Order of their Prince, before their Respect due to him; and maintains, that the Matter of Fact was not true, for they had notice of his Arrival, before they had any such Command from the Emperour. He adds, That they ought to know, that the Spiritual Government of Souls is more excellent, than the Temporal Government of Princes, as S. Gregory Nazianzen boldly told the same Emperour: That they ought to imitate the Liberty of Gregory the Great, who told the Emperour, That he was one of his Sheep, and that he ought to hear and believe him in things that belong to the Faith. That, in stead of those foolish flatteries which they they uſed to ingratiate themſelves with the Prince, they ought to conſider S. Auſtin's words, in Chap. 24. l. 5. of his Civitate Dei; where he gives Chriſtian Princes excellent Advice. All this is very good, but it hinders not, but that though Biſhops have received an Order from their Prince not to goe to the Pope, yet they ought to doe their Duty; for that prohibition is concerning a thing purely Civil and Politick, in which they are obliged to obey him, when it is not contrary to the Eſſential Duties of Religion.

In the Third place, Pope Gregory complains, that the Biſhops of France, after they had declared their Joy for the News of his Arrival in France, ſay, That they were much troubled when they heard that he came to pronounce a preſumptuous Excommunication, without any reaſon, to the diſhonour of the Imperial power, and contempt of the Epiſcopal Authority. He reproves their inconſtancy, and asks them, Whether the actions committed by the Emperour, which are really worthy of Excommunication, be not a greater diſgrace to his Imperial Majeſty, than Excommunication if inflicted, would be. But it doth not appear that he had good grounds for his Reproof or Queſtion. Onely thoſe are juſtly charged with Inconſtancy, who change without reaſon; and, in the ſame poſture of Affairs: For that which made the Biſhops of France alter their Mind, was, the news they had heard, that Gregory would Excommunicate their Prince. They rejoyced at his arrival, becauſe they believed he came to ſettle Peace; but when they ſaw he came to increaſe their Trouble, by an unjuſt Excommunication, they were the more diſturbed; becauſe they foreſaw, that it would tend to his Diſgrace both before God and Man, to take the part of Rebellious Children againſt their Father. And, for this reaſon 'tis, that Gregory had no good grounds for this Queſtion. Whether the Emperour did not diſhonour himſelf more, by doing things worthy of Excommunication, than he could do by Excommunicating him; for although perhaps it may happen, that ſuch an Extremity may be uſed againſt a King of France, yet Lewis the Godly deſerved not Excommunication. He was a Prince of great Piety and Religion in Agobard's Opinion; he had done nothing againſt the Law of God, or the Church: The controverſie he was engaged in, was about the Diviſion of his Empire, which did not at all belong to the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt to take Cognizance of, ſince the Chief Paſtor himſelf would not meddle with ſuch matters, while he was upon Earth; and if it had been allowed him to intermedle with ſuch Affairs, he ought to have endeavour'd to make Peace, and re-unite the Father and Children, and not increaſe the Diviſion by a Raſh Excommunication; he ought not to have favoured a Rebellion of the Children againſt the Father, nor their Intrigues and Devices to Dethrone him, as Unjuſt, and Ill an Action as a Man can be guilty of. In the Fourth place, this Pope blames that Diſtinction between the Holy See and his Perſon; and that they might bear a due reſpect to that, though they condemned his Actions. He ſays, they ought to reſpect the Perſon for the Sees ſake. This is true; but that reſpect ought not to proceed ſo far, as to approve things, which he doth, contrary to the honour of his See, and Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt and his Church: They reſpected his See, and his Perſon for its ſake; but they condemned and diſapproved the Perſonal Faults which he committed, and the Errours he was fallen into.

The Biſhops of France, in juſtification of themſelves, had Written, That they could not break the Oath they had taken to the Emperour without ſin, nor deny him their Allegiance. Gregory affirms, That it was he that was faithful to him, becauſe he reproved his actions againſt Religion and the Church; but, as for them, they denied him the Faith they ow'd him, by ſuffering his diſorders. If the Quarrel had been about Religion, or the Manners of that Prince, 'tis true, the Biſhops had been defective in their Duty, if they had not admoniſh'd him of it; but, when the whole Conteſt was about the Diviſion of the Empire, it did not belong either to the Biſhops or Pope to meddle with it. They had taken an Oath to Lewis the Godly (which the Pope did not deny) and they ought to obey him: they alſo ow'd the ſame to his Children, but after their Father, whoſe Intereſts ought to be preferred before thoſe of his Children. If the Pope had come with this Intention, the Biſhops of France would have received him Honourably, as they told him in their Epiſtle. This Expreſſion offended him farther. He told them, that they acted by Humane Motives, and to get a Reward in this World. None but God knew their Intention; but, their Action was accounted by Men as an Effect of their true Chriſtian Generoſity and Fidelity. At laſt, the Pope comes to the Matter of the Quarrel, which was about the parting of the Empire. The Biſhops of France held, That the Diviſion made in 817 might be altered for the Good of the State. The Pope maintained, That this Change was ſo far from being advantageous to the State, that it cauſed infinite Troubles to it, and ſo could not be ſaid to be according to God's Will. The Biſhops of France Invited him to come to the Emperour, that he might know the Truth of the thing. Gregory rejected that Propoſition with diſdain, believing it evident, that the Change was unjuſt, becauſe it was the cauſe of ſo great troubles; as if God did not ſometimes permit Juſt Attempts to meet with Unfortunate Events. And beſides, it was not the Alteration which was made in parting the Empire, which diſturbed the State, but the Diviſion it ſelf, which Lewis the Godly had made among his Children; for, from that time, there was no Union among them, and they ſought all ways to prejudice one another, and Diſpoſſeſs their Father, by raiſing, daily, Wars deſtructive to the State.

The Biſhops of France added, That if the Pope came with intentions, contrary to what they hoped, they would not endure him to diſpoſe of any thing in their Dioceſſes, or Excommunicate

The Works of Agobard [illegible] Book, [illegible] of Images; the one an Epistle upon Charles the Great; the other is [illegible] Translation of the Relicques of S. Cyprian, S. Speratus, and Fortunio, brought out of Africa and Asia to Lyons.

Agobard Writes in a plain Stile, Intelligible and Natural, but sometimes flat, and without Ornament: His Discourse is mingled with several Curious, long passages of Scripture and Fathers, according to the Custom of his Times. He Argues very rationally about the Matters he Treats of, and Writes like a Man well Versed in the Doctrin of the Fathers, and Discipline of the Church.

His Works are published by Papirius Masson, and Printed at Paris in 1605, in Octavo, out of a MS. which he found by chance in a Book-binders-Shop at Lyons, which he designed to put as Waft-paper; and which his Brother, after his Death, put into the King's Library. But though Masson was a very Learned Man, yet he left many Faults in his Edition, which have been since Corrected by M. Baluzius, in his Edition of Agobard's Works, Printed by Mazuel at Paris, 1666, in Two Vol. Octavo. Revised by the same MS. with great exactness, who hath added a Treatise of Agobard's to it, against the Book of Offices, made by Amalarius, taken out of a MS. which was communicated to him by F. Chifletius. [This Edition is put into the last Edition of the Bibliotb. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Amulo, Amulo, or Amulus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, under Agobard, succeeded him in 841. He was in great Reputation and Favour with Charles the Bald. He was President in a Council held at Lyons, 845. Amulo.

We have already spoken of this Letter to Gottschalcus about the Question of Predestination and Grace: But we must here give an Extract of another Letter Written to Theobaldus, or Theobaldus, Bishop of Langres; who consulted him about some Abuses committed in the Church of S. Benignus at Dijon, as to the Relicks shewed then: Two Monks had brought some Bones of a pretended Martyr, which they said came from Rome, and some other place of Italy; but that which was most pleasant, was, that these impudent Monks were not ashamed to say, That they had forgotten the Name of the Saint: As if, says Amulo, it were credible, that they could be ignorant of the Name of a Saint, famous in the place from whence they had him; or could forget his Name in the way, whom they looked upon as their Patron, and whom they ought continually to Pray to. The Bishop of Langres used much prudence upon this occasion; and imitating S. Martin in a like Case, determined, That they ought not to receive those Relicks, which were not well-Attested, but yet they might not use them with contempt. Then he thought it fit to oblige those who had brought them, to procure Authentick Proofs from the place where they had them. Indeed, one of them went away with a pretence to get some proofs, but never returned; and the other died a little time after at Dijon. Nevertheless they laid up these pretended Relicks in the Church, by the Body of the Holy Martyr, and affirmed they did many Miracles. No Sick persons were cured by them; but on the contrary, some Women fell upon the ground, beat themselves, and made a shew as if they were Plagued by them. This brought many to that place. Amulo observes, that there were many persons who were seized with the same Distemper, and, upon that account, were obliged to stay in the Church, or to return again as soon as they were gone out of it. That this Distemper happened in other places, particularly in the Village of Saulieu, in the Diocess of Autun, where the Bodies of the Holy Martyrs, Andochius, Thyrsus, and Felix lay.

Amulo hereupon advises the Bishop of Langres to remove these Bones out of the Church, and Bury them in some decent places at a distance from it, in the presence of some few persons; for, says he, there is no fault in Burying the Bones of some Saint, we ought not to deprive them of all Respect, but yet we ought not to give an occasion to the People to fall into an Error and Superstition. We may we fear, adds he, least our scrupulousness be the cause of Scandal; but God hath commanded us to be sincere, and prudent in things which concern his Service. Whereupon he alledges the Example of S. Martin, and the Decree of Pope Gelasius. He says, That if there were any Miraculous Cures done in the Church of S. Benignus, they ought to be attributed to God, and the Merits of his Saints, without approving other Signs done in the Church, or elsewhere. That it is likely, that the fallings and beatings of Men and Women, were the effect of the wickedness of those miserable Beggars, who pretended themselves to be so afflicted, onely to get Money. That he never heard any such Miracles spoken of, as to make Sound Men Sick; part Daughters from their Parents, and Women from their Husbands, by obliging them to continue in the Church, and hindring their return to their Houses. That these things are the effect, either of Humane Malice, or Diabolical Illusions. Upon this occasion he relates two Examples of things of like nature, which happen'd under his Predecessor Agobard, of which he found out the Cheat. He advises the Bishop of Langres to banish that Superstition out of his Diocess, to perswade the people from it; and exhorts them earnestly not to assemble so unprofitably in that place, but every one to remain in his Parish, and frequent the Service of that Church, where he received his Baptism, tism, as well as the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, where he useth to hear Solemn Masses, from whose Priest they receive Penance, are visited in their Sickness, and are Buried after their Death; to whom they pay their Tithes, and bring their Offerings, to which they go to hear Saving Instructions. That in these Churches it is, they must meet to pay their Vows and Prayers to God, to beg the Prayers of the Saints, to give Alms to the poor Widows and Orphans. That this is the Lawful and Regular Discipline of the Church, and the ancient practice of the Faithful. That if it happens that Christians fall into any Weakness, or Sickness, they ought to follow the Command of St. James, to call the Priests to Pray over them, and anoint them with Oil in the Name of the Lord. He doubts not but if this were put in practice, all these pretended Miracles would cease: And he likewise advises him, that if any of these Wretches prove obstinate, to have them Scourged, till they shall confess the Truth. He adds, That since these Distempers happened, through the Illusion of the Devil, they would do better to implore the help of the Lord of their Churches, than to remain in a distant Church; and that one Saint will not contradict the Honour given to another, because they are all united in the same Love. If they will go to visit the Churches of the Martyrs, they ought to doe it at those times, which are appointed for it by the Church, viz. In the Rogations, Lent, and Festivals of the Martyrs. Nevertheless he doth not condemn those, who doe it at other times out of Devotion, provided they doe it without Ostentation and Tumult; but he finds fault with them for neglecting to doe it upon the Solemn Days set apart by the Church; and tells them, they doe it at other times to no purpose, through Vanity and Ostentation. Lastly, Since there are some people really possessed, they ought to be used by the Priests of the place, or Neighbouring Chapels of the Martyrs, in private, with gentleness, and not expose them to the throng and tumult of the People. These are the principal Arguments of Amulo in this Letter, which prove, that this Bishop had much sincerity, knowledge, prudence, zeal and eloquence. He is also the Genuine Author of a Treatise against the Jews, published by F. Chiffletius, under the Name of Ratbertus [at Dijon, 1656.] for Trithemius [De Script. Eccles.] attributes it to Amulo, and it is found under his Name in a MS. in the Library of M. Colbert. [Baluzius published the rest at the end of Agobard's Works.]

Adelardus, the Son of Count Bernard, Brother of Pepin, Grandson of Charles Martellus, Great Master of the French, and Abbot of Corbey, was sent to Rome to Pope Leo, about the Question concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Having joyned with Bernard King of Italy, in the Conspiracy against Lewis the Godly, he was forced to fly into Aquitain, to the Monastery of S. Philibert, but he was re-called in 822, and restored to his Monastery. He made some Statutes for the Church of Corbey, published by Father Dacherius, Tom. 4. of his Spicilegium. He died in 826. His Life is Written by Paschasius Ratbbertus, Abbot of Corbey. Adelardus.

Ansegisus, Abbot of S. Wandrillus, is the Author of the Collection of the Constitutions of Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly, of which we have already spoken. He died in 834. Ansegisus.

Haligarius Succeeded Hildegaldus in the Bishoprick of Cambray, in 816. He was sent with Ebbo of Rheims to Preach the Gospel in Denmark; and, by Lewis the Godly, Ambassador to Michael Balbus, the Emperour of Greece, Anno 828. Being returned from that Embassy, he died in 830, June 25. He Composed a Work, Entituled, Of Vices, and their Remedies: Of Penance, and the Order and Judgments of Penance. 'Tis a long Penitential, divided into Six Books, which is found in Tom. V. of the Collection of Canisius, and in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom. XIV.] This Work is also attributed to Rabanus. Haligarius.

Isaac, Surnamed the Good, a Scholar of Hilduin, and Deacon of Pandulus, Bishop of Lutn, who was preferred to the Bishoprick of Langres, and present at the Council of Soissons in 829, and the following Councils; made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, taken out of the Canons of the Councils, held by Boniface Arch-bishop of Mentz, and confirmed by Pope Zacharias; and out of the Constitutions of the French Kings; chiefly out of the Three Books, which the Deacon Benedict hath added to the Collection of Ansegisus. This Collection is published by Father Sirmondus, in the Ninth Tome of the Councils of France; and by M. Baluzius, Tome I. of Capitularies. F. Dacherius hath published a Small Tract about the Canon of the Mass, which bears Isaac's Name. But M. Baluzius tells us, That 'tis not Isaac Bishop of Langres's, but another Isaac's, who was Abbot of Stella, whose Name it bears in some MSS. and under whose Name it hath been published in Tom. VI. of the Biblioth. Cistertiorum. Isaac.

Herard, made Arch-bishop of Tours in 855, made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws in 858, taken out of the Capitularies, which he propounded to a Synod of Priests, held in May the same year. This Collection is in Tom. VIII. of the Councils of the Last Edition, and at the end of Tom. I. of M. Baluzius's Capitularies. This Arch-bishop died in 871. Herard.

Wanterius, or Gauterius, Bishop of Orleans, about the year 870, made also a like Collection of Canons for his Diocess, which is Printed Tom. VIII. of the Councils. Wanterius.

Wulfadus

Walfadus. Walfadus having been Ordained, as we have said, by Elias, and molested by Hincmarus; was made Arch-Bishop of Bourges, in 866. He hath left a Pastoral Letter, directed to the Priests of his Diocese, which Father Mabillon hath put out in Tom. IV. Annalest. This Bishop died in 876.

Riculphus. Riculphus, who was Bishop of Soissons, about the end of the Ninth Age, sent, in 889, a Pastoral Letter to the Curates of his Diocese, containing 28 very useful Constitutions for ordering their Discipline and Manners. He exhorts them to labour after the Sanctity of their People, by their good Example and Knowledge: He advises them to be constant in Divine Service, and exhort their Parishioners to be there as often as they can; but so be sure not to be absent on Festivals and Sundays. He requires them to say by heart the Psalms, Canon of the Mass, Creed, Quicunque, &c. That they should be skilled also in Singing, and the Calendar; That they should have Rituals to Administer Baptism, a Missal, a Book of the Lessons, a Book of the Gospels, a Martyr-book, a Book of Anthems, a Psalter, and a Copy of S. Gregory's Forty Homilies. He also prescribes what Ornaments they ought to have, and Orders them to take care of them, to keep them neat, as well as the Holy Places. He orders them to instruct the Catechumens in Lent, that they may be Baptized, and receive the Eucharist at Easter. He commands them to have a care of the Publick Penitents, and not to receive them to Absolution, till they have performed the time of their Penance; and if it happens that they are forced to it by necessity, or any other Reason, he desires them to have particular care of them. He Orders them to Administer to the Sick the Holy Unction, after Confession, and Absolution, but before Communion. He allows them to give Absolution to the Sick, that have lost their Speech, if there be any that can witness that they desired it. He puts them in mind of the Division of the Churches Revenues into four parts, and requires an account of that which is to be employed for the Service of the Church. He exhorts them to have two or three Clergy-men to celebrate Masses, i. e. Divine-Service with him; and forbids them to celebrate it alone. He advises them to be Charitable and Hospitable. He forbids them going to Inns, suffer Wine to be sold in the Church, to dwell with any Women, or be familiar with them; to be Farmers, or Men of business. He forbids Usury, and orders them to keep the Sunday Holy. He requires them to take nothing for the Burial of the Dead, but allows them to take any Free-gifts. He orders the Deans to call Assemblies of the Curates every Month, on the First day of it, but forbids Feasting at them; and enjoyns them to have Conferences about what concerns their Ministery, and the occasions of their Parishes. He orders them to reconcile those that are Enemies, or Excommunicate them if they refuse. He enjoyns them to give Notice of the Fasts, he hath appointed, to the People. This Letter is published by Condesius, with Hincmarus's Works [at Paris, 1645.] and is Printed in Tome IX. of the Councils.

Elias. Elias, Bishop of Jerusalem, Wrote in 887, a Letter to Charles the Grosse, the Clergy, and Lords of the Kingdom of France, to desire of him some Relief for the Churches of his Countrey; He tells him, That the Prince under whose Government they were, being become a Christian, had allowed them to re-build, and repair their Churches, which were either quite ruin'd, or ready to fall; That to doe it, they were forc'd to Mortgage their Lands and Revenues, so that they had nothing to purchase Oil, Ornaments, and Holy Vessels for Divine-Service: Then he exhorts this Prince, and the French, to exercise their Charity upon this occasion, and to bestow something upon the Two Monks which he would send to gather their Alms. This Letter is in Latin in Tome II. of Dacherius's Spicilegium. It is well Written, but very short.

Luitbertus. Luitbertus, Arch-bishop of Mentz, hath Written a Letter to King Lewis; In which he tells that Prince, That seeing the Danger their Churches were exposed to, he was obliged to speak, because the Primacy and Dignity of St. Peter is assaulted and Dishonoured by those who ought to be the Leaders of the People of God, who prefer Humane things before Divine; insomuch, that he is afraid, that the Evil, which is in the Head, will spread it self into all the Members, unless a Remedy be timely provided. He tells the King, that there is present danger, because those that ought to watch for the Salvation of others, destroy themselves, and dig a Pit of destruction for those that follow them. He exhorts him to confer with those, that know the Law of God, that he may remove these Scandals, and restore Peace in the Church. He adds, That it is so much the Easier, because all the Body of the Church is not corrupted as yet; That there are some Members weakened by the wound of the head, but may be cured with suitable Medicines; That it seems necessary and profitable, that King Charles call a Council soon, that the Bishops of his Kingdom, which are not infected with the Disease, might joyn with the Bishops of Germany and Italy, to restore the Peace and Agreement of the Catholick Church, as soon as he returns from the Voyage he was about to take. This Letter seems to relate to the Troubles, which happened after the Death of Lotharius, about the Kingdom of Lorain, which Pope Adrian claimed for the Emperour Lewis; threatning Excommunication to Charles, and to the rest who were in possession of it.

O

Of all Authors of this Age, there is none that hath taken more pains about the Canons than Regino. He was chosen Abbot of Prom, about 892; after Farabertus had voluntarily resigned it, but he enjoyed it not long, being deprived of it in 899, by the Arts of his Enemies, who put Richarius, the Brother of the Counts Gerhardus and Manfredus, into his place. He endured this injustice, with a great deal of Patience, and lived a private Monk, in the Abbey of Prom. In this time he composed his Collection of Canons, and Ecclesiastical Constitutions at the desire of Rathboldus, Arch-bishop of Treves. He finished it in 906. He also compiled a Chronicon, which ends in 968, dedicated to Adelbertus Bishop of Metz. We do not exactly know to what Age he lived.

His Collection of Canons is entituled, A Treatise of Ecclesiastical Discipline and of the Christian Religion, collected by the order of Rathboldus, Arch-bishop of Treves, by Regino, heretofore Abbot of Prom, and taken out of the Fathers, Councils, and Popes. It is divided into two Books. In the first he sets down the Canons, which concern Ecclesiastical Persons; and in the Second, those that concern the Laity. These two Books begin each of them, with a form of such things, as Bishops or Ministers ought to be informed in, when they make their Visits. That which is at the beginning of the first, concerns the Clergy; and that which is at the beginning of the second, concerns the Laity. Then he confirms the Articles of the first by the Canons and Ecclesiastical Constitutions. He quotes the Canons of the Councils, and particularly those of France, the Constitutions of the Kings, the genuine Decretals of the Popes, and sometimes the false; some passages of the Fathers and Ecclesiastical Authors. This Collection is very large, and exact. Burchardus, Ivo Carnotensis, and the other Collectors of Canons that follow him, have made use of it, and often copy it out. It hath been published from a MS. of Flaccus Illyricus, and printed at Helmstad, 1659; and since M. Baluzius hath taken care to print it at Paris, by Muguet, 1671, having received it by a very ancient MS. in the Library of the Fathers of the Oratory at Paris. He hath set down in the Margin, the places from which the Canons and passages of that Collection are taken, and where the Articles of Burchardus's Collection are found.

Regino's Chronicon is divided into two Books. It was printed at Frankfort in 1583. Trithemius assures us, that this Author wrote several Sermons, some Letters, and other Works, which never came to his Hands. He much commends his Ingenuity, Learning and Piety; and says, that he is the best of the German Writers of his Time.

Lastly, we have another Author of this Age, who treats of a very curious Subject of Discipline, and that is Auxilius, who maintains the Validity of the Ordinations made by Pope Formosus. He was (a) ordained by this Pope, and 'twas his Interest to defend it. He hath made two small Treatises upon that Subject, in which he shews a great deal of Learning for the Age he lived in.

(a) Ordained by this Pope.] He says it plainly at the end of his first Treatise, in which having spoken of the Validity of the Ordinations of this Pope; he adds, That he continued in the order which he had received by Consecration, waiting for the equitable Judgment of a General Council. In the Thirty First Chapter of his Second Treatise. His Adversary objects, that he was a Stranger; and at first he don't deny it, but about the end he puts in a Doubt; saying, 'twas a fiction of his Adversaries. He says also in the same place, That he was ordained a Priest by Formosus. In the Chapter of the Second Book, he says also, that he was ordained by Formosus, and was come to Rome from his own Countrey.

The First is a Collection of Ecclesiastical Constitutions and passages of Fathers, to prove that a Bishop deprived of his Bishoprick may be dignifyed in another Church, when it is for the good and advantage of the Church, and with the Pope's Permission. This Collection was designed to prove the Translation of Formosus, from the Bishoprick of Ostia to the Roman See, Lawful. Then he adds some other Testimonies to shew that though the ordination of Formosus was not lawful, yet the Ordinations made by him were valid. Upon the first Head, he brings a Passage out of the false Decretal of Anterus, the Example and Authority of St. Gregory Nazianzen, the Examples of some Translations alledged by Socrates, and what is observed in the Greek Book, about the Translation of S. German of Cyzicum to Constantinople. Then he shews, That the Canons of the Council of Nice, do not forbid all Translations, but those only, that are made through ambition, and to disturb the Church. He approves the Law, which Hosius propounded in the Council of Sardica, which forbids those Translations which are made for Avarice, Ambition, or Dominion; but he disapproves what is added, that those who pass from one See to another, shall be reduced to Lay-Communion. He affirms this Law, comes near the Rigour of the Novatians, Condemned by S. Austin, That it was not approved by the Holy See; and that Hosius was of no great Authority, having fallen into Heresie. He ought to have observed, that all the Bishops of the Council, approved the opinion of Hosius.

Auxilius then passeth to the Second Head; which concerns the Validity of the Ordinations made by Photius, and alledgeth the Testimonies of S. Innocent, S. Austin, S. Leo, S. Gregory, and S. Anastasius, to shew that the Ordinations made by unlawful Bishops are valid, and ought not to be repeated. He confirms this Doctrine by a Canon of the Council of Nice, which accepted the Ordinations made by the Novatians. He says, that since the Ordinations of Pope Liberius, who was an Heretick, and Vigilius who was an Usurper, guilty of Simony and Murther, were well approved, there is much greater reason to allow of those made by Formosus. He proves, that it will cast the Church of Italy into strange Confusion, and the Faithful into inexpressible Trouble. He observes, that if there was any default in the Translation of Formosus, it did not belong to him, who accepted it, but to the Clergy and Nobles of Rome, who chose him, and acknowledged him for their Bishop. Lastly, he proves, that they who swear, that their Ordination is void, are guilty of Sacrilege, and they are not obliged thereby to obey the Commands of their Superiours, nor of the Pope, who exacts it, because they ought not to execute those Commands of Superiours, which are contrary to Justice, and the Law of God. That their Excommunication ought not be feared or observed, but when it is just; That we ought to distinguish between the Papal See, and the Persons who preside in it; That we ought to respect the Sees, but not follow those that preside in them, if they depart from the Faith or Religion, although they are obliged to obey them in those things, they order well, although they would not do it. In Conclusion, He advises, "That this Collection of Testimonies may perhaps seem needless "to several Persons, because there are few People, that will judge of this Affair with Equity, "and that he did not hope to carry his Cause in the judgment of those, who are both Judges, "Advocates and Witnesses, but that according to the Opinion of S. Jerom, he wrote both for "himself, and for them which were of his Judgment, that they might be courageous, seeing they "do not ground their belief upon their own Sence, but the Holy Fathers, and that they observe "that which is written; That if a Multitude rise up against you, you should not fear, and that "they should hold fast what they have received, least you lose your Crown. That continuing in "the sacred Vocation you have received, they may wait for the impartial Examination of "a general Council, under the protection of which they may put themselves with these Words, "Lift up thy Self, O Lord, judge thine own Cause.

The Second Treatise of Auxilius, saith Sigibert in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, is written in form of a Dialogue, by way of Question and Answer. It was composed at the desire of Leo, Bishop of Nola, who had been ordained by Formosus, who being urged to acknowledge that the Priest-hood which he had received from Pope Formosus, is null; first consulted the French Bishops, and the Bishop of Beneventum about it, who answered him, that he ought not to do it, and then sent his Request to Auxilius, to answer the Objections made against the Ordinations of Formosus. At the beginning of this Treatise is propounded a general Question, which serves as a Preface to it, viz. Whether those who have been ordained against their own Consent, but afterwards yield to their Ordination, ought to be re-ordained. To which he answers, that as we do not re-baptize Infants, nor such as have been baptized by force; no more ought we to re-ordain them who have been involuntarily ordained. This Preface is accompanied with a Letter of Auxilius to Leo Bishop of Nola, in which he tells him, That he made this Treatise to satisfie him, and had set down the Objections under the name of the Objecter, and answers under the name of the Defender. That he ought not to expect in his Writings Syllogisms in form, no Logical Subtleties, being the Scholar of a Fisher, i. e. S. Peter. That 'tis true, though he is in his Bark, he is in a Tempest, but he prayed the Lord of all to command the Winds and Sea, and make a Calm.

The first Objection made by the Objecter, is about the Translation of Formosus. He says, having left his Wife, i. e. Bishoprick, he hath taken away the H. See from them, who ought to be ordained in it; so that he is a Reprobate and Hypocrite. The Defender says, That he did not trouble himself with what Formosus was, but he maintained that the Ordinations of Formosus made by him were valid and Lawful. The Objecter insists and says, That Formosus not being Pope, all the Ordinations made by him are null. All that Chapter contains this Difficulty. The Defender maintains, that his Ordinations may be valid, since S. Leo acknowledgeth the Ordinations of false Bishops to be so; That Anastasius allowed Acacius's, and no Man ever doubted of Liberius and Vigilius's. The Objecter replies, That the Council of Nice declared their Ordinations void, and that Pope Innocent asserts, That an Hypocrite and Reprobate can't confer Ordination, because he hath none. The Defender Replies, that this ought to be understood of some, and not all Heretick, since he approved of those that Bonosus ordained. The Objecter insists upon his Principle, and demands how it can be, that the Ordinations of a Reprobate can be valid, since the Members can't exist without the Head; and to urge it the farther, he asks to whom Formosus's Crime ought to be imputed; if his Ordinations are of Force, the Defender says, it belongs to the Clergy and people of Rome, and not to a Clergy-man, who being a Stranger, came far with a good intention to receive Ordination from him, whom he saw settled on the H. See. Then he proves by the Testimonies of Anastasius and S. Austin, that a Reprobate and an Hypocrite may administer Sacraments effectually, and consequently Ordinations. The Objecter urges the Example of Constantine the Antipope, whose Ordinations were declared null, and the Persons ordained by him Re-ordained. The Defender condemns this Action, and opposes the Authority of S. Leo, Anastasius, &c. Then he proves by some passages of the Popes and Fathers, that Re-ordinations are no less faulty, than Re-baptizations. The Objecter says, That if it were so, a great number of Men are Condemnable, because the number of them that believe Formosus's Ordinations null, is very Great. This inconvenience doth not at all touch the Defender. He says, God regards not great or small Numbers, but Justice; That his Flock is small; That he never hath,

Faith, and will pardon a multitude of Sinners, though never so great, which he clears by the Example of the Deluge, People of the Jews, and the small number of those that remained Faithful under the Persecution of Antiochus; adding to these Examples of the Old Testament, that under Athanasius's Time almost all the World embrac'd Arianism, and there was but a very small number of the Elect that continued in the Catholick Faith, and did obtain the Crown. The Defender having observed, that those who are ordained a Second time ought to be excluded for ever from the Sacred Ministery. The Objecter propounds two difficulties against the Proposition. The first, That they are not deprived of Christianity, who have been re-baptized. The Second is, That Clergy-men who have fallen into Idolatry, may do their Duty, and perform their Functions, and therefore 'tis probable, that the same thing may be allowed to those who are re-ordained. The Defender answers to the First, that a Minister's Function is not like the Title of a Christian, that this is necessary, but that the other is not. To the Second he says, that they have been deposed without all hopes of Restauration, who have voluntarily renounced the Faith, and no Mercy hath been shewed, but only to those who have done it through the violence of Torments. The Obedience due to the Pope, and the Oath which he required, to acknowledge that the Ordinations of Formosus are null, create new Difficulties. The Defender strongly maintains, that Superiours ought not to be obeyed, when that which they command is forbidden, and that the Oaths taken in such Cases oblige not. He takes himself not to be obliged to go to the Synod, which the Pope had appointed, and treats the Bishops, that were at it, as Wolves. He adds, that it is sometimes convenient to discover the faults of Superiours, especially when they are prejudicial to the Church, and they can't be remedied any other way; and in fine, insists upon the Fact that 'tis a Fault, which is published, and aggravated by those that defend it. He proceeds yet farther; he says, that we ought not to fear or regard the Excommunication that is unjustly pronounced. He repeats what he had said in his first Treatise about the Distinction of Sees, and them that sit in them. He comes next to the Examination of the affair of Formosus, and says, as he was deposed, so also he was absolved by the Pope; That the Oath which they made him take never to come to Rome, or to return to his Bishoprick, was a Cruelty and an unheard of Violence; That he did it only by Constraint. He brings several Examples of Bishops condemned and deposed, who have been restored again. He adds, that Formosus having been restored by the Pope, his first Deposition could not be alledged as an Obstacle to his promotion to the Pope-dom; That only God knows, whether it was through Ambition that he was raised to the H. See, and so it belongs only to him to judge of it. That all the City of Rome, and Neighbouring Provinces did bear Witness of his Piety, except some who had the boldness to blast his Reputation. He endeavours to justifie his Translation by the Example of several others, of whom he makes a long list. He answers as he had done in the other Treatise to the Law pronounded in the Council of Sardica, approving the first, and condemning the second part. The Council of Africa was objected, which forbids him who doth the Office of a Clergy-man in one Church, to pass to another. He replies, that it is only forbidden by that Canon, to receive the Clergy of another Bishop. He explains the Canons, which forbid Translations, of such as are through a kind of Ambitious Avarice or Dominion, and proves that they do not comprehend those which are made for the necessity, and profit of the Church. He adds, that it belongs to the People of Rome to answer for the Necessity and Advantage there was in Translating of Formosus to the See. It was objected, that although Formosus might be excused as to those Points, yet the Blow he had received by suffering himself to be re-ordained, was not to be covered. This Objection much puzzled Auxilius, and to answer it, he supposeth that the Priests and Bishops are not essentially distinct, and endeavours to prove it by the famous passage of St. Jerom, from whence he Concludes, That as a Priest is Consecrated to make a Bishop, without any intention of Consecrating him a Priest anew, but only adding the Episcopal Title in like Manner. Formosus by his Second Ordination, did not lose the Title of Bishop he had before, but only received the addition of the Apostolick Dignity. This Sophistical Answer of Auxilius, did not excuse Formosus, if the Matter of Fact were true; but he maintains immediately, that it was very false, and that he was informed by those, that were present at the Instalment of Formosus, that he did not receive a new Ordination, but was conducted to the H. Apostolick See, by singing of Prayers, and was installed with a Speech proper for that occasion. He adds, that none but his Enemies, and others, that had a present Quarrel with him; said, that he was ordained a Second Time, whose Testimony was not worthy of Credit. That to pass a true Judgment of this Matter, a general Council ought to be called, which might easily remove the Scandal, and settle Peace in the Church; That the Synod held at Ravenna had confirmed the Ordination of Formosus, for which indeed the Bishops were accused of Bribery, but very unjustly. He aggravates the Cruelty exercised by Pope Stephen against Formosus, whose Corpse he took up and brought it to a Council, where having stripp'd him of his pontifical Habits, he caused a Lay-Garb to be put on him, and having cut off two Fingers of his Right-Hand, he caused him to be Buried in the Church-Yard for Strangers, from whence he was after thrown into the Tiber. Auxilius says, that they that exercised this piece of inhumanity upon him, acted like Savage Beasts; That this their Action was contrary to Heathen Morality, which obliges us to spare the Dead; That although the Translation of Formosus had been contrary to the Laws of the Church, it ought to have been tolerated with a Christian Compassion, and not aggravated with an unheard of Cruelty. That all that could have been done, had been to have called a Council to forbid the People

CHAP. XIII.

Certain Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

THERE has been no Age in which a greater Number of Perſons have applyed themſelves to regulate and explain the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church than the Ninth. Princes, Biſhops, and other learned Men have ſet themſelves about it with great Emulation. At the beginning of this Century, the Emperour Charles the Great writ a Circular Letter to all the Arch-Biſhops of France, [directed to Odilbert, Arch-Biſhop of Milan] Commanding them to inform him after what manner they and their Suffragans Taught and Inſtructed their Prieſts and People about the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Alſo why an Infant is rank'd amongſt the Catechumens? What it is to be a Catechumen? And what is the ſignification of the other Ceremonies? What means the Scrutiny? How the Creed is to be explain'd? How we are to underſtand the renouncing of the Devil, his Works, and his Pomps? What are the Works and Pomps which are renounced? For what Reaſon they breath upon the Infant, and why they Exorciſe him? What is the reaſon they give him Salt? Why they touch his Noſtrils? Why they anoint his Breaſt with Oyl? Why they cloath him in white? Wherefore they pour on him the Oyl of the Chriſm? Why they cover him with a Myſterious Veil? And, Laſtly, Wherefore they give him the Body and Blood of the Lord? All theſe Queſtions Charles the Great commanded his Metropolitans to Anſwer particularly and fully.

[This Letter of Charles the Great is put out by F. Mabillon in his Analect. Tom. I. p. 21.]

Inſufflation and Exorciſing.

These Ceremonies, and various other Rites were uſed by the Church in Baptiſm in this Age, as in the former they had been, not as neceſſary Ingredients in Baptiſm, becauſe they are not enjoyned by the Word of God, but as uſeful to beget a Reverence to this Sacrament in the Minds of the illiterate Vulgar, and expreſs to them the Virtue and Efficacy of it; for they ſometimes aboliſhed part of them, and always declared, that they attributed no Efficacy or Energy to them, but expected that from the joynt Prayers of the Church. This ſhews how differently they were uſed from the uſe of them in the Roman Church, who place a Sacred Operation in them, and make them neceſſary to Baptiſm.

The Arch-Biſhops of France, in Obedience to this Order, compoſed, and cauſed to be compoſed ſeveral Books upon theſe Subjects, all which they Dedicated to the Emperour. Amongſt others, Amalarius Fortunatus, Arch-Biſhop of Treves, writ a Treatiſe upon that Subject, which is to be found in the Sixteenth Tome of Caniſius's Collection, under the Name of Alcuin, to whom that Author attributes it upon a bare Conjecture only, without having any ſufficient Proof; for in his MS. and ſome others there was no Name of any Author: But in another Ancient MS. of F. Petavius it bears the Name of Amalarius. For indeed it is impoſſible it ſhould be Alcuin's, for he dyed in 804. and this was written in Anſwer to a Letter in 811. This Amalarius was he that was ſent the ſame Year along with Peter, the Abbot of Nonantula, to the Greek Emperour, Michael Curolopates. He was choſen Arch-Biſhop of Treves, and dyed in the Year 814. Amalarius.

Jeſſé, Biſhop of Amiens, writ alſo an Anſwer to the Emperour's Letter, in which he relates very exactly and clearly all the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, with a very Natural Comment upon every one of them. He ſpeaks alſo of Confirmation, and the Euchariſt conferred upon Infants at the time of their Baptiſm. Cordeſius, who was the firſt that publiſht this Letter of Jeſſé at the end of Hincmarus's Works [at Paris 1615.] added thereto a ſhort Explanation of the manner of Adminiſtring Baptiſm, and of the terms which are made uſe of in the Prayers, together with Nine Canons or Inſtructions for Prieſts; but it is very plain this Addition does not belong to Jeſſé, for it has no Relation to the Matter he treats of. His Letter ends at the Chapter of the Euchariſt. What follows as far as the Canons, is the Work of another Author, whoſe Notions and Method are very different from his. The Canons are a Capitulary or Remonſtrance for the Inſtruction of Charles the Great, which is to be found amongſt the Collection of Conſtitutions, Publiſht by M. Baluſius, pag. 531. This Letter of Jeſſé is alſo extant in the Bibliothecâ Patrum, [Tom. 14. pag. 67.] This Biſhop was ſent by Charles the Great in the Year 802 to Irene, Empreſs of the Eaſt, and afterwards Depoſed in 831 by Ebbo, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, in a Synod held at Nimiguen. Jeſſé.

Odilbert, Arch-Biſhop of Milan, writ alſo upon the ſame Subject, whoſe Book was never yet Printed. It is a Manuſcript in the Abby of Richemont. Father Mabillon, in the Fourth Tome of his Analects, has publiſht the Letter, which ſerves for a Preface to the Treatiſe, with an Extract of the Treatiſe it ſelf. Odilbert.

Theodulphus, Biſhop of Orleans, writ alſo an Anſwer by the Expreſs Command of his Metropolitan, Magnus, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to whom he Dedicated it; and who alſo writ a ſmall Treatiſe upon the ſame Subject, [Printed with ſome other Pieces of his by F. Simondus at Paris, 1646.] Theodulphus.

The Church of Lyons was too conſiderable, and its Ceremonies too Authentick, not to explain it ſelf upon this Occaſion. Whereupon Leidradus, Arch-Biſhop there, undertook to Compoſe an Anſwer to the Emperour's Letter. This Letter has been put out lately by Father Mabillon, in the Third Tome of his Analects. To which is annexed another Private one to the Emperour; and likewiſe a ſmall ſeparate Treatiſe upon the Renunciations made at the time of Baptiſm. We have over and above theſe, two other Letters of Leidradus. The Firſt written alſo to the Emperour, where he gives him an Account of the uſe he had made of the Ancient Revenues of the Church of Lyons, which had been reſtored to him by his Orders. He ſays, he has eſtabliſhed a Quire there, and Leidradus.

whatever elſe is neceſſary to Celebrate Divine Service. He acquaints him, that he had gotten Schools of Singers, who are ſo very excellent in their Art, and are able to Inſtruct others. That he has Readers, who not only Read Publickly, but are fit to Expound and Interpret. That he has cauſed a great many Eccleſiaſtical Authors to be Tranſcribed; Rebuilt and Beautified a great many Monaſteries, and other Religious Houſes; and likewiſe erected a Cloyſter for the Canons and Prebendaries, and many other things both of Uſe and Profit. The Second Letter of Leidradus is Conſolatory to his Siſter upon the Death of her Son and Brother. The Works of Leidradus are in a plain and natural ſtile, but have nevertheleſs a great deal of good Senſe and very Chriſtian Thoughts. Theſe two laſt Letters are in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 10. p. 232.] Papyrius Maſſonus and M. Baluſius have joyned them to the Works of Agobardus, to whom Leidradus reſigned his See to retire into the Monaſtery of St. Martin at Soiſſons. There are other Anonymous Anſwers given to the Queſtions propoſed by Charles the Great in his Letter. All theſe Authors give an Account of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, and put a Myſtical Senſe upon them, for the Inſtruction and Edification of Prieſts and Believers.

Amalarius. Lewis, Sirnamed the Kind or Godly, was not leſs Curious than his Father, in endeavouring to underſtand the Ceremonies of the Church. Amalarius, a Deacon of Mets, to whom is alſo given the Title of Abbot in Ancient Manuſcripts, and whom ſome have called Suffragan, Dedicated to him Four Books of the Eccleſiaſtical Office, in his Preface of which he gives him great Commendations, concluding it with many wiſhes for his long and happy Life. In theſe Books he relates the Ceremonies and Cuſtoms of the Church, according to the Roman Eſtabliſhment, and gives Myſtical Reaſons for them, which are in no wiſe to be thought the true Reaſons for the Inſtitution of theſe Ceremonies, but Humane Inventions, and for the moſt part groundleſs Suppoſitions, and which I do not think my ſelf obliged to give any Account of; therefore ſhall only take notice of a few Points of Diſcipline in them, which are the moſt conſiderable. The Firſt Book is about the Service of the Church from Septuageſima to Pentecoſt: Where he teaches us, that from Septuageſima to Eaſter, neither Hallelujah, nor Gloria in Excelſis were ſung in Churches; that Lent began the Wedneſday after Quinquageſima. That on Holy-Thurſday they Conſecrated Oyls for the Sick, for the Catechumens, and thoſe that were Confirmed. That theſe three Oyls had three different Conſecrations. That they mingled Balm with that uſed for Confirmation. That on Good-Friday they worſhipped the Croſs, and after they had brought out the Body of Chriſt (reſerved the day before) they mixt it with unconſecrated Wine, which they thought ſufficiently conſecrated by this Mixture, and ſo gave it immediately to the People. But he takes notice at the ſame time, that in the Church of Rome the Prieſts only Communicated. That the Service of Saturday was for Saturday Night till Sunday, and that they bleſt the Wax Candle. He ſpeaks of ſome of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm made uſe of at that time, and principally of the Unction, which was pour'd by the Prieſts on the top of the Novice's Head. He ſeems to diſapprove of the Faſt upon Rogation, which he ſays, was Inſtituted by St. Mamertus, and was never in uſe with the Eaſtern Churches. In the Second Book he Treats of the Twelve Leſſons of Divine Service, of the Faſt of the Four Ember Weeks, of the ſeveral Orders and * Habits of Prieſts, of which he gives very Myſtical ſignifications. The Prieſt's Veſt ſignifies the right management of the Voice, his Albe the ſubduing of the Paſſions; his Shooes, upright Walking; his Cope, Good Works; his Stole, the Yoke of Jeſus Chriſt; the Surpliſe, Readineſs to Serve his Neighbour; his Handkerchief, Good Thoughts, and the Pallium, Preaching. The Third Book Treats of the Method obſerved in Celebrating Maſs. Of the Habits, of the Office of the Singers, of the manner of the Biſhop's going to the Alter; of the Place where he ſits, of the Preſenting of the Chalice by the Acolythus to the Subdeacon, who receives it. Of the mixing of the Sacramental Bread with the Conſecrated Wine; and laſtly of the Kiſs of Peace. He Diſcourſes at the ſame time of the Prayers which are ſaid, viz. † Of the Introitus, the Kyrie Eleiſon, the Gloria, the Collects, the Tractus, the Reſponſes, the Hallelujah, the Offertory, the Secret Prayers, the Preface, the Canon, the Lord's Prayer, the Agnus Dei, and the Bleſſings, which are given at the end of the Maſs. He alſo adds ſome Reflections upon the Maſſes and Service uſed on All-Saints-Day, the Advent, Chriſtmas-Day, and the Purification; upon the Hour of Celebrating Maſs, and the differences between the Maſſes for the Dead. We may thereby Learn, that the Practice in his Time of Celebrating Maſs was not different from what it is at preſent. But the Myſtical Reflections he makes upon theſe Ceremonies and Prayers are ſo far-fetched and incongruous, that there is no great uſe to be made of them. He has one particular Obſervation to himſelf about the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, which he divides into three ſtates or conditions. 1*ſt*. Of Jeſus Chriſt riſen again, repreſented by that part of the Euchariſt which is put into the Chalice. 2. Of Jeſus Chriſt upon Earth, repreſented by that which is conſumed by the Prieſt. And, 3. The Body of Jeſus Chriſt in the Tomb, repreſented by that part which remains on the Altar. The laſt Book is upon the other parts of the Divine Service; ‖ As the Prayers for the Firſt, Third, Sixth, None hours, Veſpers, Complectorum, and Night-Office, as well for Sundays and Holy-days, as other Principal Feaſts of the Year. F. Mabillon, in the Second Tome of his Analects, has Printed a Supplement to this Fourth Book attributed to Amalarius. But it appears by Agobard's Book, writ againſt this Work, that the laſt Chapter of the 4*th* book, was the ſame with the laſt and 47*th* in the Vulgar Editions: Alſo 'tis certain, that this Supplement is rather added by the Monk Ademarus, than the Work of Amalarius. Moreover 'tis plain, this Addition has no Connexion or Conformity with the other parts of that Treatiſe.

The

The ſame Author has Writ another Book, called * The Order of the Book of Anthems, where he gives a Reaſon for the Order he has obſerved in the Book of Anthems, which he made for the Churches of France, in ſo diſpoſing the Anthems, Reſponſes and Pſalms. Ademarus informs us, That Amalarius was alſo Author of a Treatiſe, named A Rule for the Canons and Canoneſſes, Publiſhed in the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, which conſiſts of nothing elſe but a Collection of Precepts and Canons, gathered from the Fathers and Councils, relating to the Lives of Clergy-men and Monks. The Deacon Florus makes mention of two other Books of Amalarius, made before the former, and adds a third, called An Introduction or Preface to his Works; but this we have altogether loſt.

* De ordine Antiphonarii. Liber.

Mon. Baluſius amongſt the pieces which are at the end of the ſecond Volume of his Capitulary, hath Publiſhed ſome Eclogues of choice Reflexions, upon ſome places of the Roman Order, concerning the Ceremonies of the Maſs, which go under the name of Amalarius: But althô this Work be very full of Reflections, much like thoſe of Amalarius, yet it is very dubious whether they be his or no; for beſides that it is not likely he would Treat a ſecond time of the ſame thing, only after a different manner, of which he had ſpoken before in the third Book of his Divine Offices. It appears to me, that this Author's Style and Manner of Writing is ſomething different from that of Amalarius.

There are five Letters of this Authors, in the ſeventh Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium, [Tom. 6.] The firſt is directed to Terence, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, concerning the manner of Writing the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, together with Terence's Anſwer. The ſecond is on the ſame ſubject, Writ to Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, with that Biſhop's Anſwer. The third is to Rancarius Biſhop of Noyon, about the meaning of theſe Words in the Goſpel; This is the Cup of my Blood, of the new and eternal Teſtament. The fourth is to the Monk Hetton, who was Abbot of Fulda, after Rabanus, about the Word Seraphim, whether it be of the Maſculine or Neuter Gender; And the fifth is to Gontard, where he treats of this Queſtion, viz. Whether a Perſon may be allowed to ſpit juſt after receiving the Holy Euchariſt. It ſeems by this laſt Letter, that he believed that there was no harm in ſpitting ſome time after, when one cannot eaſily forbear longer: And if it ſhould happen that without their knowledge or will, they ſhould let drop ſome of the Euchariſt, they need not much trouble themſelves about it: Alſo, That he doubted whether Chriſts Body once Received did Incorporate with ours, and accompany it to Death; or whether it evaporated through the Pores, or was exhaled into Air, or converted into Blood, or went into the Drought; ſo that this has given occaſion to ſome, to accuſe him of the Error of the Starconaniſts, as Heribald and Rabanus were. The Books of Amalarius were very ill receiv'd in France, and chiefly by the Church of Lions, which would by no means endure them. Agobardus Biſhop of this See, wrote three Treatiſes againſt his Offices and Book. Florus a Deacon of the ſame Church, attackt him very vigorouſly, and accuſed him in the Councils of Creſſi and Thionville: Firſt about his Opinion of the Body of Chriſt, under three Forms, repreſented by three pieces of the Sacramental Bread: Secondly about his Moral and Myſtical ſignifications of the Ceremonies of the Church, which he lookt upon as falſe Opinions and Imaginations without Grounds. Thirdly, becauſe he inſiſted only upon the Roman Order, and Expounded it word for word, altho he knew that this Book was unknown to the Arch-Deacon of Rome, of whom he had many Traditions.

Amalarius thus having attacked the Cuſtoms of the Church of Lions, Agobard, who was their Arch-Biſhop, Defended them in his Correction of the Anthem Book, to which his Treatiſe of the manner of ſinging Pſalms in the Church of Lions, ſerves for a Preface. He obſerves that the particular Cuſtoms of ſome Churches ought not to be reflected on. He approves of that of the Church of Lions, in not Singing new and fantaſtical Pſalms, in not making uſe of Poetry in Divine Services, and by keeping exactly to the Scriptures. This was what Amalarius Quarrel'd with, but Agobard vigorouſly defended it, and proved it highly reaſonable and conformable to the ſenſe of the Church.

This Correction of the Anthem Book is Dedicated to all Believers, but principally to the Singing-men of the Church of Lions: He there gives reaſons for the Corrections he has made, and ſhows that he has only retrencht all that was not taken from the Holy Scriptures, he gives particular reaſons for leaving out ſome Anthems, and proves that they were contrary to the Truth, and did not at all agree with Myſteries. He afterwards Quotes ſeveral Places in the Fathers, to ſhow that it is neceſſary to endeavour to reform the Service, and to retrench thoſe Errors and Abuſes which are ſlid into it, either by Malice, Ignorance or Simplicity. He complains that there are ſome Clergy-men, that ſpend their Lives more in learning to Sing, than in Studying the Holy Scriptures, and other matters that relate to their Miniſtry: He ſays that the Ancients to avoid this diſorder, choſe rather to repeat the Pſalm often, than to charge the minds of thoſe that ſung with a great many ſuperfluous pieces. And laſtly he concludes, That as the Church has a Maſs-Book whoſe Doctrine is very pure, and a Collection of Leſſons taken wholly out of the Holy Scriptures, ſo it ought alſo to have an Anthem-Book Purged from all Errors and Humane Inventions, and compoſed out of nothing but the Bible.

This Treatiſe is followed by another againſt ſome paſſages of Amalarius's Book, concerning the Divine Service: He reproves what Amalarius maintains; That on the twenty fifth of April might be uſed Litanies or Rogations, without Faſts and Abſtinence; he laught at what Amalarius had aſſerted, that upon that day they prayed Publickly for Eggs, Bread and Fiſh. He finds fault with Amalarius's Explanation of the paſſage of St. Paul. He reproves divers expreſſions and Notions of this Author; as when he ſays, that the Holy Ghoſt did drive all Carnal Deſires out of the Apoſtles Hearts: That Man, and by conſequence Jeſus Chriſt, was Created out of the four Elements; That Jeſus Chriſt dyed for the juſt and unjuſt; That there are two Sacrifices, the one General for all Men, and the other particular only for the Saints: That the firſt is the death of Jeſus Chriſt, and the ſecond the Prayers of the juſt, which are united to the Sacrifices of the Angels: This Treatiſe of Agobard ſeems imperfect.

Prayers

Rabanus. Rabanus or Herbanus, ſirnamed Maurus and Magnentius, has made himſelf very famous by his Works, which he has Written concerning the Ceremonies and Diſcipline of the Church. He was born at Mayence, in the year 788. He was put very young into the Monaſtery of Fulda, where he was brought up; from thence he was ſent to Tours, where he Study'd ſome time under the famous Alcain: He returned afterwards into Germany to his Monaſtery, where he was entruſted with the Government of the younger Monks, and was afterwards ordain'd Prieſt in the year 814. and at laſt choſen Abbot of Fulda in 822. After having managed this charge twenty years, he voluntarily quitted it to ſatisfie his Monks, who accuſed him, that he applied himſelf too much to Study, and neglected the affairs of the Monaſtery. He retired to the Mount of St. Peter, and was at laſt choſen Arch-Biſhop of Mayence, in the year 847. He held a Council the ſame year for the Reformation of Diſcipline, he Condemned Goteſcalcus a Monk of Corbey in another Council, and ſent him to Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Rheims; he dyed in the year 856.

He excell'd all in the common Learning of thoſe times, ſuch as expounding the Principles of Arts, as the Rules of Grammar and Rhetorick; in a readineſs of Collecting from the Fathers of the Church, common places upon the Holy Scriptures. In Inventing Allegories upon the Hiſtories of the Bible; in the Expoſition of the Myſtical Reaſons of the Ceremonies; in a knack of turning Proſe into Verſe, and in the manner of reducing his common places into Precepts and Inſtructions. All the Works of Rabanus, are of this kind.

I ſhall not ſpeak of the Grammar that is attributed to him, and which is nothing elſe but an Extract of Priſcian, becauſe theſe kind of Works do not relate to our Subject; and that thoſe that have writ his Life, and the Catalogue of his Books, have not mentioned it.

His Treatiſe, De Univerſo, or of the ſignification and propriety of Words, compoſed for Haymon Biſhop of Halberſtat, and ſent to Lewis the Godly, is nothing but a Collection of common Places, about a great number of things. It is divided into twenty two Books, of which there are but the five firſt, which have any relation to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the others being all about the Sciences and profane Arts. The firſt Book is concerning the three Perſons in the Godhead; in the firſt Chapter he explains the ſeveral names of God, and gives the ſence of ſuch Expreſſions in the Scripture, as attributes the Members and Actions of Man to him. In the ſecond he conſiders the different Names which are given to the Son of God, in the Old and New Teſtament. In the third he explains what relates to the Holy Ghoſt, which he affirms to proceed from the Father and the Son. In the fourth he treats of the Myſtery of the Trinity, and in the laſt of the Names of Angels, and of their different Orders. In the ſecond and third Book he ſearches into the Significations of the Names of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and other remarkable Perſons in the Old Law. The fourth concerns the Church only; he there Explains the Names and Parables in the New Teſtament, he takes Notice of the Signification and Etimology of the Words which are made uſe of in the Affairs of the Church, ſuch as Clerk, Biſhop, Martyr, &c. Alſo he diſtinguiſhes the different ſorts of Monks: he ſpeaks of Hereſies, and concludes with an Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Church, which is taken, or rather Copy'd out of the Treatiſe of Gennadius, upon Eccleſiaſtical Opinions. In the fifth he Diſcourſes of the Books of the Holy Scriptures; he makes a Catalogue of them, and adds moreover to thoſe the Church has received as Canonical, ſome that have not been allowed by the Canon of the Jews. He ſets down thoſe that he believes to have been the Authors of the Old and New Teſtament, and makes an Abbridgment of their Works. He ſpeaks alſo of the Reſtoration of the Holy Books by Eſdras, of the Libraries of the Verſion of the Septuagint, and of other Verſions of the Holy Scriptures; he extreamly commends that of St. Jerom, and prefers it before all others, as being the moſt literal and clear. Verborum tenacior & perſpicuitate Sententiæ Clarior. He Treats alſo in the ſame Book of other Eccleſiaſtical Writings of Canons, or of Concordances of the Evangeliſts, of Definitions of General Councils, and of Eccleſiaſtical Offices. He comes at laſt to the Sacraments, and other means of Sanctifying us. He ſays, That Sacraments are things which ought to be received Holily; That Baptiſm, Chriſm, the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, are called Sacraments, becauſe the Divine Grace works in them by the Viſible Signs; that they have their Effect, whether they be Adminiſtred by good or bad Men; that Baptiſm remits Sins; that there are ſeveral ſorts of Baptiſms, as that of the Holy Ghoſt, and that of Martyrdome, &c. That there are in the Church other means of purifying our ſelves from our Sins, and principally Confeſſion, Penance and Tears; that Chriſm or Unction Sanctifies us, and that the Prieſt lays his hands upon us to endue us with the Holy Ghoſt; That as to the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, God has choſen Bread and Wine to ſhew us that his Body and his Blood is for our common Nouriſhment; That the Sacraments give Life to ſome and Death to others, becauſe all receive them, tho few have the virtue and benefit of them. He ſpeaks laſtly of Exorciſms, the Creed, the Lords Prayer, Lent, publick Penance, and Littanies or Proceſſions.

Rabanus's Work in Praiſe of the Holy Croſs, is of a very particular kind; it muſt needs have coſt him a great deal of pains and ſtudy, tho it be but of little uſe. The body of the Work is compoſed of letters divided from one another, and range over againſt one another in lines. In reading from the right hand to the left, every line contains an Hexameter Verſe. Theſe Letters thus rang'd in lines, make a ſort of a draught or platform, on which there are Figures or Simbols of the Croſs Painted; the letters encloſed in theſe Figures make alſo Verſes, which have ſome relation to the Figure. There are 28 Figures in 28 Tables, the Verſes are Copy'd entire; afterwards at the end of every Table, and the Myſtery explained in Proſe. The firſt Table contains the Image of Chriſt, extending his Arms in the form of a Croſs. The 47 Verſes read long-ways, from the right Hand to the left, ſhow the ſeveral Names that have been given to Chriſt, in the Old and New Teſtament. The Letters compriz'd in the draught of the Figure Compoſe other Verſes; as for Example, Thoſe that meet in the Crown about his Head, read round, make exactly this Verſe, Rex Regum Dominus Dominantium. In the other Tables he repreſents many different things upon the Croſs, as the Angels, the Virtues, the Elements, Ciphers, Myſtical Numbers, Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, the Beatitudes, Books of Moſes, Names of Adam, Alleluiah, Amen, &c. In the laſt he repreſents a Croſs, at the foot of which is Painted a Monk Worſhipping it, and in it theſe Words, Rabanum memet clemens rogo, Chriſte tuere, O Pie, Judicio. This firſt Book is explained by a ſecond, which contains 28 Chapters in Proſe. Rabanus undertook this Work at thirty years of Age, and preſented it a great while afterwards to Gregory the Fourth, to whom it was recommended as a wonderful piece of Art by Alcuinus, who had been Rabanus's Maſter.

Theſe are the Contents of the firſt Tome of Rabanus's Works; the ſecond conſiſts of four Books of Commentaries upon Geneſis, four upon Exodus, ſeven upon Leviticus, with an Abridgment of them, by Strabo his Scholar, four upon Numbers, and as many upon Deuteronomy. All theſe Commentaries are Dedicated to Freculphus Biſhop of Lyſieux, at whoſe deſire he undertook them. Rabanus in his Epiſtle entreats him to Examine them; and tells him, That he ought not to expect any thing extraordinary from one that was more fit to Work for his Living, than to write Books for the uſe of the Learned, and beſides whoſe charge of Abbot allowed him but little Leiſure. The third Tome contains two Books of Commentaries upon Judges, Dedicated to Humbertus Biſhop of Wirtzbourg. One on the Hiſtory of Ruth, four on the four Books of Kings, Dedicated to Hilduin, four others upon the two Books of Chronicles, Dedicated to Lewis Emperour of Germany. One Commentary upon the Hiſtory of Judith, and another upon Heſter. Theſe two are Dedicated to the Empreſs Judith. A Comment upon the Canticles, which is Compoſed into Morning Hymns, for every day of the Week, Dedicated to Lewis King of Germany. Three Books of Commentaries on the Proverbs of Solomon, as many on the Book of Wiſdom, and two upon Eccleſiaſtes. Theſe two laſt are Dedicated to Otgarus Arch-Biſhop of Mayence. The fourth Tome conſiſts of nineteen Books of Commentaries upon the Propheſie of Jeremiah and his Lamentations, twenty upon Ezekiel, Dedicated to the Emperour Lotharius. And two more on the two Books of Maccabees; the firſt is to Lewis King of Germany, and the other to Geroldus Arch-Deacon of that Kings Chappel. The fifth Tome contains eight Books of Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew, Directed to Aiſtulphus Arch-Biſhop of Mayence: and laſtly, thirty Books of Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, written at the requeſt of Lupus of Ferrara, and Dedicated to the Biſhop Samuel. Many Homilies upon the Sundays, Feaſts and Holydays of the year, and alſo upon divers points of Morality, Dedicated to Aiſtulphus and Lotharius. A Treatiſe of Allegories upon all the Scripture, where, after having explained the difference between Tropology, Analogy, and Allegory; he ranks in Alphabetical Order, many words of the Holy Scriptures, to all which he gives an Allegorical or Myſtical Senſe.

Thoſe Authors that have mentioned Rabanus's Works, add to theſe ſeveral other Commentaries, upon Joſhua, Eſdras, Tobit, Job, the Pſalms, Iſaiah, Daniel, the Minor Prophets, the Goſpels of St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and Canonical Epiſtles, and ſome others which have never yet been Printed. All theſe Commentaries conſiſts of nothing elſe but Collections out of other Mens Works, which be Copy'd from them without any exact choice or diſtinction.

The Sixth Tome of Rabanus's Works contains many Books; the firſt and moſt conſiderable of all theſe, is his Treatiſe of Inſtruction of Clerks, divided into three Books. He Compos'd it for the Monks of Fulda, who propounded to him divers queſtions about their Duty, and Dedicated it in the year 819. to Aiſtulphus Arch-Biſhop of Mayence. The firſt Book treats of the ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Degrees and Habits of Clergy-men; alſo of the four Sacraments of the Church, as Baptiſm, Chriſm, the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and the Service of the Maſs according to the Roman Order. The ſecond is upon the Liturgy it ſelf, the Canonical Hours, Faſts, Confeſſions, Penance, Holy-days, the rule of Faith, and about Hereſies; the laſt is of Eccleſiaſtical Knowledge and Studies.

In the firſt, after having obſerved that the Church is an Aſſembly of Believers, he divides it into three ſorts of Members; firſt Lay-men, ſecondly Monks, and thirdly Clerks: He obſerves, That the Clergy are admitted into it by Shaving the Crown, which is a Ceremony that demonſtrates, that they ought then to part with all Vice and Diſorderly Living. It ſeems they did not then content themſelves to cut off a little Hair, but Shav'd all the top of their Heads, leaving only a circle round about, which Rabanus believes to have been a mark of the Royalty of the Chriſtian Prieſthood. He reckons up eight Eccleſiaſtical Orders; the Porter, the Queriſter, the Reader, the Exorciſt, the Acolythus; the Sub-deacon, the Deacon, the Prieſt, and Biſhop. He ſays, That this laſt muſt be Ordained, not by one Biſhop only, but by all thoſe of his Province; leaſt ſo great Power being truſted to a ſingle Perſon, he ſhould undertake any thing prejudicial to the Faith. He adds, That in Conſecrating him he has a Staff put into his Hand to admoniſh, that he is not only to Guide but Correct the People committed to his charge, and a Ring to denote either the Honour of the Prieſthood, or the Secrets he is to keep. He counts three ſorts of Biſhops; firſt Patriarchs, ſecondly Arch-Biſhops or Metropolitans, and thirdly ſingle Biſhops. He adds moreover Suffragans, which he compares to Chriſts Diſciples, who could do nothing without their Maſters Orders. Theſe ſorts of Biſhops were Eſtabliſh'd for the ſake of the Poor in the Country, that they might not be depriv'd of Confirmation, which theſe Suffragans had power to confer upon them, tho they were Ordained by one Biſhop onely, as the Prieſts are. He tells us, that theſe laſt were alſo called Biſhops, and that they had the power almoſt equal to theirs, for they could Conſecrate the Euchariſt confer Baptiſm, and Preach. But nevertheleſs they had not the chief Dignity of Prieſthood, Pontificatus Apicem, ſince they could not anoint the Forehead with Chriſm, and beſtow the Holy Ghoſt, which two only belong to the Biſhops, as it appears by the Acts of the Apoſtles; neither can they confer Holy Orders, which is alſo reſerved to the Biſhops. The Deacons are Miniſters of Sacred Things, they have right to Baptiſe, they are neceſſary in the ſervice of the Altar, for the Prieſt cannot take the Chalice from thence, but muſt receive it from the Hands of the Deacon. The Sub-deacons are under them; theſe take the Offerings of the People, and carry them to the Deacons who place them upon the Altar; they are oblig'd to live unmarried: Theſe are not Ordain'd by Impoſition of Hands, but only by receiving the Cover and Chalice from the Hands of the Biſhop; and the Chriſtal Bottle and Napkin from the Arch-Deacon. He ſays nothing particular of the leſſer and inferiour Orders. I ſhall paſs by the Remarks he makes upon the likeneſs of our Miniſters with thoſe of the Old Teſtament, and the Myſtical ſignifications he gives to the Biſhops Habits. To come to what he teaches concerning the Sacraments, He ſays, That Baptiſm, Chriſm, and the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt are called Sacraments; becauſe that under the Vail of Corporal things, the Divine Power produces Salvation and Grace, after a ſecret manner by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, which works this Effect, inſomuch that they are equally Efficatious, whether they be Adminiſtred by the Good or the Bad. That Baptiſm is the firſt, becauſe it muſt be received before Confirmation, and before the Receiving the Body and Blood of our Lord. That in this Sacrament Men are dipt in Water, to denote, that as Water outwardly purifies the Body, ſo Grace inwardly does the Soul, into which the Holy Ghoſt deſcends. He relates afterwards the Order of Adminiſtration, and the Ceremonies of Baptiſm; and from thence paſſing to Confirmation, he Remarks, that the Biſhop diſpenſes the Holy Ghoſt by Impoſition of his Hands; and that he Anoints the Believer a ſecond time with the ſame Chriſm the Prieſt had done before, with this difference only, that his Anointing is on the Forehead, whereas the Prieſt's was on the Crown of the Head. He attributes to this laſt Unction the Sanctification and Grace of the Holy Ghoſt. At laſt ſpeaking of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, which he conſiders as two different Sacraments. He asks the Queſtion, Why Jeſus Chriſt has comprehended the Myſtery of his Body and Blood under things which we eat and drink? And why of all the ſorts of Food we eat, he has made choice of Bread and Wine? To which he Anſwers, That Jeſus Chriſt has given us his Body and Blood in the form of Nouriſhment, becauſe effectively his Fleſh is ſuch and his Blood Drink. That he hath made uſe of the Fruits of Earth, becauſe he was upon Earth, and that he has choſen Bread and Wine to accompliſh the Sacrifice of Melchiſidech, and to ſhow that as Bread and Wine conſiſts of many Particles, which together make but one Subſtance, ſo we are all United into the ſame Church by the ſame Charity, being all made Members of the ſame Body by this Sacrament. He adds, That this Sacrament ſerves for Nouriſhment to our Fleſh, and converts itſelf into our Subſtance, and that by vertue of this Sacrament we are changed into Jeſus Chriſt. That we participate of his Spirit and Grace; and in a word, that we become his very Members. That the Bread which is made uſe of is without Leaven, to denote, that thoſe which approach it ought to be exempt from all Impurities. That Water is mixt with the Wine, becauſe we read in the Goſpel, That Blood and Water came out of the Side of our Saviour. And that as it is good for them that are not ſeparated from it by their Sins, often to approach this Sacrament, ſo it is very dangerous for ſuch as have committed ſuch Crimes as debar them from it, to receive it before they have Repented. After having treated of the Sacraments, he ſpeaks of the Celebration of Maſs, which he believes to have been ſo called, becauſe of the diſmiſſing of the Catechumens with theſe words, Ita Miſſa eſt. He ſays, That the Maſs is a Sacrifice which the Prieſt offers to God, inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt, practiſed by the Apoſtles, and uſed by all the Church. He acknowledges that at firſt they did not Sing as they do at preſent; but he believes they read the Goſpel and the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles; he ends this Book with a ſhort Expoſition of the Ceremonies and Prayers of the Maſs.

In the ſecond Book after, he hath ſpoken of the Hours for Divine Service, and the different ſorts of Prayer. He treats of the Confeſſion, the Litanies or publick Prayers, and the divers kinds of Faſts. He diſtinguiſhes three ſorts of Lent; the firſt, that which precedes Eaſter; the ſecond, the Faſt obſerved after Pentecoſt; and the third, that which begins in November and ends at Chriſtmas-day. He notes, that the cuſtom of his time was to Faſt Friday and Saturday. He does not forget to ſpeak of the Faſts of the four Ember-weeks. He approves of other Faſts ordered by the Biſhop on any particular occaſion, or practis'd thrô Devotion by Chriſtians. In ſpeaking of abſtaining from Wine and Fleſh, he obſerves, that Birds are allowed to thoſe who are forbid to eat of any four-footed Creature, becauſe that 'tis thought, they were formed out of Water as well as Fiſh.

He diſtinguiſhes two different ſorts of Alms, and ranks amongſt this Number the good Works we do for our Salvation, which are as Alms we beſtow upon our ſelves. He defines Penance a Puniſhment, by which a Man corrects himſelf for what he has done amiſs. He ſays, that Penitents let their Hair and Beards grow, wear Sack-cloth, throw themſelves on their Faces on the Ground, and beſprinkle their Bodies with Aſhes. That Repentance is a ſecond remedy for our Sins, after Baptiſm. That to effect a true Repentance, it does not ſuffice only to bewail ones Sins paſt, but we muſt never commit them again. That this is the ſatisfaction, followed by Reconciliation. That Penance and Reconciliation ought to be publick, for publick Tranſgreſſions; but as to thoſe whoſe Sins are conceal'd, concealed, and who have confeſt them ſecretly to a Prieſt or a Biſhop, they may do Private Penance, ſuch as the Prieſt or Biſhop will order; and afterwards be reconciled when they have performed their Penance. That the ordinary time for Reconciliation is Holy-Thurſday, but Abſolution may be granted at other times to thoſe that are in danger of their Lives. He afterwards Treats copiouſly of the Solemn Celebration of Feaſts and Sundays. He ſpeaks by the by of the Oblation of the Sacrifice of the Maſs for the Dead, of the Dedicating of Churches, the Prayers of Divine Service, the Songs, the Pſalms, Hymns, Anthems, Reſponſes, and Leſſons. He makes a Catalogue of Canonical Books, which comprehends all that are at preſent acknowledged for ſuch. He tells you thoſe that he believes to have been Authors of the greateſt part of them. He ſpeaks of Eccleſiaſtical Benedictions, viz. That of Oyl, and that of Salt and Water; which he ſays, are made uſe of to comfort the Sick againſt the Illuſions of the Devil, to heal the Flock, and to drive away Diſtempers. At laſt, having ſpoken of the Apoſtles Creed, and given an Abridgment of the Doctrines agreeable to the Faith, he ſets down a very imperfect Catalogue of Hereſies, in which he forgets ſome, and reckons others which are altogether unknown; as the Canonians and Metangiſmonites.

The laſt Book is concerning the Learning of Clergy-Men. He ſays, they are not allowed to be ignorant of any thing they ſhould teach others, and which is neceſſary to render them capable of Inſtructing them. That they ought to underſtand very well the Holy Scriptures, not only the Hiſtorical part, but be able to Expound the Figures and Myſtical Senſe of it. That it is good for them to have a Tincture of other Arts and Sciences. That they be Civil and Regular in their Manners, and Affable and Courteous in their Speech. That they be of an Acute Judgment, and know how to apply proper Remedies to the different Diſeaſes of the Soul. He afterwards makes uſe of the words of St. Gregory the Great, to Reprove thoſe who undertake to teach others, and Cure Souls, without being very well inſtructed in their Duty themſelves: I mean ſuch as enter into the Miniſtry meerly through the Proſpect of Intereſt or Ambition, and thoſe that diſhonour God by an Irregular Life, whoſe Deportment does not anſwer their Doctrine. He ſays, That the Grounds and Perfection of Wiſdom is the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which is an Emanation of the Eternal Wiſdom of God, and a Participation of his Truth. That all the Wiſdom and Truth that Men have, and all that is to be found Profitable in Profane Writers, is to be attributed to the Divine Wiſdom, which gave it a beginning. That the Scripture has its Obſcurities, which are good to exerciſe Mens wits: But there are ſcarce any Truths contained in one place, which are not explained in another, Nihil autem de illis obſcuritatibus eruitur quod non pleniſſimè dictum alibi reperiatur. This is taken from St. Auſtin's Treatiſe of Chriſtian Doctrine, as well as the reſt of this Book; which is nothing but an Extract from this Father, excepting what he ſays upon the Seven Liberal Arts, upon which he quotes a paſſage taken out of the Paſtoral of St. Gregory.

The Book of Orders, Holy Sacraments, and Prieſts Habits, which followeth this, is almoſt nothing elſe but a Copy of the firſt of the three foregoing Books: It is very near the ſame with the three Books of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; for the two firſt are nothing but an Abridgment of thoſe of the Inſtruction of Clerks, to which he has added ſome paſſages out of St. Auſtin. In the laſt, which is about the Chriſtian Warfare, he Treats of Vertues and Vices.

* The two Books dedicated to the Abbot Bonoſus, of which the firſt is about the Viſion of God, and the ſecond upon Penance, are made up of paſſages out of the Fathers upon theſe Subjects.

* Dr. Cave adds a third, De Puritate Cordis: Or, the Purity of the Heart.

The three Books of Queſtions about the Rules of Penance, do not belong to Rabanus. The firſt and ſecond are Halitgarius's, Biſhop of Cambray, and the third an unknown Author's.

The three Books of Vertues and Vices belong to the ſame Halitgarius, who has alſo made a Penitential at the Requeſt of Ebbo, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, divided into Five Books, and publiſhed under his Name by Caniſius. Theſe are not much different from the Five Books, which here bear the Name of Rabanus.

But the Penetential dedicated to Otgarus, Arch-Biſhop of Mayence, is certainly the Work of Rabanus, which he compoſed towards the Year 841, before he was Biſhop of Mayence. [This Tract is Printed alone at Venice, 1584. Quarto.]

The Name of a Penitential has alſo been given to the Letter which he wrote to Heribaldus, Biſhop of Auxerre, publiſhed by Stewart in his Addition to the Antiquities of Caniſius [at Ingolſtadt, 1616.] and by M. Baluſius, at the end of Regino, [at Parii, 1671.] But this is a Canonical Letter, in Anſwer to ſome Queſtions propounded by that Biſhop. It is divided into Articles, and quoted by Regino and the Collectors of Canons. He there gathers together many Canons concerning the Penances of Homicides, Adulterers, Forſworn People, Sorcerers; and about the Puniſhments of thoſe that commit any great Crimes after they are admitted into Holy Orders, and about other Circumſtances of Penance and Abſolution. But towards the end he Treats about two Queſtions much debated in his Time. The Firſt about the Euchariſt, whether it goes into the Draught? A Queſtion that has been ſpoken of before. And the Second about Ebbo, Old Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, who after his Depoſition, retired to Hildeſheim in Saxony, where he exerciſed his Epiſcopal Functions. He ſays, that he knows not whether he was juſtly or unjuſtly Depoſed; but nevertheleſs that it did not hinder him from doing the Duty of that Office: For he has heard that he was afterwards re-eſtabliſhed by the Holy See. He adds, That he had lately written thereupon to Hincmarus, after he underſtood that he had removed from the Prieſthood and Clerkſhip, all thoſe who had been ordained by Ebbo after his being depoſed. This Letter of Rabanus was written about the Year 853. a long time after the Penetential, of which we have ſpoken before.

Rabanus's

Rabanus's Letter to Humbert, about the Degrees of Conſanguinity, within which 'tis forbidden to Contract Marriage, is alſo a Work of the ſame Nature. In it after he hath related the Opinions of Theodorus, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and Iſidorus, he ſays, 'tis his Judgment, that a Man may Marry after the fifth Degree of Conſanguinity. And that if there be any Marriages found within that Degree, without their knowledge they were ſo near of Kin, they might be ſuffered to continue married, only enjoyning them Penance, and exhorting them to live in Abſtinence from the Marriage-Bed.

Humbertus not being ſatisfied with this ſhort Anſwer, ſent him ſome new Queſtions about this Subject; and alſo askt him what he thought of Fortune-tellers Divinations? Rabanus Anſwers him in a longer Letter, in which he ſhews, that he was in the right to make uſe of the Chapter in Leviticus to Regulate the Degrees of Conſanguinity, within which it is forbidden to Marry: Becauſe that this Law related to Manners, and that the Precepts of this kind have not been aboliſht by Jeſus Chriſt. He afterwards relates a paſſage of St. Auſtin, which explains the paſſage of Leviticus. Another paſſage in the Anſwer of St. Gregory to Auſtin the Monk; and a great many Canons concerning the Degrees of Conſanguinity, in which it is forbidden to Contract Marriage. In the Second Part, after having ſpoken of the Artifices of Magicians or Sorcerers, he concludes, That we ought to take care how we apply our ſelves to them for the Cure of any Diſtemper, or to find things that are ſtollen or loſt.

In his Book, Of the Soul, he treats briefly, contrary to his ordinary Cuſtom, about ſuch Queſtions that reſpect the Original and Nature of our Souls. He ſays alſo, that it is a diſputable Point, whether God created it to be infuſed into our Bodies, or whether it be produced from the Souls of our Fathers and Mothers. He maintains, that it is altogether Spiritual, and has no particular Figure, although its principal ſeat be in the Head. He ſays, it is not leſs in Infants than more aged Perſons; and that it is of the ſame Nature in all Men, though the inequality of Organs hinders it from acting every where alike. He Treats afterwards of the Principal Vertues of the Soul, of the Form of the Body, and of the Senſes.

The Treatiſe of the Riſe, Life, and Manners of Anti-Chriſt, contains a Deſcription of his Life and Actions, framed out of what is ſaid of him in the Holy Scriptures: That he ſhould be of the Race of the Jews, and of the Tribe of Dan: That he ſhould be born according to the order of Nature, of a Father and Mother: That at the very Minute of his Conception the Devil ſhould enter into his Body, and always dwell there: That he ſhould be born in Babylon: That he ſhould extend his Dominion to a great diſtance. That he ſhould do Signs and Prodigies. That he ſhould ſtir up a great Perſecution againſt all Chriſtians. That when he ſhould come, the Roman Empire would be entirely ruined, and Judgment would be at hand. That he ſhould call himſelf Chriſt, and draw all the Jews after him. That he ſhould alſo ſit in the Temple of God, that is to ſay, the Church. That he ſhould have Elias and Enoch for his fore-runners: That they ſhould be killed after three Years and a half's Preaching. That the great Perſecution of Anti-Chriſt ſhould commence from their Death, and that it ſhould continue three Years and an half; but that although the Anger of God ſhould be enflamed againſt him, and that he ſhould be ſlain by Jeſus Chriſt, or the Angel Michael armed with his Power. That 'tis thought this ſhall be on the Mount of Olives. That the Judgment ſhall not follow his Death immediately, but that God ſhould grant ſome time to thoſe that have been ſeduced, to Repent, and acknowledge their Tranſgreſſions.

At the end of theſe Works we find Rabanus's Verſes, in which he confeſſes, that his Writings are only Collections and Compoſures out of others Writings.

The Martyrology attributed to Rabanus, is very ſhort, and ſeems to be a Genuine Piece: It has already been publiſhed by Caniſius, [Antiq. Lect. Tom. VI.] We owe to the Jeſuit Brouverus the Collection of Rabanus's Poetry, where there is Sence and Wit, although it is every where full of Barbarous Terms, and have neither Elegance nor Politeneſs.

The Commentary upon the Rules of St. Benedict, attributed to Rabanus, belongs to the Abbot Smaragdus, as we have noted before.

The Liſt of ſome Latin words rendred into High Dutch Terms, and the Figures of the Letters or Characters of the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Tutonick Tongues, are taken from the Second Tome of the Hiſtory of Germany, compoſed by Goldaſtius, which are ſuch Ancient Pieces, that they may very well be attributed to Rabanus. Theſe are the whole Contents of the Six Tomes of this Author, Printed at Antwerp in the Year 1626. bound in Three Volumes in Folio. [And by the Care of Georgius Colvenerius, at Colen, 1627. Fol. Vol. 3.]

There have been ſince publiſhed ſome other Works of Rabanus. For without reckoning the three Letters of Predeſtination and Grace, written againſt Goteſcalcus, and publiſhed by Sirmondus [at Paris, 1647. Octavo.] of which we have ſpoken. M. Baluſius has given us in the laſt Edition of the Works of M. de Marca, two Treatiſes, which without doubt do belong to Rabanus, and which are moſt elaborate, uſeful, and beſt Written than any of his other Works. The firſt is Dedicated to Drogo Biſhop of Mets, which is concerning Suffragans. Opinions were then divided in the Gallican Church, about the Dignity and Power of Suffragans; ſome affirmed they were real Biſhops by their Ordination, and that they might ordain Prieſts and Deacons, Confirm, Conſecrate Altars, and do all the Office of a Biſhop: But others denied this, and affirmed that their Ordinations and Confirmations were null and void. Charles the Great conſulted Pope Leo the Third upon this Queſtion, who Anſwered, That he was certain that Suffragans had not this Power, and that all they had done belonging to Biſhops, was ipſo facto void, and that they ought to be deprived of any ſuch Power. The Council of Ratisbon followed the Popes Advice, and ordered them to remain in the rank of Prieſts.

This

This Deciſion did not hinder, but that there were yet Suffragans in many Dioceſſes, and that the Biſhops did ſtill allow them Privileges which belonged only to them. There has always been many Churches, and chiefly in Italy and Spain, where Suffragans have been eſteemed no more than Ordinary Prieſts, where they Re-ordained ſuch as were made Prieſts or Deacons by them, Confirmed anew thoſe they had been Confirmed by, and Conſecrated anew ſuch Churches as they had Conſecrated. Rabanus having underſtood this, undertook to defend the Suffragans. He ſays, that their Order had its Original from the times of the Apoſtles; and that they had ſuch Aſſiſtants who could Ordain and do the ſame Offices with them. He believes that St. Linus and St. Cletus were Suffragans to St. Peter and St. Paul in the Church of Rome. He accuſes thoſe Biſhops that undervalue Suffragans, and who look upon them no more than Ordinary Prieſts, of overthrowing the Order by their Ambition. He endeavours to prove by the Canons of the Councils of Ancyra and Antioch, that Suffragans might Ordain thro the permiſſion of their Biſhops, and that they have received the Epiſcopal Conſecration and Ordination. He aſſerts, that if Suffragans had not this Right, they would be of no uſe to the Biſhops as they now are: And upon what was objected againſt him, that it is ſaid in the Acts, that the Apoſtles themſelves had been ſent into Samaria, to beſtow the Holy Ghoſt on thoſe that were newly Baptiz'd; He anſwered, that the Apoſtles were ſent thither, becauſe there was then no Suffragan at Samaria but only the Deacon Philip, who had Baptiz'd them. The reſt of the Treatiſe contains ſome Admonitions to the Biſhops about Humility.

The other Treatiſe of Rabanus, Publiſht by M. Baluſius, is concerning the reſpect Children owe to their Parents, and Subjects to their Prince: It was writ upon the occaſion of the Conſpiracy of Lewis the Godlie's Children againſt their Father. Rabanus there quotes ſeveral places in the Scripture, which prove, that every one ought to obey his Prince and his Parents. He confirms theſe Truths by Examples, and ſhows in particular, that it was never permitted to a Subject, to take Arms againſt his Sovereign upon what account ſoever. He mightily condemns thoſe children who would deprive their Parents of their Eſtates. He ſpeaks againſt unjuſt and raſh Judgments, openly blaming that which the Biſhops pronounc't againſt Lewis the Godly. He ſhows plainly that Clergymen ought not to meddle with Secular or Temporal Affairs. He maintains, that none can Condemn or put to publick Penance, a Sinner that accuſes himſelf, unleſs he be otherwiſe Convicted. He adds, that thoſe that are ſorry for their Sins and are converted, deſerve forgivneſs. At laſt addreſſing himſelf to the Emperour, he exhorts him to deſpiſe the falſe Judgments given againſt him; and advertiſes him, that he may nevertheleſs with good Works * merit Heaven. He Counſels him, not to be ſurprized at the attempts of his Enemies, but to be encourag'd by the truth of the Goſpel, and to believe in his Judge and his King, who has given him a Crown on Earth, and promiſed him one in Heaven. He tells him, that if the Conſpiracy of his Enemies have done him any wrong he ſhould trouble himſelf but little about it, but be thankful to his Defender and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who afflicts nd chaſtizes all thoſe that he loves. He exhorts him in fine, not to ſeek after any Revenge, but heartily to forgive all ſuch as have offended him. This Treatiſe is Elegant and well Written.

M. Baluſius, has alſo Publiſhed in the firſt Tome of his Miſcellaneous Works, his Treatiſe about the account of Time, directed to Macarius. Rabanus writ this when he was a private Monk, in the year 820. This Book is written by way of Queſtions and Anſwers. It treats of all that relates to the Kalendar; as Days, Months, Years, Epacts, Cycles and Eaſter. Theſe Matters, tho they be very obſcure, are here treated of with a great deal of Exactneſs and Method.

* Merit Pardon—Heaven] Under the word merit, which is often met with in the Fathers, The Church of Rome, which gentrally coaches her new and falſe Doctrines, under old Names, would have us underſtand a Merit ex condigno, whereby we deſerve Heaven as a juſt reward of our Works; whereas they mean a Merit of impetration, as a conditional qualification for happineſs.

The ſame M. Baluſius hath put out in another of his Works, (viz. his Collection of ſome ancient Acts, which he has put at the end of his Capitularies) a Letter of Rabanus's to Regenbaldus, Suffragan of Mayence, about ſome Queſtions, that Regenbaldus had propounded to him, about ſeveral caſes. The firſt is concerning a Perſon who having beaten his Wife, had cauſed her to bring forth a dead Child. He anſwers, he ought to be dealt with as a Man-ſlayer. The ſecond is about a Perſon, who having been bit by a Dog, applyed immediately ſome of his Liver to the Wound, as moſt likely to heal it. He excuſes him that did this through Ignorance; but he ſays, he ought to be forwarn'd of committing the like again. The third is concerning ſuch as are guilty of the Sin of Beſtiality. He condemns them to ſuffer the Puniſhments ſpecified in the ancient Canons. The fourth is, Whether it be lawful to eat the Calves brought forth by Cows polluted with the Abominations of Men? He Anſwers, that that is not forbid to his knowledge. The fifth is concerning the Penance of thoſe that have voluntarily, involuntarily, or otherwiſe killed their Parents and other Relations. He refers theſe to what has been ſaid about Homicides. In the Concluſion he tells this Suffragan, that he may moderate Canonical Puniſhments with Prudence and Diſcretion.

There is at the end of the eight Volume of Councils, in the laſt Edition, another Letter of Rabanus's to the ſame Reginbold or Reginbald, about other queſtions of like nature with the former. The firſt is concerning thoſe that carry away and ſell Chriſtians to Pagans. He Anſwers, that they ought to be ſubjected to the Penance for Homicides. The ſecond is about Infants, who are ſtifled by lying with their Fathers and Mothers. He ſays, that although theſe Children came by their Death, contrary to the knowledge of them that were the cauſe of it; nevertheleſs they ought not to be exempt from doing ſome Penance; and if they knew it, they ought to have been puniſht as Homicides. The third is about the degrees of Conſanguinity, within which it is forbid to Marry. He ſends him upon this queſtion, the letter which he writ to Humbert. The fourth is concerning the Sins of Fornication or Adultery amongſt Relations; Rabanus hereupon quotes divers Canons. The fifth is, whether it be lawful to Pray for a dead Slave, who had run away from his Maſter. Rabanus ſays, that we ought not to refuſe to Pray for him, if he had committed no other Crime; but withal, that we ought to admoniſh other Slaves not to commit the like. The ſixth is concerning a Man, who pleading to be a Prieſt, althô he was none, had Adminiſtred the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Rabanus ſays, it ought not to be reiterated, if it was Conferred in the Name of the Holy Trinity. The laſt is about thoſe that eat Fleſh in Lent, and who ſwear by Relicks. Rabanus anſwers, that they do very ill, and that they ought to be made to do Penance for their Crime.

Walafridus Strabo.

Walafridus Strabo, (ſo called as ſome think, becauſe he was Squint-Ey'd) a Monk of Fulda, a Scholar of Rabanus; afterwards Dean of St. Gallus, and Abbot of Richenou; followed and imitated his Maſter, not only in Compoſing a Gloſſe upon the whole Bible, Collected principally out of his Commentaries: but alſo in making a Treatiſe about the Beginning and Progreſs of Divine Worſhip, Dedicated to Reginbert, in which he explains particularly what relates to the Ceremonies of the Church. This Work has been Printed in the Collections of Writers concerning Divine Offices, [by Cochlæus at Mentz, 1549. and Hittorpius at Paris, 1610.] and alſo in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. XV.] The principal Points which he handles in this Book are theſe:

He ſays about the Original of Altars and Temples, that Noah, Abraham and Iſaac, erected them in Honour of God. That Moſes was the firſt that Built a Tabernacle for the People to Worſhip God in. That Solomon afterwards Built a Temple, which was preſerved a great while by the Jews. That Pagans, and Authors of falſe Religions, have imitated in this the Worſhip of the True, in Honouring Devils and Falſe Gods with the like Ceremonies. That when Chriſtians, who are the true Worſhippers of God in Spirit and Truth, began to ſet up Places for their Worſhip, they always ſought out pure places, diſtant from the noiſe and hubbub of the World; where they might quietly offer God their Prayers, Celebrate the Holy Myſteries, and Comfort one another. That they have ſometimes made uſe of their houſes for that purpoſe, but the number of them encreaſing, they were forced to build Churches. That oftentimes to avoid Perſecution, they have met together in Caves, Caverns, Church-yards, and other private places; but at length, Religion being fully eſtabliſht, they Built new Churches, and turn'd the Temples of their Falſe Gods, into thoſe of the True. That they then did not much mind in what Scituation their Churches were built, although the common cuſtom has been ſince, to turn towards the Eaſt to Pray. That at firſt they had no Signal to call them to the Aſſemblies. That ſome were led thither by their Devotion, others had notice of the Day and Hour at their laſt Meeting, and others by reading it upon certain Tables, ſet up in their Aſſemblies for that purpoſe. That they afterwards made uſe of an Horn and Trumpet, and at laſt of Bells, the larger of which are called Campanæ, and the leſſer Nolæ; ſo named from the Town of Nola, where they were firſt uſed. Having explained the names of Church, Temple, Baſilick, and their parts, together with the Barbarous name of the Oſticon, he goes on to Diſcourſe of Images, the Abſtracts of which, I ſhall for ſome reaſons forbear to ſet down here.

He proves afterwards, that Altars ought to be Conſecrated, and ſo paſſes from the material parts of Churches, to what is to be done in them. He ſays, that Praiſes ought there to be Sung to God, the Goſpel Preacht, and Baptiſm Adminiſtred. That a great deal of Care ought to be taken, to keep them from Profane uſes. That Prayers there ought to be ſhort and pure, and accompany'd with Tears; and that they ought to proceed from Hearts worthy to be the Habitation of God, who loves the Offerings of Virtues, better then any Corporeal Gifts. That nevertheleſs God accepted the Oblations of the Patriarchs, and the Sacrifices of the Jews, till ſuch time as Chriſt, which they repreſented, was come. That he by his coming, has cauſed all Sacrifices to ceaſe, and has eſtabliſhed new Myſteries, having given the Sacrament of his Body and Blood to his Diſciples; and commanded them at the ſame time to Celebrate it in Commemoration of his Paſſion. That he has choſen for this Myſtery, the Species of Bread and Wine, to ſignify the Union betwixt the Head and its Members; and that Water is mixt with the Wine, to ſhew, that the People ought not to be ſeparated from Jeſus Chriſt. That theſe Myſteries are called Sacraments, becauſe of the Secret Virtue, by which they work our Sanctification. That it is for this reaſon, that ſuch as ceaſe to be Members of Jeſus Chriſt, by committing Capital Crimes, are excluded from theſe Sacraments, for fear that if they ſhould approach them, they ſhould be made worſe, or be Corporally puniſht: And to the end, that the terrour of this Separation might engage them to Repentance; he takes notice, that heretofore other things than Bread and Wine were offered upon the Altar; and that in ſome places at Eaſter, they Sacrific'd a Lamb, which was laid upon the Altar, or the ſide of it, and which they afterwards eat; but he altogether diſapproves of this Practice. He afterwards ſhews there was great reaſon, that the Euchariſt ſhould be received in Lent.

As to what relates to frequent Communion, he obſerves, that ſome have thought it enough to Communicate once a year, and that others Communicated every Sunday, and many upon all Holy-days; that afterwards they added ſome ſolemn days for Faſting. He approves of their Practice, that Communicate and Say Maſs every day, provided they be free from great Sins. He adds alſo, that there were ſome Prieſts that would not Celebrate Maſs above once a day, and that there were others, who believed themſelves obliged to ſay it three or four times; for according to the Church of Rome, there are ſometimes two or three Maſſes appointed for one day, as for Chriſtmas-day, and ſome Feaſts of Saints. He gives every Prieſt the liberty of uſing them as they think fit, provided they don't condemn each others Practice. As to the Prayers of the Maſs, he ſays, that no body knows by whom they were eſtabliſhed, as they now are; and that the Apoſtles Celebrated it, after a plainer and most unaffected manner: Quod nunc Agimus multiplici Orationum, Lectionum, Cantilenarum, & Consecrationum Officio, totum hoc Apostoli, & post ipsos proximi (ut creditur) Orationibus & Commemoratione Passionis Dominicæ, sicut ipse præcepit, Agebant simpliciter. That the Ancients say, that they did, as we do now on Holy [or Good] Friday; and that after they had repeated the Lord's Prayer, and made Commemoration of Christ's Passion, they received the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. That afterwards the Offices of the Church were enlarged, as well as the Ceremonies. That the Romans added to what they received from St. Peter, what else they thought fit. That their usage was admired by so many People, because they were a famous Nation, and were taught by St. Peter himself, the Head of the Apostles; and because there never was a Church in the World so free from Heresies. That St. Ambrose compos'd a Form of Prayer for his Church, and for the Churches of Liguria. He fixes upon the Roman Order, and explains the parts of it, taking notice of the Popes, to whom some attribute the Institution of them. He wishes, that they would Communicate at every Mass; and observes, that the time of Communion is before the Prayer, which is said at the end of the Mass, in which they commonly Pray for those that have Communicated. And although he acknowledges, that Priests may Offer and Communicate alone; nevertheless he says, Illam esse legitimam Missam cui interfunt Sacerdos, Respondens, Offerens & Communicans. As to the hour of the Mass, he observes it is different, according as the Solemnities of the day will permit; that sometime it is before Noon, sometimes towards three a Clock in the After-noon, sometimes in the Evening, and sometimes at Night, but never before nine a Clock in the Morning. He speaks afterwards of Holy Vessels and Priests Habits. He makes several remarks upon the Hours of Divine Service, of which these are some of the most considerable. That the Irish kneeled down often; that the Distribution of the Psalms into many parts of the Service, was not begun before the time of Theodosius. That about the same time they began to sing Hymns in the Church of Milan, and to Celebrate Vigils. That St. Ignatius goes for the Institutor of Anthems. That the name of Hymns may be given to all Psalms of Praise, altho they be not in Verse. That there are a great many Churches, where they are never Sung in Verse. That St. Ambrose was not the Author of them all. That the Gloria Patri is differently expreſt. That the Spaniards Sing it thus; Gloria & Honor Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto in sæcula sæculorum, Amen. And the Grecians, Gloria Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto, & nunc & semper, & in sæcula sæculorum, Amen. That the Latins add, Sicut erat in Principio. That 'tis thought to be the Council of Nice that Instituted this Hymn, That many put it at the end of those Hymns which they divide into a great many parts, as those which follow the Service of St. Benedict. That the Romans use it not so often in their Psalms, as they do in their Responses: That all the Offices begin with, Deus in Adjutorium, except that for the dead, and that for the Holy Week, [or Week before Easter]. That the Romans still Sing the Psalms, according to the Edition of the Septuagint, but the French and some of the Germans, according to the Correction of St. Jerome; that Stephen the III. coming into France, introduced the Roman way of Singing there.

Strabo, after having finisht what related to the Divine Service and its several parts, treats of the Administration of Baptism. He says, That the Ceremonies of Baptism have been encreased by little and little, that the Unction of Chrism was added to it, which no body doubts but 'twas taken from the Old Law. That from the very first, Confirmation was Administred by Imposition of Hands, which was then always Conferr'd by the Bishops, and so is still. That the solemn times of Administring Baptism, are Easter and Whitsuntide, that some have added Christmas-day and the Epiphany. That in case of necessity Persons may be Baptized at any time. That they may be Baptized by Dipping or Sprinkling, Plunging the Infant in the Water once or thrice. That at the beginning of the Church, Baptizing of Adult Persons was more frequent; because that those which were Converted, were capable of being instructed in the Principles of Religion, and in answering for themselves. That as for Infants, they had Godfathers and Godmothers to answer in their Names, who are obliged to put them in mind, when they come to have the use of their Reason, of the Promise, that they have made for them.

He passes afterwards to Tithe's, and shews that they ought to be given to the Clergy, who must divide them into four parts, whereof one is for the Bishop, another for the Clerk, a third for the Poor, and the last reserved for the Buildings of the Church. He does not forget to speak of the Litanies or Processions, used in the days of Rogations, establish'd by Mamertus; but he observes, that some keep them between Easter end Whitsuntide, according to the Council of Orleans; but the Spaniards defer them till after Whitsuntide, and others to December. He adds, that the name of Litany does not only signifie, that Prayer by which the Saints are Invoked, but also every sort of Prayer, by which we ask any favour of God. He speaks afterwards of the Sprinkling of the Holy Water, of the Consecrating of Wax-Candles, and ends with an enumeration of the several Orders of Clergy, which he compares to Civil Employments. These are the several Orders of the Clergy. The Supreme Bishop who enjoys the See of Rome, and holds the place of St. Peter, being rais'd to the Dignity of Head of the Church. The Patriarchs of other Churches, who are equal in Dignity to the See of Rome, which are of Antioch in Asia, and Alexandria in Africa; besides these three Patriarchs, there are many others which are Inferiour to them [as the Patriarchs of Constantinople and Ephesus]. The Arch-Bishops are above the Metropolitans, to whom succeed in order the Metropolitans, Bishops, Abbots, Great Chaplains, Little Chaplains, Suffragans, Priests that are possessed of Churches where they Administer Baptism, and Priests who have the Government of private Chappels, pels, Arch-Prieſts that have the charge over Canons, Arch-Deacons who have care of the Biſhop's Family. Then Deacons, Sub-Deacons, Exorciſts, Porters, Acolythus's, Readers, and Singing-men. This is an exact Abridgment of this Work of Walafridus Strabo, which treats of Matters very rationally. He ſeems to have read a great deal. He often quotes the falſe Decretals of the Popes, and ſometimes Cites Apocryphal Hiſtories. There is another ſmall Treatiſe of this Author's, upon the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and a great deal of Poetry, Publiſht by Caniſius [Antiq. Lec. Tom. 6.] The Lives and Miracles of St. Gallus and Othmarus, Publiſht by Surius [Oct. 16. & Nov. 16.] The Life of Blainaus Abbot of Iſi, and the Viſions of St. Wittinus in Sæc. Benedict. IV. of Father Mabillon. Walafridus dyed in the year 849.

CHAP. XIV.

Such Orders and Conſtitutions relating to a Monaſtick Life, as were made by the Authors of this Age.

Benedict, Abbot of Aniana.

Benedict, Native of Languedoc, Son of Aigulphus, Earl of Maguelone, having paſt ſome time at the Court of Charles the Great, retired into the Abbey of St. Sequanus, in the Dioceſs of Langres. The Abbot of this Monaſtery being dead, they would have choſen him in his room, but he refuſed it, and returned to Languedoc, where he Erected near the River Aniana a Monaſtery, which afterwards became very conſiderable. The Reputation of this Holy Abbot was ſo great, that he was choſen to Govern divers Monaſteries, and to effect a Reformation in all the Abbies of France. Being Invited to the Court of Lewis the Godly, he Built the Monaſtery of Indus, near Aix-la-Chapelle; he was preſent at the Council held in 817. in that City, and framed Statutes for the Monks. He dyed in his Monaſtery of Indus in the year 821. He has made a Collection of all the Rules and Orders of Monks, both of the Eaſt and the Weſt; and another Work, in which he ſhews the Conformity of other Orders with that of St Benedict. The firſt is Entituled Codex Regularum, i. e. a Book of Rules; and the ſecond, Concordia Regularum, or an Harmony of Rules. The firſt has been Publiſht at Rome by Holſtenius [1661] and ſince Printed at Paris in Quarto, in the year 1663. by Billaine. And the ſecond Publiſht by Father Menardus, and Printed at Paris in 1648. At the end of the firſt, there is a Collection of Works of Fathers, proper for Monks. It is Compoſed out of the Pious Treatiſes of St. Athanaſius, St. Baſil, Evagrius and Fauſtus; alſo out of other Writings about a Monaſtick Life. There is alſo another Collection of Paſſages of the Fathers, which alſo bears the name of Benedict of Aniana, Compoſed of Extracts, out of the Works of St. Jerome, St. Auſtin, St. Ephraim, St. Ceſarius, Caſſian, St. Fulgentius, &c. There are alſo ſome other ſmall Treatiſes of this Abbot, as a Penetential printed in the Addition of Capitularies [by M. Baluſius]. A Confeſſion of Faith, which is to be ſeen no where but in Manuſcripts, and a few Letters.

Ardo Smaragdus.

Ardo Smaragdus, a Scholar of St. Benedict of Aniana, and a Monk of his Monaſtery, has written the life of his Maſter, Publiſht by Father Menard, and inſerted in the firſt Tome of F. Mabillon's Sæc. Benedict. IV.

Smaragdus.

We ought not to Confound another Smaragdus with the foregoing. This was Abbot of St. Michael, in Lorraine; he taught human Learning to his Society, as it appears by his Commentaries upon Donatus, and other Profane Authors. He wrote a Book concerning the Duty of a Prince, under the Title of Via Regia, i. e. The King's Way, which he Dedicated to Lewis the Godly, who was made King of Aquitain, by his Father Charles the Great. He has alſo written Sermons upon the Epiſtles and Goſpels, throughout the whole year, Collected for the moſt part out of the Fathers: Likewiſe a little Treatiſe for Inſtruction of Monks, Entituled Diadema Monachorum, or Monk's Crown, and a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict, which he explains and confirms in many places by other Rules. Charles the Great made uſe of him to Write to Pope Leo, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. And he alſo writ the Acts of the Conference held at Rome, in the year 809. and upon the ſame Subject. The Book Entituled, The way of Kings, was Publiſh'd in the fifth Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium. His Sermons were Printed at Frankfort, in the year 1536. The Monk's Crown at Antwerp, in 1540. And the Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict, is Publiſhed amongſt the Works of Rabanus, Printed at Colen, in the year 1625. (where it was Printed before in 1575.)

Hildemarus.

Hildemarus a French Monk, called into Italy about the year 830. by Rampertus Biſhop of Breſſe, who committed to him and Leutgrius, the care of Rebuilding the Church of St. Fauſtinus and St. Jovitus. He has written a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict. This Work has never yet appeared in Print. Some have attributed it to Paul the Deacon, but it is none of his, and it ought to be reſtored, according to the Manuſcript of Dijon, to Hildemarus. There is alſo in the thirty eight Chapter, a Letter writ by Hildemarus to Urſus Biſhop of Beneventum. This Author dyed in the year 840.

We

We may also place amongst those Authors that have written concerning Monastical Discipline, Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, whose Letters contain divers Laws and Instructions for a Monastical Life. He was Born about the beginning of the Ninth Century. He was certainly of the Province of Sens, and of a very considerable Family. He was brought up to Learning, and was admitted betimes into the Abby of Ferrara, where he was soon after Profest under Aldricus, who was then Abbot, and afterward Arch-Bishop of Sens. He was sent into Germany to the Abby of Fulda, there to Study the Holy Scriptures under the famous Rabanus, who at his desire, Compos'd his Commentaries upon the Epistles of St. Paul. Lupus, who was then but Deacon, made great Progress in Ecclesiastical Knowledge, under so able a Master, and returned to France with great Reputation, in the year 830. He was presented to Lewis the Godly, by the Empress Judith, and stayed some time at Court, in hopes of obtaining some Abbey. It was at this time that he receiv'd the Order of Priesthood: Afterwards he was chosen by Charles the Bald, to supply the place of Odo Abbot of Ferrara, whom this Prince resolv'd to deprive of his Monastery, because he had favoured the Party of Lotharius. Being come thither by the King's Order, he was received for Abbot in November 842. and drove out Odo from the Abbey in the year 844. He assisted at the Council of Verneuil, and was ordered to compile the Canons. He assisted at divers other Assemblies of Bishops, and was sent to Pope Leo the IV. By Charles the Bald. He assisted at the Council of Soissons in the year 853. and lived in great Reputation for Knowledge and Piety, till the 862. Lupus Abbot of Ferrara.

There has been a Collection made of 130 Letters of this Abbot's, upon different Subjects. There are divers upon the difficulties of Grammar, and other Civil Matters; but there are some which relate to Ecclesiastical Affairs, and which treat of some points of Doctrine, Discipline, and Morality.

The fourth is a very Christian Consolation to Eginhardus, upon the death of his Wife, who was Daughter to Charles the Great. This is an Answer to the third Letter of Eginhardus, written to him; in which he declared, that he was not capable of Comfort under his Loss. He says, That it afflicted him most, that the hopes he had put in the Intercessions and Prayers of the Martyrs were all in vain. Lupus Answers him in that point, that his Vows and Prayers, that have not been heard for a Temporal Good, will serve to procure him Eternal Life; and that he does not in the least doubt, but that this Death will be Advantagious both to him and his Wife; because it was more convenient that he should die last, it being likely that he had the greatest Strength to bear this Affliction, and to resist the troubles that are suffered in the World: That oftentimes God does not grant us what we ask, but what is most fitting and convenient for us. That God perhaps had taken away his Wife, to reconcile the Division that was in his Heart, between Her and the Lord, and to Unite all his Love in this only Object. He tells him at length, that tho it be seemingly out of his Power to end his Grief, yet he ought to have recourse to the Goodness and Mercy of God, and resign himself entirely to this Sovereign Physician, who easily heals those Wounds that Men think most Incurable. Then he Exhorts him, to ask of God Eternal Happiness for his Wife; and for himself Perseverance in good Works, growth in a Spiritual Life, and Christian Consolation. About the end he speaks of a Book of Eginhard's, upon the Adoration of the Cross, and thanks him for Dedicating it to him. We have lost this Work.

In the Eleventh Letter he Petitions Lotharius, in the Name of the Monks of Ferrara, to let them enjoy the Revenue of the Monastery of St. Josse, upon the Sea, which Charles the Great had given to Alcuin, and to the Monks of Ferrara, to maintain Pilgrims, and relieve their Necessities. Rhodingus obtain'd it of Lotharius by Surprize: He begs of him to restore it; and conjures him to it by the respect he ows to the Holy Virgin, St. Peter and St. Paul, through whose Intercession they daily pray God for his Health and Salvation.

In the twelfth, writ to Pardulus Bishop of Laon; he desires this Bishop to use his Interest with the King, in favour of the Monks, of the Monastery of St. Columbus of Sens, who were going to Court, to recover the Privilege of Exemption, which had been granted them by the Arch-Bishop of Sens, and by the Kings. M. Baluzius observes upon this Letter, that the Kings were then able to Exempt Abbies from ordinary Jurisdiction. That that of St. Columbus had been put under the Jurisdiction of Jeremy Arch-Bishop of Sens, by Lewis the Godly, and afterwards taken from him. That after this it lost its Liberty again, under Charles the Bald, but soon recovered it again; as it appear'd, by a Charter from this Charles, dated the 13th of November, 847. which serves to fix the Date of this Letter. M. Baluzius adds also many other Examples to show, that the Exemptions of the Monasteries of France, were Granted and Settled by the Authority of Kings, who took them into their Care, Management and Protection, sub tuitione.

It appears by Lupus's 18th Letter, that he was charged with care of the Abbey of St. Amandus, without ever seeking it: That he was glad when he was rid of it; and that he was sent to a General Assembly called by the King, near Paris.

In the 19th, Lupus being informed of the Poverty of a Monastery, of the Dioces of Auxerre, by a Monk of the same Monastery, who was come into his; gave Heribald Bishop of Auxerre notice of it, and desired him to remedy it.

The 20th, is about some difficulties of Grammar; he takes notice towards the end of a very remarkable thing, which was, that Probus a Priest of Maience had begun a Book, in which he placed Cicero, Virgil and Others, that he believ'd to have lived well, amongst the number of the Elect; for fear it should be said, That Jesus Christ had unprofitably shed his Blood, and did nothing when he was in Hell. These are his Words, An certè inchoatam Satyram, quod magis existimo, Scribens Ciceronem & Virgi- lium, Cæteròſq; opinione ejus probatiſſimos viros, in Electorum Collegium admittat, ne fruſtrà Dominus ſanguinem fuderit, & in Inferno otium triverit. It is to be thought, that this Probus did not ſpeak this ſeriouſly, as you will be convinced, if you pleaſe to conſult M. Baluſius's Notes upon it.

The 21ſt Epiſtle of this Lupus's is an Excuſe to Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, that he had Accuſed Agus his Kinſman of having wrong'd the Eſtate that his Monaſtery had in his Dioceſs. He makes an Apology alſo for taking his Predeceſſor Odo's place. The 23d, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28th, are ſome Letters of this Odo about Affairs relating to his Monaſtery.

The 29th Letter, dedicated to Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, is very remarkable. Two Prieſts of this Dioceſs, one call'd Adegarius, and the other Baudrius, having a deſign to turn Monks, had deſired of the Archbiſhop that they might leave their Churches or Cures, titulos, to enter into the Order of S. Benedict. Wenilo anſwer'd them, That he would not give them this permiſſion, unleſs Lupus, into whoſe Monaſtery they were to be admitted, would ſatisfie him it might be done regularly and lawfully. Lupus writ him word, That he had never heard it queſtion'd; and that without doubt it might be done. That Jeſus Chriſt having taught that the perfection of a Chriſtian Life conſiſts in quitting all, and leaving the World, Clergy-men ſure ought not to be hindred embracing that perfection which Jeſus Chriſt propoſed even to Lay-men. Hereupon he makes a ſtrong Objection, and anſwers it. You will object perhaps, ſays he, that as none are allow'd to break the carnal Union of Marriage, unleſs it be for Fornication; ſo none are permitted to quit the Paſtoral Charge, which they have once undertaken, as long as they are able to labour for the edification and ſalvation of their Flock. This is true, anſwers he, unleſs he that has eſtabliſh'd the Marriage does break it himſelf, or that he that has charg'd us with the Government of others, does ſecretly command us to quit it. For he that has forbidden any man to put aſunder thoſe whom he has joyn'd together, the ſame great God hath made this ſeparation himſelf when he has pleas'd, becauſe he is God. For we have many Examples of vertuous Perſons of both Sexes, that have quitted all carnal Commerce to ſerve the Lord in holy places. He adds, that there has ſcarce been any Monaſtery whereinto ſome Prieſts have not retired. He quotes amongſt the reſt one of his Predeceſſors, an Abbot of Ferrara, call'd Frigulphus, who had quitted the Habit of Canon, to take upon him the Profeſſion of a Monk. He ſays that Aldricus, the Predeceſſor of Wenilo had reſolv'd before his death to leave his Archbiſhoprick and retire into a Monaſtery. That it is not to be thought that theſe great men were ignorant of the Canons and Rules of the Church. That the Apoſtles and Clergy of the Primitive Church had in ſome meaſure practis'd a Monaſtical Life, by putting their Goods in Common. That there may be bad Monks among them, but that he ought to have Epiſcopal Compaſſion for them. And, in fine, that there is no ſurer way to Salvation, than by entring into that religious Order preſcrib'd by St. Benedict. Whoſe Conſtitution, ſo much commended and approved by S. Gregory the Great, ſhows that we may, and we ought to receive Prieſts into our Monaſteries, ſince he allows them to enter, and the Abbot to receive them, altho' with greater difficulty and precaution than others. Then he entreats Wenilo to allow theſe two Prieſts that Liberty they had deſired. This Letter teaches us, firſt, That Prieſts, who had Eccleſiaſtical Charges, ought not to quit them to become Monks, without leave of their Biſhop. And M. Baluſius confirms this in his Annotations by an Example of a like permiſſion requeſted and granted by Arnoldus Biſhop of Liſieux. Secondly, That Biſhops might give this permiſſion, or refuſe it. Thirdly, That Curates were ſo cloſely link'd to their Churches, that it was not in their power to leave them, nor in the Biſhops to take them away from them at their pleaſure; which M. Baluſius confirms in his Notes by divers Canons and very curious Remarks.

The 30th, directed to Groteſcalcus, contains an Explanation of a Paſſage of S. Auſtin concerning Happineſs. He ſhows that this Saint believed, That God would make himſelf clearly known to the Bleſſed, and that this knowledge would engage them inviolably to him. That this knowledge of the Divine Subſtance belong'd only to the Soul, but that the Eyes of the Body ſhould perceive his preſence by the admirable Effects it ſhould work upon the Creatures. Thus he expounds what St. Auſtin ſays, That God ſhall be ſeen by the Eyes of the Body. He adviſes Groteſcalcus not to perplex his mind with ſuch Queſtions, for fear they make him uncapable of underſtanding teaching Matters of better uſe.

The 35th Letter contains an handſome Reflection on the ſtudy of good Literature. He obſerves that it ought to be joyn'd with the ſtudy of Wiſdom and Vertue. That if we labour to correct the Defects of the Tongue, we ought not to be leſs diligent to reform the Vices of our Manners. That if one has a great deal of care to poliſh his Diſcourſe, he ought to apply himſelf more vigorouſly to acquire Vertue and Goodneſs. He exhorts him to whom he writes, to live like a Chriſtian in whatever Condition he engages in, and to make often and ſerious Reflections on his Duty towards God.

In the 42d and 43d Letters written to Hincmarus, he employs his Intereſt with Charles the Bald, to get the Revenue of S. Joſſe reſtored to him, making uſe of the Poverty of his Monaſtery to perſwade him to it. He alſo recommends it to King Charles in the 45th Letter, and humbly ſhews him, That for fifteen years, or thereabouts, ſeventy two Monks of his Monaſtery, that prayed continually for his Health and Proſperity, had endured great want of Habits, Peaſe and Fiſh, (M. Baluſius concludes from hence that they eat no Fleſh) and that they could not relieve the Poor and Pilgrims. He entreats him to conſider ſeriouſly upon their Wants, and to beſtow ſome Charity upon them. He mentions in the 42d Letter, a Vow that Charles had made by Hincmarus's ſolicitations, in the Church of S. Denis. He alſo there tells us that he compiled the Canons of the Council of Verneuil.

In the 51ſt Letter he writes to his Monks that he had ſome hopes to recover the Revenue of S. Joſſe. Where you may meet with this fine thought, That the Abbot ought to have the Charge and Government of the Revenues of the Monaſtery, but the enjoyment of them only in common with the other Monks.

In

In the 53d Epiſtle he preſſes King Charles vigorouſly to reſtore him this Revenue; and the better to engage him to it, he informs him, That his ancient Monks have obſerved, and heard of their Predeceſſours, that all that have ever done any conſiderable damage or wrong to their Monaſtery, have been puniſh'd either by the loſs of their Eſtates, their Health or their Lives. He exhorts him to perform the Vows he has made; and moreover, threatens him with the Judgments of God if he doth not.

In the 55th Letter to Marcuadus Abbot of Provins, he entreats this Abbot to come to Court to aſſiſt him in obtaining the Reſtitution of the Revenue of S. Joſſe. He informs him, that he came thither the laſt of November, and has continued there with a great deal of expence and trouble. That the King endeavours to elude his Demands, and always delays him, becauſe that Odulphus, (who then was poſſeſt of St. Joſſe) was abſent and ſick, as he was inform'd, but not very grievouſly (ſays he) ſo that this ſickneſs may ſerve to humble and correct him: Nor ſo dangerouſly as to be the cauſe of his death, for which he ſhould be ſorry, becauſe 'tis certain he would be damn'd if he ſhould die, in the unjuſt poſſeſſion of the Revenue of the Church. At length Lupus, after many delays and put offs obtain'd the Reſtitution of the Revenue of S. Joſſe, as it appears by the 61ſt and 62d Letters. The 64th Letter is an Inſtruction to King Charles concerning his duty.

The 79th contains an Extract of a Letter written to Hincmarus, by which he recommends his Kinſman Hilmeradus to him, who was named by the King to be Biſhop of Amiens; affirming, that tho' he had not much Learning, yet he might be made ſerviceable to the Church by following his directions. And that if he was not well fitted for Teaching the Word of God, yet he might do Works that might ſave him, and thoſe that ſhould imitate him. M. Baluſius in his Notes declares himſelf of a different Opinion with his Author, and ſays, That in this he has hearkned more to the Sentiments of Nature, than the Principles of Reaſon.

The 81ſt Letter is written in the name of Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens and Count Girard, who were ſent to Amolo Archbiſhop of Lions, by the King's Orders, to command him to Ordain Bernus Biſhop of Autun. They repreſent to him, That 'twas not a new thing for the King to make Courtiers Biſhops of the principal Churches. That Pepin had had in the like Caſe the Conſent of Pope Zachary in a Synod, where Boniface Biſhop of Mayence aſſiſted. They alſo deſired the ſame thing of him for Godeſeldus, named by the King Biſhop of Chalons.

The 82d Letter is written to Wenilo in favour of a Prieſt Accuſed and Suſpended from the Exerciſe of his Function. Lupus deſires Wenilo to give him liberty to exerciſe his Duty, till a Synod were call'd, in which he hoped to clear himſelf of the Charge brought againſt him.

The 84th is a Synodical Epiſtle of a Council held in the Year 849, conſiſting of the Metropolitans of Tours, Rheins, Rouen, and about twenty of their Suffragans, whoſe names are ſet down at the beginning of this Letter, directed to Nomenoius Duke of Breton, about the Diſorders he had committed. They reprove and blame him for having laid waſte the Lands belonging to the Chriſtians, for having deſtroy'd, pillag'd, and burnt ſeveral Churches, together with the Reliques of Saints, for ſeizing upon the Revenues of the Church, which are the Vows of the Faithful, the Satisfaction of Sins, and the Patrimony of the Poor, for having taken away rich Mens Eſtates, and kill'd and enſlaved a great number of Chriſtians. Of driving the Biſhops from their Churches, and robbing them of their Goods, &c. But principally for having ſlighted the many Letters of Leo the 4th, Succeſſor to S. Peter, to whom God hath given Supreme Power over all the Church. Of having entertained Lambert Count of Nantes, a Rebel againſt the King. They exhort him to do Penance, and to ſatisfie that which the Pope write to him about. And finally, they declared thoſe Excommunicate that ſhall Communicate with Lambert.

The 93d is an Inſtruction to King Charles, to whom he propoſes Trajan and Theodoſius, as two Patterns worthy of his Imitation.

In the 94th he ſhows, That Afflictions and Sufferings are advantageous to good men.

The 98th is a Letter written in the name of the Cathedral Church of Paris, of the Abbies of S. German, S. Dennis, S. Geneva, S. Maurus des Foſſez, and other Monaſteries, to Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Sens, and to the other Biſhops of that Province, acquainting them that after the death of their Biſhop Ercanradus, they had choſen Æneas, who had been nam'd to them by King Charles, whom they deſired them to Ordain as ſoon as they could. This Letter is followed by an Anſwer written in the name of the Biſhop of Sens and his Suffragans, teſtifying their approbation of their Election of Æneas.

The 100 Letter is an Admonition to the People, wherein they are exhorted to do Penance, to avoid Rebellions and Factions, to embrace a Peace, to forbear Robberies and Plunder, to think of nothing but Publick Good, and to live in Union with one another.

The 101ſt is a Letter of Recommendation, written in the name of Wenilo, to the Biſhops of France and Italy, in favour of two Monks of Ferrara, who went to Rome, deſiring them to afford them an Hoſpitable Reception by the way. This is followed by a Letter written in the name of Lupus upon the ſame account.

By the 103d Letter he recommends theſe two Monks to Pope Benedict, to whom he ſent them. He entreats him to Inſtruct them in the Cuſtoms of the Church of Rome, and to ſend him the Commentaries of S. Jerom upon Jeremiah, from the fixth Book to the end, being not able to find them any where in France. He adds to this, the Book of Cicero's Book of Oratory, Quintilian's Inſtitutions, and Donatus's Commentaries upon Terence, &c.

In

In the 105th he promiſes to receive and deal mercifully with a Monk that had quitted his Habit and Order, provided he would amend, and behave himſelf better for the future.

In the 108th he thanks Lotharius for ſending him this converted Monk. And excuſes himſelf for not letting him be his Secretary, becauſe there was no likelyhood that a Monk, who had not all imaginable diligence, would ever be able to do his duty in the midſt of the affairs and hurries of the World. Quoniam propoſitum noſtrum vix mediocriter intrà Clauſtra Monaſterii cuſtoditur, ne dum inter tumultus Mundanos à quolibet præſertim non ſatis cauto valeat adimpleri. The following Letter is alſo about the return of this Monk. It is to be noted that Lupus ſays in the firſt Letter upon this Subject, that he could not receive him without the conſent of his Brethren.

In the 112th Letter Lupus condemns thoſe that in commending Virginity blame Marriage.

In the 124th he clears himſelf to Wenilo of the Accuſation that Erard had preferred againſt him in the Synod of Savoniers.

The 128th and 129th Letters are thoſe mention'd before which Lupus ſent to Anſwer the Queſtions concerning Predeſtination and Grace.

The laſt is a Fragment of an Epiſtle written in the name of Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens to Pope Nicholas the firſt, concerning Herimanus Biſhop of Nevers, who was Non compos mentis. He there alledges that Pope Miltiades was of opinion, that a Biſhop could not be depoſed without the conſent of the Pope. He deſires Nicholas to ſend him this Decree of Miltiades, ſuch as it is at Rome; and he aſſures him he will wait his Judgment, how to make uſe of it againſt this Biſhop, Whether he ſhall keep to the Moderation obſerved by S. Gregory towards the Biſhop of Rimini, or whether he ſhould immediately depoſe him according to the Decree of Gelaſius.

Pope Nicholas did not Anſwer this Queſtion about the Decree of Miltiades; but having enlarg'd upon the Commendation of the Archbiſhop of Sens's Conduct, he acquaints him concerning Heriman, that he is not enough inſtructed in his Buſineſs; that tho' Heriman be Non Compos, he ought not to be allow'd to come to the Synod; that if he has no other defect than a Weakneſs of Mind, he ought to be pitied rather than puniſht. And that as to the lewdneſs and extravagancies he us'd to be guilty of, he ought not to condemn him for them, as well becauſe he is abſent, as becauſe he is not inform'd what thoſe Extravagancies are; and then, whether he committed them in his right Wits, or when he was not himſelf. This Letter in the Manuſcript from whence F. Sirmondus took it, bears the name of Servatus Lupus; which ſhows that 'tis the Abbot of Ferrara's who is ſo called, and by conſequence that the Treatiſe about the three Queſtions of Goteſcalcus, belongs alſo to him; beſides, that this Book and theſe Letters are of the ſame ſtyle, and that the ſame Doctrine is expounded in the 128th and 129th Letters, which are as it were an Abridgment of the other Work. Inſomuch that there is no reaſon to believe that Lupus Servatus was any other but the Abbot of Ferrara. 'Tis likewiſe believ'd that he took this Sirname after he had been cured of a very dangerous Diſeaſe, thro' interceſſion of S. Faron, as it is related in his Life, written by Hildegarius Biſhop of Meaux, a Cotemporary Author.

I have already given you an Extract of Lupus's Writings upon Predeſtination and Grace. He has alſo written the Lives of S. Maximinus Biſhop of Treves, of S. Wigbert an Abbot, with two Homilies and two Hymns upon the ſame Saint.

Two great Men of our Age have given very different Judgments of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, in relation to a Monaſtical Life. One blames the inordinate Love he had for curious Learning, and his great Inclination for Prophane Sciences, which, he ſays, is a ſtudy unworthy of a Monk; and it would have much better become him to have lamented his own and the world's ſins in his Cloyſter, and to have ſupported his Brothers, then to hunt after and ſtudy with ſo much diligence the Works of Profane Writers. This is the Judgment given of him by the Abbot de la Frappe. F. Mabillon on the contrary thinks him an Ornament to the Monaſtical Order; a Man that was not leſs to be eſteemed for his Piety, than his ſolid Doctrine. So well known and valued in his time, that there was no Council held without him; and whom they always employed in the moſt important Affairs, as the beſt Inſtrument and Secretary of the Biſhops, and chiefeſt Churches of France. A Man extreamly well verſed in the Fathers; and who in ſhort was to be admired both for his Religion and Holineſs, and the great veneration he brought to the Monks of his Monaſtery, as Hildegarius obſerves. Paſtor modo pro Religione Sanctitatis in Monaſterio famoſiſſimo Ferrarienſi, ubi Cœtus Monachorum in Chriſto cum illo toto Orbe eſt venerandus.

It does not belong to me to judge of the Monaſtical Conduct of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, neither am I fit to decide the Judgments of two Perſons ſo learned as the Abbot de la Frappe and F. Mabillon, for both of which I have a very ſingular reſpect. But in keeping to my Subject, that is, conſidering Lupus as an Eccleſiaſtital Writer, I may ſay, That he was not only very knowing in general Learning and Prophane Sciences, but in the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church and the Works of the Latin Fathers. And that he writ, not only with Elegancy, Pleaſantneſs and Politeneſs, but alſo with a great deal of Solidity and Exactneſs.

His Letters were publiſht the firſt time by Papirius Maſſonus out of a Manuſcript of the Abbey of Ferrara, and printed in the Year 1597. This Edition is very erroneous. M. Du-cheſnius has ſince obliged us with one more correct, [In his Collection of French Hiſtorians, Tom. 3.] The Treatiſe of the Three Queſtions, and the Letters about Predeſtination and Grace, have been printed at Paris in 1648. from an ancient Manuſcript of S. Amandus, and ſince by M. Mauguinus, together with a Collection of Fathers upon the ſame Subject. F. Sirmondus has publiſht the two Letters, and the Book of the three Queſtions [in 1650.] The ſame Author has put out a Fragment of the 130th Letter, taken out of a Manuſcript of the Abbey of Fleury, which was communicated to him by F. Dacherius.

The

The Life of S. Maximin, with that of S. Wigbert, has been publiſht by Buſæus, who had cauſed it to be printed with the Letters of Hincmarus at Mayence in the Year 1602. and the two Homilies upon this Saint in 1604. At laſt M. Baluſius publiſht a very fair Edition of all Lupus's Works, enricht with Learned Notes, and many Pieces added at the end of the Volume in Octavo, printed for Muguet in 1664. [From whom it is put into the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. XIV. p. 1.]

CHAP. XV.

Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures written in the Ninth Century.

The nature of the Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, compoſed in the Ninth Century.

SUch as in this Century have applyed themſelves to the ſtudy of the Holy Scriptures, have rarely produced any thing of their own, but only made Collections out of the Commentaries of the Fathers. After this manner are thoſe of Rabanus, Paſcharius, and the ordinary Gloſs of Walafridus Strabo compoſed, of all which we have ſpoken before. Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lions, followed the ſame method, and gathered together a great many Books, out of which he made divers Collections. And amongſt others, a large Commentary upon the Epiſtles of S. Paul, taken from fourteen Latin Fathers, and which has never yet been printed. Another Commentary upon S. Paul, compoſed of Extracts out of S. Auſtin, commonly attributed to Bede, altho' it really belonged to Florus. It is printed amongſt the Works of Bede. He has beſide this compoſed a Treatiſe about the Celebration of the Maſs, entituled, De Actione Miſſarum, which is a Comment upon the Canon of the Maſs printed in the Bibliothecâ Patrum [Tom. XV. p. 62.] Alſo two Diſcourſes upon Predeſtination; and another upon the ſame Subject againſt Johannes Scotus.

The Commentaries of Florus.

You meet ſome Fragments of the firſt Diſcourſe in Hincmarus. The ſecond has been publiſht by Father Cellot and Monſieur Mauguin. This laſt has alſo oblig'd us with Florus's Book againſt Johannes Scotus, ſpoken of before, [Both at Paris 1650.] He has alſo made a Collection of Eccleſiaſtical Laws, of which there are two conſiderable Fragments quoted in another Collection of Manuſcripts, whereof the firſt was publiſht by Father Dacherius in the Twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium; and the other by M. Baluſius at the end of Agobardus's Works. The firſt conſiſts of Laws and Canons againſt the Jews, and the Judgments of the Biſhops. The ſecond is concerning the Elections of Biſhops, which he proves ought to be made by the Clergy and People. Laſtly, Florus is Author of ſome Poetry, and there is a great deal of likelyhood, that thoſe which go under the name of Drepanius Florus in the Bibliothecâ Patrum belong to him. For there is one Poem inſcrib'd to Moduinus Biſhop of Autun, and another to Wulfinus, who both lived in the Ninth Century. So that it muſt needs be acknowledg'd, that the true Author of theſe Poems was Florus the Deacon of Lyons, whom we now ſpeak of. Father Mabillon has alſo publiſht in the firſt Tome of his Analects ſome other Poetry of this Author's, of the ſame nature with the former. The firſt Poem is a Complaint about the Diviſion of the Kingdom, after the Death of Lewis the Godly. The ſecond is a Letter to Moduinus Biſhop of Autun, in which he complains that this Biſhop ſuffer'd the Church of Lyons to be abuſed. The third is in honour of two Martyrs, call'd S. John and S. Paul. The fourth is in honour of S. Stephen the Proto-Martyr. The fifth is concerning the Reliques of S. Cyprian, which are generally believed to be at Lyons. And the laſt is the Inſcription of an Altar, under which there were ſome Reliques of certain Martyrs; and upon it was pourtrayed Chriſt, the Apoſtles, and S. John Baptiſt. There was alſo a third Piece dedicated to Moduinus, of which Father Sirmondus publiſhed the beginning in his Notes upon Theodulphus, [at Paris 1646. which are alſo in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.]

Florus's Writings.

Theſe are very near all the Works of Florus which we have extant. He made a great many Collections, reaſon'd very properly, and writ tolerably well. He paſt for one of the beſt Writers in his time.

Haymo [Aimo] or Hemmo, (a) a Monk of Fulda, or of Hersfield, a Scholar of Alcuin, who was choſen Biſhop of Halberſtadt in Saxony in the year 841. is one of the Authors of this Century, that has writ the moſt Commentaries. In the Year 847. he aſſiſted at the Condemnation of Goteſcalcus in the Council of Mayence, and died in the Year 853. He has written Comments upon almoſt all the Books of the Holy Scriptures, both of the Old and New Teſtament, collected according to the cuſtom of this time out of the Commentaries of the Fathers, whoſe Expoſitions he does but Copy and Abridge. We have thoſe upon the Pſalms printed at Paris in 1533. [at Friburg the ſame year]. Thoſe which he compoſed upon the major Prophets, and the Twelve minor, printed at Colen in 1573. Seven Books upon the Apocalypſe at Paris in 1540. and at Colen in 1529. [and 1531.] One Book upon the Acts, and Seven upon the Canonical Epiſtles at Colen in 1573. [at Paris 1556. and under Remigius's name at Mentz 1614.] There is at laſt a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of S. Paul, which ſome attribute to Remigius of Auxerre, which is certainly Haymo's. It was printed at firſt at Rome in 1598. under the name of Remigius Archbiſhop of Rheims, by the care of the Jeſuit Villalpandus, Commentaries of Haymo of Halberſtadt.

(a) A Monk of Fulda, or Hersfield.] Some make him Abbot of Hersfield; but M. Bulteau believes that he was no more than a Monk of this Monaſtery, as well becauſe he has no other Character given him in the Chroniele of Saxony, as that Hui who was Abbot of Hersfeild in 831. did not die till 846. when he was ſucceeded by Bruvardus.

dus, known by his Commentary upon Ezekiel, and afterwards Reprinted at Mayence, in 1614. Villalpandus attributed it to S. Remigius Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, who Baptized Lewis; but all the Criticks eaſily diſcovered, that this Opinion was not Maintainable: For how could S. Remigius, that dyed in the beginning of the Sixth Century, Cite the Order of St. Benedict, Bede, the life of Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, &c. His Style and Manner of Writing eaſily ſhows, he was of the Ninth Century; but yet they don't agree to what Author it ought to be attributed. Some give it to Remigius d' Auxerre, others to Remigius of Lyons, but the greateſt part to Haymo of Halberſtadt; which name it goes under in many Manuſcripts, and in two Paris Editions, 1556. and 1608. This laſt Opinion ſeems moſt reaſonable; for it is certain, by the Teſtimony of Sigebert and Trithemius, that Haymo did write a Commentary upon St. Paul: Beſides, this is very like his other Commentaries; there is the ſame Method, the ſame manner of Writing, the ſame Expreſſion, and in the greateſt part of the Manuſcripts of it, it bears his name. Laſtly, it was attributed to him 100 years after his death, in the times of Fulbertus and Carnatenſis. On the contrary, there are but very few Manuſcripts that attribute it to Remigius of Auxerre, and Sigebert that writes of this laſt, has not numbred it amongſt his Works. It is therefore more reaſonable to attribute it to Haymo, than Remigius.

Other Works of Haymo.

We have beſides theſe Commentaries, two Tomes of Homilies upon the Evangeliſts, Printed at Colen in 1532. and 1540. and at Antwerp in 1559. An Abridgment of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, Printed with Sulpitius Severus, and with Notes of Galeſinius at Colen, in 1531. and Reprinted at the ſame place in 1573.

In fine, Dacherius hath Publiſhed in the twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium, a ſmall Work concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which is apparently a Fragment of a Homily of this Biſhop's: He there teaches the Real and Subſtantial Converſion of the Bread and Wine, into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Commentaries of Angelomus.

Angelomus a Monk of Luxeuil, has alſo written large Commentaries upon the four Books of Kings, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, and upon the Song of Songs; they are Entituled Stromates, becauſe they are Woven up of many paſſages of divers Fathers: The firſt is divided into four Books, which he wrote by command of Drogo or Dreux his Abbot; but he did not finiſh it till after the Abbot's Death, in 855. And the ſecond is Dedicated to the Emperour Lotharius, before he was deprived of the Empire, which happened in 855. Theſe Commentaries are Allegorical and Myſtical; they are Printed in the Blibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XV.] and have been Printed ſeperately at Colen, in 1530. and at Rome in 1665. Trithemius mentions another Treatiſe of this Author's, bearing the Title Of Divine Offices.

The Commentaries of Sedulius.

Some time before theſe Authors, of whom we have been ſpeaking, and at the beginning of this Century, one Sedulius a Scotchman, writ the like Commentary upon St. Paul's Epiſtles, which are nothing elſe but Collections out of the Commentaries of other Authors. It is thought that this Sedulius, was alſo Author of the like Collections upon St. Matthew. [His Collection on St. Paul's Epiſtles is Printed at Baſil, 1528. 1534. and in Bib. Pat. Tom. 6.]

The Commentaries of Druthmarus.

We muſt add to theſe Chriſtianus Druthmarus, a Monk and Prieſt of Corbie, who lived about the end of the ninth Century. He has made a Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew, addreſſed to the Monks of Stavelo and Malmedy. He tells us in his Preface, that he Compos'd it for the uſe of the young Monks; becauſe that he obſerves, after he had Expounded to them twice the Goſpel of St. Matthew, they had forgot what he had taught them. He ſays, he expreſt himſelf in Terms eaſie enough to be underſtood; that he endeavoured to clear all difficulties, that he kept to the Literal and Hiſtorical Sence, becauſe that the Letter is the ground of other Sences, and that without it they could not be well underſtood. He promiſes a Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. John, for that of St. Mark, he refers to one of Bede. This Author performs his deſign well enough; his Expoſitions are Short, Hiſtorical, Eaſie, and without Allegories or Tropes. There are alſo two Expoſitions of the ſame Author, upon ſome places of St. Luke and St. John. This Commentary has been Printed at Haguenau, in the year 1550. [1530.] in the Bibliotheca Patrum. This Author was called The Grammarian, becauſe he was very skilful in the Languages, and underſtood Greek and Latin admirably well, and always kept to the Literal Senſe.

The Commentaries of Remigius of Auxerre.

Laſtly, Remigius a Monk of St. German's of Auxerre, was called to Rheims to fix his Studies there, by Fulkgrew who ſucceeded Hincmarus [in that See, and had lately Erected a School at Rheims] in the year 882. He was reputed to have been very Learned in the Prophane Sciences, ſays Sigebert; but yet he employ'd himſelf more profitably in Expounding the Holy Scripture. We have one of his ‖ Commentaries upon the Pſalms, Collected out of thoſe of St. Ambroſe, St. Auguſtine, Caſſiodore, and an Expoſition of the twelve Minor Prophets, Printed at Antwerp in 1545. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XVI.] Sigebert makes no mention of theſe two Books: Some deprive him of the firſt, and beſtow it upon one Monegondus; but Trithemius attributes it to Remigius of Auxerre. This ſame Author makes mention of a Commentary of Remigius's upon St. Matthew. We have obſerved, that the Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which ſome attribute to Remigius of Auxerre, does rather belong to Haymo of Halberſtadt. Both Sigebert and Trithemius place among his Works, a Commentary on the Song of Songs, which was never Printed. But in the Bibliotheca Patrum, we have the Expoſition of the Canon of the Maſs, of which the ſame Author ſpeaks: They alſo ſay he wrote a Book of Divine Offices, a Treatiſe of all the Feaſts of the Saints, an Anſwer to Gualo Biſhop of Autun, who had propoſed two Queſtions to him; one upon the Conteſt of St. Michael th' Arch-Angel, with the Devil about the Body of Moſes, ſpoken of in the Epiſtle of St. Jude; and and the other upon these words of God to Job, Lo, the Behemoth that I have made with you, &c. and some other Treatises. Trithemius adds, that he Compos'd a great many Learned Books, and amongst the rest, a Commentary upon Donatus, and other Ancients. Neither of these Treatises or the foregoing, have been yet Printed, no more than his Sermons.

CHAP. XVI.

The History of the Popes, that enjoyed the Holy See during the Ninth Century.

LEO the III, who had been rais'd to the Holy See, about the end of the foregoing Century, Dying in the year 816. he was succeeded by Stephen the IV. soon after his Exaltation he imposed an Oath of Fidelity upon the People of Rome, to be true to Lewis the Godly, and then went into France to visit this Emperour, where he was very honourably receiv'd: and after he had obtaind liberty for some Prisoners, and a return for some Persons that were then in Banishment, he returned to Rome, where he dyed a little while after, in the seventh Month of his Pontificate. Stephen IV.

Paschal the first of that name, who succeeded him, was rais'd to the See of Rome in the year 817. He immediately gave notice of his Elevation to Lewis the Godly, according to the custom of those times. Having received Letters from Theodorus Studita, and other Defenders of Images Persecuted in the East; he writ them back a Letter, to comfort them in their Sufferings. There are three Letters which go under his Name, but which are very faulty, and much to be suspected. The first is about a Privilege granted to the Church of Ravenna. The second is an account of the Invention of the Reliques of St. Cecilia. By the third he grants the Pall to the Arch-Bishop of Vienna. The two first are not worthy of credit, and the third is doubtful: [They are extant in Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Paschal I.

Eugenius the II. succeeded Pope Paschal in the year 824. There goes under his name a Bull, sent to the Bishops and Lords of the Army of the Huns, which does not seem a very Authentick Monument. There are also attributed to him some Canons, but without doubt they belong to a Council of Rheims, and not to this Pope. There is also a Letter under his name to Bernard, Arch-Bishop of Vienna, which has little more to be said for it than the former. [This with another Letter attributed to him, is extant Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Eugenius II.

Valentinus who succeeded Eugenius in the year 827. having lived but few Months, Gregory the IV. was raised to this Dignity, at the beginning of the following year. He came into France to favour the Undertakings of the Children of Lewis the Godly, against their Father; threatning to Excommunicate the Bishops that would not be of his side. But the Bishops answered him boldly, that if he came to Excommunicate them, he should return Excommunicated by them. We have spoken of an Extract of a Letter, which this Pope writ upon this Subject, which is to be found amongst Agobard's Works. There are also two other Letters of this Popes, one upon the Affair of Adlricus Bishop of Mans, whose cause he would have had brought before him, and in the mean time his Title of Bishop to cease: And the other upon the Deposing of Ebbo, which he disapproves of, and condemns of Violence. This Pope's Letters are in Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Valentinus. Gregory IV.

Sergius the II. succeeded Pope Gregory the IV. in the year 844. We have but one Letter of this Pope's, by which he makes Drogo Bishop of Mets his Vicar general in the Countries, on the other side of the Alps, in consideration that he was Uncle to the Children of Lewis the Godly, and besides was very fit for that Office. He gives him power to Assemble the National Councils of all that Country; to examine the Cases of those that shall appeal to the Holy See, and to prepare those of Abbots and Bishops. He forbids any to Appeal to Rome, that have not first had their Case Examined in a Provincial Synod, or in that of the Vicar General; because an Affair may be better understood in a place where it is Transacted, than any where else. This Letter is Directed to all the Bishops on the other side the Alpes; 'tis written with a great deal of weight and worth. [This Letter is Printed in Tom. VII. of the Councils, p. 1799.] Sergius II.

Leo the IV. was chosen Pope, after the death of Sergius the II. the twelfth of April, in the year 847. He Governed the Church of Rome eight years, three Months, and some days; during this time he wrote divers Letters, but there are but two of them come to us entire, and it is not very certain they are his. Leo IV.

The first is a short Letter Directed to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, by which he commands him to Consecrate an Abbey for Ademarus and his Monks, which was to depend upon the Holy See.

The second is sent to the Bishops of England, who had consulted him upon many Articles, and particularly about Simoniacal Bishops; he orders, that such should be tryed in a Council. He afterwards gives them a satisfactory Answer to their other Questions: Concerning the first he says, 1. That the Hierarchy consists of Bishops and Clergy-men: 2. That every Bishop is to govern his Dioceſs, by his Priests and other Clergy, and make his Visitations: 3. That Priests ought not to be obliged by them them to carry the Eulogies to the Councils: 4. That Charms are a ſort of Witchcraft: 5. That no Body ought to Marry his Kinſwoman: That the Biſhops ought to regulate their Judgments, by the Canons of the Councils, and the Decrees of the Popes, Silveſter, Fericus, &c. but might alſo make uſe of the Authorities of St. Jerom, St. Auſtin, and St. Iſidore.

We have ſome Fragments of a Letter of Leo, againſt Nomenocus Duke of Britain; of another to Lotharius, in which he refuſes the Pall, to the Biſhop of Autun; and of a third to Hincmarus, concerning the Council of Soiſſons.

Laſtly, There is a Diſcourſe attributed to this Pope, Directed to the Prieſts and Biſhops, containing a great many Inſtructions relating to their Miniſtry and Duty. [All theſe Letters of Pope Leo, are put into the VIII. Tome of the Councils, *p.*30.]

Benedict. III. Benedict the III. of that name, was choſen in July, 855. after the death of Leo the IV. His Election was oppoſed by a Prieſt, called Athanaſius, who through the favour of the Commiſſioners of the Emperour, poſſeſt himſelf of the See and Palace of Rome; he alſo put Benedict into Priſon: But at laſt, ſuch as eſpous'd Athanaſius's Cauſe, were forc'd to yield, and to Depoſe him themſelves, and to acknowledge Benedict. This Pope was but two years and an half in the Papal Seat, and we have but two Letters of his; One to Hincmarus, concerning the Council of Soiſſons, and the Privileges of the Church of Rheims; and the other to the Biſhops of Charles's Kingdom, by the which he Cites to Rome, Hubert Son of Boſon, who had quitted his Profeſſion of a Clergy-man, and liv'd a lewd and irregular Life.

There are alſo two other Letters attributed to this Pope; One to confirm the Privileges of the Abbey of Corbey; and another to ratifie thoſe of the Abbey of S. Denis. But ſince theſe Writings are doubtful, and particularly the laſt, we ſhall inſiſt no longer upon them. Theſe four Letters are printed together in Tom. VIII. of the Councils.

Nicholas I. Nicholas the firſt, Son of Theodorus a Roman, was Ordain'd Sub-Deacon by Pope Sergius, and Deacon by Pope Leo the fourth. He acquired a great Reputation under the Pontificate of Benedict the third. He was choſen after the death of this Pope by the Clergy and Grandees of Rome to his See in the Year 858. and was Conſecrated in preſence of the Emperour Lewis, the 22th of April. He had at the beginning of his Pontificate a Difference with John Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, againſt whom many had brought Complaints to the Holy See. He cited him three ſeveral times to a Synod of Rome. But this Arch-Biſhop not appearing, he Excommunicated him. John upon this had immediate recourſe to the Emperour, who was then at Pavia, and afterwards came to Rome with ſome Officers, which that Prince ſent to accompany him. The Pope told thoſe Officers, That they ought not to joyn themſelves with one that was Excommunicate; and at the ſame time cited John to the Synod that was to be held in November. But inſtead of obeying, John immediately left Rome. The Senators of Ravenna, and the People of Æmilia prayed the Pope to come himſelf in Perſon to Ravenna to reform the Diſorders that John had cauſed there. He went and reſtored to the People of Æmilia and Pentapolis the great Riches that John and his Brother had got into their poſſeſſion. John fled to Pavia to beg the aſſiſtance of the Emperour Lewis, but this Prince counſelled him to ſubmit to the Pope, and to reconcile himſelf to him. Which he did; and the Pope gave him Abſolution from the Hereſie of which he cleared himſelf, and received him again into his Communion. And upon the Complaints of the Biſhop and People of Æmilia, he order'd him to come every year to the Synod at Rome: To Ordain no Biſhops but ſuch as were choſen by the Duke, Clergy, and People, and whoſe Election was firſt confirm'd by the Holy See. To permit the Biſhops of Æmilia to come to Rome when they pleaſed. To exact nothing of them, and not to ſeize upon any Revenues, under pretence that they belong'd to him, till it was plainly determined by the Holy See, or Commiſſioners from it, that they did really belong to him. This Decree of the Pope was approv'd of by the Synod.

This Affair was follow'd by many others of greater Conſequence, which Nicholas maintain'd with a great deal of Courage and Vigour. The principal are the Intruſion of Photius, and the unjuſt Depoſing of Ignatius; The Divorce of Thietberga; The Depoſing of Rothadus, and the Converſion of the Bulgarians. Which are not neceſſary to be any farther ſpoken of here, becauſe I have treated of them in other places of this Volume. And this is alſo the reaſon that I have but little to ſay of his Letters, which are near an hundred; becauſe the Courſe of our Hiſtory about theſe Affairs, hath obliged us to make an Extract of them upon other occaſions. The firſt ſixteen are a Collection, which he made himſelf of thoſe, which related to the Caſe of Ignatius and Photius. The reſt concern the Affairs of France, the Peace between the Kings, the Divorce of Thietberga, of Lotharius, the Excommunication of Waldrada, the pardoning of Count Baldwin, the affair of Ingletruda and Boſon, the Judgment pronounc'd againſt Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, the affair of Ebbo, the Privileges of ſome Abbeys, the Promotion of Hilducius to the Biſhoprick of Cambray, the Diſpute between the Biſhop of Mans and the Monks of S. Kallais, the Pall granted to Egilo Arch-Biſhop of Sens, the Biſhopricks of Brittany, which the Dukes of that Country had a mind to take away from the Metropolis of Tours, and the Objections of the Greeks againſt the Church of Rome, about which he conſults the Biſhops of France.

But there is one of theſe Letters, in which he Anſwers Rodulphus Arch-Biſhop of Bourges, about ſeveral Points of Diſcipline, which we cannot paſs over in ſilence. It contains ſeven Articles. The firſt relates to the Ordaining of Prieſts and Deacons by Suffragans. Some Biſhops of France Depoſed thoſe they had Ordained; and others Re-ordained them. Becauſe, ſays he, Suffragans were created in imitation of the Seventy Diſciples, who might perform Epiſcopal Functions. But becauſe the Canons forbid Suffragans to execute theſe Functions, he orders the Canons for the future to be obſerv'd.

The

The second is upon the Complaint the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne made, That the Arch-Bishop of Bourges forc'd his Clergy to Commence their Differences in his Courts, and be tried by him; and that he disposed of several Matters that belong'd to his Diocese, without consulting him about it. Nicholas admonished the Arch-Bishop of Bourges of this, and told him, that his Quality of Primate and Patriarch did not allow him that Privilege. And that he ought to content himself to be Judge of Appeals of Causes which had been tried before by the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne. He repeats anew, upon this occasion, the Canons that constitute the Rights of Patriarchs and Primates.

In the third he declares, That in the Church of Rome they never anoint the Hands of those Priests and Deacons that are Ordain'd with the Chrism: Adding, that he never read that it was practised.

The fourth permits the Arch-Bishop of Bourges to moderate the Penance, and relax something of the rigour of Canons made against such, as having undertaken a state of Penance, return again to the World.

The fifth is about those that are obliged to bring to Confirmation such Children as their Wives have had by a former Husband. He says, That if they have been guilty of the neglect of it thro' Ignorance, they ought not to be parted from their Wives, but only made to do Penance.

The sixth orders, That such as have kill'd their Wives, unless they have taken them in Adultery, shall be made to undergo the Penance of Homicides.

The seventh intimates, That the Bishops ought to repeat the Gloria in Excelsis, on Holy-Thursday at Mass. But it is not permitted to any to wear the Pall on this day, unless they have leave from the Holy See.

F. Dacherius in the Twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium, has publish'd another Canonical Letter of Nicholas the first, sent to Harduicus Arch-Bishop of Besançon, in which the Pope prescribes the following Rules.

First, he proves by the Canons, That such as have married two Sisters, may not marry any more for the future.

Secondly, That those that have married their Relations, and are upon that account divorc'd, cannot marry as long as either of them lives; but that it is not forbidden when one of them dies.

Thirdly, he also believes, That Marriage ought not to be absolutely forbidden to such as have committed the Crime of Sodomy, provided they repent of their Sin, and have left off that cursed habit.

Fourthly, he shews, That the Election of a Bishop by the Clergy and chief Men of the Diocese, ought to stand good.

In the fifth Article he says, That it is forbidden Suffragans, not only to Ordain Priests and Deacons, but also to Consecrate Churches and Confirm Children, which only belongs to the Bishops, as we may observe, not only by the Customs of the Church, but also by the Acts of the Apostles.

The last shews, That a Priest that is once fall'n into, and convict of a foul Crime, can no more be restored to his Function.

There is another Work of Nicholas the first, concerning Church Discipline, yet more considerable than the former. 'Tis his Answer to the Questions of the Bulgarians, which contains *above 100. Articles. Viz. 106.

In the first he says, That the Religion of Jesus Christ consists in Faith and Good Works.

The second is concerning the Spiritual Affinity between God-fathers and their God-children, which hinders their ever marrying together.

The third is about the Ceremonies of Marriage. He says, that after the betrothing, the Priest ought to cause the Persons to come into the Church with their Offerings, and there give them his Benediction and the Voil, which is not to be given in second Marriages. That being gone out of the Church, they should wear Crowns upon their heads. These are the ordinary and solemn Ceremonies, which, as the Greeks say of theirs, need not nevertheless always be observed. That consent, according to the Laws, might suffice; and that if that be wanting, the rest signifies nothing.

The fourth sets down the Fasts which are observed in the Church of Rome; 1. Lent; 2. The Fast after Whitsunday; 3. That before the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin; 4. That before Christmas; 5. The sixth day of every Week; and 6. All the Vigils or Eves of great Feasts.

In the fifth he says, That the Fast on Wednesday is not commanded, but that of Friday is.

In the sixth, That it is not forbid to bathe on those days.

In the seventh and eighth he approves of the Custom of Carrying and Kissing the Cross, and of the Reliques in Lent.

In the ninth he extolls the Custom of Communicating every day in Lent, provided the Communicant be engaged in no Sin, nor has any Mortal Crime lying upon his Conscience.

The tenth is about the Celebration of Sunday.

The eleventh sets down the Feasts in which we must forbear working, to assist at Divine Service.

In the twelfth he says it is to be wisht that Men would on those days forbear also trying Civil and Criminal Affairs.

In the thirteenth he excuses himself for not sending them Civil Laws.

In the fourteenth he aggravates the Cruelty which was us'd towards a Greek, who had his ears and noſe cut off for pretending to be a Prieſt, and baptizing a great many People.

In the fifteenth, he ſays that ſuch Perſons ought not to be re-baptized in the Name of the Holy Trinity.

In the ſixteenth he ſays, That thoſe that did thus abuſe this Prieſt ought to be put to Penance.

In the ſeventeenth he blames the King for executing the principal Leaders of a Rebellion raiſed againſt him by the Bulgarians, whom he had cauſed to be baptized. And he ſays that he has committed a great Sin, and particularly in the murthering their Infants who were innocent. But ſince he did it thro' a violent Zeal for Religion, and a blind ignorance, he hopes he may obtain mercy, if he repent.

In the eighteenth he ſays, That thoſe that have been baptized, and after forſake Chriſtianity, ought to be firſt admoniſhed by them, that held them to the Font, that if they do not reform, they ought to be accuſed to the Church; and that if they refuſe to obey the Church, they ſhould be puniſh'd by the Prince's Authority.

In the nineteenth he ſays, They may make uſe of the rigour of their Laws againſt thoſe, as would take away the lives of their Princes. Nevertheleſs, he exhorts the King to pardon ſuch Offenders. This, and the following Articles relate more to Civil Policy than Church Diſcipline.

In the 41ſt he forbids forcing Infidels to the Faith, and adviſes them to avoid communicating with them.

In the 44th, and thoſe that follow, he forbids Hunting, Examining Cauſes, Playing, Marrying, or Feaſting in Lent; and in the 50th leaves it to the prudence of the Biſhop or Prieſt, who have the care of Conſciences, to determine after what manner a man ſhould live with his wife during that time.

In the 51ſt he expreſly forbids men to have two wives at a time. In the 53d he ſays that it is permitted to all Believers to make the ſign of the Croſs upon the Table, and to give a Benediction thereupon in the abſence of the Prieſt. In the 54th he does not diſapprove of the Cuſtom of the Greeks, who thro' humility uſed always to waſh their hands before they went into the Church; but nevertheleſs, he does not command it. In the 55th he ſays he does not think it needful to force People newly converted to pay their debts, that they may be received into Communion. In the 56th he approves of the Cuſtom of ordering Prayers and Faſts for Temporal Neceſſities, as in a time of Drought, &c. In the 57th he rejects the Superſtition of the Greeks, who would not eat any Beaſts kill'd by Eunuchs. In the 58th he orders, according to the Precept of the Apoſtle, that women ſhould have their heads covered in the Church. The 59th and 60th relate to their Habits and the Hours of Eating. In the 61ſt he recommends continual Prayer to them. In the 62d he forbids them to make uſe of a certain Stone that they believ'd would heal or cure a Diſeaſe. The 63d and 64th ſhew the time when it is moſt proper to abſtain from uſe the of Marriage. The 65th commands to receive the Euchariſt faſting, and allows thoſe to come to the Communion, who have bled much at the noſe or mouth; for which he makes uſe of the example of the Woman in the Goſpel, who being ſick of a Bloody-flux touched Chriſt's Garment; which makes it credible, that he doth not debar Women from it that are under the like inconvenience. In the 66th he forbids them to enter their Church with their Turbans on their Heads. In the 67th he forbids the Bulgarians to ſwear by their Sword, or by the name of any Creature. The 68th allows Women newly brought to bed to enter into the Church. In the 69th he ſays, That the ſolemn times of adminiſtring Baptiſm are the Feaſts of Eaſter and Whitſuntide; but that it is not neceſſary to obſerve this in regard of the People newly converted, no more than in reſpect of ſuch as are in danger of death. The 70th directs that they ought not to depoſe a Prieſt who hath a Wife; and that it is not lawful for Lay-men to judge of Prieſts. The 71ſt ſhews that Prieſts, how wicked ſoever they are, cannot defile the Sacraments; and that they may be received from them with ſecurity. The 72d is about the queſtion propounded to him concerning a Patriarch. He ſays he cannot anſwer whether he ſhall grant them one, till he knows their number of Chriſtians. That a Biſhop may ſerve their turn in the mean time; and that if their numbers of Believers encreaſe, and that there be divers Churches and divers Biſhops, he will make choice of one of them for their Patriarch, or rather Arch-Biſhop. In the 73d he ſays that their Patriarch, Biſhop, or Arch-Biſhop muſt not be Ordained but by the Supreme Biſhop; and then he that is Ordained by him, having receiv'd the Privilege of Metropolitan from the Holy See, may Ordain other Biſhops. That after this there would be no more need of coming to Rome for the Ordination of their Arch-Biſhop, who then might be Ordained by the other Biſhops, upon condition that he doth not execute any part of his Office till he has receiv'd the Pall. The 74th aſſerts that men may pray any where. The 75th and 76th, That the Biſhops that he will ſend them, ſhall bring the Rules of Penance which they deſired, together with a Miſſal. In the 77th he forbids them to have any thing to do with Lots, by putting a Pin into a Book to find out any thing they are in ſuſpicion of. The 78th declares that Penance ought to be refus'd to none. In the 79th he forbids ſuperſtitious Ligatures made uſe of to cure men. The following Articles relate to Peace, Agreements or Bargains, Judgments and Civil Puniſhments. In the 87th he forbids forcing Widows to become Nuns. The 88th ſays that it is not lawful to pray for ſuch as dy'd in their Infidelity. The 89th recommends to them the Cuſtom of Offering the Firſt-fruits of the Earth. The 90th ſays that it is lawful to eat Birds which have not been bled in killing them. The 91ſt forbids Chriſtians to eat Beaſts kill'd or hunted by Infidels. In the 92d he declares that they are the proper Patriarchs who govern the Churches founded by the Apoſtles, which are only Rome, Alexandria and Antioch. That the Biſhops of Conſtantinople and Jeruſalem are alſo called Patriarchs; but they have not ſo great Authority as theſe three. In the 93d he declares that that of Alexandria to be the second Patriarch. In the 94th he declares the Cheat of the Greeks, who said that Chrism came first from their Country. The 95th says that they ought not to be taken from the Church who have fled thither for Sanctuary. In the 96th he forbids Husbands to be divorced from their Wives, if it be not for Adultery. In the 97th he exhorts Masters to pardon their Slaves that have offended them. In the 98th he is willing that such as kill themselves should be buried, for fear their putrid Bodies should occasion Infection; but he would have no Obsequies bestowed upon them, nor any Sacrifice or Prayer offer'd for them. In the 99th he permits such to be buried in the Church as have liv'd well. The 100th approves of the Custom of carrying dead Bodies into their own Countries. In the 101st he commends Alms. In the 102d he forbids doing violence to Pagans to convert them. In the 103d he commands them to burn the Books of the Sarazens. The 104th is concerning the validity of Baptism administred by a Jew, who had no Religion. Nicholas the first answers, That such ought not to be Re-baptized, if he did confer it upon them in the name of the Trinity. In the 105th he speaks of those that preach'd a Doctrine contrary to that of the Apostles. He answers that they ought not to be heard: But that it doth not belong to the Bulgarian Lay-men to judge whether the Doctrine be true, or not. In the last he exhorts them to take Instructions from none but the Church of Rome, which always delivers the Truth to such as desire it.

These are the Decisions or Answers of Nicholas the first in this Work. This Pope was a great Canonist. He wrote readily and with Authority. He often quoted the Canons and Decretals of the Popes. He maintain'd the Grandeur of his See with vigour, and manag'd the most difficult Matters he was concern'd in with Honour. M. de Marca observes, That he had done some Injuries to the Discipline and Liberties of the Church by maintaining that it was not lawful to assemble a National Synod without the consent of the Pope: In attributing to himself the Appeals of the Clergies Cases determined in National Synods; and also after a Review brought, in Citing the Persons and Causes to Rome to be there determined anew, instead of appointing Judges on the places; and affirming, that the Causes of Bishops wholly belong'd to his Cognizance. But these Pretensions have not been acknowledg'd by the Church, and particularly by that of France, who have always kept to their Liberties without the least diminution of Respect and Submission due to the Holy See. [These Epistles are all put out in Tome VIII. of the Councils.]

After the death of Nicholas the first, which hapned the 13th of November in the year 867. Adrian the second, who was about 76 years of age, was chosen in his place. He was a Roman, the Son of Talanius, related to the Popes Stephen the fourth and Sergius the younger. Gregory the fourth Ordained him Priest, and gave him the Title of St. Mark. His Liberality gained him a great repute in Rome, and he was proposed to be chosen Pope after the death of Leo the fourth, and Benedict the third. And after the death of Nicholas he obtain'd it both by the Votes of the People, who lov'd him, and by the joynt consent of both Parties of Grandees. Lewis the Emperour approved of his Election; and he was Ordained the 14th of December. He was at first suspected not to favour much the Memory of his Predecessor Nicholas the first, because he seem'd not so severe towards Lotharius and Waldrada, as he had been. But he freed himself from this suspicion, and re-united those to him that before had forsaken his Interest upon this account. Adrian II.

The beginning of his Pontificate was disturb'd by the Invasion of Rome, which the Duke of Spoleto seiz'd on, and harrass'd with Robberies and Plundering of his Soldiers. But Rome was deliver'd both by the Authority of the Emperour, who depriv'd the Duke of Spoleto of his own Dominions, and the Thunderbolts of Excommunication which the Pope sent out against these Robbers. A Peace was no sooner granted to the Church of Rome, but the Affair of Photius was brought before Pope Adrian. The Emperour Basilius having restored Ignatius, sent some of his Officers to Rome to accompany the Deputies of Ignatius and Photius. Those of Photius's side were drown'd for the most part, and there appear'd in his behalf but one inconsiderable Monk call'd Methodius, who durst not maintain his Cause, and who suffer'd himself to be cited thrice, and was at last condemn'd for Non-appearance. But the Officer of the Greek Emperour, and John Metropolitan of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, having presented to Pope Adrian the Transactions of the pretended Council which Photius had assembled against Pope Nicholas the first, he caused them to be examined and condemned in a Council which pronounced an Anathema against Photius, and had the Book burnt which he wrote against Pope Nicholas. After this Adrian sent Legates to Constantinople to assist in his name at the eighth General Council. They had at first all the satisfaction they could wish, but after the Council, they enter'd upon the Affair of Bulgaria, and after it was debated in their hearing, judged that it ought to be subject to the Patriarch of Constantinople, which troubled the Legates extreamly. Wherefore having protested against, and declared this Judgment null, they immediately left the City dissatisfied. And being but very meanly accompanied, they fell into the hands of the Sclavonians, who robbed them, and took them Prisoners. They soon after made an escape, and came to Rome at the end of the year 870.

There are five Letters of this Pope concerning the Affair of Ignatius and Photius in the Version of the Acts of the eighth Council done by Anastasius. The three which follow, relate to the Affairs of France, and the Churches of Brittany, to Lotharius and Weldrada, Actardus, Wulfadus, and the other Clergy-men Ordained by Ebbo. To the Kingdom of Lotharius, on which Charles the Bald seiz'd after his death, and which Adrian would have had been left to Lewis the Emperour. To the pretended Privileges of Caroloman, and to the Quarrel of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, with his Uncle. It is not necessary to give any Extracts of these Letters in particular, having spoken of them particularly elsewhere. Adrian dyed the first of November in the year 872. He was naturally good and well temper'd, zealous for Peace, and for the welfare of the Catholick Church. His Letters are written in a style Style mixt with Gravity and Modeſty, Zeal and Humility; he maintaining in every part of them his Authority, without Affectation or Contempt of any Body. He behaves himſelf towards thoſe he had Buſineſs with, according to the Rules of Honeſty and Charity; not Flattering them by a baſe Complaiſance, or Offending them by high Words, nor Enraging them by his extraordinary Claims.

John the VIII. was Arch-Deacon of Rome, when he was rais'd to the Holy See; it was in December 872. that he came to this Dignity, at a time when all Italy began to be very much moleſted by the inroads of Barbarians, and Diviſions between the Dukes and Lords. He was obliged to make a Treaty with the Sarazens, to hinder their Invaſions. After the death of the Emperour Lewis the II. he ſet the Imperial Crown upon the Head of Charles the Bald, in the year 875. and ſupported himſelf by his Protection, as long as this Prince lived: But having a mind after his Death to let the Empire fall into the Hands of his Son, he was oppoſed in his Deſign by the Lords of Rome, and by Lambert Duke of Spoleto, who ſeized both upon that City and the Pope in it. But he eſcaping ſome time after, fled into France, where he held the Council of Troies: After this, returning into Italy with ſome ſuccours, he drove out the Barbarians, and to procure himſelf a quiet Life, Crowned Charles the Groſs Emperour, in the year 880. and dyed at the beginning of the year 882. He has writ many Letters concerning the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Affairs of his time.

The firſt is Directed to Count Boſon; he thanks him for the good Service he had done his Legates with Charles the Emperour, and acquaints him, that he expected thoſe Succours from that Prince with a great deal of Impatience, which he promiſed him againſt the Sarazens.

The ſecond to King Lewis, is about the Differences between that Prince and the Emperour Charles the Bald: He tells him, that he cannot hope to make them Friends, till he has heard them both, and Exhorts him in the mean time to think of a Peace.

In the third he adviſes Jeoffry Prince of Salern, that he has received Power from the Emperour to Conclude and Swear the Treaty made with him, and that he will ſhortly give him a Viſit upon that Occaſion.

In the fourth, ſent to the Clergy and Faithful of the Church of Valva, he condemns a certain Perſon, who would have ſeized upon that Church, during the Life of Arnoldus, who was the Biſhop of it. He commends them for not being willing to receive him; he forbids them to do it, and threatens them with Excommunication if they ſhould, as alſo he that undertook to ſettle him, if he perſiſted in it.

In the fifth he commands him that he writes to — which it may be was the Biſhop of Naples, to ſeparate himſelf from the Duke of Naples, who would not ſubmit to the Holy See, and threatens him with Excommunication, if he does not do it.

In the ſixth he orders his two Legates, which he had at the Emperours Court at Pavia, to return immediately.

In the ſeventh he complains of Boſon's retaining his Legates, and begs aſſiſtance of him againſt the Sarazens, to prevent the Beſieging of Rome, which they threatned.

The eighth is written to Charles the Bald; in it he allows of the Tranſlation of Frotarius, from the Arch-Biſhoprick of Bourdeaux to that of Bourges, upon the Teſtimony and Remonſtrances of the Biſhops of that Province, having delayed to grant it till he was acquainted with their Sentiments, as he obſerves in that Letter.

The ninth is Directed to Landulphus Biſhop of Capua, to whom he ſends word, that the Legates whom he had diſpatched to the Emperour, had obtained of him, a Confirmation of all the Priviledges anciently belonging to the Church of Rome, and particularly a Power to conclude ſuch a Treaty, as he himſelf ſhould think beſt, concerning the Territory of Capua. He informs this Biſhop, that he deſign'd to be in that City ſhortly, that ſo he might make preparations to receive him.

In the tenth, he writes to Adelard Biſhop of Verona, to come to Rome in December, to aſſiſt at the Council which was to be held there; and threatens him with Excommunication in caſe of a failure.

In the eleventh, he deſires the Emperour to pardom Emmenius, and take him into favour, altho he owns him to have been juſtly Condemned.

In the twelfth, he begs of him to Pardon a Man that had killed another, and who was come to Rome ad limina Apoſtolorum, to expiate his Crime.

The thirteenth is Directed to the People of Bourges, whom he exhorts to receive Frotarius for their Arch-Biſhop, by reaſon of the Deſolation of the Province of Bourdeaux, becauſe the Pagans having cruelly ravaged it, he was now become unſerviceable in his firſt Dioceſe. In the following Letter, he commands the Biſhops of that Province to acknowledge him.

In the fifteenth, he orders the Biſhop of Chartres, to reſtore to his Goods and Offices, the Murtherer of whom mention is made in the twelfth Letter, who had been at Rome ad limina, to make Atonement for his fault.

The ſixteenth and the four following, are about an Affair wherein Peter Arch-Biſhop of Grado was concern'd. It ſeems two of his Suffragan Biſhops had revolted from him; and one Dominicus Abbot of the Monaſtery of Altino, had got himſelf to be Elected Biſhop of Toricelli in ſpite of him. The Arch-Biſhop of Grado having brought this Affair to Rome, the Pope cites both theſe Biſhops, and the Biſhop Elect, to make their Appearance at the Council which he held there; but they failing to obey the firſt Citation, he was forced to threaten them with Excommunication if they did not come in Perſon, to a Council which was to meet in February. Then he wrote to two of the neighbouring Biſhops, to ſee this Sentence put in Execution, in caſe they did not obey; to the Duke of Venice, to ſend them to him; to two Biſhops called Felix and Peter, that he interdicted them, till ſuch time as they came to his Synod; and that if they fail'd of coming thither, he would certainly Excommunicate them. He blames Dominicus for his Carriage, and Summons him likewiſe to his Synod under pain of Excommunication; and he returns his thanks to the Duke of Venice for his good Inclinations to the Holy See; requeſting him to cauſe thoſe Biſhops to repair to the Synod which was to be Celebrated in February. He directed theſe Letters to a certain Biſhop, whom he deſires to Diſtribute the reſt, to thoſe Perſons to whom they belong'd, as it appears by the twenty fifth Letter, which is addreſt to that Biſhop.

In the twenty firſt, he deſires help of the Emperour Charles, againſt the Inſults of the Sarazens; repreſenting to him, the terrible Devaſtations they made among the Chriſtians.

The twenty ſecond is directed to Count Lambert, whom he ſeverely reproves for not hindering the violent Oppreſſions of ſome of his Subjects, and threatens to Excommunicate him if he did not take care to regulate theſe Diſorders for the future.

In the twenty third, he thanks the Emperour Charles the Bald, for the kind Reception he gave the Legates of the Holy See; as alſo, becauſe he ſent Anſegiſus and Adalgarius to Rome, with Commiſſioners to repreſs the Inſolence of thoſe Perſons that were troubleſome to the Holy See. He informs him, That they could not be Puniſhed according to their deſerts, becauſe they were fled to a certain Marqueſſe, and ſome great Lords, who took them into Protection: he prays the Emperour to find them out, and to Condemn them to Baniſhment; and humbly entreats him, not to ſuffer them in his Kingdom. In the following Letter he complains of the Conduct of Anſegiſus, whom he accuſes of maintaining a ſecret Correſpondence with Count Lambert. He commends the Fidelity of Adalgarius, upon whom he had beſtowed a Pall, by way of Recompenſe.

The greateſt part of the following Letters relate to the Wrongs which the Holy See Suffered by the Sarazens and other Enemies of the Church; againſt all which he begs the Aſſiſtance of Charles the Emperour: And Exhorts the Biſhops and Princes of Italy, to break the Treaties made with them; and animates them to declare War againſt them.

The thirty fourth Letter is an anſwer to Biſhop Ansbert, who had Conſulted him about the Promotions of Biſhops and Abbots. He ſends him word, That he muſt follow as much as he can the Directions of the Canons; nevertheleſs, he thinks it convenient, he ſhould wait for the coming of the Emperour, that he may Act according to his Will and Pleaſure. He ſays in particular, as to thoſe Perſons he had been Conſulted about, that an Exile may be favoured without doing any thing contrary to the Canons. That with Permiſſion of the Prince, the Abbot that was put out of a Royal Monaſtery, might be Re-eſtabliſhed, if he hath never been Convicted of any Crime: And that a Murtherer, or any Accomplice in ſuch a Crime, ought to be deprived of all Spiritual Authority.

The thirty ſeventh is a Letter about the Tranſlation of Frotarius Arch-Biſhop of Bourdeaux, to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Bourges.

In the forty ſecond, he Exhorts King Charles the Groſs to reſtore the Revenues he had taken from a Nunnery at Breſſe, and threatens him with Excommunication if he does not do it within ſixty days.

In the forty ſeventh, he acquaints the Emperour Charles the Bald, that he had Excommunicated Adelard Biſhop of Verona, becauſe he had ſeized upon the Monaſtery of Nonantula. He ſends the ſame thing to the Arch-Biſhops of Ravenna, Milan, and Aquileia, in the following Letter: and in the forty ninth to the Clergy of Verona.

By the fifty third, he commands the Arch-Biſhop of Milan, and the Biſhop of Breſſe, to meet at a General Synod of the Biſhops of Italy, which was to be held at Ravenna in June.

In the fifty fifth, he Cites Vitus Duke of Venice, and the Biſhops of his Country to it. By the following Letter he commands the ſame thing to be done by the Biſhops Peter and Leo.

In the fifty ſeventh, he requires the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna and his Suffragans, to be preſent at the General Synod of the Biſhops of Italy, which was to be held at Ravenna.

The fifty eight is written to the Patriarch of Aquileia, to end his Affair in this Synod.

By the fifty ninth, he acquaints the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, that this Synod was Prorogued to the nineteenth of July; and he ſignifies to him in the following Letter, that he has Summoned thither all the Biſhops of Italy, and eſpecially thoſe of Venice. The foregoing Letters are Dated on the tenth Indiction, that is to ſay, that they were written between September 876. and the ſame Month in 877. The following Letters are of the eleventh Indiction.

In the ſixty ſecond, he ſent a Man-ſlayer to his Biſhop, that had been enjoyn'd Penance, and who was come to Rome; but he nevertheleſs Exhorts and Intreats this Biſhop, to mitigate the rigour of his Penance.

The ſixty third is Addreſt to Carloman. He acquaints him with his concern for the Death of Charles the Emperour, Exhorts him to Protect the Church of Rome, promiſes to ſend him Legates very ſpeedily, grants him the Pall for Theodemarus the Arch-Biſhop, and deſires him to ſecure him in the Poſſeſſion and Enjoyment of the Revenues, which the Church of Rome has in Bavaria.

The ſixty fifth is written to the Engliſh Arch-Biſhop, where after he hath commended his Zeal for the Holy See, and Exhorted him to diſcharge his Duty with Conſtancy, he warns him not to ſuffer Husbands to forſake their Wives and Marry others. He Confirms the Privileges granted by St. Gregory to the Biſhops of his See.

In the ſixty ſixth Letter, he thanks Athanaſius Biſhop of Naples, for Excommunicating his Brother Sergius who was an Enemy to the Church. He deſires him to continue his Labour and Vigilance for his Church, and recommends to him the Deacon Peter. In the following one, he commends the Neapolitans for driving out Sergius, and giving the Government of their City to the Biſhop his Brother.

By the ſixty Ninth, he ſends to Landulphus Biſhop of Capua, to joyn with the Biſhop of Naples in the Defence of the Church of Rome, and requires him to obſerve the Treaty made with the Amalphitans.

In the Seventieth, He reproves the Biſhop of Ambrun, for Ordaining another Biſhop of Venice than him, that had been choſen by the Clergy and People, and whoſe Election had been confirmed by the Conſent of Charles the Emperour. He enjoins him to come to Rome, together with him that was Elected, and him that had been Ordained.

The 68, 72, and 73. are Letters written to Lambert Duke of Spoleto, an Enemy to Rome, to prevent his acting thoſe Hoſtilities, which he intended againſt it.

The ſeventy fifth and the ſix Letters following, are written about the Affairs of Bulgaria to that King, to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and the Greek Emperour.

The following Letters are written againſt Lambert Duke of Spoleto, who had Invaded the Territories of the Holy See, and being poſſeſt of the City of Rome, had placed a Garriſon in it, abuſed the Biſhops and Prieſts, and hindered them from performing Divine Service in St. Peter's Church.

Theſe Outrages obliged the Pope to retire into France, to implore aid of Charles, of Carloman, Lewis the Stammerer, of Engelberga, and Berengarius, as it appears by theſe Letters.

In the ninety firſt, he acquaints the Empreſs Engelberga, that he will compoſe the Service for the Anniverſary of the Emperour Lewis her Husband, as ſhe had defired him: He Conjures her to continue her care of the Affairs of the Holy See, and to act ſo, that he may return as ſoon as poſſible to Rome; he informs her alſo, that he will hold a Council at Troyes the firſt day of Auguſt.

In the following Letter he tells her, that he is come to Arles, and that he hath met Boſon and Hermengarda, whom he wiſhes preferred to ſome higher Dignities, that they might be more able to defend the Roman Church.

He Exhorts the Empreſs to favour him in the Deſign he hath for them, and to write to the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna to pray for him, and to ſend Legates to Rome to Comfort his Faithful Friends.

By Letter the ninety third, he makes the Arch-Biſhop of Arles his Vicar in France, yet without prejudice to the Rights of the Metropolitans, for which end he gives him the Pall; and Commands the Biſhops that are obliged to go out of their Provinces, not to do it without his Conſent; and if there ſhould happen any Diſputes concerning the Faith, or about other matters of any difficulty among the Biſhops, he requires them, after they have given him an account of it, to Decide it with twelve Biſhops which he ſhall Aſſemble, provided that if it cannot be Decided by theſe Judges, they ſhall content themſelves with having fully inſtructed him, and refer the matter to the Holy See.

He Complains it is a great Diſorder, that the Metropolitans of France Conſecrate Biſhops, before they have Received the Pall of the Holy See; he deſires this Abuſe may not be allowed to become Cuſtomary.

The Letter ninety four is to the ſame Perſon, and on the ſame Subject, 'tis a forged piece, Compoſed of part of St. Gregorie's Letter, and part of the foregoing.

The ninety fifth is a Copy of one of St. Gregorie's Letters.

By Letter ninety ſix, he invites Iſaac Biſhop of Langres to the Synod to be held at Troyes.

By the ninety ſeventh, he Excommunicates thoſe that had taken his Horſes and Baggage at Châlons, unleſs they return them in three days, and paſſes the ſame Sentence againſt Adurardus the Prieſt, whoſe Servants had taken a Silver Plate out of the Church of Rome.

By the following Letters, he invites and cites the Metropolitans and Biſhops of France, to the Synod to be held at Troyes.

The 108 is ſent to Luitbertus Arch-Biſhop of Mayence, whom he orders to return to the Daughters of Boſon and Engeltruda their Father and Mothers free Eſtate. And declares Godfrey and Engeltruda uncapable of diſpoſing of them; and in the following Letter, threatens Count Marfroy who was in poſſeſſion of them, unleſs he preſently reſtored them.

In the 110 he complains to the Arch-Biſhop of Beſançon, that he did not come to him to Condole his Perſecutions: He Exhorts him to come as ſoon as he can, and forbids him to Conſecrate a Biſhop in the Church of Lauſanne, tho the Prince command it, or the People deſire it, till he hath conſidered what will be moſt Expedient.

The four following Letters are in the Council of Troyes.

In the 115 he cites Count Bernard to the Council of Troyes.

In 117 and 118, he invites King Charles and Lewis to a Conference: King Lewis came, but not King Charles. The Pope complains of it in 119. Letter, and lets him know, that he had adopted Prince Boſon for his Son.

The 120 is a Sentence of Excommunication againſt Count Bernard, who had deprived Frotarius Arch-Biſhop of Bourges, of his Arch-Biſhoprick and Revenues.

In the 121 he threatens thoſe with Excommunication, that had ſeized upon the Revenues of the Church of St. Maurice of Tours, unleſs they ſpeedily reſtore them; and admoniſhes thoſe that owe their ninths and tenths, to pay them.

By the 122, he leaves to the Arch-Biſhop of Arles the Deciſion of the Controverſy, between the Biſhop of Uſez and Avignon, which could not be determined at Troyes, the Biſhop of Avignon being abſent.

The

The 123 is an Excommunication of Hugh, the Natural Son of King Lewis, and Emmo Brother of Bernard, for Conſpiring the Death of their King.

The 124 is Addreſſed to the Biſhop of Dol, and the Biſhop of Brittany, who had withdrawn themſelves from the Juriſdiction of the Arch Biſhop of Tours, he charges them to ſubmit with menaces of Excommunication, if they fail.

In the 125, to Lewis the Stammerer, he tells, how great Obligations he lay under to Boſon, who brought him ſafe to Pavia, and begs his aſſiſtance in reducing the Enemies of the Holy See, and recommends to him Agilmarus Biſhop of Clermont.

In the 126th he accuſes Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan of unkindneſs, in not ſympathizing with him in his Sufferings. He commands him and his Suffragans to come next Thurday to meet him at Pavia. He gives the ſame Orders in the following Letter. He likewiſe Summons Count Beringarius by the 128th and 131ſt Letters, and Suppo by the 130th. In the 129th he preſſes King Lewis to reſtore to the Daughters of Boſon and Engeltruda the Free-Eſtate of their Father and Mother, of which he was in Poſſeſſion.

In the 135th he orders two Biſhops to Excommunicate thoſe that had ſtole Wipert's Son, and plundered his Country.

In the 136th he adviſes Count Hugh to puniſh ſome Thieves.

In the 137th he exhorts him, and two other Counts, to keep their League made with Boſon.

In the 138th he orders a Monk to obey Biſhop Wipert, who had obtain'd him from his own Biſhop and Abbot by Letters dimiſſory.

In the 139th he orders the Arch-Biſhops of Milan and Ravenna to meet, when the Biſhop of Pavia ſhould require it.

In the 140 he Authoriſes the Biſhop of Pavia to Excommunicate thoſe that had taken away a Woman.

In the 141ſt he acquaints the Biſhop of Pavia that he ſhall ſhortly be at Turin, and prays him to come thither. He intimates to him that he ought not to adhere to the Arch-Biſhop of Milan in Prejudice of the Roman Church's Intereſt; and deſires him to forward his Letters to the Suffragans of the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna.

By the 142d he calls four Biſhops to a Council to be held at Pavia.

The 143d is a Decree for the Confiſcation of the Goods of an Abbey.

In the 144th he promiſes Salvation to all that are kill'd in Battel againſt Heathens and Infidels, and abſolves them as much as is in his power.

By the 145th he Suſpends the Biſhop of Venice from Celebration of Divine Service, becauſe he had Communicated with ſome Excommunicated Perſons; till he and they appeared before him.

In the 146th he gives leave to promote to Sacred Orders, ſome Perſons, who in their youth hapned to be in Company where one kill'd his Companion.

In the 147th he deſires two Biſhops to ſend home the Wife of Roſtagnus, who deſerting her Huſband, was fled into their Dioceſe; and orders them to Excommunicate all that Communicated with her.

In the 148th he adviſes the Biſhop of Mets, that he ſhould not force a Man to marry a Woman who was Contracted to him, who by her own Confeſſion was with Child by another Man.

In the 149th he Orders the Biſhop of Pavia to mitigate the Penance impoſed by his Predeceſſor on a Man, for being in Company when another was kill'd.

In the 150th he orders the Biſhop to cauſe Reſtitution to be made to ſome Perſons he recommends that were robbed.

In the 151ſt he writes to the Biſhop of Beſançon that he had Abſolved Fulcardus and his Wife; and that he is again to admit them into his Communion.

The 152d is an Exhortation to certain Biſhops aſſembled in Council, to judge with Juſtice.

In the 153d he acquaints the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, That it being order'd by the Canons that Councils ſhould be held twice a year, he appointed one to be at the end of March; and orders him and his Suffragans to be there.

In the 154th he writes to the ſame Arch-Biſhop, and tells him, That he wonders he ſhould deſign to Ordain to the Biſhoprick of Sarſenne another Perſon than the Prieſt Lupo, whom he had commanded him to Ordain; and forbids him doing it.

In the 155th he writes to Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, and he Commands him and his Suffragans to come to a Council to be held at Rome the firſt of March, to chooſe an Emperour in the place of Carloman, whoſe Infirmities made him no longer able to bear the Burthen of Government. He adds, That as it belongs to the Pope and Biſhops of Italy to Conſecrate the Emperour, ſo it is chiefly their Right to call and chooſe him.

In the 156th he Comforts the Duke of Beneventum for the loſs he had ſuſtained by the Agarenians.

The 157th is only a Letter of Complement and Thanks to a Biſhop that was very zealous for the Roman Church, and had enquired of his Health; and Condolance for the Death of his Brother. Here end the Letters of the eleventh Indiction, and thoſe of the twelfth begin.

The ſix firſt Letters contain nothing very remarkable, being chiefly about Civil Matters.

In the 163d he forbids certain Biſhops to Excommunicate the Perſon that brought the Emperour's Letters Patents, till his Cauſe were examined.

In

In the 165th he Excommunicates a Count and his Wife for taking a Nun out of his Monaſtery, till they reſtored her.

In the 174th, 189th, 192d Letters he exhorts Michael King of Bulgaria, to ſubmit himſelf to the Church of Rome.

In the 181ſt and 182d he ſharply reproves Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, for not coming to the Synod at Rome, after he had been thrice Summoned, and threatneth to proceed againſt him if he come not this fourth time. He forbids his holding any Aſſembly with any of the Kings of France that ſhall come into Italy.

In the 188th to the Biſhop of Limoges, he decides, That a Man ought not to be parted from his Wife, becauſe he had Baptized his Child himſelf in a Caſe of Neceſſity.

In the 190th written to the Biſhops of Dalmatia, he exhorts them to acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome, and to ſend thither their new choſen Biſhop to be Conſecrated, and Receive the Pall from him.

The 191ſt is to the Arch-Biſhops of Arles, Narbonne and Aix. He orders them to confer with the Biſhop of Nimes, to oblige him not to moleſt the Monks of a certain Monaſtery, and gives them power, if he does not do as he deſires, to ſuſpend him from all his Prieſtly Functions, till he comply, or appear at Rome to give an account of his Conduct.

In the 194th he Exhorts a Sclavonian Lord to continue in the Faith of the Roman Church, and live in its Obedience. He ſaith he hath written to Arch-Biſhop Methodius, who was Ordained by Pope Adrian his Predeceſſor, becauſe he had heard he taught other Doctrines than what he had profeſſed in Preſence of the Holy See.

The following Letter is to this Methodius Titular Arch-Biſhop of Pannonia: he commands him to come to Rome and juſtifie his Doctrine. Forbids him to Celebrate Maſs in the Sclavonian Tongue, but only in Latin or Greek; as, ſaith he, the Church of Jeſus Chriſt diſperſed over the whole Earth, practiſeth in all places.

The 196th is to Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, about his refuſing to come to the Synod at Rome. The Pope had ſuſpended him from Celebrating Divine Service, till he came to Rome to juſtifie himſelf: but not regarding of that Suſpenſion, he continued to do all Epiſcopal Functions. The Pope peremptorily commands him to come to Rome, or ſend his Legates.

In the 197th he thanks King Lewis for his good will, and invites him to come ſpeedily to Rome, promiſing to do his utmoſt to make him to be declared Emperour.

The 198th Letter is to Herard Arch-Biſhop of Auch, and to the Biſhops of Comminges, Conſerans, and Bigores, concerning the Diſorders in their Dioceſes, which they could neither reſtrain by Exhortations nor Excommunications. They had written to the Pope to joyn his Authority to theirs, to put a ſtop to them. The Pope writes to them to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to rectifie the Diſorders of the People committed to their charge. And becauſe the greateſt were in the Marriages of Kindred, he ſaith, 'tis not permitted to Chriſtians to marry their Kindred ſo long as they can make out any Relation. He declares all thoſe, that are ſo married, and will keep their Wives, or thoſe that ſhall ſo marry for the future, to be ſubject to the Churche's Anathema by Apoſtolick Authority, and forbids all Prieſts to give them the Sacrament, till they have done Penance. He alſo declares it unlawful to have two Wives, to forſake one Wife and marry another for no cauſe whatſoever, or to have a Wife and a Concubine at the ſame time. He forbids the Laity to meddle with the Church Goods. He orders Prieſts and Clerks to ſubmit to their Biſhops, and to do nothing without their conſent; and that the Laity do obey their Biſhop under pain of Excommunication.

The following Letters concern the Affair of Photius, which we have ſpoken of in the Hiſtory of the Eighth Council.

In the 204th Letter he writes to the Empreſs Engelberga, who had deſired him to Abſolve Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, and humbly repreſents to her, That he could not do it without the conſent of his Brethren the Biſhops, with whoſe concurrence he had Excommunicated him. That he muſt either come or ſend Deputies to the Synod to be held the eleventh of October at Rome, to anſwer ſuch things as are laid to his Charge: and after Satisfaction given, he will Abſolve him, and Receive him into his Communion. He ſaith he will Celebrate the Anniverſary of the Emperour her Husband; and that he prays for the Soul of her Brother Suppo, that God would forgive his ſins.

The four following Letters are concerning the Troubles about the Election of Landulphus to the Biſhoprick of Capua.

The 216 Letter is written to King Charles, whom, he ſaith, he hoped to raiſe to the Dignity of Emperour, that therefore he was come to Ravenna: That he hoped he would labour all he could to Re-eſtabliſh the Honour and Dignity of the Roman Church, and ſubdue its Enemies. That at his Return he found its Enemies more violent; having not only ſeized and carried away the Poſſeſſions, but the Perſons, that belonged to the Church of Rome. He deſires him to ſend him three Perſons before he comes, that he may concert with them concerning what belongs to the Honour and Good of the Holy See.

In the next Letter he prays the ſame Prince to protect the Church of Rome againſt its Enemies.

The

The 218th is addreſt to the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna; he wonders he had not recourſe to the Holy See, to redreſs the Injury done him; he intimates, that he had ſent a Prudent Perſon to Ravenna, whom he Impowred to inform himſelf of all had been done to him, he orders him to be at Rome by the beginning of October at the Synod, and promiſes all manner of Aſſiſtance, but finds fault with his quitting his Church to live elſewhere.

In the 219th, he orders him to refer it to the Biſhop of Pavia, whom he had Commiſſioned to Excommunicate thoſe that deſerve it.

The 221ſt Letter is to the Clergy of Milan, whom he orders to proceed to the Election of a new Arch-Biſhop inſtead of Anſpert, whom he had depoſed in his Synod, and tells them, that he ſends the Biſhop of Pavia and Rimini to joyn with them in this Election: This Letter is the firſt of thoſe that were written in the 11th Indiction, beginning in September 879. In the following Letter, he acquaints King Charles with the Depoſing of Anſpert and Joſeph, whom the former had Ordained Biſhop of Vercelli, and that he had put another Biſhop into Vercelli, whom he deſires him to maintain.

In the 223d he enjoyns the People of Vercelli to Receive the Biſhop he had Ordained.

In the 224th, he threatens to Excommunicate Nottingus Biſhop of Novara, unleſs he reſtored to the Empreſs Engelberga the Goods belonging to her.

In the 225th he Declares the Amalphitains Excommunicate, till they ſeparated from the Heathens, with whom they maintained too familiar a Correſpondence.

The 226th is written to four Biſhops, whom he appoints to judge the Buſineſs of a Lady called Theodrona, the Widow of Treſigius. She came to Rome to complain, that after the Death of her Husband, her Brother-in-law had forced her to become a Nun, and that without the Bleſſing of a Prieſt; and that ſhe had often declared and proteſted againſt the Veil, and had worn it but fifteen days: The Pope orders them to Aſſemble and Examine this Affair, and if they find theſe things true, then to declare her diſcharged of her Vow.

In Letter the 227th, he Commands the Biſhop of Naples and Magiſtrates of Amalfi, to break their League with the Sarazens; and threatens to Excommunicate them, unleſs they do it by the firſt of December.

In 228th, he reproves a Biſhop for not coming to his Synod, and Summons him to appear on the eighth of December, to give his Reaſons why he had Excommunicated a certain Noble-man.

He gives the ſame Reproof to another Biſhop in the following Letter, and Cites him to come and Anſwer the Accuſations brought againſt him by all his Clergy.

In 230th, written to King Charles, he wonders that he did not acquaint him with his Arrival at Pavia; and prays him if he be there, to ſend him Ambaſſadors with Honourable Letters, that he might come and meet him.

In the 231ſt, he thanks this Prince for leaving the Church of Vercelli, in Poſſeſſion of the Biſhop he had Ordained. He Excuſeth himſelf, that he could not abſolve Anſpert as he had deſired, becauſe the Sentence given againſt him was in theſe Terms, That he ſhould be Suſpended and Excommunicated, till he had appeared and juſtified himſelf before the Holy See.

By the 232d, he enjoyns the Biſhop of Regio to Rebuild a Church lately Burned, to put in a Prieſt, and to ſend thither the Holy Chriſm; which the Biſhop neglecting, he in the following Letter orders the Biſhop of Pavia to do it.

In the 234th, he reproves Biſhop Egilbert for Communicating with Excommunicated Perſons, and forbids him to Communicate with Luitfredus and Odebricus Excommunicated Perſons; becauſe they detain'd Goods of the Empreſs Engelberga.

In Letter the 237 he Excommunicates Luitfredus, for Receiving a Nun which was gotten out of his Nunnery, and detaining the Empreſſes Goods.

In the following Letter he threatens to Excommunicate Count Lambert, for Detaining the Goods of the Empreſs, and of the Church of Rome.

By the 239th, he commits to the care of Abbot Giſulphus, the Empreſſes Monaſtery.

In the 240th, he Congratulates the Grecian Emperours Officers, concerning their Victory over the Sarazens, and Exhorts them to come to Rome to aſſiſt him againſt the Agarenians.

In the 241ſt, he commends the Biſhop of Naples's Zeal for the Church of Rome; he Exhorts him to break his League with the Sarazens; and declares, that he will Excommunicate the Amalphitains if they do it not, of which he gives them Notice in the next Letter.

Letter the 243d, is to intreat King Charles the Groſs, to leave the Biſhop of Lauſanne in the free Poſſeſſion of his Biſhoprick, and to oblige Count Hubo, to reſtore what he hath taken from the Church of Beſançon: In the following Letter, he recommends the affair of the Church of Langres to the Biſhop of Vercelli, and in the 245th, to Thierricus Arch-Biſhop of Beſançon.

In the 246th, he commends the Zeal of King Charles toward the Church of Rome, and deſires him to ſend ſome Body with Authority, to ſee that all be reſtored to the Roman Church, which has been taken from it.

The 247th is to Sfentopulcher, an Earl of Sclavonia; he Congratulates his Faith and Piety, and his Submiſſion to the Holy See, of which he had been informed by Methodius Biſhop of Moravia, whom he had ſent to Rome: He ſaith, he had queſtioned him concerning his Creed, and found it the ſame with the Roman; and whether his Sentiments were Orthodox, and found him to be ſound in all points of Catholick Doctrine; upon which Account, he ſends him to Govern his Church, with the Quality of Arch-Biſhop, which he confirms for ever. He adds, that he had Conſecrated Wichinus Biſhop of Nitria, and deſires him to ſend ſome other Prieſt, that he may Ordain him Biſhop of ſome other Town, and that theſe three Biſhops may regulate Affairs as need ſhall require: He orders all Prieſts and Clergy-men to ſubmit to the Arch-Biſhop; then he repeats what he had before ſaid, about the Celebration of Divine Service in the Sclavonian Tongue; and firſt, he approves of Prayer in that Tongue; ſecondly, he ſaith, 'tis not contrary to Faith nor ſound Doctrine, to ſay or ſing Maſs, the Goſpel, or the Leſſons of the Old or New Teſtament, or the Hours of other Service in the Sclavonian Language, provided that they be well Tranſlated; for God is not only Author of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, but alſo of all other Languages which he hath made to Praiſe him with. Thirdly, he thinks it fit to read the Evangeliſts in Latin, for the greater Reverence, and afterwards in the Sclavonian Tongue, in reſpect of the People who underſtand it not, as 'tis Practiſed in ſome Churches. Fourthly, he writes, that if it pleaſes the Prince and his Judges to hear Maſs in Latin rather than in the Sclavonian Language, it may for them be Celebrated in that Tongue.

In the 248th he reproves a Biſhop, for having violated a Treaty made with the Biſhop of Capua in his Ordination; he orders him to go on with it, and in Caſe of default, threatens him with Excommunication: He permits him to come to him, if he have any Complaint or Excuſe to make.

The 249th is to King Charles the Groſs, he thanks him for the good Offices he does to the Church of Rome; and particularly that he commanded all the Counts and Biſhops his Neighbours, to defend the Territories of St. Peter, againſt the Aſſaults of all Enemies, not only bad Chriſtians but Sarazens, who are always Pillaging the Roman Church. He ſaith, he would have Conferred with Wibodus, Son of Count Lambert, but he failed of Meeting at the place appointed: He promiſes that Count Boſon ſhall find no Refuge or Aſylum at his Court; and Rejoyceth, that King Charles will quickly come and beg of him, to ſend Commiſſioners that may do him Juſtice.

The two following Letters are about Photius's Affair, which hath been ſpoken of elſewhere.

The 252d is alſo to King Charles, he acquaints him, that he waits his Arrival with Impatience, and complains that he had not ſent him Commiſſioners according to his deſire, and that an Excommunicated Perſon called Georges, being come from him, had ſeized upon certain Revenues in the Poſſeſſion of the Church, pretending they belonged to him, and alſo, that he very much moleſted his Neighbours. He deſires him to remedy this diſorder, and to remove the Enemies of the Holy See; this, and the following Letters, are written in the XIVth Indiction, which begins at the Month of September 880.

By the 253d, he Summons the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna to the Synod, which had been Prorogued to November, to determine with other Biſhops ſome Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. He acquaints him, That in this Aſſembly, they will go upon the Affair of Count Deus Dedit, whom the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna had Excommunicated, for Contracting Marriage with one of his Relations; adding, that tho' indeed it was in his Power to abſolve him, yet ſince the Council was ſo nigh, he thought it convenient to defer the Concluſion of it to the Synod, where he would be preſent. He tells him, That the Earls Wife had preſented a Petition to him, wherein ſhe ſays, that he was made Privy to her Marriage, and ſoon after ſhe was Married, he had admitted and invited them to his Communion; he alſo gives him an account of another Affair.

The 254th is a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of Italy, to call them to the Synod which was to be held the ſeventh of November.

The 255th is addreſt to King Charles, he acquaints him, that the Sarazens were defeated by the Greeks, but that thoſe Barbarians were yet very troubleſome, and deſires his Succours againſt them.

It appears by Letter the 256th, Directed to Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, that John the VIIIth did once pardon him, and received him into his Communion; but that the Arch-Biſhop having again offended him, by Apprehending two Monks of the Roman Church, and putting them in Priſon: The Pope commands him to releaſe them. In the next Letter, he threatens the Proctor of Pavia that had Arreſted them.

By the 258th he abſolves the Marqueſſe Adelbert, becauſe he found him faithful to the Church of Rome, and his Subjects, provided they make ſatisfaction to the ſaid Church within fifteen days. In the next he writes, that he hath ſent Legates with Inſtructions to treat with him; and Exhorts him to Compliance with his deſires, and not to come to Rome.

In the 260th to Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, he approves of the Ordination of Joſeph to the Biſhoprick of Aſt, tho he had been before Ordained Biſhop of Vercelli: But his Ordination being found faulty, he was deprived and put in the ſame State and Condition he was before.

In the 261ſt, he threatens the Arch-Deacon of Milan with Excommunication, unleſs he ſubmits to his Arch-Biſhop, and return to his Church.

The 262d is to a Private Church-man of Milan, whom Anſpert had Excommunicated, for raiſing troubles in the Church, and detaining ſome of his Goods: he Exhorts him to his Duty, and to give full ſatisfaction to his Arch-Biſhop, or elſe he Confirms the Excommunication againſt him.

In the 263d he Entreats Lewis and Carloman to joyn their Conſent with Charles, that Engelberga may retire to Rome, where he promiſes to have ſuch an Eye over her Actions, that ſhe ſhall undertake nothing againſt them, nor the Emperour for the future.

The 264th is a Bull, by which he puts under the Protection of the Holy See, the Monaſteries and other Benefices belonging to one Harderick.

In the 265th, he complains of the Biſhop of Naples, for not breaking the Treaty with the Sarazens,

The

The two following Letters are about a difference between the Biſhop of Trent and Verona, about ſome Eccleſiaſtical Revenues; he writes about it to the Biſhop of Trent, in Letter 266th, and appoints them Judges in Letter 267th.

The 268th is Directed to Methodius Arch-Biſhop of Sclavonia, he comforts him under ſome Perſecutions, which he ſuffered from a certain Biſhop; aſſuring him, that he had neither Contributed to it, nor Privately Written againſt him: He Exhorts him to be Zealous for Religion, and promiſeth him Juſtice againſt his Enemy.

By the 269th, he begs a ſpeedy Relief of Charles the Emperour againſt the Saràzens.

In the 270th, he Pronounces Athanaſius Biſhop of Naples Excommunicate, for not breaking the Treaty made with the Sarazens.

The 271ſt is to the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, who had brought Aldericus into his City from the Emperour. He blames his Carriage, and pretends 'tis contrary to his Oath. He promiſes him, that returning from Naples, he will come to Ravenna, and do Juſtice to that Church. He injoyns him to Ordain Dominicus Arch-Deacon, Biſhop of Fayance, whom he had nominated to that end.

In the 272d written likewiſe to the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, he reproves him for having obliged a married Woman to leave her Husband, and marry her Raviſher; and Accuſes him of Diſobedience to the Church of Rome: Therefore forbids him Ordaining any, till he had appeared at the Synod to be held at Rome in October.

In the 273d he commands the ſame Arch-Biſhop to diſmiſs the Clerks belonging to the Biſhop of Playſance, that had retired to Ravenna, whom the Arch-Biſhop had received without Letters of leave from their own Biſhop; and commands him to Abſolve the Clerks of Playſance, whom he had Excommunicated. We ſee by theſe Letters, that this Arch-Biſhop had frequent Conteſts with Rome. This more plainly appears by the following Letter, which ſheweth that this Prelate had Ordained another Perſon Biſhop of Fayance than him whom the Pope had nominated. The Pope by this Letter Excommunicates him, and forbids him taking Poſſeſſion of this Biſhoprick, or exerciſing any Function, till he had preſented himſelf to the Synod at Rome.

He Cites a ſecond time the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna by Letter 274. intimating to him, That he ſtands Accuſed of ſeveral Crimes, and chiefly of Perjury.

In the 276th he determines the Affair of one Deus Dedit, an Inhabitant of Ravenna. His Arch-Biſhop had Excommunicated him as Convicted of Inceſt: He appeals to the Holy See, and came to Rome to clear himſelf; but no Body appearing from the Arch-Biſhop, the Pope would not Abſolve Deus Dedit, till he had written to the Arch-Biſhop to ſend Accuſers and Witneſſes to Rome. He ſent a Prieſt and a Deacon with an Accuſation in writing: Deus Dedit anſwer'd, and proved his Marriage to be according to Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws. The Pope and the Synod declar'd him Abſolved, and confirmed his Marriage.

In the 277th he writes to Charles the Emperour to ſend him two Legates, that he might regulate the Wrong and Injuſtices the Church ſuffers under his Reign.

The Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna not appearing at the Synod, was Excommunicated. The Pope Adviſes thoſe of Ravenna by Letter 278, and forbids them to Communicate with him.

By the 279th Letter he Congratulates the Emperour Charles his intended Journey into Italy. He exhorts him to Succour the Church of Rome, and to expel Guy out of the Poſſeſſion of the Lands of the Church.

In 280. he thanks the Biſhop Luitwardus for having procured the Emperour's Journey into Italy.

By the 281ſt he commands the People of Geneva to obey Optandus, whom he had Ordained their Biſhop.

In the 282d he prays the Biſhops and Counts of Italy to intercede with the Emperour, that Engelberga might come to Rome.

The 283d is directed to the Arch-Biſhop of Cologne, touching a Prieſt long ſince Excommunicated by Pope Nicholas, for having Communicated with Ingeltrude, and had undergone eleven years Penance; the Pope Abſolves and Reſtores him at the Requeſt of the Arch-Biſhop of Cologne. He likewiſe writes to this Arch-Biſhop to Judge concerning the Divorce of Gideon, whoſe Wife had committed Adultery with her Brother, according to what St. Auſtin writes on that Matter in his Book of Adulterous Marriages; and what is ordered by Pope Innocent.

In the two following Letters he praiſes ſeveral Lords for their Zeal to the Holy See.

In the 286th he expreſſeth his Joy for the Emperour's coming to Ravenna, and begs him to haſten his Journey.

The 287th is to the King of Bulgaria: He expreſſes his admiration, that he hath not ſent Ambaſſadours to Rome, and Exhorts him to do it, and acknowledge the Holy See.

In the 288th he reproves the Arch-Biſhop of Vienna for favouring the Allies of Boſon, and Cites him to Rome.

The 292d is written to the ſame Arch-Biſhop, and blames him for cauſing Optandus Biſhop of Geneva to be apprehended, and Ordaining another in his place. He Cites him a ſecond time to Rome.

In the 293d he complains to the Emperour, that the Marqueſs Guy had ſeized on the Goods of the Church of Rome, and refuſed to do him Juſtice; deſiring him to come in Perſon and do him right.

By the 294th he Abſolves the Biſhop of Naples, provided he break the Alliance made with the Sarazens, and ſtrangle the moſt Guilty of thoſe that are in his hands, and ſend him the reſt.

The 295th is an Anſwer to Oteran Arch-Biſhop of Vienna, who to clear himſelf, writ to the Pope, That he had Ordained a Biſhop for Geneva before the Arrival of Optandus. The Pope anſwered, That 'twas well known to the World how long that Church had been without a Biſhop; and that 'twas for that Reaſon, and the Neceſſity of that Church, that he had Ordained Optandus Biſhop of that place. That he ought not to object this againſt him, that he was not of that Church; ſince he himſelf was neither a Clerk, nor Inſtructed nor Baptized in the Church of Vienna, of which he was now Biſhop. He Cites him to the Synod at Rome with Adalbart Biſhop of Maurienne, who was Accuſed of having injured the Biſhop of Grenoble; 'tis to him that the following Letter is directed.

The 297th is to Michael King of Bulgaria, whom he often Exhorts to ſend Ambaſſadors, and ſubmit to the Holy See.

In Letter the 298th, written to the Empreſs and Luitwardus Biſhop of Vercelli, he entreats her to preſs the Emperour to aſſiſt him againſt the Infidels, and to ſend Engelberga to Rome.

By Letter the 299th, Directed to Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan; he Confirms the Privileges of the Church of Milan, and Exhorts him to Labour and Pray for the Church of Rome: Here end the Letters of the XIVth Indiction, and begin thoſe of the XVth, beginning in September 881.

In the 300th Letter, he enjoyns the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna to reſtore to Dean John all he had taken away from him.

In the 301ſt, he orders the Clergy of Ravenna to Apprehend Maimbert, whom he had Excommunicated, and ſend him to him.

By the following, he adviſeth his firm Friend to do it with Expedition; he enjoyns the ſame thing to Duke John, in Letter 303.

The 304th is a Condoling Letter, written to the People of Ravenna for the Death of their Biſhop: He Confirms the Election they had made of an Other, and charges them to reſpect him. He recommends to them the Dukes Deus Dedit and John, together with their Eſtates.

In Letter the 305th to the Abbot Hugh, he deſires him to Exhort King Lewis to come to Rome, and warns him to ſhun the Communion of Formoſus, of John Arch-Biſhop of Rouen, Adelard Arch-Biſhop of Tours, and Frotarius Arch-Biſhop of Bourges.

Letter 306 is Directed to King Charles, whom he entreats to Confirm King Carloman in his good Intentions toward the Roman Church.

In the 307th, he ſends to Suppo to meet him at Mount Cenis, and to bring thither to him the Princeſs Engelberga, Anſpert Arch-Biſhop of Milan, Wibodus Biſhop of Parma, and ſome other Perſons of Truſt.

In 308th, he commends to a Biſhop the Care of a Vacant Church, till it be provided of a Paſtor.

The following Letters are not ſet down according to the Order of their Dates.

In Letter the 309th, written to Aldephonſus King of Gallicia, and all the Chriſtians of that Country: he makes the Church of Oviedo a Metropolitan Church, with Authority over the Kingdom of Gallicia. In the next he adviſes that Prince to have the Church of S. Jame's Conſecrated by the Spaniſh Biſhops, and deſires ſome Moor-Cavaliers to ſerve againſt the Enemies of the Church of Rome.

In the 311th he grants the Communion to ſome Prieſts of Salerno, who tho Excommunicated by Pope Nicholas his Predeceſſor, yet were ſuffered to Exerciſe their Functions, on condition they ſhould Faſt every Monday and Friday for three years.

The 312th is a Fragment of a Letter written to the King of the Bulgarians, accuſing him of Schiſm, becauſe he Received the Sacrament of ſuch People as the Church of Rome counted Excommunicated.

In the 313th, he Creates Anſegiſus his Vicar in France and Germany with Power to Aſſemble Synods, if need required, and to regulate the Affairs of that Country: He orders him alſo, to Publiſh the Decrees of the Holy See, and to refer to him all Affairs of Difficulty or Conſequence.

In the 314th, he gives leave to Hincmarus Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, to Ordain in the Church of Laon, him that was choſen in the place of his Depoſed Nephew; this Letter is Dated on the fifth of January, Indiction IX. that is to ſay the year 876.

Letter the 315th, Directed to the Biſhops and Arch-Biſhops of the Kingdom of Lewis of Bavaria; he ſmartly reproves them, for not hindering their King from Entering into the Kingdom of Charles the Emperour; and he acquaints them, that he hath ſent two Legates to Compoſe the Differences between thoſe Princes, and to Excommunicate him that ſhall not agree to their Deciſions.

He

He writes the ſame thing to the Counts of the Kingdom of Bavaria in the following Letter: On the contrary, he praiſes the Prelates and Counts of the Empire, becauſe they continued faithful to him: and reproves in Letter the 318th, thoſe that had abandon'd him.

Letter 319th is directed to all the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Prieſts, Judges and People of France and Germany. He gives them to underſtand, That Gregory Nomenclator and George his Son-in-law, having been Impeached before the Roman Church, and Accuſed in two Writings, he had Cited them by two Biſhops, and by his Secretary, who had delivered them Copies of the Accuſations againſt them; that they had put off their Appearance from day to day, and in the mean time had conſpired to Introduce the Sarazens into Rome. That not being able to affect their Deſigns, and the Day of their Trial approaching, they had by Night opened a Gate of the City, and fled with Biſhop Formoſus, and ſome others, that had conſpired againſt the Emperour Charles. That he had ſent two Biſhops to Cite them, but not finding them; and having put off their Trials to another Day, and ſent again without ſucceſs to ſeek them, he had aſſembled a Council, and pronounced againſt them the following Sentence: That Formoſus Biſhop of Porto, heretofore ſent Ambaſſadour by Pope Nicholas to the King of Bulgaria, had engaged that Prince to receive no other Biſhop ſent by the Holy See but himſelf: Alſo being Convicted of having done his Endeavours to paſs from his Biſhoprick to that of Rome; of having quitted his Church; fled out of Rome, and Conſpired againſt Charles the Emperour; ſhould be Excommunicated and Deprived of his Prieſtly Office, if he did not appear to juſtifie himſelf within Fifteen days, that is to ſay, by the Second of May, and that without hopes of Reſtoration, if he paſt Twenty days without appearing. That Gregory, Stephen, George, Sergius and Conſtantine, Authors and Accomplices of the ſaid Conſpiracy, and Guilty of divers other Crimes, ſhould be alſo Excommunicated unleſs they appeared within Ten days, and be for ever Anathemized, if they do not do it in Fifteen. He adviſeth by this Circular Letter all Prelates and Believers not to Communicate with them; and declares thoſe that do ſo, Excommunicated as well as they.

Letter the 320th is directed to Photius, and written concerning the Addition of the Filioque added to the Creed: Pope John the Eighth diſapproves of it.

Theſe Letters are followed by ſome Fragments of others, written by John the Eighth, gathered out of Gratian.

In the firſt, taken out of a Letter written to the Biſhop of Vannes, he determins, that a Biſhop having committed Manſlaughter, can never perform Prieſtly Functions afterwards.

In the Second, out of a Letter written to Roſtagnus Arch-Biſhop of Arles, That the Sacrament cannot be given to a Perſon raviſhed, till ſhe hath quitted her Raviſher.

In the third, cited out of a Letter to the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, he ſubmits to the Judgment of this Metropolitan, an Excommunicated Prieſt who had been put to Penance by ſome Biſhops of his Province, and adviſes him to take ſix Biſhops with him to judge of it.

In the fourth he writes to the Arch-Biſhop of Cologne, That he cannot grant him the Pall, becauſe in the Letter by which he deſired it, he neither ſpoke according to the Cuſtom of Univerſal Councils, nor the Decrees of the Popes, and that he had not ſigned the Letter, nor ſent any one to teſtifie the Truth of it by Oath.

Laſtly, There is a Fragment of a Conſtitution concerning the Cardinals, attributed to Pope John the VIIIth; which orders, that they ſhall be preſent at leaſt twice a Month in the Churches, to which they are entituled, that they may inform themſelves of the demeanour of the Clergy, prevent diſorders, and judge of all differences between the Clergy and Laity in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; he alſo commits to their Charge, the care of Monaſteries; he likewiſe commands them to be twice a Week at the Palace, according to the Command of Leo the IVth, to regulate Affairs there. In fine, He grants them half the Revenues and Contribution of the Pariſhes of Rome, upon Condition that they perform Divine Service there. Theſe Conſtitutions do not appear to be ſo ancient as John the VIIIth.

Father Labbe hath made an Addition of ſome Letters, which he ſuppoſes to belong to Pope John the VIIIth: but either they are forged as the three firſt, or they are Grants of Privileges, which are not of John the VIIIth's, only as the fourth and the ſixth; or they are found elſewhere as the fifth, which differs not from Letter 113th, and the ſeventh, which is a Paper of Inſtruction, given to the Legates ſent to Conſtantinople, about the Affair of Photius. [Theſe Letters of Pope John's are Extant in Tome IX. of the Councils, with the Fragments.]

After John the VIIIth, the See was held by Marinus, and afterwards by Adrian the IIId, they lived but a ſhort time, and did nothing conſiderable. Stephen the Vth who Succeeded, writ two Letters into the Eaſt; one to the Emperour Baſilicus, and the other to the Oriental Biſhops, about the Affair of Photius. There is alſo a little Letter that bears his Name, to Robert Biſhop of Mets, in which 'tis Decided, that a Clerk having loſt one Finger, might be Promoted to Holy Orders.

A Fragment of another Letter to Fulke Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, in favour of Teutboldus choſen Biſhop of Langres; which Commands him to put him in poſſeſſion of that Biſhoprick. I do not mention another in favour of the Church of Narbonne, againſt the rights of the Church of Tarragon, which is a ſuppoſititius Monument full of falſities. [His Epiſtles are in Tom. IX. of the Councils.]

At the end of this Age, the Church of Rome was troubled by the Election of Formoſus Biſhop of Oſtia, Tranſlated to the Biſhoprick of Rome; This Man had been Depoſed by Pope John the VIIIth: But being returned under the Papacy of Marinus, he uſed all arts and intereſt to obtain the Holy See; but finding himſelf hated and rudely uſed by the Romans, he procured the Emperour Arnoldus to come to Rome, who Beheaded ſeveral of the Chief of that City, who came to meet him. After his Death, which happened in the year 896, about the fifth or ſixth of his Popedom, the Holy See was Diſputed between Boniface and Stephen.

This laſt being an Enemy to Formoſus's Memory, dug up his Corps, dreſt him, and ſtript him of his Pontifical Habit, and after having cut off his Fingers, threw him into the Tyber; and Declared, that all whom he had Ordained ſhould be Ordained anew; and made this cruel and unreaſonable Proceeding be approved of by a Council held at Rome: But Pope Romanus that ſucceeded him in the year 900, revok'd what his Predeceſſor had done: And his Papacy, and that of his Succeſſor Theodorus laſting but few Months, John the IX in a Council, Diſannulled all that had been done againſt Formoſus, declared all his Ordinations good, Condemned to the Fire the Acts of the Council, held under Stephen the IVth, Excommunicated thoſe that had dug up Formoſus's Body, and forbid for the future all ſuch like Proceedings.

Theſe laſt Popes have written very little: There are two Letters of Formoſus's; one to Stilianus about the Affairs of the Eaſt, another to the Biſhops of England; but the latter which is likewiſe attributed to Pope Leo the Vth belongs to neither of them, being writ at a Council, ſuppoſed to be held the year 905. which neither agrees with the time of Formoſus's being Pope, nor with the Reign of King Edward, in whoſe time this Council is placed. They Attribute to Stephen the VIth, two Letters to the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, but both ſeem to be Suppoſititious. As to the Letters of John the IXth, we ſhall ſpeak of them in the Hiſtory of the following Age.

CHAP. XVII.

Containing the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Lives and Martyrologies of the Saints.

THis Age had but few Writers, who attempted to give an account of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of it in General, but had an abundance of Authors, who compos'd the ſingle Lives of ſeveral Saints.

Among the Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Hiſtorians of the firſt ſort, which flouriſh'd in this Age, we may reckon Sergius, of whom Photius [Cod. 67] ſpeaks; and aſſures us, That this Author wrote an Hiſtory of all things memorable, both in Church and State, from the Time of Copronymus to the 8th Year of Michael Balbus, which was the 828th Year of Jeſus Chriſt. It is evident that he was a Layman and a military Officer. Since he relates alſo the Actions of the Army, as well as his Thoughts concerning the Diſputes, then on Foot, about Religion: We have not this Work. Photius obſerves, That his Style was clear, elegant and unaffected: He uſed very proper Words and Expreſſions; that his Compoſure was very curious and his Method pleaſant, eaſie and Natural; which he judges the beſt Properties of an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian. Sergius.

Eginhardus, Secretary to Charles the Great, and founder of the Monaſtery of Selgenſtat upon the Maine, in the Dioceſe of Mentz, Wrote the Life of Charles the Great, and the Annals [of the moſt obſervable Things done in the Reign of King Pepin, Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly] beginning at the Year 741. and ending at 829. [Both theſe Works are printed together at Cologn, 1521. quarto, at Francfort 1584. in fol. and 1594. in octavo.] We have alſo ſome Letters of his [viz. 62 put forth by Du Cheſne, in his Appendix, Tom. 2.] a Treatiſe upon the Croſs, and an account of the Tranſlation of the Reliques of S. Marcellinus and S. Peter, which Ratlavius and Dieudo cunningly conveyed out of the Church of S. Tiburtius, near Rome. [This laſt Treatiſe is extant in Surius, June 2d. and the other is quite periſhed.] Eginhardus.

Theganus, a Suffragan of the Biſhoprick of Treves, hath written an Hiſtory of Lewis the Kind [or Godly.] [Pithœus hath put it out, with the French Writers of this Age, at Francfort, 1594. p. 291. And Du Cheſne in his Collection of the ſame Writers, Tom. 2.] He flouriſhed from the Year 810. to 840. or thereabouts. Theganus Petrus Siculus, being ſent, in 870. by the Emperor Baſil to Tibrica, in Armenia, to procure the exchange of ſome Priſoners; and there having had ſome Conferences with the Manichees of that Country, call'd Paulitians, made a Treatiſe, containing The Hiſtory of [the Riſe, Progreſs and Downfal of] the Manichees, and the Doctrines which they maintained. This Treatiſe hath been tranſlated by Raderus [a Jeſuit] and Printed in Greek and Latin at Ingolſtadt, in 1604. and in Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. 16.] It is dedicated to an Archbiſhop of Bulgaria. In it he reduces the Errors of the Manichees to ſix principal Heads, which are theſe. 1. That there are two Principles, a good one and an evil; the one the Creator and Governour of this World, the other of the World to come. 2. That Jeſus Chriſt was not born of the Virgin. 3. That the Elements in the Sacrament, are not converted into the very Body and Blood of Chriſt. 4. That they contemn and diſgrace the Croſs. 5. That they reject the Books of the Old Teſtament and S. Peter's Epiſtles. 6. That they account the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtery of Prieſts and Elders unneceſſary. He then relates the Story of Manes and his Sect. All that he ſays is taken out of the Catechiſes of S. Cyril of Jeruſalem and Epiphanius. He promiſed a Confutation of theſe Errors, but hath not done it in that Treatiſe. F. Sirmondus ſaw a Confutation of two of theſe Articles, by ſeveral Texts of Scripture, in a MS. in the Vatican Library. Petrus Siculus.

But, of all the Eccleſiaſtical Authors of this Age, there is none more famous than Anaſtaſius, an Abbot and Library-Keeper of the Church of Rome, who flouriſhed under the Popedoms of Nicolas I. Adrian II. and John VIII. He was ſent by Lewis II. Emperor of Italy, to Baſil Emperor of the Eaſt [to obtain a Marriage between his Maſter's Daughter and Baſil's Son] and was preſent at [the laſt Seſſion of] * the VIII. Council; where he was of great uſe to the Pope's Legates, becauſe he underſtood both the Greek and Latin Tongues well. He hath tranſlated the Acts of this Council, and of the VII. [at Nice] with ſeveral other Records of the Greek Church, [which are extant in Tom. 7 and 8 of the Councils;] as alſo a a three-fold Chronology; containing [a Collection of ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Matters as are related in] the Chronica of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Georgius Syncellus and Theophanes, from the Beginning of the World to the Reign of Leo Armenus [put out by Fabrotus, at Paris, 1649. with his own Notes.] A Collection of ſeveral Pieces concerning the Hiſtory of the Monothelites, publiſhed by F. Sirmondus [at Paris] Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius.

* This Council, which paſſes for the 8th General Council in Coriolanus's Collection, is rejected both by the Greeks and Romaniſts, for an unlawful one, being called without the Conſent of the Weſtern Emperors, and managed by the Iconolatræ, or Image-Worſhippers, with Force and Cruelty, againſt Iconomachi, eſpecially the great Photius, who was depoſed from his See of Conſtantinople, and Ignatius put into it.

in 1620. [and in the Biblioth. Patr. To. 12. p. 831.] The Life of S. John the Alms-giver, Patriarch of Alexandria, mentioned by Sigibert and Trithemius [is not extant] and the Martyrdom of S. Demetrius, publiſhed by F. Mabillon, in his Analects, Tom. 1. [p. 65.] His Tranſlations have all Prefaces to them, made by him, and very well written: But his moſt excellent one is that which he hath prefixed to the Verſion of S. Dionyſius the Areopagite, made by Erigenes, where he ſpeaks of the Scholia which he had tranſlated. He is commonly thought to be the Author of the Popes Lives, which bear the Name of Pope Damaſus, but falſly, and they are printed under Anaſtaſius's Name at Mentz, in 1612. [1602.] But 'tis doubtful whether they are all his, and many believe that they are a Compoſure, taken out of ſeveral Authors. F. Labbe aſſures us, That he ſaw a MS. written in Charles the Great's Time, which contain'd the Lives of the firſt Popes; which, if it be true, this Work cann't be all Anaſtaſius's. I am of Opinion, that the Lives of the firſt Popes, as far as Damaſus, were written by a more ancient Author, who put them out under Damaſus's Name: But the latter are Anaſtaſius's, who reviewed them, and put them in that Form they now are in, and concluded them with the Life of Nicholas I. for I take the Lives of the five following Popes to be written by William, who ſucceeded Anaſtaſius in the Office of Library-keeper, in the Church of Rome. Nevertheleſs Anaſtaſius might write the Life of Adrian II. for he certainly outliv'd him: And perhaps he lived long enough to write the Lives of the four following Popes. He wrote tolerable good Latin, and was a learned Man for his Time. He was a good Polititian, and ſtudied the Intereſt of the Church of Rome.

The Anonymous Author of the Liber Synodicus.

There remains only the Author of the Treatiſe, called Liber Synodicus, whoſe Name is unknown. His Work is, An Abridgment of the firſt Councils, commonly called, The little Synodical Book: It ends with the Council held by Photius in 877. which is accounted the VIII. General Council, which makes it probable that he lived about the end of the IX. Age. This Work hath been Printed at Strasburg in 1601 [in quarto,] and ſince is put by F. Labbe into the laſt Collection of the Councils. It is a very ſhort and plain Abridgment, and contains nothing conſiderable or extraordinary about the Hiſtory of the Councils.

Michael Syncellus.

The number of the Hiſtorians of this Age, which have written the Lives and Panegyricks of the Saints, is very great; The chief of them are theſe that follow: Michael Syncellus of the Patriarch Nicephorus; and, after his Death, deſigned for his Place, by the Empreſs Theodora: But he refuſed to accept that Dignity. He wrote the Life of S. Dionyſius [the Areopagite] and made a Panegyrick in Honour of the Holy [Archangels and] Angels: In which, after he hath invoked them, and diſtinguiſhed their ſeveral Orders, he ſpeaks of their good Offices, which they perform to Men, and relates ſeveral Examples to prove it out of Holy Scripture. Laſtly, he makes ſeveral Exclamations, by way of Encomium. There is an Hymn at the end of this Diſcourſe, publiſhed by F. Combefis [in his Auctuar. Nov. Tom. 1. p. 1525.] and is found in the Biblioth. Patr. The Style of it is lofty, full of great Words and affected Epithets.

Methodius

Methodius, preferr'd to the Patriarchate of the Church of Conſtantinople in 842. is alſo the Author of S. Dionys's Life, which is extant at the end of the Works of that Father [printed at Antwerp in 1634. Tom. 2. 'Tis alſo printed alone at Florence, 1516. Paris 1562.] Some Fragments alſo of two Sermons, printed by Gretzer [in his Tom. 2. de Cruce] are attributed to him; The one is concerning the Benefit of the Death of Chriſt, and the Reaſons why he would dye upon the Croſs. The other is againſt thoſe that are aſhamed of the Croſs of Chriſt. To theſe we may add, The Encomium of S. Agatha, tranſlated into Latin by F. Combefis, in his Biblioth. Concionat. Patr. and is ſaid to be in MS. in the Library of S. Mark at Venice. Some alſo attribute to him a Sermon upon S. Simeon; and another upon the Sunday, called Dominica in Ramis [or Palm-Sunday, which is the Sunday before Eaſter-day] which F. Cambefis hath printed among the Works of the elder Methodius [who flouriſhed in 290. at Paris in 1644.] although it be very doubtful whether they be ſo ancient, as we have obſerved in ſpeaking of the Elder Methodius. He dyed in 847. [in Balſamon's Collection of the Greek Canon we meet with ſome penitential Canons, attributed to Methodius, but the Learned judge them not to be his.]

Hilduinus Abbot of S. Medard at Soiſſons, S. German and S. David.

To Methodius we may joyn Hilduinus, the Patron of the Fable of S. Dionyſius the Areopagite's coming into France. He was Abbot of S. Medard at Soiſſons, of S. German and S. Dionys [near Paris] and chief Chaplain to the Emperor Lewis the Godly. He made a Reformation in the laſt of theſe Monaſteries, in 829. and ſettled Monks there inſtead of the Canons, formerly there. He took Lotharius's part againſt his Father, and was baniſhed into Saxony. But he was again reſtored, and after his Reſtauration he wrote his Book of the Areopagite, by the Command of Lewis the Godly. In it he undertakes to prove, That Dionyſius, the Apoſtle of France, was the Areopagite: But this Work is full of abominable Falſehoods and groſs Forgeries. He proves his Opinion by Records of ſo ſmall Authority, That his Writing diſcovers the weakneſs of the Cauſe he maintains, and his own inability to do it. This Work was printed at Cologn in 1563. and is put by Surius among the Lives of the Saints [Octob. 9.] with a Letter from Lewis the Godly to him, and his Anſwer. Hilduin dyed, according to the Opinion of ſome, in 838. and of others in 842.

David

David Nicetas, surnamed Paphlago, because he was a Bishop in Paphlagonia, altho' he was also Patriarch of Constantinople, was a great admirer of the Patriarch Ignatius, and wrote a long History of his Life [which is extant, with the Acts of the VIII. Council at Ingolstadt, 1604. quarto. and Tom. 8. of the Councils. p. 1179.] He hath also composed several Panegyricks, in honour of the Apostles and other Saints [viz. S. Mark, S. Mary, S. Gregory the Divine, S. Hyacinthus, Eustatheus, Agapius and Theopistus] printed by F. Cambefis in his last continuation of the Biblioth. Patrum [at Paris in 1672.] His Style is elegant and pleasant; his Relations are simple and plain, without being tedious. He often turns his Speech to the Saints; he commends and makes Acclamations in their Honour, according to the Custom of his Time. David Nicetas Paphlago.

Leo the Wise, Emperor of the East, may be reckoned among the Panegyrists of the Saints. He succeeded his Father Basilius in 886. and reigned till 911. He took great pleasure in composing Sermons. Baronius hath published a List of 33. [ad Annum 911. numb. 3] which are found in a MS. in the Vatican Library, Gretzer hath published 9. printed at Ingolstadt in 1600. and since, F. Cambefis hath inserted 10 in the first Tome of his Auctuar. Biblioth. Patrum. Besides these, we have a Discourse upon the Life of S. John Chrysostom, among the Works of that Father [Tom. 8.] of Savil's Edition, and a Sermon upon S. Nicolas [Bishop of Myra] printed at Toulouse in 1644. and some Predictions [viz. 17] concerning the State of Constantinople, Printed by Codinus [at the end of his Antiquities, at Paris in 1655.] Baronius mentions other Works of Leo, which are in MSS. in the Vatican Library, viz. several Discourses, Moral Precepts, Riddles or mystical Sayings, Constitutions, and [† his Tacticks, or] a Treatise of the manner of Ranging an Army in Battalia. The Sermons printed by F. Cambefis are upon the Nativity, Purification and Annuntiation of the Virgin, Palm-Sunday, the Incarnation, the Burial, Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus Christ; upon the Feast of Pentecost and Death of the Virgin, which he calls her Repose, maintaining, That she, as well as others, paid the last Debt to Nature, leaving us in doubt, whether her Body was afterwards re-united to her Soul, or whether she was put into some place to be reserved there to the General Resurrection. Leo the Wise, Emperor of the East.

† They are Printed at Basil, in 1554. and Leyden, in 1612. and 1613.

Theophanes, surnamed Cerameus [or the Potter] Bishop of Tauromenium in Sicily, liv'd about the End of the IX. Age. He hath composed several Homilies upon the Gospels and yearly Festivals, which are Printed in Greek and Latin at Paris, in 1644. Gretzer hath put out two upon the Cross. Another Bishop of the same Place, nam'd Gregory *, hath composed several Homilies upon the same Subjects, but they are not yet printed. Theophanes, Bishop of Tauromenium.

Georgius Monachus, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, and afterwards Archbishop of Nicomedia, was one of Photius's great Friends. He composed several Homilies upon the Feasts of the Virgin, published by F. Cambefis, in vol. 1. of his Auctuar. Biblioth. Patrum. They are in a copious Style, and full of Common Places, of little Benefit and tedious. Georgius Chartophylax.

* Dr. Cave places him in 1040.

Nor doth the West furnish us with fewer Historians, who wrote the Lives of the Saints of their Time, than we have seen the Eastern Empire to have done, viz.

Ludgerus, the Scholar of S. Gregory of Utrecht, having spent much Time and Labour in converting the Infidels in England and Swedeland, was made Bishop of Munster in Westphalia, in 802. He wrote the Life of his Master S. Gregory, Bishop of Utrecht, which is published by Brower [at Mentz, 1615.] who hath joyned with it a Relation of the Beginning of S. Benedict's Mission. This Life is in Tom. 2. Sæc. Benedict. III. published by F. Mabillon. Surius and Bollandus have published a Letter under Ludgerus's Name, dedicated to Rixfridus Bishop of Utrecht; which contains a Relation of the Life and Miracles of S. Switbert [but it is proved by Cointe, in his Ann. Eccl. Fran. ad ann. 779. n. 31. & 754. n. 78. by many Arguments, not to belong to this Author.] He died in 809. and his Life is written by Alfridus, the third Bishop of Munster. Ludgerus, Bishop of Munster.

[Ægil or] Eigil, fourth Abbot of Fulda, governed that Monastery from 818. to 822. He hath written a Relation of the most eminent Actions of his Master S. Sturmio [his Predecessor in the Abbacy of that Monastery:] It is put out by Brower [at Ingolstadt in 1616.] and is also in Tom. 2. Sæc. Benedict. III. The Life of S. Ægil is written by a Monk of the same Abby, named Candidus, and published by the same Authors. Ægil Abbot of Fulda.

Candidus.

Vusinus Boetius, Bishop of Poictiers, flourished from the Time of Lewis the Godly to the year 830. He wrote the Life of S. Junianus Abbot of Maire, which is extant in Tom. 1. Sæc. Benedict. put out by F. Mabillon. Vusinus Boetius, Bishop of Poictiers.

Hermenricus, a Monk of Elwangen, a Monastery in Germany, was chosen Abbot of it in 846. He wrote the Lives of S. Magnus and S. Sola, with a Dialogue about the Foundation of his Monastery. The Life of S. Sola was written about the Time that Rabanus was chosen Bishop of Mentz, about 847. It is dedicated to Rodolphus, a Monk of Fulda, under whom Ermenricus had studied. These two Lives are published by F. Mabillon. Hermenricus, Abbot of Elwangen.

Eulogius, whom some believe to have been chosen Archbishop of Toledo, suffer'd Martyrdom at Corduba in 859. in the Persecution [of the Christians in Spain] by the Saracens. He wrote the Martyrdom of the Christians which suffered for the Faith of Jesus Christ, before him, in that City. This Treatise is entituled, Memoriale Sanctorum [or, An Account of the Sufferings of Eulogius the Martyr.

of the Martyrs of Corduba] and is divided into three Books. Afterward he compoſed an Apology [or Defence] of the ſame Martyrs, againſt thoſe who denyed them that Title and Honour, for 3 Reaſons. 1. Becauſe they never did any Miracles, as the ancient Martyrs did. 2. Becauſe they did not ſuffer variety of Torments, but were put to Death preſently. 3. Becauſe thoſe that put them to Death, were not Idolaters, but Mahometans, who worſhip the true God. He anſwers theſe Objections, and continues the Hiſtory of thoſe Martyrs. Theſe 4 Books are followed by an Exhortation, or Inſtruction, which he made in Priſon, and dedicated to two Virgins, Mary and Flora, who alſo were Priſoners. [In which he gives all the Chriſtians then in Bonds for Chriſt's ſake, Arguments and Encouragements to ſuffer conſtantly, and adds] a Prayer for them to uſe in their preſent Condition. He hath alſo compoſed a Writing, dedicated to [Wilifindus] Biſhop of Pampelona, when he ſent him ſome Relicks of the ancient Martyrs of Corduba, which he had deſired of him, when he was at Pampelona. In it he ſpeaks of the Perſecution of the Chriſtians of Corduba, and ſets down the Names of the Martyrs, and the days of their death. He ſent his Inſtruction to Flora, and his Memoir of the Martyrs to his Brother Alvarus, who was then in Baniſhment in Germany, and wrote two Letters to him about the ſame matter, which Alvarus anſwered. Afterward he ſent him an Account of the Martyrdom of thoſe two Virgins, as he did alſo to Baldegoſena, Flora's Siſter. We have theſe Letters, with the Works of Eulogius, in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. 15. p. 242.] and in the IV. Tome of the Spaniſh Writers [p. 213.] Ambroſius Moralis alſo hath printed all together with his own Notes at Complutum in 1554. [which was the firſt Edition of Eulogius's Works, but Maluenda finds fault with it, becauſe he hath left out ſeveral things concerning Mahomet and his Doctrines, in the firſt and ſecond Books of his Memoir of the Martyrs, which Eulogius had written. Wherefore Poncius Leo put out a more correct Edition at the ſame place in 1574. but continued Moralis's notes.] Surius alſo hath printed his Lives of the Martyrs of Corduba.

Alvarus. Alvarus, Brother of Eulogius hath written, beſides the Anſwers to his Brother Eulogius's Letters before-mentioned [which are among Eulogius's Letters] the Hiſtory of his Brother's Martyrdom [which is prefixed before Eulogius's Works in the Complutenſian laſt Edition, and in the Biblioth. Patr. and Surius March. II. Voſſius attributes to this Author two other Treatiſes, viz. Scintillæ Patrum, which is a Collection of Moral Sentences out of the Fathers, and Indiculus Luminoſus, but they are not yet commonly received for his by Learned Men.]

Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat.

Herricus a Monk of S. Germans at Auxerre. Herricus or Erricus, born at a Village of the ſame name, viz. Hery, two Leagues from Auxerre, was a Benedictine Monk of the Abby of S. Germans in that City. He had for his Maſters Haymo [of Halberſtadt] and Lupus of Ferrara, as he himſelf tells us in the Preface to his Collection of Maxims and Things remarkable, taken out of the Holy Fathers and other ancient Writers, dedicated to Hildebald Biſhop of Auxerre, of which we have only the Preface in Tom. 7. of Mabillon's Analect. Beſides this Work, he compoſed two Books in Proſe concerning the Miracles of S. German Biſhop of Auxerre, printed by F. Labbe in the firſt Tome of Biblioth. MSS. Six Books alſo in Verſe, containing the Life of Cæſarius, undertaken by the order of Lotharius the younger and dedicated to Carolus Calus, printed at Paris [in 1543. Octavo,] with the Poem of Marius Victorinus upon Geneſis. He undertook to compoſe an Hiſtory of the Biſhop of Auxerre, with Rainogalus and Alogius, Canons of that Church. He made alſo [many] Homilies, of which we have three among the Homilies of Paulus Diaconus.

Anſcharius, a Monk of Corby. Anſcharius, a Monk of Corby, the Apoſtle of Denmark and thoſe Northern Countries, and after made Biſhop of Hamburg and Breme, hath written the Life of Wilkihadus firſt Biſhop of Breme, which was printed at Antwerp in 1642. and in the 2d part of F. Mabillon's Sæc. Bened. III. Anſcharius went into Denmark in 836. and was made Biſhop of Hamburg in 842. and the Biſhoprick of Breme was added to it in 849. He died in 865. [Anſcharius's Pſalter is extant in Cranzius Metrop. l. 1. c. 42. but his Epiſtles, of which he wrote many, are loſt.]

Rudolphus, a Monk of Fulda. Rudulphus or Rudolphus, a Scholar of Rabanus, a Prieſt and Monk of Fulda, the Preacher, and Confeſſor to Lewis King of Germany, paſſed for a very learned Man for his time. In the Annals of Fulda he hath given him the Title of an excellent Hiſtorian and Poet, and of a Man very well vers'd in all humane Sciences. He writ the Lives of Rabanus and S. Lioba, Abbeſſes of Priscoſhten, which are in F. Mabillon's Sæc. Benedict. and in Surius and Bollandus's Acts of the Lives of the Saints. The laſt of theſe Lives was compoſed out of the Records and Collections of a Prieſt named Mago, who had converſed with four of the Scholars of S. Lioba [viz. Agatha, Thecla, Nana, and Eoliba. This Author died in 865.

Iſo, a Monk of S. Gallus. Iſo, a Monk of S. Gallus, wrote about the year 860. two Books containing the Lives and Miracles of S. Othmarus, Abbot of S. Gallus, which are alſo put out in Tom. II. Sæc. Ben. III. He died in 871.

Alfridus Biſhop of Munſter, and Orthegrinus, a Monk of Werthin. Alfridus and Orthegrinus, of which the firſt was Biſhop of Munſter, and the other a Monk of Werthin, have each of them written the Life of S. Ludgerus the firſt Biſhop of Munſter. They are both printed in the Sæc. Benedict. Alfridus was the third Biſhop of Munſter after Ludgerus, ſucceeding to Jeffrey the Nephew of this Saint in 839. and died in 849. Orthegrinus or Hildegrinus, wrote before him.

Ermentarius Abbot of Noicmantier. Ermentarius, Abbot of Noicmontier, wrote an Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of the Body of S. Philibert, which the Monks of that Abbey were forced to carry into ſeveral places, to keep it from the burning of the Normans. 'Tis publiſhed by F. Chiffletius, and ſince by F. Mabillon.

Milo, called Sigebert, a Monk of S. Amandus, hath compoſed, in Verſe, the Life of that Saint, and a Treatiſe of Sobriety, dedicated to King Charles. We have this Life of Amandus, divided into 4 parts, with a Supplement to another Life of the ſame Saint, and the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of his Relicks, in the Acts of Bollandus. Surius hath publiſhed an Homily under his Name upon the Life of Principius Biſhop of Soiſſons. F. Audin hath publiſhed a piece, in Verſe, of this Author's, which is a Dialogue between the Spring and Winter. [He died in 872. and is buried in his Monaſtery. His Epitaph celebrates him for the Author of his Treatiſe of Sobriety and Life of Amandus.] Milo, a Monk of S. Amandus. Voſſ. de Hiſt Lat.

Aimonius, of whom we are ſpeaking in this Paragraph, is a different Perſon from the Author of the Hiſtory of France. This laſt was a Monk of S. German de Prez, the other was the Abbot of Fleury. The one wrote at the end of the 9th Age, and the other at the beginning of the 11th. This, of whom we are ſpeaking, hath deſcribed the Finding and Tranſlation [of the Body] of S. Vincent, and made two Books upon the Miracles of S. German Biſhop of Paris. A Book upon the Tranſlation of the Martyrs S. George the Monk, S. Aurelius and S. Natalia, and two Books of their Miracles. Theſe Works are printed by F. Mabillon in Sæc. Benedict. [3 and 4.] and in other Collections [viz. Surius, July, 25. &c.] Aimonius, a Monk of S. German de Prez.

We muſt diſtinguiſh the two Abbo's as well as the two Aimonius's. The firſt was a Monk of S. German de Prez [or de Pratis] as well as the firſt Aimonius, and lived at the ſame time with him; the other was co-temporary with the ſecond Aimonius, and a Monk of the ſame Abby of Fleury. This laſt is the Author of a Poem divided into two Books, containing the Hiſtory of the Siege of Paris by the Normans, in 886, and 887. This Work is dedicated to Goſcelinus (not the Biſhop of Paris, but a Deacon of the ſame name) and hath been printed ſeveral times in the Collections of the French Hiſtorians. He hath a third Book, which is not yet printed. This Author hath made ſome Sermons, which are in MS. at S. German de Prez, of which F. Dacherius hath choſen out 5. and printed them in Tom. 9. Spicil. with an Adverſiſement to the Reader, in which he ſays, That he made theſe Sermons at the requeſt of Frotarius Biſhop of Poictiers and Fulradus Biſhop of Paris, That the Clergy might make uſe of them to inſtruct the ignorant Laity. Four of theſe Sermons are upon Holy Thurſday. In them Abbo obſerves, That this was the day on which Jeſus Chriſt celebrated the Paſſover with his Diſciples, and gave them the ſacred Memorials of his Body and Blood; That the Biſhops conſecrate the Holy Oyl and the Altars, and the Pavements of the Churches are waſhed, and thoſe Penitents abſolved and received to Communion, who had been excommunicated at the beginning of Lent. And upon this laſt Point it is that he chiefly enlarges in thoſe Sermons, exhorting the Penitents to turn unto God with all their Hearts, that they may receive the benefit of Abſolution, to renounce their Sins, and lead a Chriſtian Life for the future. The third is addreſſed to the Penitents before their Aſolution. He comforts them under the delays of Abſolution, telling them, That the Biſhop can't abſolve them till they have performed their Pennance, and ſhewed a real ſorrow for their Sins. Nullus eſt certe Epiſcopus, qui poſſit abſolutionem dare, niſi poſt pœnitentiam factam, & dignam ſatisfactionem. He exhorts them earneſtly to obſerve the Lent-Faſt. The fourth is directed to the abſolved Penitents. He compares the ſtate they were in before Reconciliation to that they are now in, and exhorts them not to make their Repentance of no advantage to them, by relapſing into their Sins. The laſt Sermon is upon the ſettlement of the Chriſtian Religion, whoſe excellency he commends by the price it coſt. For the ſake of this it was that Jeſus Chriſt died and roſe again, that the Apoſtles laboured and ſuffered ſo much, that ſo many juſt Men have been martyred, that ſo many Confeſſors have given ſuch Examples of Virtue, and diſperſed that Light in the World; that ſo many Men have retreated into Monaſteries, founded and eſtabliſh'd by the piety of the Kings and Princes of the Earth. This gives him an occaſion to inveigh againſt thoſe, that take away the Revenues of Churches and Monaſteries. He comforts the Chriſtians that ſuffered Wrongs, and ſhews them, That they ought to content themſelves with a few worldly Things, and labour for a Celeſtial Treaſure, where theſe Extortioners, which ſpoil the Church, the Normans, who plunder and rob to enrich themſelves, muſt expect the Torments of Hell. Abbo, a Monk of S. German de Prez.

Wolfardus or Wolfadus, a Prieſt and Monk of Hatennede in the Dioceſe of Eicſtat, compoſed, about the end of the 9th Age the Life of S. Walpurga, and dedicated it to Erkenwald Biſhop of Eicſtat [by whoſe Command he made them] and three Books of Miracles of that Holy Woman. He promiſed a Dialogue concerning that Saint, which we have not. Other of his Books are printed in the Collections of Caniſius, Bollandus and F. Mabillon. Wolfadus, a Monk of Hatennede.

Hugbaldus [Huchaldus or Hubaldus] the Nephew and Scholar of Milo, a Monk of S. Amandus, flouriſhed in the 9th Age, and was very long-lived. He was accounted a Man of great Learning in his time. He made a Poem of 300 Verſes, dedicated to Charles the Bald, in commendation of Baldneſs, of which almoſt all the Verſes begin with the Letter C. But 'tis not for the ſake of this Work [tho' it hath been thought worth the printing at Baſil in 1516. and 1546. and at Frankfort in 1624.] that we mention this Author; nor for the ſake of his Book of Muſick [ſpoken of by Sigebert] but becauſe he compoſed the Lives of S. Aldegondes Abbeſs of Malbod, S. Rictrudres Abbeſs of Marchieme, and S. Lebwin, a Prieſt, printed by Surius and Bollandus on May 12. and Mabillon [Sæc. Bededict II.] Sigebert ſpeaks of this Author, and Hugbaldus a Monk of S. Amandus.

attributes to him the Lives of ſeveral other Saints, [in his Book De Script. Cap. 108.]

Alfredus, or Elfridus [or Aluredus] King of Englund, was ſent by his Father Ethelwolf, [King of the Weſt Saxons] to Rome, where he was Crowned in the year 872, by Pope Leo IV. He was a great lover of Learning and Learned Men; He Tranſlated ſeveral Latin Authors into the Saxon Tongue, and publiſhed them in his own name, viz. Bede's Hiſtory of England, Paulus Oroſius's Hiſtory, S. Gregory's Paſtoral, &c. He compoſed ſome Laws. The Saxon Tranſlation of Bede's Hiſtory was Printed at Cambridge in 1644, with his Laws and Prefaces to S. Gregory's Paſtoral and P. Oroſius. His Laws alſo are inſerted in Spelman's Councils, and in the 9th. Tome of the Councils, p. 582. The 1. commands the payment of Tythes. The 2. Is againſt thoſe that rob Churches. The other are about Civil matters. This King died in the year 900. Father Collet hath Publiſhed his Will [out of Aſſerius Menevenſis.]

Rembertus Archbiſhop of Breme.

Rembertus, Arch-biſhop of Breme, wrote the Life of his Predeceſſor Anſcharius, Printed at Cologne, with the Lives of the other Biſhops of that Church. 'Tis alſo in the Collections of Bollandus and Father Mabillon. Rembertus was choſen Biſhop after the Death of Anſcharius, in 865, and died in 888.

Herimbertus, a Monk of Mount Caſſin.

Herembert, [or Erchempert,] a Monk of Mount Caſſin, lived at the end of the 9th. Age; he made a Chronicon, printed at Naples, in 1626, by the care of Caracciolus a Theatin Prieſt.

Almanus a Monk of Hautivilliers.

Almannus, a Monk of Hautevilliers in the Dioceſe of Reims, Compiled at the requeſt of Theudonus his Biſhop, the Life of S. Memnus the firſt Biſhop of Chalons. Father Mabillon in Tome 2. Analect, hath put out a Letter of that Biſhop to him, and his Anſwer with an Extract of the Regiſter for Burials in the Abby of Hautevilliers; which ſhew that this Author made the Lamentations of France Ravaged by the Normans, and the Lives of S. Nivard Arch-biſhop of Reims, Sindulphus a Recluſe and Prieſt, the Empreſs S. Helena, and the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of her Relicks [from Rome] to the Monaſtery of Haute-villiers, with ſeveral other Works.

Adelinus Biſhop of Seez.

Adelinus, [or Adelelinus, or Adelmus] ſucceeded Hildebrand in the Biſhoprick of Seez after 877, and govern'd that Church till the Year 910. He wrote the Life of S. Opportuna the Abbeſs, Siſter of Godegrand the firſt Biſhop of Seez. It was publiſhed by Surius, Bollandus, in April 22, and by F. Mabillon in Tome 2. Sæc. Benedict. III.

Otfredus a Monk of Weiſſemburg.

Otfredus, a Benedictine Monk of the Abby of Weiſſenburg, and Scholar of Rabanus, Compos'd an Hiſtory of the Goſpel in the Teutonick Tongue, that the People that did not underſtand the Greek nor Latin, might read and underſtand the Goſpel. He divided this Work into five Books, which contain'd the principal circumſtances of the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, taken out of the Four Evangeliſts, and digeſted into the order of Time. He Dedicated it to Luctbertus Arch-biſhop of Mentz, by a Latin Letter which he uſed inſtead of a Preface; it is Printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum; but the Work it ſelf is not yet made Publick. Trithemius makes mention of ſome other Treatiſes of this Author, Dedicated to King Lewis, Biſhop Solomon, and the monks of S. Gallus. Three Volumes upon the Pſalms; a Treatiſe of the laſt Judgment; another of the Joys of Heaven, ſeveral Letters, and many pieces of Poetry.

Aldrevaldus a Monk of Fleury.

Aldrevaldus [Aldelbertus] and Albertus, a Monk of Fleury lived towards the end of the 9th. Age. He wrote an Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of S. Benedict and S. Scholaſtica, and a Book of the Miracles of S. Benedict. Theſe works are in the Library of the Monaſtery of Fleury.

Aſſerius Biſhop of Sherburn.

Aſſerius, [Menevenſis] Biſhop of [Sherburn in] England, flouriſhed about 890, and died in 909. He wrote the Hiſtory of the Acts of Alfredus his King, which was Printed in 1602 at Francfort, with other Engliſh Hiſtorians; [Bale ſays he wrote the Annals of England, ſome Homilies, and ſome other Works, but we have them not. He is accounted an Author of good Credit.]

We muſt not forget the Martyrologies which were perfected in this Age. In the beginning of the laſt Century, venerable Bede took much pains in this matter, and made two Martyrologies, the one in Proſe, the other in Verſe, but both of them being Imperfect, Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, made ſeveral Additions to Bede's Martyrology, in the Age we are ſpeaking of, and put it almoſt into that form it is at preſent in, as is obſerved by Bollandus, who hath publiſhed the true Martyrology of Bede, with Florus's Additions, in his 2. Tome of March.

Wandelbert, a Monk of Prom.

Wandelbert, a Deacon and Monk of Prom, a Monaſtery in the Dioceſe of Treves, compoſed about the year 850, a Martyrology, in [Heroick] Verſe, taken out of Bede and Florus. Sigebert and Trithemius make mention of him. It has been Printed under the name of Bede at the end of Bede's Ephemerides in the Baſil Edition, and afterwards by Molanus at the end of Uſuardus's Martyrology. But F. Dacherius hath Printed it more exact and correct in Tom. 3 Spicileg.

Rabanus of Mentz.

About the ſame time alſo Rabanus Compoſed a Martyrology, Publiſhed by Caniſius, in the VI Tome of his Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities.

Ado Archbiſhop of Vienna.

After him Ado, Arch-biſhop of Vienna Compoſed a Work of the ſame nature more exact than any of the former: He modeled it by an ancient Martyrology, which he found at Aquileia, brought thither from Rome, which contain'd the Names, Qualities, and various Torments of the Saints that ſuffer'd Martyrdom. He hath put at the beginning of his Martyrology, logy a small Tract of the Festivals of the Apostles, in which he writes the History of their Martyrdom. The same Author hath made a short Chronology from the beginning of the World to the Birth of Charles the Simple, the Son of Lewis the Stammerer, which was in 879 of our Account. He divides the duration of the World into six Ages; The 1. is from the Creation of the World to the Flood. The 2. From the Flood to the Birth of Abraham. The 3. From Abraham to David. The 4. From David to the Captivity in Babylon. The 5. From the Captivity to the Birth of our Saviour. And the 6. From the Nativity of Jesus Christ to the end of the World. This Chronology is Printed with the Works of Gregory Bp. of Tours at Paris, in 1512, and 1567, and at Basil 1568, [and by it self at Paris in 1522.] It is also inserted in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tome 16. p. 768.] His Martyrology is Published by Lippomannus in the Lives of the Fathers; and after by Bollandus in his Supplement to Surius, and last of all by Rosweidus, who first Printed the ancient Martyrology which Ado had put before his Works [at Antwerp in 1613, and at Paris in 1645.] There are also two Lives which bear the name of Ado; the one is of Desiderius Arch-bishop of Vienna, put out by Canisius in his Antiquities; and the other is of S. Theudorius an Abbot of the same City, published by F. Mabillon in Tome 1. of his Sæc. Benedict. Some think this Author Died in 814. which makes some say, that he added some years to his Chronology; but to me it seems not probable. It is most agreeable to Truth to fix his death a little after 879.

Lastly, Usuardus a Monk of S. Germans de Prez,(a) hath composed a Martyrology more considerable than any of the former, under the Reign of the Emperor (b)Charles the Bald, to whom he Dedicated it in 870. This Work being much larger, and more perfect than any that were written before upon the same Subject, was much approved and well accepted in all Churches which began to make use of it in their Offices. Some think also that the Church of Rome took it into their Services and used it, before they had one of their own. This Martyrology hath been Printed at Antwerp in 1538t and at Louain in 1568 [with Molanus's Notes and Additions] and since in several other places [as Antwerp 1583, with Hissel's Censure; but all that was displeasing to the Papists, is left out of this Edition, as Usher tells us in his Biblioth. Theol. M S.] Usuardus, a Monk of S. Germans de Prez.

To these Author's might have been added Gildas, who made a Kalendar of the Saints, of which Bishop Usher hath Printed the Preface, [in Epist. Heb. Syll. p. 55,] and some other Authors of the IXth Age, which are purposely omitted, as well as some Historical matters of little or no Consequence, which we could not think necessary to put into this Work; for it is not our design to make compleat Annals year by year, but only to explain the most important Matters treated of in this Age, which is the principal and most profitable part of Ecclesiastical History; for in that our particular Enquiry ought not to be after a meer Narration of Matters of Fact, which is of little use, but what concerns the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church, and upon Questions and Works of that nature it is that we have chiefly insisted: That our Reader may have a competent knowledge of them, we shall account it a very great happiness if this Work may be serviceable in any measure to clear the difficult Questions and confirm the important Doctrines of the Christian Religion. But how severe so ever others Censures may be upon it, it will be always some comfort to us that we have laboured in and aimed at so good a Design; and we hope that though our pains may not have the wish'd for Effect among Men, yet it shall be of some real advantage to us with him who knows and rewards the good Intentions as well as the good Actions of Men, according to the words of S. Bernard Ep. 360, Laboravimus, quantum potuimus, & si quo minus impetravimus, quod optavimus, manet tamen fructus Laboris nostri, apud Deum, apud quem nullum bonum irremuneratum est in fine. Gildas.

(a) A Monk of S. Germans.] Some make him the Abbot of Fulda and others the Abbot of S. Saviours, but it is evident that he was a Monk of S. Germans, by an ancient Manuscript of that Abbey. Some call him Issuard (b) Charles the Bald] His Book was Dedicated to Charles, some have thought it was to Charles the Great; but Aimonius a Monk of S. Germans, in his Translation of the Martyrs, Gregory, Aurelius, &c. observes, that Usuard lived in 858, and we find in that Martyrology, the Names of Eulogius and other Martyrs that suffer'd in Spain, in 857. In an ancient Manuscript of this Martyrology which may be thought the Original, we find the Death of Queen Hermentruda set down in the first place, and Charles in the second, which shews that 'twas Written after the year 869, in which the Queen died, and before 875, in which the death of Charles the Bald happened.

RIGHT HONOURABLE

AND

Right Reverend Father in God,

Lord Bishop of LONDON;

AND ONE

Of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, &c.

My Lord,

YOUR Generosity to Strangers, which all the World owns and must admire, hath Encourag'd me to Publish these Papers under the Protection of your Venerable Name. They are of such a Nature, as may in a great measure expect a favourable Reception from your Lordship, who are one of the Fathers of our Church; And may not be ungrateful to those, who would know what Luminaries shone, and what Learn'd Men Flouriſh'd even in those dark and ignorant days of Christianity.

My

The DEDICATION.

My Lord,

I will not trouble your Lordſhip with a long Account of Du-Pin's Performance, whom you very well underſtand in the Original; and much more the Fathers of whoſe Writings and Lives he has given us an Extract in this Collection. Whether I have done him Juſtice or no, your Lordſhip is the beſt Judge. Such therefore as it is, I ſubmit it and my ſelf to better Judgments, and Humbly Preſent it to your Lordſhip, as an Acknowledgment of the Honour I have of being one of,

TO THE READER.

THE greateſt Part of the Hiſtorians, who have deliver'd their Opinions concerning the Character of the Tenth Century, have repreſented it as an Age of Darkneſs, Ignorance and Obſcurity, accompany'd with Notorious Diſorders and Irregularities. The Authour of a Treatiſe, call'd, The Perpetuity of the Faith, has undertaken to Vindicate it from theſe Cenſures, and to make it appear on the contrary, That it is one of the moſt Happy Ages of the Church, and that it's Diſorders being only ſuch as were common to the Preceding, it has ſome very remarkable Advantages: But a third Writer, who would ſeem to keep the middle Way between both theſe Extremes, appears (in my Opinion) to have come nearer the Mark. For if on the one ſide, the Authour of the Perpetuity has well obſerv'd, That there were Holy Men, and ſome clear-ſighted Perſons in that Century; it cannot be deny'd on the other ſide, That Ignorance, Vices and Irregularities were not generally very predominant. The inconſiderable Number of Authours, who wrote; the few Works they left; the Rudeneſs and Barbariſm of their Stile; the Matters contain'd in their Diſſertations; and the Complaints that even thoſe Writers themſelves make, of the Diſorders which prevail'd in their Time; are evident Proofs, That the Cenſures paſs'd upon that Century, are not without ſufficient Ground: And if a due Compariſon be made, between the Writers, the Works, the Subjects treated of, the Conſtitutions of Councils, the Church-Diſcipline, and the Manners of the Chriſtians of the ſame Age, with thoſe of the preceding; it cannot but be readily acknowledg'd, That it is in many Reſpects inferiour to them.

Leſſer Perpet. Part 3. p. 368.

'Tis true indeed, that there were Irregularities in all the Ages of the Church, but that they were Commenſurate to thoſe which were ſo common in the Tenth Century; or that they were ſpread abroad ſo far, or become ſo general, is an Aſſertion, which cannot be maintain'd with any manner of probability: For who can avouch with aſſurance, That that Age had as great a ſhare in Learning and Eloquence; was as fruitful in Illuſtrious Perſonages and Eccleſiaſtical Writers; or was as productive of Excellent Works and Regular Conſtitutions, as the preceding Centuries? Who would adventure to compare the Popes John IX, X, XII, and XIII. and the other Biſhops of Rome, who liv'd in the Tenth Century, I will not ſay, to S. Leo, or S. Gregory; but even to thoſe Popes, who were leſs eminent in former Times? Or who would attempt to ſet up Ratherius, Atto, Flodoard, Luitprand, Metaphraſtes, and other Eccleſiaſtical Writers, whoſe Number is very ſmall, not to ſay in oppoſition to S. Athanaſius, S. Baſil, S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtin, Euſebius and Theodoret; but even to the more Common Authours of the preceding Ages? Upon the whole, it ought to be certainly determin'd, That 'tis not without good Reaſon, that that Century, in compariſon of the fore-going, and even of thoſe that follow it, has been generally ſtil'd, The Age of Darkneſs, Ignorance and Obſcurity. However it muſt be acknowledg'd, That 'twas not altogether Dark, and that it brought forth ſome Lights, which penetrated the Darkneſs, and diſpers'd part of the Obſcurity. The moſt Ingenious M. Du Pin follow'd theſe Luminaries, and took them for his Guides, in writing the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Age in which they flouriſh'd, and in giving an Impartial Account of the Matters treated of by them; which he has done with that Clearneſs, Generoſity and Integrity, which is ſo inſeparable from the Character of this Great Man.

CHAP. I.

An Account of the moſt Conſiderable Tranſactions in the Eaſtern Church, during the Tenth Century.

AT the beginning of this Century, Leo the Philoſopher, one of the moſt Learned Emperors the Greeks ever had, govern'd the Empire of the Eaſt. This Prince having had three Wives ſucceſſively, and no Iſſue Male by either of them, being deſirous of a Son to ſucceed him, marries a fourth Wife, by name Zoe, by whom he already had a Son before the Nuptials. But a third Marriage being prohibited in the Eaſt, and Leo himſelf having enacted a Law againſt ſuch as ſhould contract ſuch a Marriage, Nicholas the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, refuſes to marry this Prince to this fourth Wife, depoſes Presbyter Thomas who ventur'd to do it, and excommunicates the Emperor himſelf. Leo had recourſe to the Pope for his Approbation of the Marriage; and becauſe ſuch ſucceſſive Marriages (how often ſoever contracted) were tolerated in the Weſt, he eaſily obtain'd from Pope Sergius the point he deſired. This Pope ſent his Legats into the Eaſt to confirm the Marriage of Leo; but the Patriarch of Conſtantinople would not give the leaſt ground, nor acknowledge the Emperor's Marriage as valid, or his Son Conſtantine Porphyrogenneta as lawful Heir to the Crown. The Emperor did all he could to change his Mind, but finding him fix'd in his Reſolution, he baniſh'd him in the beginning of the year 901, and plac'd in his Room Euthymius, who held the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople till about the end of Leo's Reign: For Nicholas himſelf aſſures us, that this Prince, touch'd with the remorſe of what he had done, recall'd him from his Exile, and re-eſtabliſh'd him a little before his Death: In which matter he is rather to be credited, than thoſe Authors who tell us that he was recall'd by Alexander the Brother of Leo, which happen'd after the Death of this Prince, in the year 911, the time when he was declar'd Governor to Conſtantine Porphyrogenneta. Let it be how it will, Euthymius fell into diſgrace, and was baniſh'd, and dy'd ſhortly after: And Nicholas's Intereſt ſo far prevail'd, that after the Death of Alexander, who did not out-live his Brother above thirteen Months;

Nicholas the Patriarch of Conſtantinople is baniſh'd.

Nicholas is re-eſtabliſh'd.

The Letters of Nicholas Patriarch of Constantinople to the Pope and others.

Months, he was chosen Tutor of the Young Emperor. It was at this time, that he wrote a long Letter to the Pope, acquainting him of the whole Contest with the Emperor Leo about his last Marriage, and stiffly maintain'd, contrary to the Practice and Opinion of the Church of Rome, that to marry a third or fourth time was absolutely unlawful. But the Patriarch having received no answer from Rome, wrote another to Pope John, wherein he offers to observe a fair Correspondence and Union with the holy See, provided he would own that a fourth Marriage was not to be permitted to the Emperor, unless by way of Indulgence or Consideration of his Royal Person, and that in itself it was unlawful. The same Patriarch wrote several other Letters, viz. to Simeon Prince of Bulgaria, recommending the Legats which the Pope sent him: One to the Prince of Armenia, upon the Conversion of several Armenians, who had abandoned their Errors; another to the Prince of the Saracens, to dissuade him from persecuting the Christians: One wrote from the Place of his Exile to the Bishops, who had own'd Euthymius for their Patriarch; and two other Letters of Compliment, one to the Prince of Lombardy, and the other to the Prince of the Amalphitans.

The re-union of the Clergy of Constantinople.

The Empress Zoe, who had taken the Government into her own hands, and had expell'd the Patriarch Nicholas from Court in the year 914, was her self divested of her Authority in the year 919, and thrust into the Monastery of Saint Euphemia, by Patricius Romanus, whom Constantine had made his Partner in the Throne. Hitherto the Clergy of Constantinople were divided into two Parties, one declaring for Nicholas, the other for Euthymius; but were re-united in the year 920, and made a Treaty of Union in an Ecclesiastical Convocation, by which (without disanulling any thing that was past) they absolutely prohibited for the future a fourth Marriage, under the pain of Excommunication to be inflicted on those who should contract such Marriage, and to be in force during the continuance of such Marriage. They likewise inflicted a Pennance of five years on such as should marry a third time being above forty years old: And a Pennance of three years on such as should re-marry after thirty years of Age, if they had any Children by their former Marriages.

The Patriarchs of Constantinople who succeeded Nicholas.

By this Regulation was the Church of Constantinople restor'd to its former Quiet, the Peaceable possession of which Nicholas enjoy'd to his Death, which happen'd in the year 930. Stephen the Arch-bishop of Amasea was his Successor, who presided over this Church almost three years. After his Death the Patriarchal See of Constantinople was design'd for Theophilact the Emperor's Son; but he being under age, this Dignity was repos'd by way of Trust in the hands of one Tripho a Monk. He being once in possession refus'd to resign his Place to Theophilact; but the Emperor made use of one, who cunning y procur'd a Blank Paper sign'd by the Patriarch's own hand, which he fill'd up with a Resignation of the Patriarchship, as acknowledging himself unworthy of it. Whereupon he was depos'd in a Synod held at Constantinople in the year 944, and Theophilact was constituted in his place.

Theophylact an unworthy Patriarch of Constantinople.

But this Man led a Life far different from what a Patriarch ought to lead, and was more taken up with his Horses and his Hounds, and other such like Diversions, than with discharging the Duty of his Place. He died in the year 956 of a Dropsie, occasioned by a fall off his Horse, which flung him against a Wall. The Emperor constituted in his Room Polyeucta, a poor Monk, but one of extraordinary good Morals, who was Ordain'd by Basil Bishop of Cæsarea, and not by Nicephorus of Heraclea, to whom that Ordination did of Right belong. The liberty which this Patriarch took of reproving the Great Men at Court, immediately drew upon him a great many Enemies, who inclin'd the Emperor to think of Deposing him. He was confirm'd in this Resolution by Theodorus of Cizica, but notwithstanding he was so bent upon it, he died without doing any thing therein. His Son Romanus, who was suppos'd to give his Father a Lift into the other world, succeeded him in the year 960, and caus'd his Son Basil to be Crown'd by Polyeucta. But this young Prince and his Brother Constantine, not being of age to enter upon the Government when their Father died in the year 963, Nicephorus Phocas was proclaim'd Emperor by the Army, and Crown'd by Polyeucta. A while after this Patriarch had a warm debate with the Emperor: For this Emperor having marry'd Theophanes, the Widdow of Romanus, Polyeucta threaten'd to excommunicate him unless he would Renounce her: (1.) Because this was the second Marriage Nicephorus had contracted, without submitting to the Pennance due to those who were Guilty of Bigamy. (2.) Because it was reported that Nicephorus had stood Godfather to one of Theophanes's Children, the Emperor propos'd this Question to the Bishops who were then in Constantinople, and to the chief of his Council, who left him at his Liberty to keep Theophanes as his Wife: And Polyeucta himself did not insist any more on the Dissolution of the Marriage, after that the Emperor had assur'd him upon his Oath, that he had never stood Godfather to any of Theophanes's Children, which was confirm'd by Stylien, chief Secretary of State, who made a Recantation of what he had formerly said about it. This Emperor began his Reign with success, and re-took a great many Provinces of Asia from the Saracens; but he loaded his People with Taxes, and seiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church to give to his Soldiers. After the Death of any Bishops he would send a Commissary missary to seize upon their Temporalities, and prohibited the chusing any others in their stead, without his consent and orders, which was confirmed in a Synod. At the same time he would fain have had a Ratification of this Proposal, "That all Soldiers who "died in the Field, should be declar'd Saints as the Martyrs were; but the Bishops opposd it. However, they could not perswade two of their Brethren who had born Arms, and fought against the Enemy, to relinquish their Ministerial Functions; several amongst them of a more Martial Genius approving of this their Conduct. The exactions of Nicephorus, and the bad success of his Arms in Italy, having render'd him Odious to the people of Constantinople, he was kill'd in an Insurrection of them, and John, Sirnam'd Zemisces, Reign'd in his stead in the year 969. Polyeucta refus'd to Crown him, till he had banish't the Murtherers of Nicephorus, sent Theophanes from Court, and promis'd to give to the Poor, as an Expiation of his Fault, the Estate which he had when a private man. This was the last Action of Polyeucta, who dy'd five and thirty days after he had Crown'd this Prince, in the beginning of the year 970, having held the Patriarchal See of Constantinople fourteen Years. Basil the Monk succeeded him, who had the Government of that Church till the Death of John Zemisces, which happen'd about the year 975 or 976, after which the two Sons of Romanus being upon the Throne, and having re-call'd their Mother Theophanes, Basil the Patriarch was depos'd in Council, and Anthony Studita succeeded him. But he did not enjoy the Patriarchship long; for the year after Bardus, Sirnamed the Hard, having revolted and taken upon him the Quality and Ensigns of Emperor, Anthony of his own accord quitted his place and withdrew. The See of Constantinople became Vacant during four Years, the time he surviv'd. After his Death, Nicholas, Sirnamed Chrysoberge succeeded, who had Sisinnius for his Successor in the year 993. Basil and Constantine, who had subdued Bardus, Reign'd still as Emperors. Basil liv'd to the Year 1025, and his Brother Constantine liv'd three Years after him.

During this whole Century, the Greek Church, which was upon its Declension, proved very Barren, both of famous Men and good Authors. We find among them but very few who made it their business to compose, and their Works are very inconsiderable, both in respect to the Matter, and to the Manner wherein they were writ.

Simeon Metaphrastes.

ONe of those who wrote most was Simeon, Sirnam'd Metaphrastes, so call'd from his turning the Antient Lives of the Saints into another sort of a Stile than that wherein they were formerly written. He was an Officer in the Palace, Lord High Chancellor, and flourish'd in the Tenth Century, chiefly under the Reign of Constantine Porphyrogenneta. For tho he had been employ'd under the Reign of Leo, yet he writ nothing till Constantine's time, as appears by the Life of Saint Theoctista, which is his first Piece, as is observ'd in his Panegyrick written by Psellus, another Psellus than that who liv'd in the time of Constantine the Iconaclast, of whom we spoke in another place. He apply'd himself to study, and enquire into the Lives of the Saints, and having made a large Collection of them, those which he did not like he undertook to make over again, not only by casting them into a different stile, but also by adding to, or substracting from them, what he thought Convenient, and running them down into the form of a Panegyrick rather than History. We have a great many of them of his Composing, and most under his name, as well in printed Collections as in MSS.; but they are mix'd with several others, Compos'd by various Authors. There are some among the Anonymous which may be ascribed to him. It would be very difficult to make the distinction, had not the Ingenious Allatius given himself the trouble of doing it, with a great deal of accuracy, in his Dissertation concerning the Writings of the Simeons, wherein he gives us a Catalogue of the Lives of the Saints, which, in Manuscript or Print, belong properly to Metaphrastes, and which of them belong to other Authors. He reckons above an hundred which are Genuin, and almost as many more that are Spurious, whose Authors are unknown; and near four hundred and fifty whose Authors he discovers. They who have the curiosity to search further into this matter, may consult Allatius himself: As for our part, we don't think it worth our while to croud such a tedious and useless Catalogue into our Work. Besides these Lives of the Saints, Metaphrastes has compos'd several Sermons on the solemn Festivals of the year, which are to be met with in Manuscripts; and a great many Hymns and Prayers which are inserted in the Ecclesiastical Writings of the Greeks. He likewise digested four and twenty Moral discourses taken from the Works of S. Basil, and Printed together with them, and likewise publish'd by themselves in Greek at Paris, 1556. And in the Libraries there are a great many Collections of Moral Sentences taken out of S. Macarius, and an hundred one and thirty Sentences or Rules more, all compos'd by Metaphrastes. Lastly, Leo Allatius has publish'd nine Letters and several pieces of Poetry of the same Author, together with a Discourse of the Lamentation of the Virgin Mary on the Passion of our Saviour.

Simeon Metaphrastes.

John Cameniates.

John Cameniates. About the same time liv'd John Cameniates, Lecturer of the Church of Thessalonica, who wrote the History of the taking and sacking that City by the Saracens in the year 904. It was set forth by Leo Allatius in his collection of the Greek Writers.

Constantine Porphyrogenetta.

Constantine Porphyrogenetta. Constantine Porphyrogenneta is reckon'd one of the Authors of this Century. He was ingenious himself, a Lover of Learned Men, and very well vers'd in the Sciences. We have of his writing an History of the Image of our Saviour sent to Abgarus King of Edessa, and brought from Edessa to Constantinople in the year 944. This piece was publish'd by Father Cambefis, in his Collection of the Authors who wrote the History of Constantinople, and printed at Paris 1664. He likewise wrote the Life of his Grand-Father the Emperor Basil the Macedonian; which is to be met with in the Collection of Allatius. In the year 1617 Meursius set forth several Political Treatises of this Emperors composing, viz. A Treatise concerning the Government of the Empire, directed to his Son Romanus; a Book of Institutions, two Books of the Dignities of the Eastern Empire, and seventeen Novels. He likewise compos'd several Historical and Political Pandects, extracted out of all the Historians, and rang'd under three and fifty Heads, of which we have only two remaining, viz. the Seven and Twentieth, which contains the Extracts of Embassies, publish'd in Greek by Hoeschetius, printed at Ausbourg in the Year 1603, and in Latin at Paris in the Year 1609: And the Fiftieth on the Virtues and Vices, set forth by Monsieur Henry de Valois, and printed at Paris in the Year 1634.

Hippolitus the Theban.

Hippolitus the Theban. Hippolitus the Theban lived in the same Century. He composed a Chronicon, several Fragments whereof are to be met with in the third Tome of the Antiquities of Canisius, and in Monsieur Cotelier's Notes. 'Tis to this Hippolitus that we ought to attribute the small Treatise of the Twelve Apostles set forth by Father Cambefis in the Second Tome of his Additions to the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Printed at Paris in the Year 1648.]

Eutichius Patriarch of Alexandria.

Eutichius Patriarch of Alexandria. Eutichius the Egyptian, of the Country call'd Said in Egypt, born in the year 876, by Profession a Physician, and Patriarch of Alexandria from the Year 933 to the Year 940, composed several Treatises in Arabick. Those which have been Transmitted to our times, are a Treatise of Physick, a Dispute between an Heretick and a Christian, an History of Sicily from the time of the taking of that Island by the Sarazens, and Annals from the beginning of the World down to the Year 937, containing several remarkable Transactions both of Ecclesiastical and Prophane History, and which he has intituled a Methodical Disposition, or Composition of precious things, or the Substance, or Marrow of History. Selden in the Year 1642 printed at London, a Fragment of his Treatise concerning the Election and Ordination of the first Patriarchs of Alexandria, which Eutichius asserts had been done till Alexander's Time, by twelve Presbyters of that Church, who chose one among themselves for Patriarch, and laid their hands upon him. He likewise there maintains that there was not a Bishop in all Egypt till the time of Demetrius. This very Treatise has since that been published entire by Selden, and printed in the Year 1658 at London, in two Volumes in 4° both in Arabick and in Latin. 'Tis full of Fables and very Vulgar Stories.

Nico of Armenia.

Nico of Armenia. Nico of Armenia was very young, when without his Parents consent he shut himself up in the Monastery of the golden Rock, scituate between Pontus and Paphlagonia. After he had there led for a long time a very austere life, in the Year 961. he was sent out on a Mission by his Superior. He preached in Armenia, and in other Provinces of the East, and from thence went to the Isle of Crete, which had lately shaken off the Yoke of the Sarazens. He purg'd this Island from those Pagan superstitions which were still in use among them, and brought over a great many persons to the Faith. He retir'd afterwards to Lacedemonia, from whence he was sent for to Corinth, by his Prayers to put a stop the incursions of the Bulgarians. He dy'd in the year 998. He is said to be the Author of a little Treatise of the Religion of the Armenians, containing an Abridgment of their Errors, which is to be seen in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum, together with a fragment against irregular and rash excommunications, where he says that they recoyl back on those persons who dart them out too rashly.

Bul-

Nicephorus the Philosopher.

WE may likewise reckon among the Authors of this Century, Nicephorus the Philosopher, who made Funeral Orations on the Death of Anthony Patriarch of Alexandria. Nicephorus the Philosopher.

Moses Bar-Cephas.

LAstly, to these we may joyn Moses Bar-Cephas Bishop of Syria, who compos'd in Syriack a Treatise concerning Paradise, divided into three Books, set forth in Latin by Masius, Printed first at Antwerp, in the year 1569, and afterwards in the Bibliotheca Patrum. 'Tis a very large Commentary on what was said concerning Paradise in the Book of Genesis. In the first Book he treats of the Earthly Paradise: In the second, of the Mystical Paradise, that is to say, of the Mystical Significations of that which is call'd the Earthly Paradise; and in the last he treats of the Errors of Heretieks concerning Paradise, and the Objections that may be brought to the contrary. In this last Book he maintains, that Adam was created Mortal, and that God would have render'd him immortal by his Grace, if he had not sinn'd: however, he refutes Theodore and Nestorius, who had maintain'd that the Sin of Adam was not the Cause of the Death of Mankind. Moses Bar-Cephas.

CHAP II.

An Account of the Church of Rome, and other Italian Churches during the Tenth Century.

THough Historians have differ'd in their Judgment, concerning the Tenth Century in general; yet they all agree in their accounts of the wretched State and Condition of the Church of Rome, and those who have been most favourable in their Censures, could not but own that it was in a strange disorder. "At that time (crys Cardinal Baronius) How deform'd, how frightful was the face of the Church of Rome! The Holy See "was faln under the Tyranny of two loose and disorderly Women, who plac'd and displac'd Bishops as their humour led them: and, (what I tremble to think and speak of) "they plac'd their Gallants upon St. Peter's Chair, who did not so much as deserve the "very name of Popes. For who dare say that these infamous persons, who intruded without any form of Justice, were lawful Popes? We do not find that they were chosen by the "Clergy; or that they consented in the least to their Election. All the Canons of Councils "were infring'd, the Decrees of Popes trampled under foot, the antient Traditions despis'd, the Customs and Ceremonies usually observ'd in the Election of Popes neglected, "and the Holy See became a prey to Avarice and Ambition. In such terms as these does this Cardinal, who cannot be suppos'd to be an Enemy to the Church of Rome, lament the sad estate wherein it was in this Tenth Century: and a long time before him, Arnold Bishop of Orleans, who probably might have been an Ey-witness of some of these Disorders, breaks out into this Complaint: "O miserable Rome! Thou that formerly didst "hold out so many great and glorious Luminaries to our Ancestors, into what prodigious "darkness art thou now faln, which will render thee infamous to all succeeding Ages!

The State of the Church of Rome in the Tenth Century.

We may trace the beginning of this disorder from the Promotion of Formosus to the Popedom, which sow'd the Seed of the Divisions which afterwards ensued. This Formosus being Bishop of Ostia, had been depos'd by John VIII. in a Synod held at Rome, and constrain'd to swear he would continue a Lay-man all the rest of his Life. He was depos'd for these three Reasons. (1.) Because having been sent by Pope Nicholas I. into Bulgaria, he made the King of the Bulgarians swear that he would not admit of any other Bishop besides himself, that should be sent thither by the Holy See. (2.) Because he had already endeavoured to be translated from the Church of Ostia to that of Rome, and made Parties for for the attaining of his end, contrary to the Laws prescrib'd in the Canons. (3.) Because he had abandon'd his Church without the Pope's leave, and that having left Rome, he was suspected to have conspir'd against the Empire and the Church. This Sentence of John VIII. was repeal'd by his Successor Marinus, who re-call'd Formosus, re-establish'd him in his Bishoprick, and declar'd the Oath he had been forc'd to take to be null and void. However he still kept up the design he had laid of advancing himself to the Popedom; and he so well form'd his intrigue, that after the Death of Steven V. he had so powerful a Party as to carry it, against Sergius a Deacon of the Church of Rome, who had been elected by a great part of the Clergy. Formosus hinder'd his Ordination, drove him out of the Church, and forc'd him to fly to Tuscany to the Marquis Adalbert, who declar'd himself his Protector. Formosus was ordain'd on the 27th of May in the year 891. The year after he crown'd Guy Duke of Spoleto Emperor, and a while after conferr'd the same Title on Lambert the Son of that Prince. But no sooner was Arnulphus King of Germany faln down into Italy, but Formosus invited him to Rome, designing to make him an instrument of wreaking his revenge on those Romans who had affronted him. Arnulphus enter'd the City by force, caus'd the chief of the Enemies of Formosus to be beheaded, and was for this piece of Service crown'd Emperor by this Pope in the year 896. No sooner was Arnulphus gone off, but the Romans renew'd their Conspiracies against Formosus, who dy'd about the latter end of this year.

The Condemnation of Formosus by Stephen VI.

Boniface, whom the People put up in his stead, was a very unworthy man, who had been degraded from his Subdeaconship, and the order of Priesthood. A few days after he was Outed by Adalbert, and Stephen VI. advanc'd to the Chair. This man immediately declares himself an Enemy to the memory of Formosus; calls a Council, where he nulls all the Ordinations made by Formosus; dug up his Corps, and having dress'd him up in his Pontifical Robes, he condemn'd him as if he had been alive: and after he had censured him for his Ambition in quitting the Bishoprick of Ostia, and usurping S. Peter's Chair, contrary to the Canons of the Church, he caused him to be stripp'd of his Robes, cut off his three Fingers, wherewith he gave the Blessing, and threw him into the Tiber. A base and barbarous Proceeding this! and such as has struck Horror into all those who have wrote about it. For tho the Promotion of Formosus was not agreeable to the Canons, and might prove a very Ill precedent; yet such a disingenuous Cruelty exercised to no purpose upon a dead Carcass was a certain demonstration of the Spite and Malice, or rather of the Madness wherewith his Enemies were possess'd. And in truth all this Tragedy was begun by Sergius, and supported by the Authority of Adalbert, who bore at that time the greatest sway in Rome. But his Interest afterwards grown weaker, Stephen was severely used by the Romans, and cast into Prison, where he was Strangled about the latter end of the Year 900, if his Epitaph is to be credited in the case.

Romanus and Theodore.

The Romans advanc'd one Romanus in his place, who sat but a few months on the Chair: however he had so much time as to condemn and disannul all that his Predecessor had done against Formosus. The man who succeeded him nam'd Theodorus, was of his mind, but he died within twenty days.

John IX. The Wars between Berenger and Lambert.

After his Death the Romans chose a Monk, Deacon of the Town of Tivoli, Son of Rampealdus, who went under the name of John IX. This man seeing Italy divided by the Factions of those who made their Pretensions to the Empire, behaved himself very cautiously in the beginning of his Popedom. The Emperor Arnulphus dy'd about the end of the Year 899, and Guy of Spoleto died within a short time after, so that Italy was disputed between Berenger, Lewis the Son of Boson, and Lambert the Son of Guy. The Princes of Italy, weary of the Government of Berenger, especially Adalbert, Marquis of Ivrea, the Father of another Berenger, who was afterwards King of Italy, had called in Lewis; but Berenger assisted by Adalbert, Marquis of Tuscany, having hemm'd him in, obliged him to return, and made him renounce his Pretensions to the Kingdom. A while after Adalbert, who had supported the Interests of Berenger, re-called Lewis, who re-took part of Italy; but those who had invited him in, soon betrayed him, and delivered him into Berenger's hands, who caus'd his Eyes to be put out. Berenger swoln with his success comes to Rome, and forces Pope John IX. to Crown him Emperor: But no sooner was he gone from Rome, but the Pope sent for Lambert, who resided privately in a corner of Italy, and declar'd him Emperor.

The Council of Rome and Revenna in favour of Formosus.

Since by this Action he found himself oblig'd to acknowledge Formosus for Lawful Pope, because it was he who had crown'd Lambert, he held a Council, wherein he cancell'd all the proceedings against that Pope. After so bold an undertaking, he durst not stay at Rome, where the Interest of Berenger was most powerful, but retir'd to Ravenna, where in another Council of 74 Bishops, he confirm'd what had been done at Rome. The Italians, who love to have a great many Masters, and to change the Government, acknowledg'd Lambert, and his Forces became so considerable, that Berenger durst not attack him, but retir'd to Verona. All this happen'd in the year 904.

Benedict IV.

The year after John IX. dy'd, and Benedict IV. succeeded him, who was not upon the Chair above a year or thereabouts, and did nothing of any note. He who was set up in his Room, call'd Leo V. was Outed forty days after by one of his Domesticks, nam'd Christo-

Christophilus. He did not enjoy this Dignity long; for that Sergius, whom we formerly mentioned, and who had been the Competitor of Formosus, being come to Rome, seiz'd on Christophilus, put him in Prison, and stepp'd himself into St. Peter's Chair. The first thing he did was to condemn Formosus, to declare his Ordinations Null, and to cancel all that John IX. had done in his favour. Afterwards he degraded those whom Formosus had ordain'd, and either ordain'd them over again, or ordained others in their stead. This man is esteem'd a Monster, not only for his Ambition and the violent proceedings he was Guilty of, but also upon the account of his loose Morals. He had a Bastard by Marosia the Daughter of Theodora, who being a long time before highly in the Favour of Adalbert, bore a great Sway in Rome. This Bastard Son of his was afterwards promoted to the Popedom by the Intrigues of this Marosia, and took upon him the name of John XI. as we shall shew in the Sequel. Sergius enjoy'd the See which he had usurp'd, only three Years; he died in the Year 910. After him Anastasius came, of whom History is silent. About this time Lambert was trayterously murder'd, as he was hunting, by a Count of Milan. After his Death Adalbert, whom he had taken prisoner some time before, was set at Liberty, and Berenger was the only man who pretended to the Title of King of Italy and Emperor. The Popedom of Anastasius did not last above two years and some few months; after whose Death Landon was promoted to the Chair, no doubt by the Interest of Theodora. For that wicked woman made use of him to prefer one of her Favorites, nam'd John, to the Archbishoprick of Ravenna. Let us see in what terms Luitprand relates this matter: "About this time "(says he) Peter Archbishop of Ravenna, which was esteem'd the chiefest Archbishop-"rick next to that of Rome, sent frequently to Rome a Deacon of his Church, "call'd John, to pay his due respects to the Pope. Theodora, that impudent Whore, "having seen him, fell desperately in love with him, prevail'd upon him to maintain "a shameful familiarity with her. While they liv'd thus lustfully together, the Bishop of "Bolognia dying, this John was chose in his place. But before he was consecrated, the "Archbishop of Ravenna dies also; and Theodora prevails upon John to quit the Bishop-"rick of Bolognia, and to accept of this Archbishoprick. He thereupon returns "back to Rome, and was ordain'd Archbishop of Ravenna. Within a while after "the Pope (namely Landon) who had ordain'd him dies, God calling him to give an ac-"count of his unjust Proceedings in ordaining John. Theodora upon this, that she might "not be far from her Lover, made him again to relinquish the Archbishoprick of Raven-"na, and to seize upon St. Peter's Chair.

The death of Lambert.

Landon an unworthy Pope.

Tho' John was so shamefully promoted to the Popedom, yet he enjoy'd it a long time very peaceably; and was acknowledged as lawful Pope by all the Churches. But as God never suffers the Crimes of men to go unpunish'd, unless for a season, thereby to make his Justice the more conspicuous, so the conclusion of his Popedom was tragical, and he fell by the same steps, by which he had been advanc'd. This Theodora we speak of, had two Daughters, more wicked and more debauch'd than her self, call'd Marosia and Theodora. The first of these after she had prostituted her self to Pope Sergius, was marry'd to Guy, the Son of Adalbert Marquis of Tuscany, who, aspiring to be as absolute in Rome as his Father had been before him, took it ill that Pope John should prefer his Brother Peter, and thought he gave him too great an Authority. He thereupon resolv'd to divest him of it, and taking the opportunity when the Pope was with his Brother in the Lateran Palace, with a very few attendants, he order'd an Assault to be made by the Souldiers he had rais'd, who put the Pope into Prison, having first kill'd his Brother before his face. He there dy'd some time after, either for Grief, or rather by an untimely Death. This happen'd in the year 928.

John X.

Leo VI. who succeeded him, had a design, if Historians may be credited, of restoring Italy and the City of Rome to its former Quiet: but he had not time for it, being upon the Chair no longer than six Months and fifteen days. Tis said he likewise dy'd in Prison, as his Predecessor did before him. Stephen VII, who succeeded him, enjoy'd the place but two years, one month, and a few days.

Leo VI.

Stephen VII.

Marosia, upon this vacancy of the Holy See, thought there could be no better way of making her self absolute in Rome, and raising her Family, than by placing the Son she had by Pope Sergius, upon the Chair. Tho by reason of his Birth, his Age, and his Conduct, he was very unworthy of that Promotion. He took upon him the Name of John XI. and was ordain'd in the year 931. Some time after Guy dy'd, and his Brother Lambert was declared his Successor. But Marosia invited Hugh, Son of Count Thibold, Duke of Provence, and King of Arles, and promis'd to make him Master of Rome, in case he would marry her. He not willing to let such an opportunity slip, came forthwith to wait upon her at the Castle of Angelo, and marry'd her, tho she were his Brother's Widdow. For this Hugh was the Son of Bertha, who had been marry'd first to Thibold, and then to Adalbert, the Father of Guy. The Romans receiv'd him very kindly: But afterwards finding he put the slight upon them, they sought nothing so much as an opportunity of ridding themselves of his Government. Soon after an opportunity presented it self: For Alberic, who was likewise the Son of Marosia, being disgusted with his Father-in-law, for affronting him whilst by his Mother's Order he fill'd him out a glass of Wine, excited the Romans to throw off the Yoke of King Hugh, representing to them how deep a disgrace it was for Romans to be subject to the Burgundians. They thereupon quickly abandon'd his Interest; and having chosen Alberic their Leader, they set upon the Castle of St. Angelo, with so much expedition, that Hugh having not time to throw any of his Troops into the place, was forc'd to provide for his own safety; Marosia was seiz'd upon by Alberic's Order, who likewise secur'd his Brother, Pope John, and kept him close Prisoner during the remainder of his Popedom, which expir'd in the year 935. The City was govern'd a long time by Alberic, who changed the form of the Government, made himself Consul, and commanded in chief with a Prefect and Tribunes.

The Wars of Italy.

Whilst these things were in Action, Italy was disputed between several Princes, who all pretended to the Soveraignty thereof. The Italians being weary of the Government of Berenger, in the Year 924. conferr'd the Soveraignty on Radulphus King of Burgundy, Grandson to Conrad and Adelaid the Daughter of Lewis the Godly. Berenger seeing himself turn'd out of Possession, brought the Hunns into Italy, who harass'd all Lombardy; but having passed the mountains, they were defeated by Radulphus in Languedoc. At the same time Berenger using his Endeavours to re-enstate himself in the Kindom of Italy, was slain by his own men at Verona. After his Death the Title of Emperor of the West was not conferr'd on any one, at least not by the Pope and Italians, till Otho I. in the Year 962. By Berenger's Death Radulphus became sole Soveraign of Italy, but the Inconstancy of the Italians, which always put them upon driving out one Soveraign by another, caused them to submit to Hugh Count Arles, Son to Count Thibold and Bertha the Daughter of Lotharius II. Radulphus after he had received Intelligence that they had trayterously kill'd his Father-in-law, Burchard Duke of Suabia, retired to his own Kingdom of Burgundy, and left Hugh in quiet possession of Italy. We have already shown after what manner he became master of Rome, by the means of Marosias, and also how he was outed by Alberic. He reveng'd himself on Lambert the Brother of Guy the affront he received from his Sister-in-law, and having apprehended him, he caused his Eyes to be put out, and bestowed the Dukedom of Tuscany on his Brother, who proved no more faithful to him than Lambert. The Italians presently re-call'd King Radulphus, who put himself into a posture of re-entring Italy, and of engaging in a fresh War with King Hugh; but these two Kings thought it most proper to come to an accommodation, on condition that Radulphus should renounce his pretensions to the Kingdom of Italy, and Hugh should yield to him all the Country he had then in possession beyond the Alpes. Notwithstanding this accommodation, the Italians continuing still resolv'd to abandon Hugh, invited Arnulphus Duke of Bavaria, the Bastard Son of Arnulphus the Emperor, to come and take possession of the Crown. This Prince enters into Italy with an Army and advances as far as Verona, where he was received by Count Milo and Ratherius Bishop of the place. Hugo came immediately with an Army and sat down before the place, and having defeated a considerable party of the Troops of Arnulphus, he oblig'd him to think of making his Retreat, and of taking Count Milo along with him. The Count no sooner understood his Design, but he went over to King Hugh, and Arnulphus perceiving he was abandon'd by him, withdrew in great haste to Bavaria. The City of Verona immediately surrender'd to King Hugh, who sent Ratherius Bishop of that City, a Prisoner to Pavia. Hugh, puffed up with this success, after he had caus'd his Son Lotharius to be proclaim'd King, endeavour'd to surprize the City of Rome, and Besieg'd it; but perceiving he could not have his Aim, he treated with Alberic, and gave him in Marriage his Daughter Elda, in hopes, that afterwards he might make himself Master of Rome; but Alberic, as subtle a Politician as himself, would not relinquish the place, nor put it into the Hands of his Father-in-law.

Manasses.

Much about this time Manasses, Archbishop of Arles, King Hugh's Kinsman, thinking he might make his fortune greater under the Government of his Kinsman, quitted his Church at Arles, and comes into Italy, and obtain'd, contrary to all form of Law, the Bishopricks of Verona, Trent, and Mantua, to which he annex'd the Marquisate of Trent.

Leo VII.

Whilst Alberic govern'd Rome, the Holy See was fill'd by Popes of a blameless life; but they found themselves in a Capacity of wishing, rather than of doing good. Leo VII. who succeeded John XI. in the year 936, was call'd by Flodoard the Servant of God. His good Intention was apparent by his sending for Odo the Abbot of Cluny, to manage the Treaty between Hugh and Alberic. He likewise wrote two Letters, of which we will speak hereafter, which shew him to be a lover of Ecclesiastical Discipline. The pontificate of this Pope lasted no longer than three years and a few months.

Stephen VIII.

The Romans chose in his place in the year 939 a German, who went under the name of Stephen VIII. This Election was very highly resented by Alberic, who thought that a Roman would have been more for his Interest: Therefore suspecting that he favour'd Hugh, and held a private correspondence with Otho, he caused him to be ill treated. They mangled his Face so barbarously, and render'd it so deform'd, that he durst not appear any more in publick. This Pope sent a Legat into France called Damasus, to the Princes of France and Burgundy, exhorting them to acknowledge Lewis, the Son of Charles the Simple for their Lawful King, and and threatning to excommunicate them, if they did not do it. He likewise sent for Odo again into Italy, to mediate the Peace between Hugh and Alberic, but all to no purpose, for both Odo and the Pope dy'd before it was concluded.

Marinus II. Marinus II.

Marinus II. succeeded Pope Stephen in the year 943. who was reputed to be a man of singular Piety; and we have an account in the life of St. Ulric, Bishop of Ausbourg, that he foretold to this Saint the Death of his Predecessor Adalberon, and withal assur'd him that he should succeed him; which happen'd thirty years before he was Pope. All the time of his Popedom he was very serviceable to the Church of Rome, in reforming the Clergy and the Monks, in repairing Churches, and in taking a particular care of the poor. He did likewise what he could to promote Peace among the Christian Princes. He concluded that between Alberic and Hugh, and wrote several Letters in order to make up the breach between Otho King of Germany, who endeavour'd to enter Italy, and Lotharius, the Son of Hugh, who oppos'd his design. He call'd to Rome the Prior of Mount Cassin, and bestow'd on him the Government of the Monastery of S. Paul in Rome. 'Tis likewise said that he wrote a Letter to Sico Bishop of Capua, wherein he charges him with his ignorance of the Canons; with his want of Learning; with his holding too great an intimacy with secular persons; and with his having endeavour'd, contrary to all form, to confer a Benefice on one of his Deacons, which belong'd to a Monastery. He granted several Priviledges to the Benedictin Monks, whom he favour'd in a great many instances.

Agapetus II. Agapetus II.

Agapetus II. who succeeded Marinus, was likewise a holy man, who govern'd the Church of Rome with a great deal of prudence. He sent into France a Bishop, whose name was Marinus, to assist in the quality of a Legat in that Council held at Ingelheim in the year 948. about the Contests between King Lewis and Prince Hugh; and Hugh of Vermandois and Artaldus, pretenders to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. The cause was there determin'd in favour of Artaldus, who was confirm'd in that Bishoprick. Hugh of Vermandois was declar'd an Intruder and excommunicated; and a Letter was written to Prince Hugh the White, in the name of the whole Council, and to his Adherents, to admonish them to return to their Allegiance, under the pain of excommunication. The Sentence of this Council was confirm'd the year following in a Council held by Agapetus, wherein Prince Hugh was excommunicated, till such time as he should give satisfaction to King Lewis.

The Wars between Hugh and Berenger.

Under this Pope's Pontificate Italy felt another Revolution. Adalbert, Marquis of Ivrea, had two Sons, Berenger by Gilla, the Daughter of Berenger King of Italy; and Anschaire by Ermegarda, Daughter of the Marquis of Tuscany. These two Princes inherited the power of their Father and Grand-Fathers by the Mother's side, and govern'd a part of Italy. The first was prudent, ingenious and politick; the second was valiant and bold. King Hugh had marry'd his Niece Villa, the Daughter of Boson to Berenger, but he began to be jealous of the growing Greatness of those two Brothers, and resolv'd to put a stop to it. He began with Anschaire, whom he caus'd to to be set upon by Sarlio, who having made the Spoletians and Camerines to revolt, defeated the Troops he had rais'd for his own defence, and kill'd him in the Skirmish. Berenger, desirous to revenge the Death of his Brother, conspir'd against King Hugh. This Prince having intelligence thereof, took up a resolution in his Council to send for him, under pretence of making up a Reconciliation, and then to put him to death; but his young Son Lotharius, who had been present in Council, could not forbear advertising Berenger thereof, who, upon the receipt of this Intelligence, fled forthwith to Herman Duke of Suabia, who protected him to King Otho. Hugh sent to demand him, but Otho was so far from delivering him up, that he took him under his Protection. A while after Berenger returns to Italy, at the head of some Troops; and having laid Siege to a Fort which was held out by Adelard, the Clerk of Mantua, he became Master of it, by promising the Archbishoprick of Milan to that Bishop, and to the Clerk the Bishoprick of Crema, in case he should become Master of Italy. Big with these hopes, Manasses importunes the Princes of Italy in his behalf. Milo Count of Verona was the first who declar'd for Berenger, and receiv'd him into his City. The Bishop of Modena soon follow'd his example, as did likewise the City of Milan, where the Princes of Italy came to wait on Berenger, having deserted King Hugh, who was return'd to Pavia. From this place he sent his Son Lotharius to Milan, conjuring Berenger and the Princes of Italy, to acknowledge him for their King; and that for his own part he had taken a resolution to retire into Provence. The people mov'd with compassion towards Lotharius, who was not then above fourteen or fifteen years old, acknowledged him their King; with the consent of Berenger; and they wrote to Hugh, acquainting him, that he might (if he pleas'd) reside still in Italy. This Berenger order'd, with a design of seizing upon his Treasures, which he was carrying off to Provence; for Hugh and Lotharius were only Titular Kings, while the whole power of governing was lodg'd in the hands of Berenger. Hugh could not bear this, but cunningly retir'd into Provence, where he dy'd a short time after; leaving his Estate to his Niece Bertha, the Widdow of Boson, Count of Arles. This Revolution happen'd about the year 945. Lotharius still retain'd the name of King of Italy, but did not long enjoy it; for about four years after, whether out of grief to see himself slighted, or whether by the means of some poison, he fell mad, and dy'd childless, about the the latter end of the year 949. Berenger presently caus'd himself to be proclaim'd King, and to be crown'd with his eldest Son Adalbert, and that he might render his new Authority the stronger, he sought in Marriage for his Son, Adelaid, the Widdow of Lotharius, Daughter to Radulphus II. and Sister to Conrad, Kings of Burgundy. This Princess having refus'd the offer, he besieg'd her in Pavia, took her, and sent her Prisoner to a Castle call'd le Garde: however, she escap'd thence by the help of a Priest, and fled to Atho her Kinsman, who undertook to defend her in the Fort of Canossa, where she secur'd her self. Berenger immediately sat down before the place with all his Forces. But in the second year of the Siege, this Queen seeing her self reduc'd to the last extremity, sent to beg King Otho's Assistance, and with her self offered him the Kingdom of Italy. The love of Glory rather than Interest inclin'd this Prince to cross the Mountains. He delivers Adelaid, marries her, and takes her along with him into Germany, leaving his Army with Conrad, Duke of Lorrain, to make an end of the War. Conrad pressed so hotly on Berenger and his Son, that they were forc'd to lay down their Arms, and submit to Otho, whom they went to wait upon in Germany. He having given them an Oath of Allegiance and fealty, restor'd their Kingdom to them, only excepting the Veronese and Friul, which he gave to his Brother the Duke of Bavaria.

During all these Revolutions in Italy, Rome was very quiet under the Government of Alberic, who would not suffer Otho to enter the place, though the Pope Agapetus had invited him thither. The Death of Alberic, which happen'd in the year 954, made no alteration in Rome, for his Son Octavian, not above 16 years old, having taken his place, continu'd the same form of Government: and not satisfied with the Temporal power, he was minded to annex to it the Spiritual Authority, by getting himself advanc'd to St. Peter's Chair, after the Death of Agapetus, which happen'd in the year 955. He was not at that time above 18 years of age at most, and was the first Pope that changed his Name, by assuming that of John. He was truly the Twelfth of that name, tho several count him the Thirteenth, being led into that mistake by the fabulous story of Pope Joan. This Man was so far from having any of those qualities requisite for so great a Dignity, that he was a Monster in Debauchery and Irregularity. He began with making War against Pendula Prince of Capua, in order to turn him out of his Estates: but his design did not succeed, and he was forc'd to retire, and to sue for Peace. The Power of Berenger and Adalbert became so great, that they began to be a Terror both to the Pope and the Romans. Ever since Otho had re-establish'd them in the Kingdom of Italy, they had continued to conspire against him and cruelly to oppress their Subjects. Otho, willing to bring them to Subjection, had sent his Son Ludolf into Italy to give them Correction. This young Prince had almost chas'd them out of their Dominions, when he dy'd in the year 958, not without suspicion of being poison'd, and so left his Conquest imperfect. After his Death, Berenger and Adalbert were re-established in their Kingdom, and continued to exercise their Tyranny not only to the other Italians, but also to the Romans. This was the reason why John XII. sent two Legats to Otho, praying him ardently for the Love of God, and the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, (they are Luitprand's words) to come and deliver the Church of Rome from the inroachments of these Tyrants, and to restore it to its primitive health and liberty. Walbert Archbishop of Milan, turn'd out of his Church by that Monster, we formerly mention'd, and Waldon, Bishop of Come, turn'd likewise out of his Bishopprick, and several other Lords dreaded of their Demeans, went at the same time to prefer their complaints to Otho; who being affected with the miseries of Italy, march'd thither, after he had crown'd his Son Otho at Aix la Chapelle, though a lad of but about seven years of Age. Upon his Arrival Berenger, his Wife, and his Son, being abandon'd by his Subjects, withdrew from the Towns and the open Country, and betook themselves each of them to a Citadel. Otho was every where receiv'd with great Acclamations, recovers Pavia, was crown'd King of Lombardy at Milan by the Archbishop, and from thence he march'd to Rome, where he receiv'd the Imperial Crown in the beginning of the year 962, at the hands of John XII. with the Universal Acclamations of both Clergy and Laity. He spent some time there with the Pope, and having restor'd to the Church of Rome that which of right belong'd to it, according to his promise, he made Pope John and the principal men of the City, to swear by the Body of St. Peter, that they would bear true Allegiance to him, and never furnish Berenger or Adalbert with any Supplies. After this he return'd to Pavia, with a full design of putting an end to the War, by taking those Castles which still held out for Berenger. He began with taking the Isle of St. Julio, whither Berenger's Wife was retir'd, and restor'd it to the Church of Novar. In the mean time, Adalbert, seeking for assistance in every place, retir'd at last to the Saracens, and under hand solicited Pope John to come over to his Party. This Pope, whose inclinations and intentions did not suit with those of the Emperor Otho, being as much a Slave to Vice and Debauchery, as that Prince was a Lover of Goodness and Virtue: This Pope, I say, that he might have the liberty of indulging his Lusts, made privately a League with Adalbert, and invited him to Rome, promising upon Oath to aid him against Otho. The Emperor being informed of it, sent several of his Attendants to Rome, to know what were the reasons which induc'd the Pope to enter into an Alliance with Adalbert. And when the Romans could give no other account, than that it arose only from the contrariety of Pope John's Morals and Conduct, to those of the Emperor; that Prince return'd this prudent Reply: "The Pope is as yet "but a Child; he may be better'd by the Examples of good men; I hope to reclaim him "from his extravagancies by a good honest reproof, and by wholsom Advice; and then "we will say with the Prophet, Behold the Change made by the Hand of the most High. So without troubling his head much with the secret practices of the Pope, he laid Siege to the Castle of Leo in Umbria, whither Berenger and his Wife was retir'd. Thither the Pope sent Leo, chief Secretary of the Church of Rome, and Demetrius, one of the principal Roman Lords, to excuse his falling into the follies incident to youth, promising, that for the future he would be another kind of man: He gave them likewise orders to complain of the Emperor's retaining Bishop Leo, and Cardinal John a Deacon, who had failed in their Duty towards him; and of his not keeping the promise he had made him, because he caus'd those whom he took to take the Oath to himself, but not to the Pope. The Emperor return'd this Answer, "That he was glad of the promise which the Pope "had made of reforming, and becoming a better man for the future: That for his part he "had religiously observ'd his promise; that he had indeed promis'd to restore to the Church "of Rome, all the Territories which of right did belong to it; but before he could do "that, he must first take them, and render himself Master of them: That he had neither "seen the Bishop nor the Cardinal, whom they charg'd him with entertaining; but that "he had heard that being sent from the Pope to the Emperor of Constantinople, on a Ne-"gotiation against him, they had been taken at Capua, together with others whom the "Pope sent to the Hunns, to engage them to fall upon him: That these proceedings were "prov'd by Letters sign'd by the Pope, and seal'd with the Papal Seal. Otho dismis'd the Pope's Deputies with this Answer, and with them sent two Bishops to Rome, to make an ample justification for him; with orders, in case the Pope would not believe what they told him, to offer to prove it by the Combat of two Champions. John XII. received these Envoys very coldly, and to amuse the Emperor, he sent to him eight days after John the Bishop of Narni, and Cardinal Benedict a Deacon, to Negotiate with him. Before they return'd, Adalbert came to Civita Vechia, and from thence to Rome, where he was receiv'd very kindly by the Pope. No sooner had the Emperor intelligence thereof, but he comes to Rome with his Forces in August 963, being invited by the Romans themselves, part of whom had seiz'd the Castle of St. Paul, and held it out against Adalbert. Upon his arrival, John XII. and Adalbert went off; the Romans receiv'd Otho, and took a new Oath of Alleigance to him, promising that they would neither chuse nor ordain any Pope without his consent and approbation. Three days after, upon the request of several Bishops of Italy, and the people of Rome, he held a grand Council in St. Peters Church, where there met the Emperor, for the Archbishop of Aquilea, who was faln sick in Town; Radulphus the Deacon, Walbert Archbishop of Milan, Peter of Ravenna, an Archbishop and Bishop of Saxony, Orger Bishop of Spires, and Bublus Bishop of Parma, with about 33 Italian Bishops more, fourteen or fifteen Cardinals, and a great many Officers of the Church of Rome, with several Lords and a Representative for the people. The Emperor demanded of the Assistants, why the Pope was not present in this Council; they reply'd, that they wonder'd he should ask them a thing which was so well known to the whole World: That John was not one of those, who being cover'd with Sheeps cloathing, are inwardly Ravenous Wolves; but that he committed publickly and in the Eye of the world diabolical Actions, without putting himself to the trouble of concealing them. The Emperor told them it was but reasonable to express in particular, the heads of his Accusation, and afterwards to debate what ought to be done. Then Cardinal Peter a Priest, said he had seen him celebrate the Mass without communicating: John Bishop of Narni, and a Cardinal Deacon of the same name, declared that they had seen him ordain a Deacon in a Stable extra tempore: Benedict, and the other Priests and Deacons of Rome declared, that they knew him to have conferr'd Orders for Money, and to have ordain'd a Child of ten years old Bishop of Todi. That it was not necessary to bring Witnesses to attest these Sacrileges, since they were so visible, that all that could be said about them, would not express the one half of what they would appear to be. As for the Adultery whereof he was accus'd, they said, that indeed, they were not Eye-witnesses of the Fact, but that they knew for certain, that he had abus'd the Widdow of Ranier, Stephania, his Father's Concubine, the Widdow Anna and her Neice, and that he had made his Court the very sink of Debauchery: that he went publickly a hunting: that he had put out the Eyes of Benedict, his Spiritual Father, whereof he dy'd: that he had cut off the Privy-Members of Cardinal John the Subdeacon, whereof he likewise dy'd: that he had been the cause of a great many Fires; and that he was seen with a Sword in his hand, an Helmet on his head, and a Coat of Mail on his body. The Clergy and Laity there present cry'd out that they had seen him drink a health to the Devil, and swear by the Heathen Gods in his play at Hazards: that he never took care to say his Office, or to make the Sign of the Cross. Upon these accusations, the Emperor ordered Luitprand Bishop of Cremona to tell the Synod in Latin (for they could not underſtand the Saxon Language, in which he ſpoke) that he conjur'd them in the name of God, the Bleſſed Virgin, and the Apoſtles to advance nothing againſt the Pope, but what was certain and would bear good proof. They all reply'ed that they were willing to be Anathematiz'd, if Pope John were not guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge, nay and of far more ſhameful and horrid than had been mentioned. That if he would not believe them in this, yet that could not be call'd in queſtion of which the Emperors whole Army were Spectators, viz. that he appeared in Armour from Top to Toe at the Head of his Forces; and that if the Tiber had not between him and the Emperors Army, he would have been taken priſoner in that Equipage. The Emperor acknowledg'd that this was true, and all his Souldiers were Witneſſes to it. The Synod were of Opinion that it was neceſſary to write to the Pope, that he might come and clear himſelf of the Crimes laid to his Charge. The Letter was written in the name of the Emperor, of the Biſhops of Liguria, Tuſcany, Saxony, and France, who reſided then at Rome. They acquainted John, to whom they gave the Title of Pontifex Summus, and that of Univerſal Biſhop, that having demanded of the Clergy and Laity of Rome the reaſon of his abſence, they had related ſuch abominable things of him, as would make the moſt impudent to bluſh: that he was accuſed of Homicide, of Perjury, of Sacrilege, and of Inceſt with two of his Relations: That it was likewiſe reported of him, that he had drank a Health to the Devil, and ſworn by Jupiter, Venus, and the other Heathen Deities in his play at hazards: that they earneſtly intreat him to come and clear himſelf of theſe Accuſations, aſſuring him upon Oath that nothing ſhould be done againſt him but what was agreeable to the Canons. This Letter bears date November 6. 963. Pope John XII. having received it, return'd this anſwer. "We hear you deſign to make another Pope; "but if you do, I excommunicate you by the Almighty God, ſo that you "ſhall not be capable of ordaining any man, or of celebrating the Maſs. This Letter being remitted to the Synod, to which the Archbiſhop of Treves, and three Biſhops of Emilia and Liguria were likewiſe come; they made the Pope this Reply: That the Letter he had ſent was a ſign of his folly and want of Prudence: that he ſhould have alledg'd ſome reaſonable excuſe of his abſence, and ſent his Deputies to give the Synod an account thereof: that they would ſubmit to him, provided he delay'd not coming to clear himſelf of the Crimes laid to his charge; but that if he would not do that, they would not value his excommunication, which they might with Juſtice retort upon him. This ſecond Letter of the Council to the Pope bears date November 26. and was ſent by Cardinal Adrian a Prieſt, and Cardinal Benedict a Deacon: They went as far as Tiber to give it him, but they could not meet with him there, for he was rid into the Country before they came. Wherefore not meeting with any perſon that could inform them where he was gone, they brought the Letter back to the Council, which was ſitting a third time. The Emperor preſented to them the Complaint which he in particular had to prefer againſt John, viz. That foraſmuch as that Pope had ſent for him to aſſiſt him againſt Adalbert, and had afterwards taken an Oath of Allegiance to him, yet he had ſince invited this ſame Adalbert to Rome, and put himſelf at the head of the Revolters. Then the Biſhops, the Clergy, and the Laity of Rome ſaid, that it was neceſſary to cure this extraordinary Wound, by as extraordinary a Remedy: That if the debauch'd Morals of Pope John XII. had injur'd the Emperor only, he might have met with ſome toleration; but ſince he was the ruin of ſo many, by the ſcandal and bad example he had given, they requir'd the Emperor that this Monſter (whom it was impoſſible to reclaim from his Vices) ſhould be turn'd out of the Church of Rome, and that another Pope of an exemplary Life ſhould be ſet up in his room. The Emperor approv'd of this Reſolution, and declar'd it was his deſire, that they would chooſe one who was worthy of ſitting in St. Peter's Chair. He had no ſooner done ſpeaking, but thoſe who were preſent cry'd out unanimouſly, that they choſe the Venerable Leo, chief Secretary of the Church of Rome, to be their Paſtor, and Soveraign, and Univerſal Pope of the Roman Church, rejecting John the Apoſtate becauſe of his irregular Life. Having repeated this their Vote three times, they, according to cuſtom, conducted Leo to the Lateran Palace, conſecrated him afterwards in St. Peter's Church, and took an Oath of Fidelity to him. After this the Emperor Otho, ſuppoſing he had nothing more to fear in Rome, diſmiſs'd part of his Troops, that they might not be a greivance to the people: but the Romans, won over by the promiſes of John, ſoon after roſe up in Arms, and made Barricades to incloſe and cut off Otho. But he was reſcu'd by the bravery of his Troops, defeated the Seditious, kill'd part of them, and oblig'd the people to give him Hoſtages. Pope Leo the Eighth of that name, willing to ingratiate himſelf with the people, prevail'd ſo far with the Emperor by his intreaties, that he perſwaded him to reſtore the Hoſtages before his departure. But no ſooner was this Prince withdrawn to purſue Adalbert, who lurk'd about Camerin and Spoleto, but the Women whom Pope John had debauch'd, ſtirr'd up the people to revolt afreſh. The Seditious had a deſign of putting Leo to death, and receiving John; but the former found means of flying to the Emperor: as for the latter, he no ſooner enter'd Rome, but

Nos Audivimus dicere, quod vos vultis alium Papam facere. Si hoc facitis; excommunico vos de Deo Omnipotente ut non habeatis licentiam ullam ordinare, & Miſſam celebrare.

The Ordination of Pope Leo VIII.

but he us'd the Friends of Leo very barbarously, among others Cardinal John a Deacon, whose right-hand he caus'd to be cut off; Azo chief Secretary, whose Tongue he cut out, and cut off two of his Fingers and his Nose; and Orger Bishop of Spires, whom he caus'd to be whipp'd cruelly, and would not let him go, but in hopes by his means to obtain the Emperor's pardon. John to authorize his Proceedings by an Act that should have some shew of Justice, held a Synod February 26. in the year 964, where assisted sixteen Bishops of Italy, and some Cardinals. These Prelates, devoted to the will and pleasure of this Pope, condemn'd the Synod which had depos'd him, and elected Leo in his stead: They pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Leo: anathematiz'd all those who favour'd him: declar'd his Ordinations null: conven'd those whom he had ordain'd to the Council; and after they had oblig'd them to declare in writing, that he who had ordain'd them, having no power to do it, had not conferr'd any Order upon them, they stripp'd them of their habits: they constrain'd Benedict Bishop of Porto, and Gregory Bishop of Albania, to confess they had done amiss in ordaining Leo, and they suspended them for a time: and because Sico Bishop of Ostia, who was one of those that had ordain'd him, did not appear before the Synod, they declar'd him depriv'd of his Priesthood, without any hopes of being restor'd: they declar'd all those who had contributed to the Ordination of Leo, or favour'd him, or acknowledg'd him afterwards, to be depos'd or excommunicated.

The Re-establishment of Pope John XII.

The Emperor Otho being inform'd of what pass'd at Rome, prepar'd for his return thither, to punish John according to his deserts; but God prevented his Vengeance, for that infamous wretch receiv'd a mortal Wound as he was sporting himself one night with a Lady out of Town, of which he dy'd within eight days after, on the fourteenth of May, without receiving the Sacraments. The Romans persisting in their revolt, were before hand with the Emperor, by choosing Cardinal Benedict a Deacon, and placing him upon the Papal Chair, upon his promise of never quitting it. A while after the Emperor came with his Army, sat down before Rome; and without being terrified at the Excommunication thunder'd against him by Benedict, he constrain'd the Romans, pinch'd with Famine and want of necessaries, to open the City Gates unto him on the 23 of June. As soon as he enter'd Rome, that he might do nothing irregular, he held a Synod, where he caus'd Benedict to be brought in his Pontifical Habit. He demanded of him by Cardinal Benedict the Arch-deacon, by what Authority, and according to what Laws he had usurp'd that Dignity in the Life time of Pope Leo, whom he himself had elected, and why he had violated the Oath he had taken with the rest of the Romans, not to chuse any Pope without the Consent of the Emperor. Benedict acknowledg'd his fault, and begg'd the Emperor's Pardon, he divested himself of his Pontifical habit, and put them, together with the Pastoral Rod, into Leo's hands. Leo divested him likewise of his Cope, and declar'd him depriv'd of all Sacerdotal and Priestly Dignity, leaving him only the Order of Deacon, in consideration of the Emperor Otho; but he prohibited him from staying at Rome, and banish'd him. This Council by a solemn Decree, related by Gratian, granted to the Emperor the right of choosing a Pope, and of investing Bishops and Archbishops, and forbad the choosing a Pope without his Consent, or ordaining a Bishop elect, till he should receive investiture from the Emperor. There is another Decree of Pope Leo, whereby he grants to the Emperor Otho all that Pepin and Charlemagne had given to the Church of Rome; but this is such a dubious Piece, as deserves no credit.

The tragical Death of Pope John XII.

Benedict is depos'd and Leo VIII. re-establish'd.

Otho having thus quieted the City of Rome, departed thence after the Festival of S. Peter, in order to return to Lombardy, taking along with him the Antipope Benedict as Prisoner, and carrying off with him a great many Bodies of the Saints. He lost in his March a great many of his Men by Sickness, kept his Christmass at Pavia, and the next year return'd into Saxony, after he had given his Instructions for the Affairs of Italy. Benedict dy'd at Hamburgh in July 965, after he had edified the Germans by his Piety, and made it appear that he deserv'd to have been Bishop of Rome, if he had been rais'd to that Dignity according to the Canon. Leo dy'd likewise the same year. After his Death the Romans sent Deputies to the Emperor Otho, to know his pleasure concerning the Election of a Pope. Some Authors have writ, that Benedict not being dead when Leo dy'd, the Emperor Otho had a design of re-establishing him, if he had not dy'd in the very interim. Let the case be how it will, John Bishop of Narni, who was his Creature, was the man whom he design'd to advance to that Dignity; and 'tis very probable that he told his Intention to the Roman Deputies. He was thereupon elected, and plac'd in the Holy See, and is the Thirteenth of that Name. But whereas he was supported by the Emperor, and wedded to his Interests, he treated very haughtily the principal Lords of Rome, who affected to retain the Liberty they enjoy'd under Alberic. This was the reason why they declar'd against this Pope, and resolv'd to turn him out of his Popedom. They caus'd him to be arrested by Roger the Prefect of Rome, being assisted by Jeofry Count of Campagnia, whither John was sent Prisoner. This Jeofry being kill'd some time after, and Roger being dead, the Romans being afraid of the Emperor Otho, who was preparing to come into Italy, set the Pope at liberty, and permitted him to return to Rome. However this did not hinder the Emperor from coming by great marches marches to Rome: upon his arrival he arreſted the Conſuls, the Prefect, and the Decemviri (a Body of ten men who were inſtead of a Senate, and the Grand Council of the City). He puniſh'd them after an examplary manner, for he ſent the Conſuls and the Prefect Priſoners to Germany; and after he had caus'd the laſt to be ſhamefully dragg'd and whipp'd through the Streets of Rome, he hang'd up the Decemviri. 'Tis reported that he likewiſe ordered the Bodies of Jeofry and Roger to be dug up, and after they were dragg'd through the City, to be caſt into the Common-ſhore. Having by theſe ſevere Proceedings ſtruck an Awe into the minds of the Romans, after he had kept his Chriſtmaſs in the year 966 at Rome, he went to Ravenna with Pope John, where he held a Synod about Eaſter, in the year 967, wherein ſeveral Regulations were made in the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; and the Emperor reſtor'd to the Church of Rome the Towns and Territories, which had been granted it formerly by Pepin and Charlemagne. They likewiſe excommunicated Harold Archbiſhop of Saltzburgh, becauſe he would officiate and wear the Pall, tho he had loſt his ſight; and becauſe, being charged with ſeveral crimes beſides, the Popes had prohibited him from exerciſing any Epiſcopal function, and Frederic was put in his place, who was now Confirm'd. They likewiſe rais'd the Biſhoprick on which the Town of Magdeburgh depended, to an Archbiſhoprick, by the Conſent and Approbation of Hatto Archbiſhop of Mayence, and Hildevard Biſhop of Halberſtat. From Ravenna the Emperor went into Tuſcany, and ſent for his Son Otho, in order to have him crown'd Emperor by the Pope, which Ceremony was perform'd at Rome in the Chriſtmaſs holydays, in the year 967. After this Expedition of Otho, Pope John enjoy'd the Popedom very quietly whilſt he liv'd. He rais'd the Biſhoprick of Capua to an Archbiſhoprick, in recompence of the kind uſage he met with there during his Impriſonment. He ſent a Legat into Polonia, to inſtruct the Poloniens, who deſir'd to be converted. He likewiſe ſent a Legat to the Vandals, and wrote ſeveral Letters, wherein he recommended to the Biſhops the obſervation of the Church Diſcipline. 'Tis obſerv'd that he with a certain Ceremony bleſs'd a new Bell belonging to the Church of Saint John of the Lateran, and that this is the firſt inſtance we have of ſuch Benedictions, on which the Title of Chriſtning was afterwards improperly impos'd. This Pope dy'd September 6. 972. Donus alias Domnus ſucceeded him, who dy'd at the end of three months, without having done any thing of note. After him Benedict VI. had the Popedom: ſome there are who pretend, that he was in poſſeſſion of it before Donus dyed. Let the caſe be how it will, he ſurviv'd him, but came to a tragical end. For Otho dying May 7. 973, a Roman Lord of great Authority, nam'd Cincius, caus'd the Pope to be ſeiz'd on, and committed him Priſoner to the Caſtle of St. Angelo, where he was ſtrangled ſome few days after.

The Council of Ravenna in the year 967.

Donus and Benedict VI.

Boniface the Uſurper outed by Benedict.

This bloody deſign was put in Execution by the inſinuation of Franco, ſirnam'd Boniface, a Cardinal Deacon, whom Gerbert terms the moſt impious monſter of Mankind, who rather deſerved the name of Maleface, than that of Boniface. This man, tho all o're beſmear'd with the blood of Benedict, yet ſeizes upon the Papal Chair in the year 974. But the Romans could not endure him long; and having found out a Biſhop named Benedict, of the Family of the Alberics, they ſet him up in oppoſition to Boniface, who was forced in the year 975. to fly to Conſtantinople, whither he carried the things which he Sacrilegiouſly rifled from the Vatican Church before he went off. This Benedict was put up in his ſtead, and enjoy'd the Popedom very peaceably till the tenth of July, in the year 984, on which day he dy'd. During theſe Revolutions, the Empor Otho II. was wholly taken up in Germany, againſt the Bohemians, and Lotharius King of France; and he was no ſooner out of that Fatigue, but he was engag'd to begin a new War in Italy againſt the Greeks, who, with the aſſiſtance of the Saracens, deſigned to re-take Apulia and Calabria. At firſt he had ſome advantage over the Enemy, but afterwards he was entirely defeated and taken Priſoner: However, he found a way to make his eſcape, and having rally'd ſome Troops, he aſſaulted and took the City of Benevent, becauſe the people of that Country had betray'd him. From thence he return'd to Rome, where he dy'd of grief on December 6, 983. After his death there aroſe a debate about the choice of an Emperor; ſome would have Henry Duke of Bavaria, Nephew to Otho the Great, to be crown'd: the Italians were for an Italian Emperor, nam'd Creſcentius, but the Germans whoſe intereſt was ſtrongeſt at Rome, cauſed Otho III. the Son of the laſt Otho to be crown'd Emperor, with the Conſent of Pope Benedict, who did not ſurvive Otho II. above ſix Months.

The Wars and Death of Otho II.

Otho III. crowned Emperor.

Peter Biſhop of Pavia was put in his place, and took upon him the name of John XIV. He was Lord High-Chancellor to the Emperor Otho, and it was doubtleſs by the recommendation of this Prince, that he was advanc'd to this Dignity, but he did not enjoy it long; for Boniface return'd from Conſtantinople in the year 985, and having rous'd ſome of his own faction, and won the people by diſtributing among them the money he had rais'd, by the ſale of thoſe rich Ornaments he had carry'd from Rome, he render'd himſelf very powerful in Rome, ſeiz'd on Pope John, loaded him with Irons, ſhut him up in the Caſtle of Saint Angelo, where he ſtarv'd him to death at the end of four months; but he himſelf did not ſurvive above four months, and dy'd hated by all the World, even by thoſe of his own faction, who, after his Death, us'd his body very contumeliouſly. Upon the Death of this Tyrant,

John XIV.

Boniface returns to Rome.

Tyrant, the Clergy and Laity of Rome were left at liberty to elect a Pope. The choice fell on a Priest nam'd John, the fifteenth Pope of that name. The beginning of his Popedom was disturb'd by the fear he had that Crescentius, who having taken upon him the title of Consul, seiz'd on the Castle of S. Angelo, would not use him so kindly as he did his Predecessor. Under this apprehension he withdrew into Tuscany, from whence he sent several Deputies to Otho, praying him to come to his assistance. It was this that inclin'd the Romans, who knew by experience what they were to fear from such kind of Visits as the Emperors made, to send an honourable Embassage to the Pope, earnestly to entreat him to return, by giving him all the assurance he could desire. He hearkened to them, and was receiv'd with all the signs imaginable of submission and respect. From that time forward he enjoy'd the Holy See very peaceably till about the latter end of his Popedom, at which time he was again so disturb'd by Crescentius, that he was forced to pray the Emperor Otho to come to his assistance. This Prince immediately march'd with an Army into Italy, and stopp'd some time at Ravenna. During his stay there, John XV. dyed in May 996. The Romans were oblig'd by an order from the Emperor to elect in his place Bruno his Cousin-german, who took upon him the name of Gregory V. but Crescentius soon after outed him, and set up in his stead John Bishop of Placentia. This Action was not long unpunish'd, for Otho came immediately with his Army, and being soon Master of Rome, re-establish'd Gregory. John secur'd himself with Crescentius, in the Castle of Saint Angelo. The Emperor beseig'd it, Crescentius held it out very vigorously, and it would have been very difficult to have taken it, had not he been kill'd treacherously. The Antipope John was taken, his Eyes were scratch'd out, his Nose and his Ears were cut off, and in that posture was he led through the Streets of Rome, mounted on an Ass with his Head towards the Tail, and forc'd to say as he went along, Whoever shall dare to dispossess a Pope, let him be serv'd like me.

John XV.

Gregory V.

John the Anti-pope.

'Tis said that Gregory, to prevent the trouble which might afterwards arise in the Election of an Emperor, order'd that for the future it should be made by a certain number of German Princes, which he appointed; which was done at the instant, and by the authority of the Emperor Otho, and to favour those of his own Nation, and doubtless with the approbation of the Romans. This Pope did not survive his Election above two years and eight or nine months. Otho caus'd Gerbert to be elected in his place, who took upon him the name of Silvester II. He had been formerly Archbishop of Rheims, and was then Archbishop of Ravenna, having been oblig'd, as we shall hereafter declare, to quit his first Archbishoprick. He was a man of great Learning, and much in favour with Otho, which inclin'd him to prefer him, before all others, to that Dignity, supposing he could not find a person more worthy to fill the Chair, or in whom he could more rely. We shall have occasion to speak of the Actions of this Prelate, before he was Pope, in the History of the Churches of France during this Century; and of what he did or wrote while he was Pope, in the History of the following Century, to which it belongs, for he was not promoted to Saint Peter's Chair till about March, in the year 999.

Gerbert nam'd Pope Silvester II.

An Account of the Roman Writers in the Tenth Century.

After what has been related of the State of the Church of Rome during the Tenth Century, and of the Qualifications of those who govern'd it, 'tis no wonder that we have so few Monuments of this Church, either of Councils held at Rome, or of Letters written by the Popes.

John IX.

The Letters of John IX.

John the Ninth has left us four Letters, and the Acts of two Councils. The first of these Letters is directed to Harvey, Archbishop of Rheims, who sent to know of him how he should deal with the Normans, who, after they had been baptiz'd, had led lives wholly Pagan, and were transported to that degree of Extravagance, as to kill the Christians and Priests, to sacrifice to Idols, and to eat of such things as had been offered in sacrifice to them. John IX. after he had congratulated the Archbishop's happiness, in the conversion of Normandy, returns him this Answer, that the persons he mention'd being but newly converted, and not fully instructed in the Christian Religion, ought not to be dealt with according to the rigor of the Canons, but with some sort of gentleness and moderation. That however, if there were any among them, who would submit to all the severities of Pennance, he ought to proceed against such according to the Canon. Agreeable to this Letter, Harvey sent to Guy, Archbishop of Roan, a Memorial containing the institutions of Councils and Popes, the Authorities of the Fathers, and the Example of Saints, concerning the Mercy and Moderation which ought to exercis'd towards the greatest Sinners upon their sincere conversion and repentance.

Harvey Archbishop of Rheims.

John's

John's second Letter is directed to Stilian Bishop of Neocesarea: He congratulates his stedfastness to the Church of Rome, from whose communion nothing was able to separate him, and declares to him, that he hopes that by his Prayers he would prevail upon God to put an end to the Schism, which was of 40 years continuance. He likewise declares, 'tis his intention that the Decrees of his Predecessors against Photius and his Adherents, should continue in their full force, and exhorts him not to act contrary to them.

The third Letter of John is directed to the Clergy and Laity of Langres in France, who had petitioned his Authority for re-establishing of Argrin, their Bishop, who had been turn'd out of his Bishoprick by the Sentence of Stephen the Predecessor of Pope John. He being well informed that this Bishop had been elected canonically, that he was turn'd out upon false grounds, and that there had been never another put in his place, re-establishes him by this Letter, notwithstanding the decree of Stephen, wherein he tells them, "That "he did not revoke what was done, but that he altered it for the better, for the benefit "of the Church, and out of pure necessity, as his Predecessors had done upon several "occasions. He wrote the very same Words at that time to Charles the Simple, and prays him to re-invest Argrin in his Bishopriek, which is his fourth Letter. We have two Letters likewise of Pope Benedict on the same subject, wherein writing to the Bishops of France, to the Clergy and Bishop of Langres, he confirm'd the sentence of his Predecessor in favour of Argrin, and very earnestly presses for his Restitution.

The Letters of Benedict IV.

We have likewise two Letters of the Bishops of Germany directed to this Pope. The first is writ in the name of Hatto, Archbishop of Mayence, and his Suffragans. After protestation made, that there were no Churches more submissive to the Holy See than Theirs, nor any Bishops paid greater deference to it than they did, they acquaint him that the Emperor Arnulphus being dead, his Son Lewis had been elected in his place, by the Advice of the Princes, and with the consent of the People, according to the Ancient custom of continuing the Kings of France always in the same Line. They told the Pope, that the reason why they did it without his permission, was, because all the Passes that open'd from Germany to Italy, were in the possession of the Barbarians, so that they could not send Deputies to Rome, nor could the Pope send his Legats to them: that having at last found an opportunity of conveying this Letter to his hands, they pray'd him to confirm by his Benediction the choice which they had made. After this they inform'd him of the Complaints which the Bishops of Bavaria made, upon the account that the Moravians, who had possess'd themselves of Moravia, and were declar'd Rebels against the French, pretended that they were out of their Jurisdiction, and would have a distinct Metropolitan of their own; and they accus'd the Bavarians of entering into Alliance with the Pagans, and partaking of the disorders which they committed. They assur'd the Pope, that this accusation was a malicious calumny, and gave him to understand, that if he should grant the Moravians a Metropolitan, and permit them to withdraw themselves from the Jurisdiction of the Bishops of Bavaria, he would be the cause of great disorders; for this would give them an occasion of rising against the powers to which they ought to be subject, and of making a new War with them. They added, that they gave him this caution with so much the more freedom, because they thought themselves oblig'd to inform him, when ever any thing happen'd to the Church of Rome which defery'd correction, that so some speedy and necessary Remedy might be apply'd thereto.

The Letter of Hatto Archbishop of Mayence to John IX.

The Letter of the Bishops of Bavaria to John IX.

The Letter of Theotmarus, Metropolitan of Bavaria, and of the other Bishops of that Province upon the same subject is as strong. 'Tis written not only in the name of the Bishop, but also in the name of the Clergy and people of Bavaria. They remonstrated to the Pope, that having learn'd from his Predecessors, and the Holy Fathers of the Church, that the Bishop of Rome, had always taken care to maintain the Peace, Union, and Discipline of each Church, they could not tell how to believe what they had notice of every day, that there was issued out of the Apostolical See (the Origine of the Christian Religion, and the source of their sacerdotal Dignity) a Decree unjust, and contrary to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church: but that an Archbishop called John, and two Bishops who gave out that they were sent by the Pope to the Moravians, had given occasion for this Report. That these People were formerly Dependants on their Prince, and on their Bishops, who had converted them: That the Bishop of Passau had always liberty of entring among them, and of holding Synods there, till such time as they rose up in Arms, and renounced Christianity. That of late indeed they boasted that they for a summ of Money had prevail'd upon the Pope to send three Bishops, who, in the Bishoprick of Passau had undertaken such a thing, as they could not believe proceeded from the Holy Apostolical See, being so directly contrary to the Intention of the Canons; namely, to canton that Bishoprick into five parts, and to place an Archbishop and three Bishops into that Diocess, without the consent of the Archbishop and Bishop. They cited two Canons of Africa, and several passages out of the Letters of Pope Leo and Celestine, wherein this very thing was prohibited. They add, that his Predecessor had consecrated Wichinaur Bishop, at the instance of of the instance of the Duke of Zutphen, but withal, had sent him not into the Dutchy of Passaw, but into a Conquer'd Country. They likewise complain'd, that his Legats giving credit to the Stories of the Sclavonians, accus'd them of several falsities. They likewise took notice that their Prince was descended from the House of the King of France, who were Christians, whereas the Moravians and Sclavonians were originally Pagans and Enemies to the Christian Religion. They prais'd their King Lewis, and observ'd how zealous he was for Religion and the Holy See. They refuted the Reports which the Sclavonians had rais'd of their entering into a prophane Alliance with the Hunns, and of their supplying them with money to go into Italy. They said that the Sclavonians were the persons who were in confederacy with the Hunns, when they pillag'd, burnt, and ravag'd all before them. That for their parts, they design'd to have oppos'd their entering Italy, and to have march'd to the Assistance of Lombardy; and that they might be in a condition to do it, they desired a Cessation of Arms from the Sclavonians, but could not obtain it. They concluded by conjuring the Pope not to give credit to the calumnies which the Sclavonians cast upon them, nor suffer such a division in their Church.

One of the two Councils held under John IX. conven'd at Rome, and the other at Ravenna. The Institutions of the former are divided into twelve Articles.

The first condemns the Proceedings of the Synods held under Stephen VI. against the Body of Formosus, which they had dug out of his Grave, cited and judg'd in a full Synod, which was an Action without all Precedent. In this Article is forbidden all such usage for the future, because a dead body cannot be cited into a Court of Judicature, since 'tis impossible he should answer the Accusations laid to his charge.

The second grants a full pardon to the Bishops, Priests, and other Clergy-men, who out of fear of being ill treated themselves, assisted at that; And Orders that for the future no such constraints shall be used, but that the Bishops when they convene shall be left to a perfect Liberty and Freedom.

The third imports, that since Formosus had been translated from the Bishoprick of Oporto to that of Rome, purely out of necessity, no person could make it a Precedent for the future, and it shall not be allow'd to promote any person to any higher degree of Dignity, who has been declar'd to have forfeited an inferior Order, unless he has been re-establish'd canonically; as the people had done in advancing Boniface I. who had been depos'd from the Subdeaconship, and afterwards from Priest's Orders.

The fourth restores those Clerks to their Orders, who were ordain'd by Pope Formosus, and had been depos'd in a passion.

The fifth renews the Canon of the African Council against Re-ordinations, Re-baptizations, and Translations; and prohibites the ordinary Bishops in those Churches, which were provided with Bishops, unless those who were in possession had been depos'd according to the Canon.

The sixth confirms the consecration of Lambert for Emperor, and condemns that of Berenger.

The seventh condemns the Acts of the Council of Rome against Formosus, to be burnt.

The eighth declares Sergius, Benedict, and Marinus Priests; and Leo, and Pascal, and John Deacons, to be lawfully condemn'd and separated from the Church, and anathematizes those who should acknowledge them as Clergy-men, or should endeavour to re-establish them.

The ninth excommunicates the persons, who had dug up the body of Formosus, and cast it into the Tiber.

The tenth, for the prevention of those Violences, and that scandal which sometimes happen'd in the Election of Popes, ordains that for the future, none should be made, but what were elected by an Assembly of the Bishops and Clergy, in pursuance to the Desires of the Senate and People, and in the presence of the Emperor. This Canon likewise forbids the exacting of unreasonable Oaths and Promises.

The eleventh is level'd against an abuse very prevalent at that time, of robbing the Pope after his Decease, not only of his Patriarchal Seat, but of all others which belong'd to him in Rome, or thereabouts.

The twelfth was against another abuse which prevail'd at Rome. The secular Judges apprehended such Women as were suspected to be bad Livers, and by the severity which they us'd to them, oblig'd their Masters or their Relations to redeem them at a dear price: and afterwards those who had redeem'd them, whether Clerks, or Laicks, thought they might freely enjoy them without the fear of a Reprimand, since the publick censure was pass'd upon them; which was the cause of a very great disorder. The Council to put a stop thereto, granted the taking cognisance of and passing Judgment on these offences to the Bishops, with a power of citing the Refractory before the civil Magistrates.

Some time after, the Pope being come to the Emperor Lambert at Ravenna, they there conven'd a Council of 74 Bishops, who confirm'd what had been done in the Council of Rome, and approv'd of the ten following Inſtitutions.

By the firſt it is ordain'd, that the Canons of the Holy Fathers, and what is contain'd in the Regiſters of Charlemagn and his Succeſſors concerning Tenths ſhould be obſerv'd.

Afterwards the Emperor propos'd two Articles. By the firſt, all perſons whatſoever are forbidden to arreſt, or offer any injury to thoſe who ſhould make their Appeals to his Imperial Majeſty.

By the ſecond, the Emperor confirms the Ancient Priviledges granted or confirm'd by his Predeceſſors to the Church of Rome.

The Pope afterwards propos'd the following Articles.

Firſt, A confirmation of what was enacted in the Council of Rome, in favour of Formoſus.

Secondly, The puniſhing of the Outrages committed on the Territories of the Church of Rome, which had oblig'd him to have recourſe to the Emperor.

Thirdly, A Renewing of the Treaty made between the Holy See, and the Emperor Guy, Lambert's Father.

Fourthly, That the Edicts which were not conformable to the conditions of this Treaty ſhould be repeal'd.

Fifthly, That the Eſtates granted by the Letters Patents of the Prince, to the prejudice of that ſame Treaty, ſhould be reſtored to the Church.

Sixthly, That the Emperor ſhall break off the Leagues which the Romans, the Lombards, and the French had made together, contrary to the Intereſts of the Holy See and the Empire.

Laſtly, That the Emperor ſhall protect the Church of Rome, prevent its being diſturb'd, and uſe his utmoſt care to reſtore to it its ordinary Revenues, which were now waſted.

Theſe Articles being approv'd by the Biſhops, the Pope recommended to them the Appointing a Faſt and ſolemn Litanies upon their Return to their Reſpective Dioceſſes.

[The four Letters of Pope John IX. and his Acts of the two Councils are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 483.]

John X.

The Letters of John X.

WE have three Letters of John X. which relate to the Affairs of France. The two firſt are about the Affair of Hilduin, whom Charles the Simple had turn'd out of the Biſhoprick of Leige. This Hilduin being ſupported by Giſelbert, who held part of Lorrain againſt Charles the Simple, and by Henry the Fowler, King of Germany, was ordain'd Biſhop of Tongres, or Liege, by Herman Archbiſhop of Cologne, plac'd into the poſſeſſion thereof, and rifled the effects of it. Charles the Simple nominated Richerus to this Biſhoprick, and caus'd him to be elected by a party of the Clergy and Laity of Liege, who were come to him to complain of the extravagances of Hilduin. This Prince thereupon wrote a Letter to all the Biſhops of his Kingdom, wherein he made it appear by the Regiſters and Canons, that Hilduin was not fit to be a Biſhop. (1.) Becauſe he was a Rebel and Traytor againſt his Prince. (2.) Becauſe he procur'd himſelf to be ordain'd by Faction and Violence. (3.) Becauſe he rifled the Treaſures of the Church of Liege, to beſtow on thoſe who were the Inſtruments of his Ordination. (4.) Becauſe he had pretended that the King had conferr'd on him the Biſhoprick of Liege. (5.) Becauſe being cited thrice by Herman, to make his appearance before the Synod, he had not complied therewith. After this remonſtrance, Charles exhorts the Biſhops of his Kingdom to joyn with him, in turning this Uſurper out of the Biſhoprick of Liege.

The Letters of Charles the Simple about Hilduin.

'Tis very probable that he wrote likewiſe to Pope John X. upon this very ſubject, and that this gave occaſion to that Pope to write to Herman, citing him, and Hilduin, and Richerus to come to Rome, that he might decide this difference; of which he inform'd Charles the Simple in another Letter. The two Competitors obey'd, and came both to Rome, where the Cauſe was decided in favour of Richerus, who was ordain'd Biſhop of Liege by the Pope, and Hilduin was excommunicated. This conteſt began in the year 920, and ended in the year 922.

The third Letter of Pope John X. is directed to the Biſhops of the upper Narbonnois. The Church of Narbonne which was the Metropolis of that Country, being vacant, Agius had been elected into it according to the Canon; but a powerful man named Gerard, poſſeſs'd himſelf of that Archbiſhoprick, having counterfeited Letters from the Pope. John X. diſowns them in this Letter, and declares that he would not give him a grant thereof when he came to Rome, tho he was ignorant of his Treachery and Knavery: but that, being ſince fully inform'd of the matter, he orders them not to acknowledge him any longer for Biſhop, ſince he had been neither elected by the Clergy and Laity of that Town, not ordain'd by the Biſhops of the Province. By the ſame Letter he ſends the Pall to Agius. [Theſe three Letters of John X. are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 574.]

Leo VII.

WE have likewiſe three Letters remaining of Leo VII.

The Firſt is directed to Hugh, Duke of France, and Abbot of S. Martin of Tours. He therein enjoyns him, under the pain of excommunication, not to ſuffer any Women to ſtay, or ſo much as enter within the incloſure of that Monaſtery. The Letters of Leo VII.

The Second is directed to Gerard, Archbiſhop of Lorch in Germany. He grants him the Pall, and permits him to make uſe of it, not only on the days of conſecrating the Holy Chriſm, and of the Reſurrection of our Lord, but alſo on the Feſtivals of Chriſtmaſs, of the Bleſſed Virgin, of the Apoſtles, of St. John the Baptiſt, of St. Lawrence, of St. Stephen, and of all thoſe Saints whoſe Bodies lay interr'd in his Church, and on the Day of his own Conſecration, and of the Dedication of the Church; during the conſecration of Biſhops and Prieſts, and the Sermons to the new Converts. He exhorts him to behave himſelf ſo, as that the Sanctity of his Morals may be ſuitable to the Dignity of that Ornament, and afterwards makes a very edifying Moral diſcourſe upon that ſubject.

This Gerard came afterwards to Rome, and conſulted with the Pope about ſeveral Queſtions, to which he gave an anſwer directed to the Biſhops of France and Germany. The firſt of theſe Queſtions is concerning Necromancers, Magicians, and Wizards, whether they ought to be admitted to Penitence: The Pope reply'd, that the Biſhops ought to bring them over to repentance by their exhortations, that ſo they might live like Penitents rather than dye like Criminals. He adds, that if they ſlighted the cenſures of the Biſhops, they ought to be puniſh'd according to the Rigor of the civil Laws. The ſecond Queſtion is, whether the Biſhops ought to ſay Pax Vobis, or Dominus Vobiſcum: the Pope reply'd, that they ought to act conformably to the cuſtom of the Church of Rome, wherein Pax Vobis was ſaid on Sundays, the principal Feſtivals, and on the Feſtivals of the Saints, on which days they likewiſe ſaid Gloria in excelſis; and that Dominus vobiſcum was us'd in the time of Lent, the Ember-Weeks, the Vigil of Saints, and on Faſt-days. The third Queſtion is, to know whether the Lords Prayer ought to be ſaid at the benediction of the Table: The Pope reply'd, No, becauſe the Apoſtles recited it at the conſecration of the Body and Blood of JESUS-CHRIST. The fourth is, whether a man might marry with his God-mother, or God-daughter: The Pope reply'd, that ſuch Marriages were forbidden. The fifth has reſpect to thoſe Prieſts who marry publickly: The Pope orders, that th y ſhall be depriv'd of their Dignity, but that their Children ſhould not be endamaged thereby. The ſixth is, whether Suffragan Biſhops can conſecrate Churches, ordain Prieſts, or Confirm: The Pope prohibits it, according to the tenth Canon of the Council of Antioch. The ſeventh is, concerning thoſe who marry their Relations without knowing it, and who afterwards upon the knowledge thereof, confeſs it to the Prieſt: the Pope orders, that they ſhall be parted and enjoyn'd Pennance. The laſt is, concerning thoſe who rob Churches: the Pope declares, that the Biſhops ought to proceed againſt them with all the Authority God has put into their hands. At the end of this Letter he adds, that he conſtituted Gerard his Vicar in Germany; and exhorts the Biſhops to joyn with him in reforming thoſe abuſes, which the Incurſions of the Pagans, and the perſecution rais'd by falſe Chriſtians had introduc'd.

Theſe Letters of Leo are written in a pretty good Stile, and full of good Maxims, and confirm the Judgment which Flodoard has paſſed upon him, that he was a great Servant of God. [His Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 594.]

Agapetus II.

WE have likewiſe a Letter of Pope Agapetus II. wherein he adjuſts the difference which was then on foot between the Church of Lorch and that of Salzburgh, concerning the Right of Metropolitanſhip, by giving the Priority to the Archbiſhop of Lorch, whoſe See was the moſt ancient Metropolitan, together with a Juriſdiction over the Eaſtern Pannonia, and over the Country of Avarois, of the Moravians and Sclavonians, and by granting to the Archbiſhop of Salzburgh, whoſe See was rais'd to an Archbiſhoprick by Leo III. the Right over the Weſtern Pannonia. A Letter of Agapetus II.

There is another Letter of this Pope, which is a Priviledge in favour of the Abby of Cluny. [Both theſe Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 618.]

John XII.

The Letters of John XII. WE have two Letters of John XII. One, by which he grants the Pall to Dunſtan, Archbiſhop of Canterbury: and the other, whereby he excommunicates Iſſuard and his Adherents, who had ſeiz'd upon the Lands and Eſtates belonging to the Abbey of S. Simphorien in Provence. [Theſe Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 641.]

John XIII.

The Letters of John XIII. THere are four Letters of John XIII. The firſt is directed to the Biſhops of Bretagne, whom he exhorts to acknowledge the Archbiſhop of Tours for their Metropolitan. The ſecond is directed to Edgar King of England, wherein he promiſes him to turn out of the Church of Wincheſter, ſuch Prebendaries as lead a ſcandalous Life, and to put ſome Monks into their places. The third and fourth are two priviledges which he grants, one to the Monaſtery built by Berenger Biſhop of Verdun, the other to the Monaſtery of S. Remy of Rheims. [Theſe four Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 663.]

Benedict VI.

The Letter of Benedict VII. POpe Benedict VII. by his Letter to the Biſhops of France and Germany, confirms the Arbitration made in favour of the Church of Lorch by his Predeceſſor Agapetus, and ſends the Pall to Pilgrin, who was Archbiſhop of the place. [This Letter is extant Concil Tom. IX. p. 718. It was firſt publiſh'd by Lambeck Com. Lib. 2. C. 8. p. 645. who likewiſe gives us a Diploma of this Benedict concerning the priviledges of the Monaſtery of Gemblours, anno Dom. 983. which is to be met with in Lambeck's Book p. 901.]

John XV.

The Letters of John XV. THey give the Title of the Letters of John XV. to a Treaty of Peace between Etheldred King of the Weſt Saxons, and Richard Duke of Normandy; to a Monitory which this Pope ſent to Arnold and Baldwin, Counts of Flanders, admoniſhing them to make Reſtitution of the Revenues belonging to the Abbey of S. Riquirer; and to another ſuch like Monitory ſent to the Biſhops of Picardy, exhorting them to procure the ſaid Reſtitution to be made. [Theſe three Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 731.]

Gregory V.

The Letters of Gregory V. Gregory V. reſtor'd to John Archbiſhop of Ravenna, the Church of Placentia, which had been rais'd by his Predeceſſor to an Archbiſhoprick, and put that of Monferrat under its Juriſdiction: This is the ſubject of the firſt Letter of this Pope.

By the ſecond he grants the Pall to Gerbert, Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and confirms and grants ſeveral priviledges to that Church.

The third letter of this Pope is, a Priviledge which he grants to the Abbey of S. Ambroſe of Millan.

The fourth is directed to Queen Conſtantia, the Wife of Robert King of France, whom he exhorts to puniſh thoſe who had pillag'd and burnt the Demeans of a Biſhop of France called Julian. [Theſe four Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 752. Baluzius publiſh'd another Letter of his, concerning the priviledges of the Abbots of Mons major.]

This is all we have remaining of the Writings of the Popes, which were in poſſeſſion of the Holy See during the Tenth Century.

Ratherius Biſhop of Verona.

Ratherius Biſhop of Verona. AMong the famous men who flouriſh'd in Italy during this Century, none was of greater Repute than Ratherius, Biſhop of Verona. His life has ſomething in it extraordinary, upon the account of the many croſs Accidents which he met with. He was a Monk in the Abbey of Lobbes, where he grew into great eſteem for his Learning. Happy had he been, had he ſtay'd quietly in that peaceable Harbour, and not expos'd himſelf, as he did, to the Waves of a tempeſtuous World. But whether he was called to another Poſt becauſe of his Abilities, or whether he had ſome other motive to incline him to it, it, he follow'd the fortune of that Hilduin, who had uſurp'd the Biſhoprick of Liege, and was afterwards turn'd out of it. Hilduin retir'd into Italy, and after the Death of Notger, Biſhop of Verona, he was put into the poſſeſſion of that Biſhoprick by King Hugh, who promis'd to advance him to a more conſiderable See when occaſion ſhould offer, and then to beſtow that of Verona on Ratherius. A while after that Prince having determin'd to tranſlate Hilduin to Milan, ſent Ratherius to Rome, to procure Pope John XI. to approve of this Tranſlation. Whilſt Ratherius was upon this Negotiation at Rome, King Hugh alter'd his mind, and deſign'd to beſtow the Archbiſhoprick of Milan upon ſome other perſon. However, Ratherius brought a Letter from Rome, whereby the Pope approv'd of the Inſtalment of Hilduin, in the Archbiſhoprick of Milan, and granted him the Pall, and another Letter, whereby he requir'd in his own Name, and in the name of the Church of Rome, that Ratherius ſhould be made Biſhop of Verona. This diſpleas'd King Hugh, who had other deſigns in his head: however, he could not tell how to deny the Requeſts of the holy See, and of the Lords that were about him. He was the more inclin'd to grant it, becauſe Ratherius being then ſick, he believ'd he would quickly march off to the other world. But he recover'd of his diſtemper, and was ordain'd Biſhop in the year 931. Hugh being very much enrag'd againſt him, ſwore that he ſhould be never the better for his Ordination, and would oblige him to be contented with only a part of the Revenue of his Church, and to ſwear that he would not require any more of it during his Reign and his Son's Reign. Ratherius was not willing to ſubmit to ſuch an unreaſonable propoſition, whereupon this Prince caus'd him to be perſecuted, and ſought for pretences of turning him out. The War of Arnulphus furniſh'd him with a favourable opportunity of doing it; for Arnulphus becoming maſter of Verona, Ratherius was accus'd of being one of his party; and when Hugh had re-taken the Town, he ſent him Priſoner to Pavia, where he was under confinement two years and an half. Being releas'd thence, he was oblig'd to go into exile, where he ſpent five years, after which he returns into Italy, in hopes of being reſtor'd to his Biſhoprick. In his return he fell into the hands of Berenger, who kept him in priſon three months and an half by the Advice of Manaſſes: afterwards he was brought to Verona, and receiv'd by Milo, Count of that City. He ſtay'd there two years, under the Government of that Count, who would not allow him any liberty. In the mean time Manaſſes, Archbiſhop of Arles, being tranſlated to Milan, bethought himſelf of ordaining a perſon for the Church of Verona, and ſome time after Ratherius receiv'd an Order from the Emperor Lotharius to withdraw. He did very willingly, he ſays, in obedience to that Order, that which he would have done of himſelf, if he had not been forbidden by the Goſpel to relinquiſh his Flock. He takes no notice whither he retir'd at this time, but the Abbot Fulcuin tells us, that he ſtay'd ſome time at Provence with a Nobleman's Son call'd Roeſteing, that afterwards he return'd to Lobbes, where he was very kindly receiv'd by Riquier who was ſtill living, and that at laſt he was ſent for by the Emperor Otho, who plac'd him near the perſon of his Brother Bruno. This Bruno having been made Archbiſhop of Cologne, in the year 953. beſtow'd on Ratherius the Biſhoprick of Liege, vacant by the death of Farabert, who had ſucceeded Hugh, the Succeſſor of Riquier. But bad Fortune always attended him, for he was oppos'd by a prevailing party, who turn'd him out two years after, and put up in his place one Baudrey, a perſon of Quality in that Country. Spite of theſe croſſes, he had a mind to be re-eſtated in his Biſhoprick of Verona, and attempted it when Otho came into Italy a ſecond time. At firſt he met with ſome difficulty, becauſe the place was filled by Milo's Grandſon, whoſe ordination had been ratified by the Holy See. However, he inſiſted upon it, wrote very powerfully to Pope John XII. and to the Biſhops of France and Germany, cited them to a Council, and prevailed ſo far as to be re-eſtabliſh'd in a Synod held at Pavia. But he was no ſooner re-enſtated in his See, but he had new controverſies between himſelf and his Clergy, ſo that he took up a Reſolution to retire. About the year 966. he came into France, where he purchas'd Lands, and bought the Abbeys of S. Amand of Aumont, and of Alne, in the laſt of which he dy'd in the year 972.

Ratherius Biſhop of Verona.

This Biſhop has compos'd ſeveral Treatiſes, a great part whereof hath been recovered and publiſh'd by Father Dachery, in the ſecond Tome of his Spicelegium.

The firſt has a very fantaſtical Title: 'Tis entitul'd, A Treatiſe of the Perpendiculars of Ratherius Biſhop of Verona, or the Viſion of a Thief, hang'd among ſeveral others. It is dedicated to Hubert Biſhop of Parma, and he therein reprehends that ſlight which the Clergy put upon the Canons. The Work is divided into two parts. In the firſt he complains, that he had formerly been turn'd out by the Clergy of his own Church, who could not endure that he ſhould concern himſelf with the diſtribution of the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues of his own Dioceſs, tho it was part of the Paſtors Duty; and who were not willing he ſhould exerciſe himſelf in any other Function, than that of conſecrating the Chriſm, and of confirmation. Being haraſs'd by their continual Rebellion, he undertook in this Writing to ſhew that their Attempt was a manifeſt Contempt of the Canons: and for the proof thereof, he began by collecting thoſe Canons which related to the Authority of Biſhops, and which granted to them the Adminiſtration of the Goods belonging to their own Churches.

Af-

Ratherius Biſhop of Verona.

Afterwards he made it appear by an Argumentation, that Biſhops not being only oblig'd to feed their Flocks ſpiritually, but alſo corporally, they had a right to take cognizance of the ſtate and diſtribution of the Church Revenues, ſo as to divide them among the Clergy according to juſtice and equity. He ſhews that this equity had been perverted in the diſtribution which was made in the Church of Verona; becauſe the moſt powerful ran away with the greateſt ſhare thereof, and enrich'd themſelves at other mens coſts, and that the Prieſts and Deacons kept all to themſelves, without parting with any to the reſt of the Clergy. He adds, that theſe latter, in whoſe behalf he ſpoke, did not much concern themſelves about it, upon two accounts: Firſt, becauſe they were very glad they had this pretence to excuſe themſelves from doing the Church any ſervice: Secondly, becauſe they hop'd hereafter to have the ſame advantage. Whereas they objected, that the cuſtom of the Church of Verona was quite contrary, he maintains that they ought not to prefer an evil cuſtom to the Intention of the Canons, and to the Laws of the Church. It was again objected to him, that it was a reflection upon a Biſhop to degrade himſelf ſo far, as to diſtribute amongſt the Clergy, and to appoint each their Allowance of Corn, of Wine, and of Money. He reply'd to this, that it was not at all requiſite that the Biſhop ſhould do this himſelf, but that he might do it by his Prieſts and Deacons, if he could find any among them whom he could truſt: which way was authoris'd by the example of the Apoſtles, who made uſe of Deacons to diſtribute the Alms which were collected by their Order; and by the practice of S. Sixtus, who committed the diſtribution of the Treaſures of the Church to S. Lawrence: upon which he makes this remark, that St. Lawrence ſpeaking to S. Sixtus, told him, that he had diſpos'd of his Treaſures, calling the Treaſures of the Church, the Treaſures of the Biſhops; becauſe the Biſhop is as it were the Husband of the Church. He proves the ſame things out of the Civil Laws, which gave the Biſhops a power of treating about the priviledges of the Church. He afterwards invieghs againſt that general contempt, which all ſorts of Chriſtians, from the meaneſt Laick to the Pope himſelf, caſt upon the Canons and Laws of the Church: and he with a great deal of heat declaims againſt the irregular Lives of the Eccleſiaſticks of his time, who made no ſcruple of violating the Canons openly in matters of moment, as well as in ſmall things. He reproves very ſmartly, and charges them with ſeveral Diſorders, which he deſcribes in a plain and naked dreſs. He ſpeaks againſt thoſe perſons of Quality, who were mark'd out for Church Preferments, and advanc'd thereto by all manner of contrivances, how unfit ſoever they were for ſuch an employ: He calls them Thieves, falſe Shepherds, whoſe bleſſing turn'd to a curſe; perſons excommunicated by the Canons a thouſand times over, who render the Authority of Biſhops contemptible, and were the cauſe why men ſet ſo ſlight by their excommunications and abſolutions.

In the Second part of his Treatiſe, Ratherius more particularly falls upon the Immodeſty of the Clergy, which was at ſuch a heighth in his time, that one could ſcarce (ſays he) find a man fit to be ordained a Biſhop, or any Biſhop fit to ordain others. He takes notice that of all the Nations in Chriſtendom, the Italians were the perſons who had the leaſt regard for the Canons, and the leaſt eſteem for the Clergy: * The reaſon he gives for it is that the Eccleſiaſticks of their Country were the moſt irregular in their Conduct, the moſt Immodeſt in their outward behaviour, and the moſt remiſs in the diſcharge of their Duty. He reckons up ſeveral horrible Stories, and charges them chiefly with an Infamous Converſe with Women. In the concluſion he gives them to underſtand that they had ſtill place left for Repentance, and earneſtly exhorts them thereto. This Work was compos'd by Ratherius ſome time after he was laſt re-eſtabliſhed in his Biſhoprick of Verona by the Emperor Otho about the year 962.

[* This likewiſe one great reaſon of that general Contempt which our modern Clergy labor under; and which will in all ſucceeding Ages caſt a ſcorn and reproach on all ſuch irregular Clerks of what Church or Nation ſoever they be.]

The Second Treatiſe is intituled: A Deliberative Determination made at Liege. He there alleges forty reaſons, why he thought himſelf obliged neither formally nor tacitly to renounce the Government of his Flock, nor to abandon it to thoſe who had robb'd him of it. Theſe Reaſons are ſtrong and ſhort, and are of the Nature of Aphoriſms: In the concluſion he ſays that he formerly made uſe of them for the Biſhoprick of Liege; but that the Sixteen firſt were likewiſe applicable to that of Verona. He ends with an Imprecation againſt thoſe who perſiſt to haraſs and diſturb him. This Work was written at that time when he ſollicited his re-eſtabliſhment in the Biſhoprick of Verona.

The third Treatiſe is intituled: Qualitatis conjectura cujuſdam. He therein expoſes under an unknown Name, all that his Enemies laid to his charge, and how they conſtrued all his actions in a wrong ſenſe. 'Tis a continu'd piece of Rallery on their Spite and Malice; and wrote about the end of his Life, when he had taken up his reſolution to retire: for he therein obſerves that it was forty years ago ſince he began to aſpire to Greatneſs and Authority, without being ever able to attain it. Laſtly, he complains that the Emperor himſelf had forſaken him.

The following Treatiſe is compos'd upon the variance which hapn'd between him and the Clergy of Verona after his re-eſtabliſhment. He ſays that it was no new thing, and that it began at the time of his Ordination: That it proceeded, (1.) becauſe his morals and thoſe of his Clerks were a contradiction to each other. (2.) Becauſe he preferr'd the obſervation of the the Canons to those Customs which were introduc'd by the Devil. (3.) Because he had restrain'd them from keeping company with Women, according to the Injunction of the Council of Nice. (4.) Because he would not permit the unequal distribution of the Church Goods among the Clergy. That 'tis upon this last account the quarrel between him and them is founded, as he had already demonstrated in a Letter written to Hubert, which is his first Treatise. He declaims very strongly against the general irregularity of all the Clergy, which he describes with very little Caution. He tells us the reason why he undertook to discourse of the distribution of the Goods of his Church, was, because the Clerks, who had received an order from the Emperor to leave off that familiarity which they held with women, excused themselves from so doing, under a pretence of their Poverty. That it was upon this account he entred upon this particular, that they might all have wherewithal to live. Ratherius Bishop of Verona.

The Apologetick Treatise of Ratherius, is not an Apology of his whole Life, but he therein only gives an account how he had employed a summ of money, which the Emperor put into his hands for the re-building the Church of S. Zeno. One of his Enemies, nam'd Marcian, found fault with what he did, and would have had him distributed it amongst the Poor. Ratherius makes it appear that he ought not to do it. (1.) Because it was design'd for the rebuilding of the Church. (2.) Because there were not very many poor in his Diocess, and that several persons contributed to their subsistance: whereas on the contrary, there were very many Churches demolished, or at least very much out of repair, for the rebuilding of which nothing was bestowed; that thereupon he supposed he might even employ a part of that Portion of the Church Goods intended for the Poor on such a good work. He tells us, that his Antagonist had ventur'd to go to Rome without his Licence, and that he had by Bribes procur'd Letters from the Pope, which excommunicated him and the Bishops his Successors, in case they should concern themselves with the distribution of the Church Goods. He says, that it was impossible but that this Excommunication would be the cause of a great deal of trouble; for if he should slight the Anathema of the holy See, he should give a very bad Precedent; but on the other hand, if he should submit to it, he should be no longer a Bishop, since he who is made a Bishop, at the same time is made an Overseer, not only in spiritual things, but also in the Temporalities of his Church, as it is ordain'd by a vast number of Canons. This Treatise was compos'd by Ratherius after his last re-establishment.

The following was wrote much about the same time. 'Tis a discourse directed to his Clergy, wherein he upbraids them of their Rebellion. He there tells them that he had resolv'd to excommunicate them, as they had deserved; but he had delay'd doing it, in hopes they would have reform'd of themselves: That he tarryed for a Commission from the Emperor, who should report to his Imperial Majesty the Reasons of both sides, upon which the Emperor should determine what he pleased, and he would obey his Orders.

This Treatise is followed by a Charter, whereby Ratherius institutes several Clerks into a Monastery, in the place of the Abbot and Monks, whom he was oblig'd to turn out, because of their Irregularities. He therein appoints that they should sing the Office, and that every one of them should have his share of Corn, Wine, Pulse and Money, without dividing the Lands and Vineyards.

The following Treatise is an Injunction of Ratherius against the Marriage of a Clergy-mans Son of Verona, which was perform'd on a Sunday in Lent. He declares that it is irregular, and that no Marriage ought to be celebrated during Lent, nor on Fast-days, nor on Sundays, nor on Holydays; and orders that all those who should commit such a fault, should fast for forty days; that is to say, that when others of the faithful eat at nine of the clock, they should stay till noon e're they eat: when others fast till noon, they should fast till till three a clock: and when others fast till three a clock, they shall abstain from eating till night. He exhorts them likewise to be charitable to the poor during this time. He declares that he would undergo the same pennance himself for being backward in opposing such an irregularity. He excommunicates such Offenders as would not submit to this Pennance, and declares that God would consign them over to eternal Damnation.

After this Treatise there are five Letters of his writing. The first is directed to Martin Bishop of Ferrara, wherein he acquaints him that his Clergy laid several Crimes to his charge, particularly that of ordaining several Infants for money. He exhorts him to repent, and to behave himself better for the future.

The second Letter is writ in the name of all the Clergy of Verona, and directed to him, who was then in the Holy Apostolical See, to the Senate, and to all the faithful of the Church of Rome. It was compos'd by Ratherius some time after his Re-establishment, that is about the year 963. during the contest between John XII. and the Emperor. Upon which account in the direction of his Letter he names only in general, "The Bishop "who is in the Holy Apostolical See, whoever he be. Domino Sanctæ Sedis Romanæ, quicun- "que est, Apostolico. In this Letter he desires to know what he ought to do with those Clergymen of Verona, who enter'd into Orders whilst that Church was govern'd by Intruders.

Ratherus Biſhop of Verona.

dets. He drew up a collection of thoſe Canons, which declare ſuch Ordinations to be invalid: however, he declares in the name of his Clergy, that their Biſhop having referr'd the deciſion of the caſe wholly to the judgment of the holy See, they earneſtly entreated that See to aſſiſt them, and deal favourably with them in that particular.

The Letter which follows precedes in date that which we have been juſt now ſpeaking of; Ratherius wrote it to Pope John XII. in his own name, to deſire his re-eſtabliſhment. He ſtiles the Pope the Biſhop of the Chief See, i. e. of Rome, Archbiſhop of Archbiſhops, and Univerſal Pope, if it were lawful to give that title to any Mortal. He therein deſcribes his own misfortunes, and the hiſtory of his own Life, and entreats the Pope to judge whether he ought to be Biſhop of Verona, or no.

The fourth Letter is writ upon the ſame ſubject, and directed to the Biſhops of Italy, France, and Germany; he therein implores their Aſſiſtance, and cites his Adverſary to a Council, that his Cauſe might be determin'd there.

The fifth Letter is imperfect: 'tis a dedicatory Epiſtle of ſome Work, directed to a Biſhop.

Theſe particular Letters are follow'd by a Synodical Letter, which Ratherius publiſh'd in a Synod which he held after his laſt re-eſtabliſhment, in order to inſtruct his Clergy, who were very ignorant. He recommends to them at firſt the getting by heart the Apoſtle's Creed, that which was ſung at Maſs, and the Creed of S. Athanaſius. He explains to them the myſteries of the principal Feſtivals of the year, exhorts them to ſay Maſs, and to communicate on the Feſtivals and Sundays; and advertizes thoſe who would enter into Prieſts Orders of what they ought to know and practice, in order to their Ordination; which he reduces to theſe heads: They muſt bring Certificates out of the Church Regiſters, whether they be free-born, and of the ſame Dioceſs. If they are born Slaves, they muſt produce their Letter of Freedom: and if they be of another Dioceſs, Letters of recommendation from their Biſhop, call'd now Letters Demiſſory. They muſt learn by heart, and be able to explain the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and to read diſtinctly, and to explain the Epiſtle and Goſpel. They muſt know how to adminiſter the Sacraments of Baptiſm, of Pennance, and of Extream Unction, and how to perform the Ceremonies for the Burial of the Dead, and for the Bleſſing of Holy Water. Thay muſt be well vers'd in Singing and in the Calender, and they muſt have a Martyrology and a Penitential. He adds, that he would not admit any into Prieſts Orders, unleſs they had ſpent ſome time in his City, either in a Monaſtery, or under the Diſcipline of ſome Learned Man, and were men of ſome Learning themſelves. He informs his Clergy that the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues being divided into four parts, whereof only one belong'd to them, they ought not to encroach on thoſe which belong'd to the Biſhop, to the Poor, and to Building. He orders that a Regular obſervation ſhould be made of Lent every day alike, except Sundays; that during Advent they ſhould abſtain from eating of Fleſh, and from the celebration of Marriage. He requires that abſtinence in the laſt caſe ſhould likewiſe be obſerv'd in the Octaves of Eaſter and Whitſontide, in the time of publick Prayers, in the Vigils of all the Feſtivals, on all Fridays and Sundays; that they ſhould faſt till † None all the Paſſion-Week; that on Eaſter Eve no Prieſt ſhould ſay Maſs before ten a clock, nor ſolemnly Chriſten any before that hour. He declares that the Prieſts can enjoyn Pennance, and give Abſolution for ſecret Sins, but for publick Offences they ought to apply themſelves to the Biſhop. Laſtly, he would have them omit the Feſtivals, which fell out in Lent, except thoſe of the Virgin Mary, the Apoſtles, and the Saints, whoſe bodies lay interr'd in their Church. There is inſerted in this Synodical Letter, a diſcourſe containing likewiſe ſeveral Advices and Inſtructions for Eccleſiaſticks, the which is attributed to Pope Leo IV. and S. Ulric. 'Tis very plain, that 'tis foreign to this ſubject, but 'tis difficult to determine whoſe piece it is.

The Treatiſe of Ratherius, entituled a Journal of his Travel to Rome, is a piece wherein he threatens his Clergy to go to Rome, and impeach them there, that ſo he might reduce them to their Duty. He tells them, that tho they might be very ſenſible that he deſign'd to go to Rome, yet they were ignorant of his deſign in going: That he did not go thither to put up his Prayers there; having read in the Goſpel that the time is come, when Men ſhall no longer Worſhip God on this Mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem, and that God being a Spirit, he ought to be worſhipped in Spirit and in Truth, which every one might do at home in his own Cloſet. That he did not go thither by the Emperor's Order, having receiv'd no ſuch orders from him, but only to ſend his Soldiers thither: That he did not go thither to learn any thing, ſince the Scripture gave him ſufficient inſtructions what to do: but that he went thither to the Synod of Biſhops which were to meet at Rome by the Emperor's Order, to know of them how he ſhould behave himſelf in the Diſcipline of his Church, and particularly whether he might tolerate his Clergy's having Women amongſt them. He obſerves that he could apply himſelf to no place ſo properly as to Rome, for inſtruction how he ought to demean himſelf in that caſe. "For, (ſays he) where can one "be better inform'd of the diſcipline of the Church than at Rome? There are the moſt "eminent Doctors in the World: 'Tis there the Heads of the Univerſal Church do flou-"riſh: 'Tis there they examine the conſtitutions of Epiſcopacy, and the inſtitutions of "other

' other Eccleſiaſticks: There they approve of thoſe that ought to be received, and reject thoſe that ' ought to be rejected. Nothing that is diſannull'd there, can be of force elſewhere; and nothing ' which is ordered there can be aboliſhed. Whither then can I better apply my ſelf for the Cure of ' my Ignorance, than to the ſource and fountain-head of all Wiſdom? To this Conſideration he adds the Equity and Juſtice of the Emperour, and the perſonal Deſerts of Pope John (viz. the Twelfth of that Name, who ſcarce deſerved ſuch an Encomium) and the hopes that they would call a general Council, which he wiſhes might prove beneficial to the Church. Ratherius Biſhop of Verona.

He explains the queſtion he would propoſe to them; namely, whether thoſe who infring'd and openly contemn'd the Canons, ought to be endur'd in the Church: He adds, that he would not ſo much as mention the Injuries he had formerly ſuffer'd from them, nor thoſe which they ſtill continued to heap upon him; but that he knew not how to refrain ſpeaking of that which paſſed in the laſt Synod which he held, wherein he had not the Liberty of Reforming his Clergy, and in which there was not the leaſt notice taken of his Synodical Letter. He enlarges himſelf very much on the neceſſity there was of obſerving the Canons; and was extremely concern'd, upon the account that theſe Canons prohibited the Clergy, who had been guilty of ſuch Crimes, from Celebrating or diſcharging their Miniſterial Functions. For (ſays he) if they do not confeſs their Faults, they are in danger of being Damn'd; and if they do confeſs them, theſe Canons prohibit them from diſcharging their Functions. Since the Caſe ſtands thus, the Church would be unprovided of Miniſters, ſince the Number of the Wicked was ſo great. He exhorts them to Repentance, and to recite a Prayer, which, he ſays, he met with in the Pſalteries, wherein God is to be implored for their Salvation and Converſion, through the Interceſſion of the Virgin, and all the Saints. However, foraſmuch as the Difficulty ſtill remain'd; he concludes, that he goes to Rome for the removal of it.

To thoſe Treatiſes of Ratherius are annex'd ſeveral Sermons. The firſt and moſt conſiderable is a large Inſtruction upon Lent. He therein blames thoſe who did not obſerve it according to the Canon, either faſting only one part of that Holy time, or elſe breaking out into Exceſs; or laſtly, breaking the Faſt on Holy Thurſday and Saturday. He takes notice, that in his time they faſted in Lent only till Noon: That on Holy Saturday Maſs was not Celebrated among the Latins till about Night, and that they faſted that day till Maſs was over: But that in the Greek Church they began the Solemnity of Eaſter at Nine of the Clock in the Morning; that their Lent was longer. After this he recommends Prayer, Alms-giving, and Repentance; and ſhews with what mind, and after what manner they ought to put theſe into Practice. Laſtly, to theſe Inſtructions he adds a Diſſertation againſt the Error of the Anthropomorphites, into which he perceiv'd ſeveral of his Prieſts were fallen out of Ignorance, not being capable of imagining a God unleſs he had a Body. By ſeveral Arguments he Demonſtrates that God is a pure Spirit. He likewiſe refutes a fooliſh and ſuperſtitious Opinion, that St. Michael Sang Maſs in Heaven every Monday. He concludes with Exhorting his Clergy to live regularly.

The Perſons, whoſe Errors he had declar'd againſt in this Sermon, accus'd him (either out of Malice or Ignorance) of having deny'd that JESUS CHRIST had a Body, and of having condemn'd the Devotion of thoſe who went every Monday to hear Maſs in the Church of St. Michael; ſo that he was oblig'd to explain himſelf, by declaring that he never ſaid that JESUS CHRIST, that is, the incarnate Wiſdom, had not Eyes, Hands, or a Body; but only that the Divine Subſtance had none; and that he never ſaid, that it was ill done in going to the Church of St. Michael to hear Maſs; but that he had ſaid, and would maintain, that it was a great piece of Folly to aſſert, that St. Michael Sang Maſs, and Superſtition to believe, that it was better to go to St. Michael's Church on Mondays, and Pray to him on that Day, than on any other day of the Week.

The Second Diſcourſe upon Lent, is a Moral Exhortation to refrain from Vice.

There are beſides four Sermons on Eaſter-day, and three on the Aſcenſion, which likewiſe contain very uſeful Inſtructions of Morality, taken for the moſt part out of the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers.

Theſe are all the Works of Ratherius, which are extant in the Second Tome of the Spicilegium. There is ſtill in the Twelfth Tome, a Letter of the ſame Author upon the Euchariſt: He wrote it to a Biſhop, who having met him in a Convocation of Biſhops held by Conrad, had ask'd him, whether he had Sung Maſs that Week or no? He complains, that this Queſtion was propos'd to him, rather to try him, than out of Charity; and anſwers him, that perhaps it were to be wiſh'd, that neither of them had Celebrated it on Chriſtmas-day; declaring withal, that he had no good Opinion of him. He leaves the World to judge, which of the two who receiv'd the Euchariſt unworthily, is moſt in danger of his Salvation; whether he who receiv'd it ſeldom, or he who receiv'd it often. He adds, that were they to read the Homilies of St. Chryſoſtom on the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, perhaps the One would abſtain altogether from Celebrating, and the Other from doing it every day. From this point of Morality Ratherius paſſes to another of Doctrine, and ask's him, to whom he writ; whether he underſtands figuratively theſe words, which are ſpoken in giving the Sacrament; The Body of JESUS CHRIST preſerve thee to Everlaſting Life. He tells him, that if he underſtood them in that Senſe, he was miſerably blind; and aſſures him, that he ought to believe, that as in the Marriage of Cana in Galilee, the Change of the Water into Wine was Real, and not Figurative; ſo the Wine is by the Prieſt's Benediction made the real Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and the Bread the real Fleſh, and not only in a Figure: That if the Taſt and the Colour ſeem to ſuggeſt the contrary, yet we are not to ſtick here; and that as the Mud whereof Man was form'd chang'd its Figure, tho' the Subſtance ſtill remained, ſo we ought to believe, that tho' the Colour and Taſte of the Bread and Wine remain, yet we receive the real Fleſh and the real Blood of JESUS CHRIST: That if one ſhould aſk, what is become of the Subſtance of the Bread and Wine? it might be anſwered, That the Bread perhaps vaniſhes after an inviſible manner; or that 'tis changed into Fleſh. But that the Goſpel teaches us, that this Fleſh and this Blood, are the Fleſh and the Blood of the Body of JESUS CHRIST: That we ought not to be over-inquiſitive about the reſt, ſince 'tis a Myſtery of our Faith: becauſe being a Myſtery it cannot be comprehended; and being a Myſtery of Faith, we ſhould believe it, without going about to explain it.

gument to prove Tranſubſtantiation. The Fallacy of it is apparent. For the change of Water into Wine, at the Marriage of Cana in Galilee, was reckon'd a Miracle, and ſuch as only a God could do: But the change of Bread and Wine into the real Body and Blood of Chriſt, by a words ſpeaking of the Prieſt is more Miraculous, and ſhews the Prieſt to be endowed with a greater Power than our Saviour himſelf had, which I preſume no Romaniſt, if he be in his Senſes, will be ſo bold or ſo blaſphemous as to aſſert. And as for his other Argument to elude the Evidence of our Senſes, 'tis altogether as vain; unleſs it can be proved, that we ought to believe things which contradict our Senſe and Reaſon, as well as thoſe which are above them. The One we grant, the Other we deny. The Myſtery of the Incarnation, of the Bleſſed Trinity in Unity, and the like, are above our Senſe and Reaſon, but contradict neither. But the Myſtery of the Tranſubſtantiation, is not only above, but contradicts the joynt Teſtimony of our Senſes and Reaſon at once. So that I leave the World to judge which of the two Opinions is moſt Orthodox; whether Ours which ſays, that Chriſtians do by Faith receive very Chriſt, in the receiving the Elements of Bread and Wine, which remain ſtill the ſame; or Theirs, which ſays, that the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the real Body and Blood of Chriſt, by a Myſtical Tranſubſtantiation.]

Foulcuin Abbot of Lobes, ſpeaks of almoſt all theſe Works of Ratherius, which we ſtill have, and likewiſe makes mention of ſome others which are loſt; viz. a Treatiſe Entituled The Combat, or the Mental Meditations of one Ratherius, Biſhop of Verona, and Monk of Lobes, which he writ during his firſt Exil, and addreſs'd to the moſt Learned Prelates of his Time: A Treatiſe Entituled, The Frenzy, becauſe he therein talks like a Mad-man againſt Baudry: Several Sermons for Holy Thurſday, for the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, and for ſeveral Feſtivals of the Bleſſed Virgin, and ſeveral other pieces. The ſame Author adds, that Ratherius in his Exile at Cume, meeting with a Copy of the Life of St. Uſmar, corrected the Soleciſms thereof, and ſent it to Lobes; and that afterwards being in Provence, he Compos'd a Treatiſe of Grammar, which he Dedicated to Reeſting's Son, under the Title of Spera-derſum, or, A Shelter for the back-ſide.

The Stile of Ratherius is obſcure and intricate, but pure enough in the Terms: his Expreſſions are lively and ſmart, and his Reaſonings juſt enough. He was well acquainted with the Canons, had thorowly read the Latin Fathers, and very pertinently made uſe of their Authority and Principles. He reproves with ſharpneſs the Vices and irregularities of his Time, without ſparing any Man, and particularly levels againſt the corrupted Morals of Eccleſiaſticks, which he did not ſtick to detect and deſcribe in very lively Colours, and perhaps with a little too much Picquancy.

ATTO Biſhop of Verceil.

Atto Biſhop of Verceil.

ATTO or Hatto Biſhop of Verceil, (not the ſame with the Biſhop of Baſil, of the ſame Name, whom we mentioned in the foregoing Century) is more moderate and leſs obſcure than Ratherius. He was the Son of Aldegaire, and preſided over the Church of Verceil, from the Year 945. till about the Year 960. His Works were a long time conceal'd in the Vatican Library, and were at laſt made publick by Father Dachery, in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium.

The firſt is a Capitulary for the Clergy of his Dioceſs, containing an Hundred Heads or Articles, almoſt all extracted and copied from the Councils of Laodicea, Carthage, Toledo, and others, from the Decretals of Popes both true and falſe, and from the Capitulary of Theodolphus, only excepting a very few, of which perhaps he is the Author. Theſe are the Fourth, wherein he injoyns his Prieſts, Deacons, and Sub-deacons, to learn the Catholick Faith (that is, the Creed of Athanaſius) by Heart: The Fifth, which is a general Admonition to the Eccleſiaſticks, to diſcharge their Duty, and lead exemplary Lives: The Tenth, whereby he ordains, that when they Conſecrate the Body of JESUS CHRIST, it ſhould be an intire Oblation, i. e. a whole Loaf unbroken; and that the Prieſts ſhould celebrate the Maſs Faſting. The eighteenth concerning the Inſtitution of Catechumens, the Baptiſm of Mutes, and the Obligation of Godfathers, to inſtruct thoſe for whom they ſtand Sureties. The Twentieth, whereby 'tis order'd, that in all Churches where Baptiſm is Adminiſtred, there ſhould be a Deacon with the Prieſt, and enjoyns Prieſts who have no Deacons, to make ſpeedy choice of ſome fit Perſon, and get him to be ordain'd Deacon. The Twenty ninth which enjoyns the Conferences of the Prieſts on the Firſt day of the Month, a Cuſtom eſtabliſhed in the Ninth Century, as appears from the Capitularys of Hincmarus and Reculphus. The Thirty ninth, which imports that for the future all Biſhops ſhould be enjoyn'd not to ordain Deacons till they had oblig'd themſelves to continue in Celibacy. The Seventy fifth, whereby he impoſes a Penance on ſuch, who by their ſlovenlineſs ſhould Belch after they had receiv'd the Euchariſt. The Seventy ſeventh, which which imports that thoſe who ſhall be Baptiz'd or Confirm'd, ſhall abſtain, during the time preſcrib'd by the Biſhop, from eating Meat, and for eight days from the uſe of Marriage, and that no Clerk ſhould be ordain'd till he had received both theſe Sacraments. And the Ninetieth, which concerns the Pennances which Prieſts ought to impoſe on Publick Offenders, and after what manner they ought to preſent to the Biſhop ſuch Perſons as will not ſubmit to Pennance. Atto Biſhop of Vercell.

The next Treatiſe is about the Perſecutions and Troubles which the Eccleſiaſticks ſuffer'd. It is divided into three Parts. The firſt treats of the Troubles they ſuffer'd in being cenſur'd in their Perſons. The ſecond, of thoſe they met with in their Ordinations: and the third, of thoſe they endur'd in their Revenues. In the beginning he takes notice that the Church will always have its Perſecutors, but that they will never get the Maſtery; and that the Church being founded on the Solid Rock of the Apoſtolical Faith, will always ſtand by Faith, by the Love of JESUS CHRIST, by the Uſe of Sacraments, and by the Obſervation of the Commandments of God. Happy Houſe! (ſays he) it is not overthrown by Storms, nor ſhatter'd by Floods, nor ſhaken by Winds; againſt which the Gates of Hell will never prevail, tho' aſſaulted by them continually; which yields neither to ſecret Temptations, nor to open Perſecutions, nor to the Attacks of Malicious Spirits, nor to the Corruption of Vices and Impieties. After he had thus expreſt himſelf in general concerning the Perſecutions of the Church, he ſays that one of the moſt uſual in his time, is that when the Wicked are corrected by their Superiours, they perſecute thoſe who teach them, and openly aſſault them, that by this means they may evade the ſubmitting to Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhments: that to prevent this abuſe, it was ordain'd in the Canons, that Biſhops ſhould not be accus'd but by Men of unſpotted Reputation, nor judg'd by any other Judges than thoſe of their own chooſing, nor Condemn'd by any other Authority than that of the Holy See, altho' it was allow'd for Metropolitans and Biſhops of the Province to hear and examine their Cauſes. After having eſtabliſh'd this Point of Civil Law on the falſe Decretals of the Popes, he ſays that in his time, they did not only not obſerve theſe Precautions in the Accuſation of Biſhops; but that they would not ſo much as give them leave to make their own defence, and would oblige them either to bring their Brethren to ſwear that they are innocent, or to provide a Champion to fight for them. He ſhews that theſe two Methods of judging the Crime or Innocence of any Man, which were then in uſe, are both of them unjuſt and unlawful, eſpecially among Eccleſiaſticks. The firſt, becauſe it does not follow that all thoſe who cannot produce Witneſſes to ſwear to their Innocence, are guilty; and that it had been always the Cuſtom of the Church to acquit thoſe who were not convicted of the Crimes laid to their Charge, without obliging them to bring others to ſwear for their Innocence. The ſecond Method, (1.) Becauſe it was only in uſe among Laicks, who did not approve of it themſelves. (2.) Becauſe it often happens that the Innocent are vanquiſh'd, and the Guilty crown'd as Victors. (3.) Becauſe this was to tempt God. (4.) Becauſe it being unlawful for Eccleſiaſticks to fight themſelves, 'tis altogether unjuſt to oblige them to find Champions in their ſtead, in order to be acquitted: 'Tis to put them into an incapacity of clearing themſelves of one Crime, unleſs by committing another. He then makes this Objection to himſelf; But muſt we ſuffer all the Faults which Eccleſiaſticks may commit to go unpuniſh'd? He anſwers, that there are ſome Perſons who ought to ſuffer it; and that there are other Perſons whoſe duty it is to reprove and puniſh them according to the Power inveſted in them for that purpoſe, and with the neceſſary Precautions: but that a raſh Judgment ſhould not be paſs'd on thoſe who have receiv'd a Power to judge the very Angels; That the Clergy ought not to be judg'd by Laicks, but by Biſhops; and that Laicks ought not to concern themſelves with puniſhing their Crimes, unleſs they are appeal'd to by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs. And yet (ſays he) the quite contrary is now obſerveable; For the Civil Authority incroaches on the Eccleſiaſtical; and the latter is now cruſh'd by the former, which ought to ſupport it. So that as in the Election of Prelates, the Will of the Prince is follow'd more than the Decrees of the Holy Fathers; even ſo in their Condemnation, more regard is had to gratifie their Humours, than to proceed according to Canon Law. And from hence it happens, that by the Injuſtice of unrighteous Judges, the Offences of the Guilty are no Bar to the holding their Dignity; and Dignity does not exempt any Perſon from an unjuſt Accuſation.

The Second Part is about the Authority which Princes had uſurp'd in the Eccleſiaſtical Ordinations of Biſhops: He ſays that they ought to be made by thoſe who have a Right thereto according to the Canons and Cuſtoms of the Church; but that Princes abſolutely require that their Edict ſhould be of univerſal force in the caſe: That he, whom they chooſe, muſt be receiv'd, tho' never ſo wicked; and that the Man, whom others ſhall elect, ſhould be rejected, tho' never ſo deſerving: That the Faults of thoſe whom they chuſe, how great ſoever, were look'd upon as nothing: That they had no regard to the Vertues, but to the Riches, the Parentage, and the Services of the Perſons: That many were ordain'd for Money, others by Recommendation, or becauſe they are Relations, or in recompence of ſome Service they had done: That there are ſome Princes ſo blind, as to prefer Infants to Biſhopricks, who had not ſo much as one of the neceſſary Qualifications; and who are oblig'd to be under the Care of Tutors and Maſters, even while they are the Maſters and Judges of a whole Dioceſs.

In the laſt Part he reprehends the Abuſe which prevail'd in his time, of rifling the Revenues of the Church, when the Epiſcopal See was vacant by the Death, or by the Expulſion of a Biſhop. He cites in the three Parts ſeveral Canons, and a great many fine Paſſages out of the Fathers, to back his own Arguments.

Atto Bishop of Vercell.

The first is directed to a Bishop nam'd Walden, who was at variance with his Prince. He exhorts him to submit to his Prince, and produces several Passages out of the Fathers concerning the Obedience which is due to Kings. This Walden is doubtless the same with him whom Berenger had made Bishop of Cume, and who afterwards prov'd treacherous to him, and withdrew to the Emperor Otho, as Luitprand relates it.

The three following Letters are directed to the Faithful of his own Diocess: The two first are against those, who pretended to Divine and Prophesie of things to come: and the last is against those who would feast on Fridays.

The fifth is directed to a Bishop nam'd Asa. He therein shews by the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, that Marriage is prohibited between those who had contracted a Spiritual Affinity by Baptism, contrary to the Advice of that Bishop, who found fault that one Thierry, who had marry'd his Godfather's Daughter, was divorc'd from her, and Excommunicated till such time as he made his Appearance in a Court of Judicature before the Archbishop and Bishops.

The sixth is a Letter of Gunzon Deacon of the Church of Novarre, wherein he sends Atto the Copy of a Letter, pretended to be Pope Zachary's, to Theodorus Bishop of Pavia, about the Prohibition of Marriage between those who have contracted a Spiritual Affinity.

The seventh is a Letter of Ambrose, a Priest of Milan, directed to Atto, whereby he gives him to understand that these sorts of Marriages were likewise prohibited in his Church; and desires he would let him know the meaning of the Titles Presbyteresses and Deaconesses, mention'd in Zachary's Letter.

Atto replys in the eighth Letter, That the Presbyteresses and Deaconesses were Widows chosen to assist the Women in the Administration of the Sacrament of Baptism. He does not approve at all their Opinion, who pretend that the Deaconesses were Abbesses: and he observes that those Titles of Priests and Deacons might likewise be given to Women.

The ninth and tenth are directed to the Ecclesiasticks of his own Diocess, against those who kept company with lewd Women, with whom they maintain'd a scandalous Familiarity, and whom they kept and maintain'd out of the Revenues of the Church.

In the last, he advises the Bishops, his Brethren, upon what was necessary to be done in case the Kings of Italy, (viz. Berenger and Adalbert mention'd formerly) fearing their Enemies, should require him and the rest of the Bishops to continue Loyal to them, not only by the Oath of Allegiance, but by exacting Hostages from them. He gives them to understand that 'tis not his Opinion that they ought to give them any. (1.) Because he is not sensible, that the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers have commanded any thing else than to be loyal and subject to one's Prince, and to do one's best to preserve the publick Peace of the State, and to provide for the Safety of one's King. (2.) Because 'tis a sort of Punishment inflicted on the Innocent for another's Fault, which is contrary to Justice. (3.) Because 'tis the exposing of a Man's Life for some Temporal Interest, and the leaving it to the changeable Will of others. (4.) Because 'tis such a new and strange thing, as would make the World believe either that the Bishops of whom these Hostages were requir'd, are more disloyal than their Predecessors, or else that the Princes are more odious. Whereupon he exhorts his Brethren to pray to God for the Safety of their Princes, and to beg him to infuse into them a good Opinion of the Loyalty of the Prelates of their Kingdom, and that he would preserve them steddy and constant in their Fidelity.

There is still in the Manuscript at Rome another piece of Atto, intituled The Polyptick, or The Perpendicular, which serves as a Reproof of Vice, and a Recommender of Vertue; and seventeen Sermons which 'tis impossible to Transcribe, because the Manuscript is so torn in this place, that one cannot read it. There are likewise several things wanting in the Works which are copied out; all which might be supply'd by the Manuscript which they say is in the Archives of the Church of Vercell; but the Canons of that Church would never communicate them, nor suffer them to be copied, notwithstanding the importunity of Father Dachery made by Cardinal Bona, and the Ambassador of the Duke of Savoy: whether 'tis because they knew not where this Treasure lay, or because they were minded it should lye dormant there.

The Works of this Author are nothing else almost but a Collection of Citations out of Scripture, the Canons, and the Fathers, which were very applicable to his purpose. What is his own, is writ with some spirit, and after a lively and natural manner.

LUITPRAND.

LUITPRAND.

LUITPRAND, or LIUTPRAND, is one of the greatest Ornaments of Italy. Trithemius assures us that he was an Italian, and descended from a Family of Pavia: Others suppose that his Family was Spanish. However it be, his Father was sent by Hugh King of Italy to the Emperor at Constantinople; and being return'd from that Embassy, he embrac'd the Monastick Life, leaving Luitprand very young. He was brought to Pavia, and made Deacon of that Church. His Relations

tions presented him to Berenger II. to be his Secretary. He serv'd him a long time, and was sent Ambassador by that Prince about the Year 948. to Constantine Porphyrogenetta Emperor of the East. Some say that soon after his return he was Bishop of Cremona; but 'tis more likely that he was not advanc'd to that Dignity till Otho I. had render'd himself Master of Italy: for he soon fell into disgrace with Berenger, who persecuted him and all his Family; so that he was forc'd to fly into Germany, where he compos'd his History, on the top of which he only assumes the Title of Deacon. He came into Italy with Otho, and assisted at the Council held at Rome in the Year 963. against John XII. in the quality of Bishop of Cremona, where he was the Emperor's Interpreter. In the Year 968 he was sent Ambassador by that Prince to Phocas Emperor of the East, and has writ himself the Relation of that Embassy, which contains very excellent Remarks on the Manners of the Grecian Emperors of that time. His History is dedicated to Raimond Bishop of Elvira in Spain. It is divided into six Books, and begins with the Reigns of Leo Emperor of the East, and of Arnulphus Emperor of the West, and ends at Luitprand's Embassy from Berenger to Constantine. But the last Book is imperfect; and instead of continuing the History, a Fragment is added, containing the History of the Expulsion of Berenger, of the Condemnation of Pope John XII. and of all that happen'd at Rome till Pope Benedict was outed of his Popedom. The Fragment seems to me to be Luitprand's, if we may judge by the style, and certainly it belongs to an Author of that time. The third Book is intituled, The Counterpoison, that is, The Revenge; because therein he undertakes to revenge himself of the base usage he had receiv'd from Berenger. This History, and the Relation of his Embassy to the Emperor Phocas, are the only genuine Pieces of Luitprand. For the Book of the Lives of the Popes from S. Peter down to Formosus, is not writ in Luitprand's style, nor is it mention'd in Sigibert or Trithemius. Some believe that it belongs to a more ancient Author, but they are mistaken; for it ends with a passage copied out of the History of Luitprand, which is a farther evidence that this Work is none of his: But what time soever it was of, 'tis nothing else but a vile Copier of Anastasius the Librarian. As for the Chronicon which goes under the name of Luitprand, 'tis apparently a spurious Piece, which ought to be reckon'd among the Romances made in the form of ancient Chronicons by the Spaniards. Luitprand Luitprand's style is harsh and rough, but strong and vehement. He wrote his History in a pathetical manner, but such as is not pleasant, without observing the Regular Order and Series of Times. He therein speaks particularly of the Affairs of Italy, and of that which concern'd the Empire of the West, and therein likewise inserts something of the Empire of the East, and of the History of the Popes.

His History was printed at Basil in the Year 1532. The Relation of his Embassy at Ingolstat in the Year 1600. The Book of Lives of the Popes, which is foisted on him at Mayence in the Year 1602. And all his works together, with the spurious Chronicon, were publish'd by Jerom of Higuera the Jesuit, and printed in Folio at Antwerp in the Year 1640.

CHAP. III.

An Account of the Churches of France.

IN the Tenth Century the Church of Rheims was look'd upon as the chief Church of France, and its Archbishops had the principal share in the Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs of that Kingdom. The Priviledges which the Popes granted to them, the great Revenues which they possess'd, and which were considerably augmented at that time, the Prerogative which they had of Consecrating Kings, the Post they held in the Assemblies both of Church and State; their Quality, their Reputation, and their Personal Merit, rais'd them to a higher pitch of Power and Dignity than any Prelate could hope for. But forasmuch as all great Dignities are envied and eagerly thirsted after, and the higher the Post is, the more 'tis expos'd to storms and dangers; 'tis not at all to be wonder'd at that there were so many Artifices us'd to come into this Archbishoprick, so many heats to keep in it, and if those that had the possession of it, have been subject to so many Scandals, as the ensuing History will make appear. But because the Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Churches of France, and particularly of that of Rheims, bear so near a Relation to those of the State; and because the Changes of Kings, and the Revolutions of the Government have likewise produc'd very many Alterations in the Affairs of the Church: 'Tis necessary to begin with giving you a Scheme of the State of the French Monarchy, and of the Succession of the Kings who govern'd France during the Tenth Century. The Dignity of the Church of Rheims.

After

The state of France after the Death of Charles the Gross.

After the Death of Charles the Gross, which happen'd in the Year 888. * his Son Charles, firnam'd the Simple, being ſtill in his Minority, the Neuſtrians met at Campeign, elected Odo or Eudes, Count of Paris, and Duke of France, to govern the Kingdom, gave him the Quality of King, and caus'd him to be crown'd by Gautier Archbiſhop of Sens. On the other ſide, Radulphus the Son of Conrad, made himſelf Maſter of the Country between Montjou and the Appenins Mountains; that is, Savoy and Switzerland, and caus'd himſelf to be crown'd King of Lower Burgundy. Lewis the Son of Boſon, ſeiz'd on the Country which lies from Lions to the Sea, between the Rhone and the Alpes, and went under the name of King of Arles or Provence, and caus'd that Kingdom to be confirm'd upon him by a Council held at Valence on purpoſe in the Year 890. Thus France was divided into three Kingdoms: The Kingdom of France, which comprehended Normandy, Aquitain, and the Dutchy of Burdundy; the Kingdom of Arles; and the Kingdom of Lower Burgundy. Eudes was not long in quiet poſſeſſion of a Kingdom to which he could pretend no Right. Charles the Simple had his Partiſans, who ſent for him from England, whither his Mother had carry'd him, and caus'd him to be Crown'd at Rheims in the Year 893. He immediately enter'd into poſſeſſion of a part of the Kingdom, and rais'd a Civil War between the two Parties; which within a while was appeas'd, and wholly ended by the Death of Eudes, which happen'd on the Thirtieth of January 898. By his Death Charles the Simple took poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of France, not of that of Arles, nor of Lower Burgundy. In the Year 918. he added Lorrain to his Dominions, having conquer'd it from Henry the Falconer, after the Death of Conrad. But the Malecontents among the French Nobles, took an occaſion from this War, to cut him out new Work, and elected Robert the Brother of Eudes King, who was Crown'd at Rheims on the Twentieth of June in the Year 922. ſo that Charles was forc'd to quit Lorrain to come and fight Robert. This laſt was kill'd in Battle, but his Party elected in his room his Brother-in-Law Radulphus II. Duke of Burgundy. Charles the Simple ſtruck up an Alliance with Henry the Faulconner, to whom he remitted Lorrain, upon condition that he ſhould aid him; but he was treacherouſly taken in the Year 923. by Hebert Count of Vermandois, who kept him Priſonner in Thierry Caſtle. The Queen his Wife withdrew into England with her Son Lewis. From that time Charles the Simple was always in the Power of Hebert, or Hugh le Blanc Count of Paris, Robert's Son, who kept him Priſoner till his Death, which happen'd in the Year 929. Upon his Death Radulphus was left in quiet poſſeſſion of the Kingdom to the Year 936. at which time he dy'd without Iſſue, leaving the Dukedom of Burgundy to his Brother Hugh the Black, and the chief Authority of France to Hugh the White, Count of Paris and Orleans, and Duke of France, his Brother-in-Law. However, this Man had not the Heart to take the Crown upon him, being afraid of Hebert Count of Vermandois, and Giſalbert Duke of Lorrain; and he thought it more advisable to ſend for the Son of Charles the Simple out of England, who upon that accounts was call'd Lewis d'Outremer. He was receiv'd without any Oppoſition, and Crown'd at Laon in the Year 936. Lewis during his Reign had great Conteſts with the Counts Hebert and Hugh, and was ſometimes at War, ſometimes at Peace with Otho King of Germany. But at laſt, having accommodated Matters with Hugh, he dy'd peaceably in the Year 954. leaving the Title of King to his Son Lotharius, an Infant of Fourteen or Fifteen years of Age, and the Adminiſtration of the Government to Hugh, to whom the young King granted the Dutchy of Burgundy and Aquitain. Hugh dyed in the Year 956. and left four Children, of whom the Eldeſt, nam'd Hugh-Capet, was declar'd Duke of France in the Year 959. by Lotharius, who gave him likewiſe Poictou. Lotharius reign'd peaceably Three and Thirty years, having after the Death of Hugh the White, reaſſum'd the Royal Authority. But this was loſt in the hands of his Son Lewis, firnam'd the Faintbearted; who ſurviv'd his Father only ſixteen Months under the Tutelage of Hugh-Capet, and was the laſt King of the Caroliguian Line. For after his Death Hugh-Capet was Elected King by the Nobleſs of Noyon, about the end of May in the Year 987. and afterwards Crown'd at Rheims, without any regard had to Charles Duke of Lorrain, Brother to Lotharius, whom they hated, becauſe he had taken an Oath of Allegiance to the King of Germany for his Dutchy of Lorrain. The next year Hugh-Capet caus'd his Son Robert alſo to be Crown'd. However Duke Charles was not altogether out of hopes of re-inveſting himſelf in the States of his Anceſtors, and having ſeis'd on Laon and Rheims, he made War for ſometime with Hugh; but was taken in the Year 991. in the City of Laon, and carried Priſoner to Senlis, and from thence to Orleans, where he was ſhut up in a Tower, wherein he dy'd three years after. And thus the Kingdom of France was transferr'd from the Caroliguian Line to that of Hugh-Capet, who liv'd till the Year 996. and left his Son Robert in quiet poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, which this good King govern'd till the Three and thirtieth year of the enſuing Century. And thus much may ſuffice for what concerns the Political Eſtate of the Kingdom of France: let us now proceed to the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, wherein the Archbiſhops of Rheims had a principal ſhare.

FULCUS Arch-Bishop of Rheims.

FULCUS succeeded Hincmarus in the Arch-bishoprick of Rheims, in the Year 882. He was a Person of Quality, who had been a long time at Court. Immediately he sent to Pope Marinus his Confession of the Faith, according to Custom, and receiv'd the Pall from him. In a Second Letter he demanded a Confirmation of the Privileges granted by the Popes to his Predecessors, and made Complaints to him of the Estate bequeath'd by his Brother Rampo, for the building of a Monastery, of which Ermenfroy, who had married his Widdow, had taken Possession. Marinus wrote on this last point to to Gerard Arch-bishop of Sens, in whose Dioces this Monastery was; and to John Arch-bishop of Roan, to whose Dioceſs Ermenfroy did belong, giving him orders to enjoyn him to relinquish the Estate which he had so unjustly possess'd himself of; and if he would not do it, to make use of Canonical Punishments against him. Fulcus wrote likewise to Pope Adrian the Successor of Marinus, to Congratulate his Advancement to the Popedom; and at the same time sent him some Copies of the Privileges granted by the Popes, Leo, Benedict, and Nicholas to the Church of Rheims, to which he desires him to grant a Confirmation. In the same Letter he intreats him to send a Commission to the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan, to adjust the business of the Monastery, which Ermenfroy had taken possession of, and writes in favour of Frotarius Arch-bishop of Bruges, who was accus'd by a Monk of his Dioceſs; assuring the Pope, that he had been Elected by the Bishops of his Province, by the Clergy and Laity of his own Dioceſs, and Confirm'd by Pope Marinus. He sent another very submissive Letter to Pope Stephen, wherein he thanks him for the Honour he did him in writing to him, and in treating with him as a Friend and Brother; Titles which he could not pretend to, thinking it an Honour to be his Servant and Subject. He assures him, that if he were not surrounded, and as it were Besieged by the Barbarians, who were not above five Leagues off his City, and who Beleaguer'd Paris; he would have undertaken a Journey to Rome. He informs him of the part he bore in the Snares which were laid against him, and makes his acknowledgments for the favour shew'd by the Pope to his Son Guy, who was the Arch-Bishop's Kinsman. He promises Obedience to the Pope, and exalts the Dignity of the Church of Rheims, which he pretends had been Founded by Saint Sixtus, who was sent by S. Peter, and was the chief of the whole Kingdom. He adds, that Pope Hormisda had established the Arch-Bishop of Rheims, his Vicar in Gaul; and desires him to confirm the Privileges granted by his Predecessors. He presses him to order Ermenfroy to be Excommunicated by the Arch-Bishops of Sens and Roan; and intreats him to write to King Charles, to oblige him to restore in full to the Church of Rheims the Revenues which belong'd to it.

Fulcus Arch-Bishop of Rheims.

The Pope answer'd Fulcus, that he was glad to see he had such good thoughts of the Holy See; he assur'd him, that he look'd upon Guy as his own Child; that he was deeply affected with the Desolation of France, caus'd by the Barbarians; that he pray'd God to deliver that Kingdom out of all its Trouble: And Lastly, he acquainted him, that he had sent Letters according to his desire, to the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan.

A Letter of Stephen V. to Fulcus.

Fulcus wrote a Second Letter to this Pope, wherein he renews his complaints against Ermenfroy, who would not obey the Injunctions of the Two Arch-Bishops, and intreats the Pope to cause him to be Excommunicated. At the same time he asks his Advice, whether it be lawful to ordain Bishops every Festival day.

The Pope sent him afterwards several Letters.

Other Letters of Stephen V. to Fulcus.

The first is a Letter of Consolation, for the Miseries he under-went.

The Second is a Recommendatory Letter, in behalf of a Man who was oppress'd by his Children and Relations.

The Third is directed to the Bishops of France against Frotarius, who had seized upon the See of Bruges, after he had been turn'd out of the Bishopricks of Bordeaux and Poitiers. He injoyns him under the Penalty of Excommunication, to relinquish Bruges, and return to Bordeaux.

The Fourth is in favour of Teutboldus, whom he had ordain'd Bishop of Langres. He therein tells him, that after the Death of Isaac Bishop of that Church, Aurelian Arch-Bishop of Lions had ordain'd in his room a Monk call'd Egilon, without being Elected by either Clergy or Laity, who had Elected Teutboldus, and desir'd the Pope that he might be Consecrated; that being willing to maintain the Privileges of all Churches, he had sent to Aurelian to ordain Teutboldus, provided it appear'd to him, that he had been unanimously elected by Clergy and Laity: That he had sent a Bishop to be upon the spot, to see that this Order were duly put in Execution; but that Aurelian had put a trick upon him, by sending him before to Langres, with a promise that he would be there soon after him; and that instead of being so good as his word, he suffer'd the Bishop to wait for him to no purpose: That the Clergy and Laity had sent an Act of the Election to Rome, and pray'd that Teutboldus might be Consecrated; that he had writ again to Aurelian, requiring him to ordain him; but that instead of obeying his Order, he made it his Business to bring the other into Possession; Lastly, That upon the fresh Instances of the Clergy and Laity of Langres, he had ordained Teutbol- dus; he enjoyns Fulcus to put him into Poſſeſſion. Fulcus reply'd to him, that he was very willing to put his orders touching Teutboldus into Execution, but that he had been obliged to defer it upon the Inſtance of King Eudes, who would ſend his Ambaſſadors to him, to know his Reſolution. He adds, that the Biſhops were very glad at his declaring that he was willing to maintain the Rights and Privileges of Biſhops in their full force. He deſires to know of him, whether it be lawful for any of his Suffragans to execute the Orders of the King, or of any other without his leave, or to undertake any thing contrary to his Prohibitions.

Other Writings of Stephen in favour of the Church of Rheims.

The ſame Pope confirms the Privileges of the Church of Rheims, and prohibits all Perſons whatſoever from ſeizing or detaining any of the Revenues which belong to it. He likewiſe wrote to Fulcus about the difference which happen'd between Herman Arch-Biſhop of Cologn, and Aldegairus Biſhop of Hamburg and Breme. They had both written to the Holy See upon that Subject, and had been cited thither. Aldegairus came to Rome accordingly, but Herman did not appear. However, the Pope being unwilling to determine a matter of that Conſequence, without hearing both Parties, he orders Fulcus to call a Synod in his Name at Worms, with the Biſhops his Suffragans and Neighbours; and to cite thither Herman and Aldegairus, with the Arch-biſhop of Mayence and his Suffragans, to examine ſtrictly the Pretenſions of both Parties. He invites him to come to Rome upon that Affair and others, or at leaſt to ſend thither ſome able Perſon, with the Parties concern'd, that ſo he might be fully inform'd of all things.

The Letters of Fulcus to Formoſus.

The Pope being dead before this Affair was adjuſted, Fulcus wrote about it to his Succeſſor Formoſus, praying that he would continue him in the ſame Commiſſion. He thank'd him at the ſame time for the Complements he had ſent him by the Abbeſs Bertha; and asks his advice, what ought to be done againſt one who had a mind to ſeize on the Eſtate which his Brother-in-Law Count Everard, had bequeath'd to a Monaſtery, which he had built in Honour of Saint Calixtus, whoſe Body he had brought from Rome. He withal declares to him, that he was very ſorry to hear that there were ſome Perſons, who gave diſturbance to the Church of Rome, and he was ready to ſtand in its defence. In the Concluſion he gives the Pope to underſtand, that ſeveral Biſhops of France requir'd the Pall, which they ought by no means to have, ſince it would cauſe them to deſpiſe their Metropolitans; and that he ought to take ſpecial care about it, becauſe this abuſe might be the Cauſe of a great deal of trouble in the Church of France.

The Letter of Formoſus to Fulcus.

Pope Formoſus return'd him this Anſwer, that he was oblig'd to him for the Concern he ſhew'd at the unhappy ſtate of the Church of Rome: That the Eaſtern Churches were likewiſe diſturb'd by antient Hereſies and new Schiſms: That the Biſhops of Africa had ſent their Deputies to Rome, for the adjuſting and making up a Schiſm, which was then on foot between the Biſhops of that Country; and that there were ſeveral other Deputies at Rome, from divers parts, who requir'd Anſwers upon ſeveral diſtinct Subjects: That he had reſolv'd to hold a Synod the firſt of March, to which he invited him. He had already invited him to another Synod by a former Letter, whereby he confirm'd the Privileges granted to the Church of Rheims, and prohibited any ſeizure to be made of the Revenues which belong'd to it. By the ſame Letter he likewiſe acquainted him of the Coronation of Guy perform'd by him that ſame Year.

By another Letter of the Year enſuing, he confirm'd the Donations granted to the Church of Rheims, and gave Fulcus to underſtand, that he had Crown'd Lambert the Son of Guy Emperor. He likewiſe reprimands ſeveral Laicks who would not be ſubject to their Arch-Biſhop.

Formoſus wrote likewiſe ſeveral Letters in favour of Charles the Simple, againſt Eudes. He ſent for Fulcus to Rome upon that Subject, deſiring all Acts of Hoſtility might ceaſe, till his return. Fulcus excus'd himſelf from this Journey, and tells the Pope that he ought to write to Arnulphus King of Germany, requiring him to aſſiſt Charles, and to threaten Eudes with Excommunication if he continued to ravage France. The Pope wrote to each of them; but it could not hinder Eudes from carrying on his Deſign: And Arnulphus was ſo far from favouring Charles, that he entred the Kingdom, laid Siege to the City of Rheims; ravag'd the Country, and particularly rifl'd the Revenues which belong'd to the Church. Fulcus made his complaints of this to the Pope. A while after he likewiſe wrote another Letter to him, wherein he takes Notice, that it was expedient that Lambert ſhould enter into an Alliance with King Charles, and that the Pope ſhould write to Eudes to inform him, that it was highly reaſonable, that Charles ſhould enjoy part of his Father's Dominions. At the ſame time he adviſes him, about three Perſons who lay under perpetual Excommunication, becauſe of the ill uſage they ſhew'd to Teutboldus Biſhop of Langres, and to Gautier Arch-Biſhop of Sens; viz. whether he might admit them to Penance: and about Heriland Biſhop of Teroüane, turn'd out of his Dioceſs by the Normans; whether he might give him another Biſhoprick, and place in his ſtead a Perſon who might be more agreeable to the People of the place, and who could ſpeak the Language of the Country. The Pope return'd him this Anſwer, that he was oblig'd to him for what he wrote with Relation to Lambert; that the three Perſons he ſpoke of, had been condemn'd to a perpetual Excommunication, for having put out the Eyes of Teutboldus, and for having caſt Gautier into Priſon, and that they ought ſtill to lye under that Sentence.

The Letter of Formoſus to Fulcus.

The Letter of Fulcus to Pope Formoſus.

The laſt Letter which Pope Formoſus wrote to Fulcus, related to Berchairus, whom the Laity and Clergy of Chalons had elected their Biſhop by the Conſent of King Eudes. He complains of the unwillingneſs of Fulcus to Conſecrate him; and that after the Deceaſe of the late Biſhop, he had by way of Prevention, cauſ'd this Biſhoprick to be govern'd by Heriland Biſhop of Teroüane, who had had been turn'd out of his own Dioceſs: that afterwards he had ordain'd Mancian, a Man of a profligate Life; and that Berchairus intending to go to Rome, had been Arreſted by Conrad the Creature of Fulcus, and ſent into Baniſhment. For this he cites the Archbiſhop to Rome, with Mancion, Conrad, and ſeveral other Biſhops. Fulcus Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Fulcus return'd no reply to Formoſus, but wrote a Letter of Compliment to Stephen VI. his Succeſſor. However this did not prevent that Pope from citing him to a Synod, to be holden the latter end of September. He excus'd his going thither, and ſent ſeveral of his Clergy in his room. He gave the Pope to underſtand, that he wonder'd at the hard Expreſſions of his Letter; and the more becauſe he had been always very ſubmiſſive to the Holy See, and had received nothing from it but Kindneſſes and Civilities. He imputes this harſhneſs of the Pope to the falſe Reports he had receiv'd of him. To juſtifie himſelf, he ſhews how he had been Educated from his Childhood, in all that an Eccleſiaſtick ought to know: How afterwards he was call'd to Court by King Charles the Son of Lewis, and continued in it till the Reign of Charlemagne; that he had been elected Archbiſhop of Rheims by the Biſhops of the Province, and by the Clergy and Laity of that City; and how induſtrious he had been in promoting the intereſt of that Church. Laſtly he adds, that if King Eudes would give him leave, he would go to Rome when the way was open, for he was then encloſed by Zuentibold the Son of Arnulphus, who had baſely us'd and rifled his Church. In fine, he pray'd the Pope to free him from that Tyranny, and not to oblige him to relinquiſh his Church, at a time wherein his preſence was ſo neceſſary. Theſe are all the Letters of Fulcus to the Popes, and of the Popes to that Archbiſhop, of which Flodoard gives us an Extract, in the four firſt Chapters of the fourth Book of his Hiſtory. The Letters of Fulcus to Stephen VI.

In his fifth Chapter the ſame Author mentions the Letters of this Archbiſhop, directed to the Kings and Princes.

The firſt is to Charles the Groſs, the Son of Lewis of Germany, after the Death of Charles the Bald, wherein he pray'd him to protect France againſt the Normans, who had ravaged the Country, and laid Siege to the principal Towns thereof. The Letters of Fulcus to the Kings and Princes.

In a ſecond Letter to the ſame Emperor, he intreats that he would procure the Pall for him from the Pope, and the Confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Church of Rheims.

The third is directed to Arnulphus King of Germany, wherein he gives him the reaſon why he had anointed Charles the Simple King. He gives him to underſtand, that upon the Death of Charles the Bald, the French immediately made their Application to him, to be accepted under his Protection: but that having received no Protection nor Countenance from him, they were obliged to chooſe Charles for their King, who was the only Man next him of the Royal Blood, and whoſe Brothers and Predeceſſors had been Kings: That the reaſon why they did not chooſe him ſooner, was, becauſe being too young he was not capable of governing the Kingdom, eſpecially at a time when the Normans were ready to rifle and pillage the whole Kingdom: and that they had done it at laſt without conſulting Arnulphus in the Caſe, according to the Cuſtom of France, which always was, when one King was dead, to put upin his place one of the Royal Family, without conſulting any Foreign Power. He likewiſe anſwer'd that which they accus'd him of, viz. that he had never Crown'd Charles the Simple, but that he might with the more eaſe beſtow the Kingdom on Guy; and makes it appear, that it was only a Calumny invented by his Enemies. And whereas ſome were pleaſed to raiſe a Report, that Charles was not the Son of Lewis the Liſper; he ſays, that the very ſight of him would be a ſufficient Evidence to convince them of the contrary; becauſe any one might eaſily diſcern in him, the very Air and Features of his Father. Laſtly, he intreats Arnulphus to do Juſtice to this innocent King, and his own Kinſman: To conſider that the Kingdom of France had alway been an Hereditary Kingdom; and to believe that the French had no other deſign, than that Charles ſhould be lead by his Counſels, and bound to him in a firm Bond of Amity and Alliance.

In the fourth Letter which is likewiſe directed to Arnulphus, he aſſures him of the Fidelity wherewith King Charles and himſelf had obſerved the Treaties made with that Prince. He informs him, that this King being minded to Attack Eudes, had writ to Guy and the Pope, to engage them on his ſide.

The fifth was written to King Eudes. He intreats him to grant the Church of Laon liberty to chooſe a Biſhop, in the room of Didon lately Deceas'd.

The ſixth was directed to Charles, whom he very ſharply reproves for his intention of making a League with the Normans, and of making uſe of them to reinſtate him in his Kingdom. He remonſtrates to him, that it was a piece of Idolatry, thus to enter into the Alliance and Intereſt of Pagans: That the Kings his Predeceſſors were Servants of the true God; and that he had renounced him, by joyning with Infidels; that this was not the way to reaſcend the Throne of his Anceſtors, but rather to looſe it, by pulling on his Head the Wrath of an angry God: That thoſe who gave him this advice were his Enemies, and that if he followed it, he knew not how to continue Loyal to him, nor how to prevent himſelf from drawing off as many as he could from obeying him, but that he muſt be forced to Excommunicate him, and condemn him with a perpetual Anathema. He adds, that he wrote theſe things with extreme grief and concern, becauſe it was his deſire, that he might be had in honour both with GOD and Man, and that he might regain his Throne by the help of the Lord, and not by the Aſſiſtance of the Devil; becauſe the Kingdoms which God beſtows are firm and laſting; whereas thoſe which are acquir'd by Injuſtice and Rapine are uncertain, and of a ſhort ſtanding.

Fulcus Archbishop of Rheims.

The seventh was directed to the Emperour Lambert, whom he Congratulated upon the Popes Declaration, that he would look upon him as his own Son. He exhorts him always to bear a due respect and honour to the Holy See, because that was the only way of securing himself an Interest in Heaven, and of obtaining a superiority over all his Enemies. He wish'd him to remember that his Uncle Lambert, who had been an Enemy to the Holy See, Perish'd miserably; and he intreated him to intercede with the Pope for their Kinsman Rampon, who had been Excommunicated.

The eighth was Dedicated to Albrade, or Alfrede, the King of Great Britain, whom he Congratulates for the choice he made of a worthy Person to fill the See of Canterbury; because he heard that in his Country they advanced such a sort of Men, as permitted the Bishops and Priests to have Women among them, and the Laicks to Marry their Kindred, as well as those Virgins who were Dedicated to God's Service; and to have a Wife and a Concubine at the same time.

The ninth was directed to Richilda, a Queen or Empress, whom he inform'd of the ill Reports which went about of her Conduct, and exhorts her to lead a Life more conformable to Christianity, and to her state of Widowhood, which she had devoted to God.

In the sixth Chapter Flodoard makes mention of the Letters which Fulcus sent to several Bishops.

The Letters of Fulcus to the Bishops.

In the first directed to Frotharius, Archbishop of Bordeaux, he desires that Archbishop to preserve the Revenues of the Church of Rheims, which were in his Diocess, and to Excommunicate such as should seize on them.

The Second is Directed to Rostaing, Archbishop of Arles, on the same Subject.

In the third directed to Herman Archbishop of Cologn, he declares that he had a great desire to hold a Conference with him, and the Bishops of his Province, but that he was prevented by the Incursions of the Normans: And he prays him to do him Justice with relation to some of the Revennes belonging to his Church, of which several Persons had made a Schism; the Cognizance of this Affair having been referr'd to Wilbert his Predecessor, and now laid before him.

The fourth written to the same Person, relates likewise to the Interest of the Church of Rheims, for some Revenues which were Embezell'd from it.

The fifth is directed to Gontier, Archbishop of Sens, about the business of the Abbess Hildergarde. He intreats this Archbishop not to be so False as he had been, to the Assignments made upon this Account, and to do right to that Abbess.

In the sixth he Congratulates Plegmicus a Bishop of England, for his endeavouring to root out those Disorders of which he had made mention in his Letter to Alfreda, and he exhorts him to continue in his Design.

The Seventh was directed to John a Roman Prelate, whom he put in mind of some Ancient Tokens of Friendship, which he had shewn to him; and intreats him to assure Pope Stephen of his Submission to him, and begs he would stand his Friend in that Affair.

The Eighth, Ninth and Tenth were directed to Dodilon, Bishop of Cambray. By the two first he calls him to the Synod, which was to meet about determining the business between Hildegarde and Herminegard; and by the last wrote in his own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops his Suffragans, he enjoyns him to compel Count Baldwin to make due Restitutions of the Church Revennes which he had seiz'd on, to send him the Letter which they wrote to him upon the same Subject; and to go and meet with Bishop Hetilon at Arras.

The eleventh was writ to this Hetilon, upon the account of Dodilon's having caus'd the Body of Saint Calixtus to be taken away; which had been bequeathed by Radulphus to the Church of Rheims, whither it was brought.

The Twelfth was directed to Didon Bishop of Laon, whom he reproves for having refused the Sacraments of Penance and the Eucharist, at the point of Death, to one Walcher, who was Executed for High Treason; and for denying him Burial, and forbidding any Prayers to be made for him.

In the Thirteenth he desires Peter a Roman Prelate to obtain the favour of Pope Formosus, that he might put Heriland, turn'd out of his own Diocess of Teroüane, into Possession of the Bishoprick of Chalons, putting him in mind of what had been done in the Case of Actardus Bishop of Nants, who had been Translated to Tours.

The Fourteenth was directed to Honoratus Bishop of Beauvais: He complains, that this Bishop was his open and profess'd Enemy; Exhorts him to a Reconciliation, and gives him to understand, that he was accus'd of Rapines: He takes Notice to him of the Excommunication of one nam'd Aldramus, which the Bishop of Beauvais had thunder'd out, and which he said that the Archbishop of Rheims was bound to put in execution: As to this point he tells him, that he was always ready to follow the advice and opinion of other Bishops, but that he knew of no Power which the Church of Beauvais had to command the Church of Rheims; and that this Excommunication was not grounded on a Lawful and Canonical Reason, but only because this Man had left the Interest of Eudes, and embraced that of King Charles. He likewise Summoned him to appear at the Ordination of the Bishops of Senlis and Chalons, and gave him to understand that Pope Stephen had order'd him to send him to Ravenna.

The Fifteenth is a Letter of Compliment to Teutbaldus, Bishop of Langres.

The Sixteenth was directed to Radulphus Successor to Didon Bishop of Laon, whose Promotion to that Dignity he Congratulates, and advertis'd him that he had too rashly Excommunicated one of his Dioceſans, hinting withal that he gave him his advice as a Friend to a Friend, not being willing to make uſe of that Authority and Priviledge which the Church of Rheims had from all Antiquity, of ſuccouring all thoſe who made their Application to it, and thought themſelves injur'd by their Biſhops. Fulcus Archbiſhop of Rheims.

We might likewiſe to theſe Letters joyn that of Mancion Biſhop of Chalons, directed to Fulcus, and publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the third Tome of his Collections, wherein he asks the Archbiſhop's Advice, how he ought to behave himſelf with relation to a Prieſt who was ſolemnly betrothed to a Woman, and would marry her publickly.

In the ſeventh Chapter Flodoard ſpeaks of ſeveral Letters of Fulcus, directed to Abbots, and to Perſons of Note. The Letters of Fulcus to the Abbots.

The firſt was directed to an Abbot called Stephen, whom he comforts upon his having been depriv'd of a Biſhoprick to which he had been elected.

In the ſecond he reprov'd Baldwin Count of Flanders, for the many Injuries he offer'd to the Churches of his Country: and among others for having caus'd a Prieſt to be whip'd; for having turn'd out ſeveral Parochial Prieſts out of their Churches, in order to make room for others of his own chooſing; for having unjuſtly ſeiz'd upon an Eſtate which the King had beſtow'd on the Church of Noyon; for having ſeiz'd upon a Monaſtery, &c. he threaten'd to Excommunicate him, in caſe he did not forthwith make Reſtitution, and leave off his Cruelties to the Church.

The third is directed to the Clergy and Laiety of Senlis upon the Election of a Biſhop.

The fourth to the Clergy of Laon upon the ſame Subject.

The fifth to the Monks of Corby, whom he ſeverely reproves for their having cruelly turn'd out their Abbot.

Theſe are all the Letters of Fulcus, which are mention'd in Flodoard; the very Extracts of which ſhew us, that this Archbiſhop wrote with a great deal of Strength and Authority; That he was zealous for the welfare of the Church, for the Dignity of Biſhops, and particularly for the Rights and Prerogatives of the Church of Rheims. He was aſſaſſinated by Winemare and others of Count Baldwin's Creatures in the Year 900, which Count was incens'd againſt him for having taken away from him the Abby of S. Waſt, and the Caſtle of Arras.

HERVEUS Archbiſhop of Rheims.

HIS Succeſſor was one HERVEUS, a young Lord belonging to Court, and Nephew to Count Hugbbold. He was ordain'd by the unanimous conſent of all the Biſhops of the Province. Immediately after his Ordination he ſoon render'd himſelf capable of governing his Dioceſs, and gain'd the Eſteem and Love of all the World by his Charity to the Poor, by his ſweet Temper, by his good Nature, and by the Zeal he expreſſed for the Welfare of the Church, and for Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. He held ſeveral Provincial Councils, wherein he diſcours'd very uſefully of Religion, and of the Peace both of Church and State, and of the Converſion of the Normans, who about that time embrac'd the Chriſtian Faith. It was for their ſakes that he ſent to Guy Archbiſhop of Roan a Letter containing three and twenty Articles extracted out of the Canons and Letters of the Popes, about the manner of treating thoſe, who after they had been baptiz'd, had apoſtatiz'd, and afterward's return'd to the Church. In the Year 909. he held a Council at Troſly (a Village near Soiſſons) at which aſſiſted the Archbiſhop of Roan, with the Biſhops of Laon, Beauvais, Noyon, Chalons, Soiſſons, Cambray, Meaux, Senlis, Terouane and Amiens; in which, after he had diſcours'd at large of the Miſeries under which France groan'd, which he imputed to the Sins both of the Laity and the Clergy, he gave them very fine and large Inſtructions, grounded on ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers and Canons of Councils. 1. Concerning the Honour and Reſpect due to Churches and to Eccleſiaſticks. 2. Concerning the Duty and Allegiance which Biſhops and Eccleſiaſticks ow'd to their King, and concerning the Duties and Qualifications of a Prince. 3. Concerning the Reformation of thoſe Abuſes which were crept into the Monaſtick Life, and particularly concerning the Abbeys which were poſſeſs'd by Laicks. It was ordain'd that Abbots ſhould be Religious Perſons, well skill'd in the Regular Diſcipline; and that the Monks and Religious ſhould live according to their Profeſſion and Rule, praying for the Welfare of Kings, for the Peace of the Kingdom, and for the Tranquility of the Church, without concerning themſelves with Secular Affairs, without hunting after the Pomps of this World, and without incroaching on the Rights and Priviledges of Eccleſiaſticks: and that they might have no Excuſe for ſtragling, the Abbots were enjoyn'd, or at leaſt thoſe who had the Government of Monaſteries in their Care, to provide them Neceſſaries. 4. Againſt thoſe who either by violence, or by any other method, ſeiz'd on Church Lands: which he look'd upon as Sacrilege. 5. Againſt thoſe who either abus'd or perſecuted the Clergy. 6. Againſt thoſe who would not pay Tenths, and the other Revenues belonging to the Church. The Duty of Tithes reached not only to the Fruits of the Earth, and to the Breed of Cattle, but likewiſe to thoſe things which were the Profits of a Man's Induſtry and Labour. 7. Concerning the Rapines and Robberies ſo riſe at that time. HERVEUS Archbiſhop of Rheims. The Council of Troſly in 909.

Herveus Archbiſhop of Rheims.

time. He demonſtrates the Enormity thereof, and ſhews the Obligation they lay under of making Reſtitution, before they could expect Abſolution. 8. Againſt ſtealing young Women, and againſt clandeſtine or unlawful Marriages. 9. Concerning the Prohibitions renew'd ſo often by the Canons againſt Prieſts having Women amongſt them. 10. Concerning the Chaſtity which all Chriſtians were oblig'd to preſerve in their Words and Actions. 11. Concerning the Obligation of keeping ſtrictly to the Oaths they took, without being perjur'd. 12. Againſt quarrelſome Perſons who took delight in Law-Suits and vexatious Proſecutions. 13. Againſt Homicides and Lyars. 14. Againſt the Abuſe which then prevail'd of rifling the Goods of Biſhops after their Deceaſe. Upon this he adviſes that two or three of the neighbouring Biſhops, upon the News of the Death of their Brother, ſhould go and perform the laſt Offices over him. In the Concluſion, he exhorted the Biſhops to refute the Errors of Photius. Laſtly, He ſums up in a few words what Chriſtians ought to believe and practice, and exhorts them faithfully to diſcharge their Duties.

The Council of Troſly in the Year 921.

In the Year 921. Herveus held another Council at the ſame place, wherein he took off the Excommunication iſſued out againſt Count Ertebold, who had ſeiz'd upon ſome of the Church Revenues.

This Archbiſhop aſſiſted Charles the Simple in his Expedition againſt the Hunns, who ravag'd Lorrain, and was the only Man who continued Loyal to that Prince, when he was abandon'd by the French Lords. In the Year 920. he brought him back to Rheims, and adjuſted Matters betwixt him and his Lords, and re-eſtabliſh'd him in his Kingdom. But within a ſhort time after the Lords revolted again, and being met at Rheims, they elected King Robert, and Herveus was conſtrain'd to crown him. He did not ſurvive this Coronation but four days, and dy'd in the Year 922. having preſided over the Church of Rheims Two and twenty years lacking four days.

Seulfus Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Robert caus'd Seulfus to be elected in his room, who was then Archdeacon of that Church. He had been the Diſciple of Remy of Auxerre, who had inſtructed him in the Sciences, both Divine and Prophane. He was ordain'd by Abbo Biſhop of Soiſſons, and by the other Biſhops of the Province of Rheims. Eudes the Brother of Herveus, and a Nephew of that Name, were cited before him, being accus'd of Diſloyalty to Robert; and they not juſtifying themſelves, were ſtrip'd of all the Revenues of the Church of Rheims in their poſſeſſion, and caſt into Priſon: the former in the Cuſtody of Hebert Count of Vermandois; and the latter at Paris. In a Provincial Council held in the Year 923. he impos'd a Pennance on thoſe who had born Arms in the War between Robert and Charles; and in another Council held in the Year 924. at Troſly, he put an end to the Difference which was between Count Iſaac and Stephen Biſhop of Cambray; the former paying an hundred pounds to the latter, for the wrong he had done to his Church. 'Tis ſaid that Seulfus agreed with Hebert to reſign the Archbiſhoprick to the Son of that Count. However the caſe was, Seulfus did not enjoy this Dignity long, being priſon'd in the Year 925. by the order of Hebert as it is ſuppoſed.

Hugh Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Preſently after his death that Count came to Rheims, and having called thither Abbo Biſhop of Soiſſons, and Bauvo Biſhop of Chalons, he caus'd his Son Hugh, who was not then above five years old, to be elected by the Clergy and People of Rheims. Afterwards he procured the Confirmation of this Election by King Radulphus, who committed the Temporalities of this Dioceſs to Hebert, till his Son came of Age to take upon himſelf the Government thereof. The Spiritualities were confer'd by Pope John X. on Abbo Biſhop of Soiſſons, ſo that Hebert became abſolute Maſter of that Church, and drove out of it all the Clergy whom he ſuppos'd to be againſt his Intereſts, and among others Flodoard, as he himſelf informs us.

The Wars between Hebert and Radulphus.

In the Year 927. King Radulphus and Count Hebert fell out upon the account of the Earldom of Laon, which Hebert would have had given to his Son Odo, and which the King deſir'd to keep for himſelf. Hebert willing to rely on a Power which might ſupport his Pretenſions, had an Interview with Henry King of Germany, and ſtruck up an Alliance with him. He caus'd a Council to be conven'd the ſame Year at Troſly, notwithſtanding the Prohibition of King Radulphus, which conſiſted of ſix Biſhops of the Province of Rheims: Afterwards he deliver'd Charles the Simple out of Priſon, brought him to S. Quintin, and procur'd an Interview between him and Radulphus Duke of Normandy: from whence he brought him to Rheims, and writ to Pope John X. for the reſtabliſhing of that Prince. This attempt oblig'd Radulphus to quit the City of Laon to Hebert, and to adjuſt Matters with him. Radulphus Duke of the Normans would not reſtore to Hebert his Son Odo, till he had ſet Charles at liberty, and promis'd to obey him. At the ſame time Hebert invited to Rheims Odalric Archbiſhop of Aix, who had been turn'd out of his Church by the Saracens, that he might there diſcharge his Epiſcopal Functions; and to reward him, he gave him the Abby of S. Timotheus, with the Revenue of a Prebend.

The State of France.

France was then as it were parted between the great Lords, and the Regal Authority was extreamly cramp'd. Hugh the White, Count of Paris, and Hebert, were two of the moſt powerful: Radulphus had the Title of King, and that little of the Regal Authority which remain'd. For Charles was the ſport and paſtime of all three. As ſoon as Hebert was reconcil'd to Radulphus, he threw Charles again into Priſon; and Radulphus afterwards returning to Rheims, gave him a ſeeming ſort of Liberty, which he did not long enjoy, dying on the Seventh of October in the Year 929. After his Death Hugh and Hebert fell out, the Umbrage of which quarrel was, that the Latter had given Entertainment to ſeveral Vaſſals belonging to the former, and among others to Herluin Count of Monſtreuil. Radulphus ſided with his Brother-in-law Hugh, and there was a warm War between them: but Radulphus having taken the City of Rheims in the Year 931. caus'd Artaldus, a Monk of S. Remy, to be ordain'd Archbishop of the place, who the year after receiv'd the Pall from Pope John XI. This Archbishop held a Council in the Year 934. at Chatteau-Thierry, where he ordain'd Hildegarius Bishop of Beauvais; and in the same year he ordain'd Fulbert Bishop of Cambray. The year after he held another Council at Fismes, wherein he Excommunicated those who had made an unlawful Seisure on the Revenue of the Church. King Radulphus being dead, Hugh the White recall'd out of England Lewis, Charles the Simple's Son, call'd upon that account Lewis d'Outremer, and caus'd him to be crown'd at Laon by Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims, who continued in the peaceable possession of his Archbishoprick for some time, and ordain'd Bishops in all the Churches of his Province, except Chalons and Amiens. But Hebert would not endure that any other but himself should be in the possession of so considerable a Post, and thereupon sent several of his Troops to take and rifle the Castles and Villages which belong'd to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. Artaldus for this Excommunicated him. King Lewis to make him amends for the Losses he sustain'd, granted him the Earldom of Rheims, and the Priviledge of the Mint, and assisted him in taking several Castles which were held out by the Troops of Hebert. Fortune did not long favour Artaldus; for Hugh entring into a new League with Hebert against Lewis d'Outremer, they came with William Duke of Normandy, besieg'd the City of Rheims, became Masters of it at the end of six days, and caus'd Artaldus to appear in the Church of S. Remy, in the presence of several Lords and Bishops; and oblig'd him to make a Resignation of his Archbishoprick, and to content himself with the Abbeys of S. Bazol and Avenay, into the former of which he retir'd, after he had govern'd the Church of Rheims for the space of Eight years and seven months. Hugh the Son of Hebert, was replac'd in possession thereof, and was ordain'd Priest by Guy Bishop of Soissons, three Months after his return, and fifteen Years after his first Election. He had spent this Interval of Time at Auxerre, where he had follow'd his Studies under Guy Bishop of that City, who had ordain'd him Deacon; for he had receiv'd his other Orders at Rheims from the Hand of Abbo Bishop of Soissons.

Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims.

The next Year, namely 941. the two Counts Hebert and Hugh conven'd the Bishops of the Province of Rheims at Soissons, and enter'd into a Consultation of ordaining Hugh the Son of Hebert Archbishop of Rheims. The Deputies of the Clergy and Laity of Rheims met there, and demanded that he might be ordain'd, asserting that Artaldus had not been Elected according to the Canon, but intruded by Force; and that he had given up all the Title he could claim to that Archbishoprick. Upon this Remonstrance, the Bishops resolv'd upon ordaining Hugh, and immediately set out for Rheims for that purpose. Artaldus was already withdrawn to Lewis d'Outremer: but that Prince having been defeated in the Year 941. near Laon, Artaldus was very lucky in reconciling himself with Hugh the White and Hibert, in re-entring into the Possession of his Abbeys, and in making a League with Hugh Archbishop of Rheims, who soon after receiv'd the Pall that was sent him by Pope Stephen VIII. Notwithstanding this League, Artaldus return'd to Lewis d'Outremer. In the mean time Hebert dying in 943. Lewis was perswaded by Hugh the White to entertain the Sons of this Count, and also to leave Hugh in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, upon condition that they restor'd to Artaldus his Abbeys, give him another Bishoprick, and grant that his Kinsmen should retain the Honours they had obtain'd. This Treaty was not long kept; for Hugh the White and Lewis d'Outremer Warring against each other, the latter laid Siege twice to the City of Rheims, and the second time having chas'd away Hugh Archbishop of Rheims, he enter'd the City, and re-establishes Artaldus, who was replac'd in his See in the Year 946. by the Archbishops of Treves and Mayence. The Church of Amiens becoming Vacant the year after, Hugh ordain'd Tetbold Archdeacon of Soissons Bishop thereof, which occasion'd a Trial which was brought before an Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held near the River Cher. The Affair was not brought to any Issue at that place, but put off to November. In the mean time Artaldus was left in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, and Hugh permitted to stay at Mouzon.

The Council of Rheims for the deposing Artaldus and ordaining Hugh.

A Council was call'd and held at Verdun: wherein were Robert Archbishoy of Treves, Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims, Odalric Archbishop of Aix, Adalberon Bishop of Mets, Gozelin Bishop of Tulle, Hildebald Bishop of the Upper Rhine, in the presence of Bruno an Abbot, Brother to King Otho, and of the Abbots Agenold and Odilo. Hugh was cited thither by two Bishops, but would not appear. The Synod adjudg'd the Archbishops of Rheims to belong to Artaldus.

The Council of Verdun.

Another Council was call'd in January following upon the same Subject, and held in the Church of S. Peter, near to Mouzon. They met at the time appointed, and Hugh made his appearance. But after he had discours'd with Robert Archbishop of Treves, he withdrew, and only caus'd a Letter to be presented by one of his Clergy, which was brought from Rome, and writ in the name of Pope Agapetus, wherein it was order'd that Hugh should be re-establish'd in the Archbishoprick of Rheims. The Bishops having read the Letter, alledg'd that it would not be reasonable to supersede the Execution of the Orders which they had reciv'd from the Holy See, upon the account of a Letter presented by the Enemy of Artaldus, and after they had read the nineteenth Chapter of the Council of Carthage concerning the Accuser and the Accused, they adjudg'd Artaldus to have continued in the Communion of the Church, and in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims; and that Hugh, who had been already summon'd before two Synods, without appearing to either, ought to be depriv'd of the Communion and Government of that Church, till such time as he should clear himself in a General Council. This Sentence they notified to Hugh, who for his part declar'd, that he would not submit to it. In the mean time Artaldus having appeal'd to the Authority of the Holy See, Pope Agapetus sent Bishop Marinus his Vicar to King Otho, that he might call a General Synod, to pass a definitive Sentence on this Affair.

The Council of Mouzon

It

The Council of Ingelheim in favour of Artaldus.

It was held at Ingelheim the ſeventh of June in the Year 948. Marinus the Pope's Legat was the Preſident thereof, and the Archbiſhop of Cologne, Mayence, Treves, and Hambourgh his Aſſiſtants, with ſix and twenty Biſhops of Germany, without reckoning Artaldus Archbiſhop of Rheims, upon whoſe account the Aſſembly met. The Kings Otho and Lewis d'Outremer were likewiſe preſent. The latter made his Complaints againſt the Rebellion of Hugh; and afterwards Artaldus preſented his Petition to the Popes Legat and the Synod, wherein he gave a Remonſtrance of all his Concerns, which was as follows. That after the death of Herveus, Seulfus who had been put up in his place, declar'd himſelf againſt the Kindred of his Predeceſſor: and that he might gain his point, he enter'd into a Confederacy with Count Hebert, who caſt them into Priſon, where they were confin'd till the death of King Robert. That Seulfus dying in the third year of his Pontificate, being poyſon'd (as ſeveral atteſted) by Hebert's Creatures, that Count ſeiz'd on the Church of Rheims, and was in poſſeſſion thereof for the ſpace of ſix years by the permiſſion of King Radulphus. But that afterwards that King being mov'd by the Remonſtrances of the Biſhops, who complain'd that that Church was left ſo long without a Paſtor, after he had made himſelf Maſter of Rheims, had caus'd him to be ordain'd by eighteen Biſhops. That he had diſcharg'd the Epiſcopal Functions for nine years together, ordain'd eight Biſhops, and a great many Clerks, and crown'd King Lewis and Queen Gerberga. But that Count Hugh being incens'd againſt him, becauſe he would not joyn in his Revolt againſt the King, had forc'd him, after he had taken the City of Rheims, to reſign his Archbiſhoprick, had ſent him into the Monaſtery of S. Bazol, and had put into his place Hugh, Count Hebert's Son, who had been ordain'd Deacon at Auxerre. That afterwards he call'd a Synod at Soiſſons, wherein a Propoſal was made to him to permit the Ordination of Hugh. That he immediately oppos'd it, and had declar'd them Excommunicated who ſhould ordain any other Archbiſhop of Rheims whilſt he was living, and him who ſhould accept of ſuch Ordination. That afterwards, to get out of their hands, he had deſir'd them, that they would let him go to ask advice of the Queen, and his Friends, what he ought to do, and that they would ſend ſome body along with him to know his anſwer. They ſent with him Biſhop Deroldus, to whom, in the preſence of the Queen, he gave this Anſwer, That he Excommunicated the Biſhops who ſhould dare to ordain another in his place; repeating the Proteſtation he had formerly made of appealing to the Holy See. That without being concern'd at this Denunciation, ſome of theſe Biſhops went to Rheims to ordain Hugh. That from that time King Lewis proving unſucceſsful, he had been oblig'd to wander from place to place like a Vagabond; and that afterwards ſeveral of his Friends had brought him by force to the Counts Hugh the White and Hebert, who having him in their power, conſtrain'd him to reſign the Revenues of his Church, and ſent him into the Monaſtery of S. Bazol. That being inform'd that they deſign'd to make away with him, he fled to Laon. That ſince that, King Otho came in to the aſſiſtance of King Lewis, had turn'd Hugh out of the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, and re-eſtabliſh'd him therein. That Hugh retir'd to the Caſtle of Mouzon: that in the Conference held upon the River Cher, where he was preſent with Hugh, his Affair was there debated before the Biſhops then preſent. That Hugh had there produc'd a Letter writ to the Pope in his name, whereby he deſir'd to be diſcharg'd from his Archbiſhoprick, which he had maintain'd was counterfeit. That the Favourites of Hugh having alledg'd that an Affair of that Importance could not be determin'd in that Aſſembly, becauſe it was not a Synod convocated according to form, they had put it off to November, wherein a Synod was to be held; and that in the mean time it was order'd, that he ſhould have the Government of the Church of Rheims, and Hugh was allow'd to ſtay at Mouzon. That Hugh came in the Seaſon of Vintage with Count Thibold, to carry off all the Wine round about the City of Rheims. That the Synod had been held at Verdun as appointed, to which Hugh was cited, and he would not make his Appearance, nor to another held afterwards near Mouzon, which had paſs'd a Sentence abſolutely in his favour. But that Hugh having declar'd that he would not ſubmit to this Sentence, and remaining ſtill at Mouzon, he had ſent to Rome by the Ambaſſadors of King Otho a Petition containing his Complaints; that he expected the Iſſue of all from the Orders of the Holy See, and the Determination of the Council. This Petition of Artaldus having been read in Latin and in the old Teutonick Language, Sigeboldus a Clerk belonging to Hugh enter'd, preſented to the Council the Letter which had been brought from Rome, and which had been already produc'd before the Council of Mouzon, and avouch'd that it had been given him by the Legat Marinus then preſent. It was written in the name of Guy Biſhop of Soiſſons, Hildegaire Biſhop of Beauvais, and of all the other Biſhops of the Province of Rheims, who deſir'd the re-eſtabliſhment of Hugh and the Expulſion of Artaldus. When this Letter had been read, the Biſhops therein mention'd did declare that it was Counterfeit, and that they had never heard the leaſt mention of any ſuch thing, nor gave their Conſent that ſuch a Requeſt ſhould be made in their Names. Upon this their Declaration this Deacon was depos'd as an Impoſtor and Calumniator; and in the ſame Seſſion Artaldus was confirm'd in the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims. In the ſecond Seſſion Robert Archbiſhop of Treves alledg'd, that ſince they had re-eſtabliſh'd Artaldus as lawful Archbiſhop of Rheims, it was requiſite to condemn the Intruder. Marinus told them the Council ought to pronounce a Sentence agreeable to the Canon; and after the Decrees of the Pope's touching this Subject were read, the Biſhops declar'd Hugh to be Excommunicated and thrown out of the Church, till ſuch time as he ſhould do Pennance for his Fault. In the other Seſſions they debated on ſeveral Points relating to Church Diſcipline; and all the Acts of this Council are reduc'd into Ten Canons.

The firſt contains the Excommunication of Hugh.

The

The second, the Resettlement of Artaldus, and the Excommunication of those, who were ordain'd by Hugh, unless they should appear before the Synod to be held at Treves, September 13. to make Satisfaction, and to receive Pennance for what they had done. The Council of Ingelheim in favour of Artaldus.

The third inflicts the same Punishment on Count Hugh the White, for having turn'd out Radulphus, Bishop of Laon.

The fourth prohibits the Laity from bestowing Churches on Priests, or from turning them out of them without the Approbation of the Bishop.

The fifth is against those who abuse the Priests, or do them any wrong.

In the sixth, it is order'd that the whole Easter-Week, and the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday after Whitsunday should be kept as Festivals, as well as the Lord's Day.

In the seventh, it is order'd, that in the Grand Litany (which is on S. Mark's day) a Fast shall be kept as in the Rogation-Week before the Ascension.

The eighth imports that the Laicks should have no share of the Offerings which the Faithful offer'd on the Altar.

The ninth, that the Cognizance of all Differences about Tithes should be brought before the Bishops.

The tenth and last Canon is imperfect, and one cannot well comprehend the meaning thereof; There is mention made of Widows dedicated to the Service of God.

After this Council Lewis d'Outremer assisted by Conrad Duke of Lorrain, retook Mouzon, Montague and Laon, and the Bishops being met at Mouzon, Excommunicated Count Thibold, and cited Count Hugh the White to appear before the Synod to be held at Treves. In this Assembly, Guy Bishop of Soissons, who had ordain'd Hugh, came to wait upon King Lewis, and to give him Satisfaction. The Council of Mouzon.

Artaldus when he departed from Laon went to Treves with Guy Bishop of Soissons, Radulphus Bishop of Laon, and Wickfroy of Terrouane, where they met with Marinus the Pope's Legat, and Robert Archbishop of Treves, who waited for their coming, without whom there would not have been any other Bishops of Germany and Lorrain. Marinus asked Artaldus and the rest of the Bishops, how Hugh the White had behav'd himself since the last Synod, and whether the Letters which cited him before the Synod had been deliver'd to him. They reply'd, That he still persisted in his Rebellion and Robberies; that one of their Letters had been deliver'd to him, and that the other had been intercepted by his Party. Upon this Reply, It was asked whether any one was come on his behalf; and none appearing, the Assembly was adjourn'd till the morrow. On that day there appear'd no Deputy in behalf of Count Hugh; and tho' the Clergy and Nobless cry'd out, that he ought to be Excommunicated; yet that was put off to the third day. In the mean time they consulted about the Affair of the Bishops who had been cited before the Synod, or who had any hand in the Ordination of Hugh. The Bishop of Soissons begg'd Pardon and obtain'd it; the Bishop of Terouane was found to have no hand in the Ordination; and the Bishop of Noyon was excus'd by reason of his Sickness. On the third day Hugh the White was Excommunicated till such time as he should come and ask the Legat and the Bishops Pardon for what he had done: and in case he should defer that, he enjoyn'd him to go to Rome for Absolution. There were likewise two Bishops Excommunicated who were ordain'd by Hugh, the one of Amiens, the other of Senlis; and a Clerk who had instituted and inducted the Latter. Hildegairus Bishop of Beauvais was cited before Marinus, or to Rome, for assisting at their Ordination: and lastly, the young Count Hebert, Brother to Hugh, was likewise summon'd to make Satisfaction for the wrong he had done the Bishops. All these things were transacted in the Year 948. and from that time forward Artaldus remain'd in possession of the Archbishop of Rheims, which was made sure to him by the Peace concluded between Lewis d'Outremer and Hugh the White in the Year 953. In the same Year this Archbishop held a Council of five Bishops at S. Thierry, wherein he Excommunicated Count Reginald, who had seiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church. The Council of Treves.

Artaldus dying the last day of August in the Year 967. after he had been Archbishop of Rheims thirty years, several Bishops propos'd the Re-establishing Hugh. The Affair was debated in a Council held in a Village of the Diocess of Meaux upon the River Marne, consisting of Thirteen Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims and Sens. The Bishops of Laon and Chalons very strongly oppos'd his Restitution, and the Case was refer'd to the Arbitration of his Holiness. He gave them to understand by Bruno Archbishop of Cologne, that Hugh had been Rejected and Excommunicated by the Councils of Rome and Pavia, and that there was no thinking of him again. Whereupon they elected a Clerk of the Church of Rheims call'd Odalric, the Son of a Count nam'd Hugh, who was supported by King Lotharius, by the Queen-Mother, and by Bruno. He enjoy'd the Archbishoprick very peaceably for the space of Seven years, and dy'd in the Year 968. His Successor was Adalberon or Alberon, Brother of Count Henry, who govern'd the Church of Rheims for Nineteen years, with a great deal of Prudence and Candor. Under his Episcopacy a Council was held at Rheims in the Year 975. whereof Stephen Deacon of Pope Benedict VII. was President. In this Council Thibold was Excommunicated for having unlawfully seiz'd upon the Church of Amiens. In the Year 972. he held another Council at St. Mary's Mount, where he procur'd a Ratification of an Order he had made, of putting Monks into the Monastery of S. Medard instead of Canons who were there. After the death of this Archbishop, Hugh Capet laid hold on this opportunity of taking into his Interests Arnulphus, the Bastard Brother of Charles Duke of Lorrain, the last of the Carolinian Race, Clerk The death of Artaldus. Odalric Archbishop of Rheims. Adalberon Archbishop of Rheims. Arnulphus Archbishop of Rheims.

Arnulphus Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Clerk of the Church of Laon, by procuring him to be elected Archbiſhop of Rheims in the Year 989. who immediately took of him an Oath of Fidelity. But within ſix Months after his being in poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, his Brother Charles was introduc'd into that City, and became Maſter of it by means of a Prieſt nam'd Adalger. Which was brought about, as 'tis ſuppos'd, by the Intelligence he had from the Archbiſhop, who however was carry'd by his Brother to Laon, and caſt into Priſon for forms ſake. Arnulphus notwithſtanding iſſued out a Sentence of Excommunication againſt thoſe who had made an unlawful Seizure of the Revenues of the Church of Rheims; and the Biſhops of the Province met at Senlis, and paſſed a Decree againſt Adalger, whereby they Excommunicated him and all others who had any hand in the Uſurpation made upon the Churches of Rheims and Laon. This Excommunication was ſent to all the Biſhops, and Complaints were made to the Holy See, who took part with Arnulphus. But Hugh Capet, who had always ſuſpected his Treachery, having diſcover'd that his Suſpicion was not groundleſs, and that he was in the Intereſts of his Brother, wrote againſt him to Pope John XV. and cauſed the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims to write to him likewiſe, who accus'd Arnulphus, and deſir'd he might be Condemn'd. After this Hugh becoming Maſter of the City of Laon, and having Charles in Cuſtody, he took Arnulphus, and brought him to Rheims, where he call'd a Council to proceed againſt him. It conſiſted of ſix Suffragans of the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, viz. Guy Biſhop of Soiſſons, Adalberon of Laon, Herveus of Beauvais, Goteſman of Amiens, Ratbode of Mayon, and Eudes of Senlis; beſides them were Debert Archbiſhop of Bourges, Sigwin Archbiſhop of Sens, Gautier Biſhop of Autun, Bruno of Langres, Milo of Maſcon, Arnulphus Biſhop of Orleans, and Hebert of Auxerre, with ſeveral Abbots of ſeveral Dioceſſes. Sigwin was Preſident thereof, and Arnulphus of Orleance Prolocutor. In the firſt Seſſion held the ſixteenth of June in the Church of Bazol, Arnulphus Archbiſhop of Rheims was accus'd for having betray'd his Truſt to King Hugh, and being the chief Cauſe of the taking that City. Sigwin Archbiſhop of Sens, alledg'd that he would not permit a Proceſs to be made on this Charge, till he was ſure that Arnulphus ſhould not be put to Death in caſe he were Convicted of High Treaſon; and moreover cited the Thirty firſt Chapter of the Council of Toledo, which imports that Biſhops ſhall not proceed to the Determination of ſuch Matters, till they had engag'd the Princes upon Oath to remit the Puniſhment of the Offenders. Herveus ſhew'd that it would be of worſe conſequence if the Prince ſhould take cognizance of the Caſe, and deprive the Biſhops of the right of doing it. Bruno declar'd that he was moſt concern'd in this Affair; that upon the account of his being a Retainer to the King Lotharius his Uncle, he had engag'd himſelf for the Fidelity of Arnulphus, that he might be made Archbiſhop of Rheims, in hopes that he would not let him ſuffer any prejudice for this Act of Kindneſs: That Arnulphus was ſo far from making his due acknowledgments, that he had begun to perſecute his Friends, and had put him in danger of his Life: that he had to no purpoſe warranted that he would not break the Oath of Fidelity which he had taken to King Hugh; that there was ſufficient Evidence of his Treachery, becauſe the Authors of that Rebellion were his moſt intimate Friends, and ſuch as he eſteem'd very highly. As to that which was alledg'd, that care ought to be taken that the Offender ſhould not loſe his Life; he anſwer'd, that there was no need to fear any ſuch thing under Princes ſo merciful as theirs were; but that it was more to be fear'd, whilſt they endeavour'd after the Safety of one Man, that the whole Eccleſiaſtical Order would be expos'd to danger. At laſt it was concluded, that the Prieſt who had deliver'd up the Gates of the City to Duke Charles, ſhould be brought in. Whilſt they ſtaid for his coming, they read over the Oath of Fidelity which Arnulphus had taken to King Hugh and King Robert. Afterwards the Prieſt nam'd Adalger appearing, declar'd that it was Arnulphus who gave him the Keys of the City Gates, with orders to deliver them up to Duke Charles. After this Evidence was given, they read the Decree which Arnulphus had made againſt thoſe who made an unlawful Seizure of the Revenue of the Church of Rheims, which prov'd that himſelf was Excommunicated, becauſe he was the Author of that Depredation, and went ſhares with thoſe who committed it. To this was joyn'd the Sentence of the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims, paſs'd at Senlis much about the time wherein they began to ſuſpect Arnulphus of Treaſon. After the reading of theſe Papers and the Canons of the Council of Carthage againſt Perſons Excommunicated who partake of the Sacrament, and againſt Biſhops who do any thing contrary to the Oath which they have taken in their Ordination, leave was given to all who were minded to vindicate Arnulphus, to ſay freely what they could in his behalf. The Clergy of his own Church would neither accuſe nor defend him: But John Scholaſticus of Auxerre, Ranulphus Abbot of Sens, and Abbo Superior of the Monaſtery of Fleury, undertook to defend him, and produc'd a great many Paſſages extracted out of the falſe Decretals of the Ancient Popes, to prove that Arnulphus ought to be re-eſtabliſht before they proceeded to judge him; and that they might not judge him till he had been cited ſeveral times, and the Holy See made acquainted with the Buſineſs. It was anſwer'd them that he had ſufficient Notice given him; That they ought not to re-eſtabliſh him till he had receiv'd ſuch a Sentence as declar'd him Abſolv'd, ſince he had been already Condemn'd; That Hildemare Biſhop of Beauvais, and Abbo Archbiſhop of Rheims charg'd with the ſame Crime as Arnulphus was, had been judg'd by the Synods of the Province; That the Holy See had been already inform'd of this Affair by the Letters of King Hugh, and of the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims, which had been carry'd to Rome by Deputies, which the Pope at firſt had pretty well entertain'd: but that ſince Count Hebert had preſented his Holineſs with a fine white Steed and ſeveral other things, he deny'd to give them any further Audience. The Deputies which Biſhop Bruno had ſent to Rome for his Releaſment, added, that having requeſted the Pope to Anathe-matize those who were guilty of his Confinement, the Clerks of the Pope had demanded Money of them for it; and that they not being willing to give them any on that account, the Pope had told them at his first Answer, That the Person for whom he had been Apprehended might release him, if he thought fit: from whence they concluded, that the Holy See did not hinder them from proceeding upon the Spot to the Judgment and Determination of that Affair. But they carried the Point higher yet, and Arnulphus Bishop of Orleans remonstrated, that they might go on in the Trial, without waiting for what Rome should say in the Case. And after he had made Protestation that all due Respect ought to be paid to the Holy See and its Decisions, without offering prejudice to the Canons of the Councils; he gave them to understand that there are two things of which great care ought to be taken, which were not to permit that the Silence, or the new Laws or Institutions of the Popes, be any prejudice to the Ancient Laws of the Church: Because this would be to overthrow all order, and to make every thing depend on the Will and Pleasure of one single Man. That this did not derogate any thing of the Privileges of the Pontifex Maximus: because if the Bishop of Rome were a Man of Worth (on his Learning and his Piety, there was no fear of his Silence, or of his Altering the Constitutions of the Church. That if on the contrary, either out of Ignorance, or Fear, or Passion, he should swerve from Justice, his Silence and his new Decrees were the less to be fear'd; because he who acts contrary to the Laws, cannot prejudice the Laws. From thence he took an occasion to lament the sad Estate of the Church of Rome, and gave a brief account of the Popes from Formosus to Boniface, and shew'd his abhorrence of their Irregularities. He asked whether Bishops, raised for their Sanctity and Piety, were oblig'd to submit themselves blindly to such Infamous Monsters, who had no Learning, neither Divine nor Prophane. He complain'd that they should advance to the highest Post of the Church the mere Scum and Refuse of the Clergy; Pastors who more deserv'd the name of Walking Statues, than of Reasonable Men. Upon default of excellent Popes, he was for consulting Metropolitans; and took notice that there were a great many such in Gallia, Belgica, and in Germany, very well skill'd in Matters of Religion; and that it was more proper to ask their Opinion, if the War which happens between Princes did not hinder it, than to go to seek it in that City, which at present declares in favour of him who gives most, and weighs its Judgments by the Number of Crowns which are presented. He adds, that if any one should allege with Pope Gelasius, that the Church of Rome is the Judge of all Churches, and can be judg'd by none, this is a Proposition which the African Bishops would not consent to, and which could not be true at this time, wherein there was scarce one at Rome who had so much as studied Humane Learning, if common Fame were to be credited therein. That Ignorance was more excusable in other Bishops than in the Bishop of Rome, who ought to be Judge of the Faith, of the Life, of the Manners, and of the Discipline of the whole Church. That according to St. Gregory's Opinion, the Bishops, when in fault, are subject to the Correction of the Holy See; but when they are unblameable, Humility in one sence renders them all Equal. Lastly, That when the Bishops of Rome of this time were like to Damasus, nothing could be done more than had been done, since the Bishops and the King had writ concerning this very Business to the Holy See, and they had not undertaken to decide it in the Province, till such time as they had no hopes of having it try'd at Rome, which was conformable to the Canons of the Council of Sardica. He quoted several Passages out of St. Gregory, to show that Bishops are oblig'd to punish Offences; and that they may Depose Bishops who are convicted thereof. He added, That tho' one might pass by other Crimes in silence, one could not do so in the Case of High Treason: yet that there have been Instances of Archbishops of Rheims, condemn'd by the Bishops of the Province for this very Crime; namely Gillo Archbishop of Rheims, who gave a disloyal Counsel to Childebert, and Ebbo, and was depos'd at Thionville: That the Decree of Damasus, which imports that the Causes of Bishops shall be try'd at Rome, ought to be extended to none but difficult Causes, and not to such wherein the Crime is self-evident: That the African Bishops have contested the very Right of Appellation, and that the Councils of Nice and Antioch appointed the Synod of the Province to determine these Matters: That he would very readily grant the Church of Rome more than ever the African Bishops pretended to allow it: That they consulted it when the Affairs of the State permitted it, and they submitted to its Determinations, unless they were contrary to Equity: But if it remain'd silent, the Ecclesiastical Laws ought to be consulted, and the rather because the Church of Rome at present was destitute of all manner of Supports and Succours; for since the Fall of the Empire it has lost the Churches of Alexandria and Antioch, as well as those of Africa and Asia, and all Europe began easily off from it: That the Church of Constantinople was withdrawn from its Obedience: That the Churches of Spain, which were most remote, did not acknowledge its Determinations; and that Rome had abandoned it self, since it no longer gave any wholesome Advice to it self, or others. He concludes, that according to the Examples and Canons of former times, they ought to proceed to the Trial of the Archbishop of Rheims.

Against Arnulphus.

From all this Learned and Judicious Speech of the Bishop of Orleans, it cannot but be observ'd, that even in these dark times, wherein Rome might with ease have imposed on the blind and ignorant World, there were some so wise, and so honest as not to think its Bishop (especially if a wicked and ignorant one) to be the Infallible Judge of all Controversies. Now whether this honest proceeding of the Council of Rheims in judging Arnulphus, even in a time when they profess'd to pay all due deference to the Holy See; and whether the Practice of the Modern Gallican Churches in this Age, be not a sufficient Evidence to prove how little they (even of the Romish Communion) believe the Doctrine of the Pope's Infallibility (unless as far as they gain by it) I leave the fair and impartial Reader of both Parties to judge.]

The Council of Rheims against Arnulphus.

Upon this the Synod came to a Resolution; the Defendant was called in, who took his place among the Bishops. The Bishop of Orleans upbraided him with the Favours he had received from the King, which he had return'd with Treachery. The Defendant alledg'd that he had done nothing against the King; that he was always Loyal to him; that he had been taken by force in his City by the Enemy, the King not coming to his Assistance. The Bishop of Orleans oppos'd to him the Testimony of Adalger the Priest, who said he had deliver'd up the Gates of the City by his order. The Defendant reply'd that the thing was false; the Priest maintain'd to his Face that his Evidence was true. Arnulphus of Rheims complain'd of the ill usage he had met with; the Bishop of Soissons ask'd him why he did not appear when he was cited by the King and Bishops; and upon the Answer he made, that he could not, being then retain'd in Custody; that Bishop reply'd, that he had offer'd to conduct him, and alledg'd several Circumstances to prove that he had behav'd himself very deceitfully. Afterwards another Witness was produc'd, who told him that he had said to him that he preferr'd Prince Charles to all the World; and if he had any kindness for him he ought to endeavour to serve him. Whereas several Abbots declared that Arnulphus ought to be permitted to withdraw, and to ask advice what Answer to make, it was granted him; and he withdrew into a corner of the Chamber with the Archbishop of Sens, and the Bishop of Orleans, Langres, and Auxerre. Whilst they consulted together, they read in the Synod the Canons of the Councils of Toledo against those who prov'd disloyal to their Prince. In the mean time Arnulphus acknowled'd and confess'd his Crime before the Bishops who were retir'd aside with him, who call'd others to be present at his Declaration. He made it before them, and thirty Abbots or Clerks, which were call'd to be Witnesses. This Acknowledgment took off the Objection which might arise upon the Account of the Holy See; because Arnulphus having not appeal'd to it, chose his Judges, and acknowledg'd his Fault, there was no difficulty remaining; so that they might condemn him without incroaching upon the Rights of the Holy See. But to be inform'd what Ceremony they should use in his Deposition, several Canons were consulted, and a great many Instances were produc'd, which took up the remaining part of this Session.

The next day the Bishops meeting in the same place, after they had debated several Affairs both Ecclesiastical and Civil, return'd that of the Archbishop of Rheims: and as they were debating after what manner he ought to be treated, King Hugh, and King Robert entred with the Lords, and then thank'd the Bishops for the Zeal they had express'd for them, and ask'd them how the Case stood. The Bishop of Orleans return'd them this Answer, that there was no need of returning them Thanks for doing what was only their Duty; that they had not acted therein out of any Motive of Love to them, or of Hatred to Arnulphus: they could heartily wish that he were able to clear himself; but that at last, after many Evasions, he had acknowledg'd his Crime, and consented to be degraded from his Priesthood, in the presence of several Abbots, and several Clerks who were Witnesses of that Declaration: that he thought it proper to have him there before him, that the King himself might be both Witness and Judge, and that by this means his Accusers, the Witnesses which had given in Evidence against him, and the Judges might be discharg'd. He was forthwith introduc'd, and the Bishop of Orleans having ask'd him whether he were still of the same Mind, he reply'd, that he was. The Bishop ask'd him, whether he were willing to be deprived of the Sacerdotal Dignity, which he had hitherto abus'd: He reply'd, as you please for that. Count Brechard catching at that word, said, That he did not explain himself enough, and that he ought to acknowledge his Fault publickly, that so he might not afterwards say, that the Bishops had impos'd upon him therein, and that he had not made any Acknowledgment of that Nature. He reply'd That he had openly confess'd his Fault, and acknowledg'd that he had swerv'd from that Allegiance which he ow'd to his Prince; that he desired that they would credit what the Bishop of Orleans should say of him, and that he intreated him to make a fair a Report of his Case as he could. Thereupon this Bishop said, that Arnulphus of Rheims being naturally modest in speaking, and asham'd to acknowledge in publick, what he had confess'd to them in private, it was enough that he should acknowledge in general that he had not kept the Oath of Allegiance which he ow'd to his Prince. Count Brechard insisted that he ought to declare it publickly; but the Bishop of Orleans silenc'd him by saying, that the Bishops were the only Persons who could exact a Confession of that Nature; and that it was sufficient that the Archbishop of Rheims had made his Confession to them in private, and declar'd himself unworthy of the Priesthood because of his Sins, as he had done by a Writing which was read, wherein he declar'd, that he had confess'd himself to Seguin Archbishop of Sens, and to other Bishops, and had appointed them the Judges of his Offences, that he might receive from them such Penance as he deserv'd, and be remov'd from the Sacerdotal Dignity; and consented that another Archbishop should be put in his place, without pretending ever to return contrary to this Declaration. Afterwards Adalger the Priest confess'd his Fault. He was ask'd whether he had rather be degraded, or ly under a perpetual Excommunication. He preferr'd Degradation, which was perform'd with the usual Ceremony; for he was strip'd of all his Clerical Habits from his Priesthood to his Sub-deaconship; and each time he was order'd to forbear performing the Offices of the Order, and of the Habit he was strip'd of; after this he was enjoyn'd Penance, and receiv'd Absolution with leave to Communicate as a Laick. Lastly, They issued forth an Anathema against the other Rebels, who did not appear to make Satisfaction; and Arnulphus was sent Prisoner to Orleans.

Arnulphus

Arnulphus being thus depos'd and depriv'd of the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, the Biſhops elected in his place one Gerbert or Gilbert. He came of a conſiderable Family of Auvergne; and applying himſelf to ſtudy, he became a great Proficient in the Sciences and Philoſophy. He was brought up in the Monaſtery of Aurillac, where he liv'd a Monaſtick Life; and from thence he went into Spain, where he learn'd the Mathematicks. He was afterwards Schoolmaſter of the Church of Rheims, where Prince Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, Leoteric Archbiſhop of Sens, and Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres were his Scholars; and he had afterwards the Honour of being Tutor to Otho III. Immediately after his Election he made a Profeſſion of his Faith, and thereupon was Ordain'd, and Inſtituted and Inducted into the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims. In the Year 998. he held a Council, wherein he Excommunicated Count Hebert and other Uſurpers, who had unlawfully ſeiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church of Rheims. He wrote at the ſame time to Fulcus Biſhop of Amiens, who had appropriated to his own uſe ſeveral Revenues of his Church. Gerbert Archbiſhop of Rheims.

King Hugh and the Biſhops ſent the Decrees of this Council to Pope John XV. by the Archdeacon of Rheims, and pray'd him to approve of their Election of Gerbert. But this Pope being perſwaded that Arnulphus could not have been Depos'd without his Authority, very highly reſented what the Biſhops of France had done. King Hugh wrote him word that they had done nothing in this Affair that might be of any Prejudice to the Holy Sea; and that if he pleas'd to come to Grenoble, or into France, he would receive him with all the Tokens imaginable of Submiſſion and Reſpect; and that if he pleas'd, they ſhould try this Matter over again in his Preſence. The Pope ſent into France Abbot Leo, with orders to call a Council, and in the mean time forbad the Biſhops who had aſſiſted at the Council of Rheims to be there. Gerbert foreſeeng the Storm that was coming on him, wrote to an Abbot, and Archbiſhop Sigwin, and endeavour'd to fortifie the latter, againſt the fearful apprehenſions he had of the Thunderbolts of Rome, by telling him, that the Judgment of the Pope was not Superior to God's Decree: That if he (meaning the Pope) ſhould fall into Error, he might be reprov'd: that he could not exclude Biſhops from the Communion of JESUS CHRIST, for being unwilling to conſent to a thing which they thought contrary to the Goſpel: that they had no Power to debar him of the Communion, neither as a Guilty Perſon, ſince he was Innocent, nor as a Rebel, ſince he had not refus'd to go to any Council: that this Sentence, being unjuſt, ought not to be look'd upon as proceeding from the Holy See, according to S. Leo's Maxim. That the Rules whereby the Catholick Church ought to be regulated are the Goſpel, the Apoſtles, the Prophets, the Canons made by the Spirit of God, and conſecrated by that reſpect which all the World paid them, and the Decrees of the Holy Apoſtolical See which were conformable thereto. That thoſe who out of Contempt ſwerv'd from theſe Rules, ought to be judg'd and condemn'd by theſe Rules: but that whoever obſerves and follows them, ought to enjoy perpetual Peace, without ever being ſeparated from the Communion of the Church. In concluſion he declar'd to Sigwin, that he ought not to ſuſpend the performing of his Functions becauſe of the Prohibition of Rome, and that he ought to deſpiſe this irregular Judgment, for fear that whilſt he endeavour'd to appear Innocent, he ſhould declare himſelf Guilty.

In the mean time the Pope by his Legat very warmly preſs'd for the re-eſtabliſhment of Arnulphus, and after he had appointed Councils to be held for this purpoſe at Aix-la-Chapelle, and at Rome, to which the Biſhops of France would not go, he order'd one to be held at Mouzon the Second of June, in the Year 995. in which aſſiſted Luitolfe Archbiſhop of Treves, Aimon Biſhop of Verdun and Notger of Liege, with Sigefroy Biſhop of Munſter. Leo Legat of Pope John XV. preſented to them a Letter of that Pope, and after it had been read, Gerbert made an eloquent Speech in his own Defence, wherein after he had ſhown the Reaſonableneſs of his Conduct, he declar'd that he had not taken the Church of Rheims from its lawful Poſſeſſor; but that Arnulphus, who was unworthy thereof, having condemn'd himſelf, he had been elected and ordain'd Canonically in his place. He gave this Speech in writing to the Legat, who handed to him the Pope's Letter. After this the Council broke up, having firſt appointed to meet at Rheims the firſt of July, and deputed John a Monk of the Abbot Leo the Pope's Legat, to go to King Hugh. But as Gerbert was going away, Leo order'd two Biſhops to remonſtrate to him, that he ought to abſtain from celebrating Divine Service, till the Convention of the Synod. After he had declar'd that their Denunciation ſignified nothing, he went himſelf to wait upon Leo, and told him that it was not in the Power of any Biſhop, nor of any Patriarch, nor of the Pope himſelf to exclude any of the Faithful from the Communion of the Church, till ſuch time as he had been either convicted of any Crime, or had acknowledg'd himſelf to be Criminal, or had refus'd to appear before a Synod, being cited thereto according to the Canon: That neither of theſe being his Caſe, he could not tell how to condemn himſelf. However Luitolf Archbiſhop of Treves, having calmly, and like a Brother, admoniſh'd him not to give any occaſion of Scandal, he prevail'd upon him ſo far, that for peace and quietneſs ſake, he would only abſtain from celebrating Maſs till the firſt of July next, which was the time appointed for the Synod at Rheims. The Queen Adelaid wrote to Gerbert, ordering him to appear at that Synod; threatning him that if he did not, ſuch Meaſures ſhould be taken as ſhould be thought moſt proper. Gerbert underſtanding that they would Abſolve Arnulphus, and re-eſtabliſh him, and all to gratifie Leo, who had promis'd that the Pope ſhould confirm the late Marriage of King Robert; and being inform'd that his Clergy and Laity had declar'd againſt him, return'd this Anſwer to that Princeſs, That he would not be there; and declar'd that he would patiently attend the Determination of the Synod: That having receiv'd the Government of the Church of Rheims at the hands of the Biſhops, he was not willing to The Council of Mouzon.

The Council of Mouzon.

quit it till the Biſhops had ſo order'd it: But that he was not in any manner capable of oppoſing the Sentence which ſhould be paſs'd upon him, or of retaining his Dioceſs by force? That in attending the Judgment of the Synod, he ſuffer'd with grief an Exile, which many believe to be very happy for him.

The Synod of Rheims againſt Gerbert.

The Synod appointed at Rheims was held there accordingly; of which we have not any Acts or Decrees. All that we can learn of it is, that they therein reſolv'd to re-eſtabliſh Arnulphus, and to turn out Gerbert. The latter, according to the Reſolution he had taken, obey'd, and retir'd to Otho III. who ſoon after gave him the Archbiſhoprick of Ravenna, from whence he aſcended the Papal Chair in the Year 999. As to Arnulphus (whatever ſome Authors may ſay) he was not ſet at liberty, and re-eſtabliſh'd till three years after, at the inſtance of Pope Gregory V. John the Fifteenth's Succeſſor. His re-eſtabliſhment was likewiſe afterwards confirm'd by Gerbert himſelf when he was advanc'd to the Popedom. For that Pope very generouſly forgetting all that was paſt, ſent him word, That as it was the Duty of the Holy Apoſtolical See to raiſe up thoſe who were falo, and to reſtore to them the Dignity of which they had been depriv'd; ſo he thought it convenient to ſuccour him, even him who had been turn'd out of the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims for ſome default: Becauſe ſince his Depoſition had not been ratified by the Pope, it was believ'd that he might be re-eſtabliſh'd by the Clemency of the Holy See, St. Peter having ſuch a Soveraign Authority as no other could ſtand in competition with. That therefore by reſtoring to him the Paſtoral Rod and Ring, he grants him a power of performing all his Archi-Epiſcopal Functions; to retain the Dignity thereof; to enjoy all the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rheims; and to wear the Pall. That he prohibits all manner of Perſons from upbraiding him with his Depoſition; being willing that the Apoſtolical Authority ſhould protect him, tho' his Conſcience condemn him: That laſtly, he confirms and grants to him de novo, the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims with all that belong'd to it. This is the Language of Gerbert when advanc'd to the Papal Chair; which ſeems to be in a different ſtrain from what he formerly us'd.

The re-eſtabliſhment of Arnulphus in the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims.

The Writings of Gerbert.

Gerbert was without queſtion the moſt Learned Man of his Time, eſpecially in Prophane Learning: for he had to his Study of the Languages and Philoſophy joyn'd that of the Mathematicks, wherein he was a great Proficient. He informs us himſelf that he had compos'd ſeveral Tracts of Rhetorick, Arithmetick, and Geometry. He ſpeaks of a Sphere which he had made, and he compos'd a ſmall Treatiſe of the manner of its Conſtruction. He invented Clocks, and made one at Magdeburgh, which he regulated according to the Motion of the Polar Star, the which he view'd through a Teleſcope. They likewiſe attribute to him a Treatiſe concerning the Aſtrolabe, written in Dialogue-wiſe, between him and Leo the Pope's Legat. This Art made him paſs for a Magician, and gave riſe to the Fable of his being promoted to the Papal Chair by a Contract which he made with the Devil. He had a great Hand in all the Affairs of the State, and eſpecially in thoſe which related to the Church of Rheims; and was in great repute with the Emperors and the Kings of France. He behav'd himſelf ſo well in thoſe difficult times, that he fell into diſgrace with none. The Archbiſhop Adalberon, as well as the Princes and Princeſſes of his time, and ſeveral others made uſe of his Pen to write their Letters. He wrote likewiſe ſeveral Letters in his own name to ſeveral Perſons about the Affairs of Church and State, or about particular Affairs, or elſe about ſome Points of Learning. There is a Collection made of an Hundred and ſixty of them, which are publiſh'd from the Manuſcript in the Library of Papyrus Maſon, and printed by the Care of his Brother in the Year 1611. at Paris, with the Letters of John of Salisbury, and Stephen of Tournay. They are penn'd in a very pure Stile, and ſuch as is truly Epiſtolar, with a great deal of Beauty and Spirit, but they do not contain much of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. He is likewiſe the Author of the Hiſtory of the Acts made by the Council of Rheims againſt Arnulphus, writ with a great deal of Elegance and Energy; which ſhews that he was no leſs skill'd in Eccleſiaſtical, than he was in Prophane Learning. His Speech to the Council of Mouzon, is a farther proof of both; as well as the Speech which he made, when Pope, for the inſtructing of Biſhops, publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the Second Tome of his Analects. In this laſt Piece he Remonſtrates to the Biſhops that the higher their Station and Dignity is, the greater Obligations they lye under of anſwering the height of their Poſt by their Sanctity and their Merits; and that their Fall is by ſo much the more deplorable, by how much the more the height is from which they fall: That God requires more of them than of the reſt of the Clergy; and that their Faults ſhall meet with a ſeverer Puniſhment than thoſe of others. He explains to them the Qualifications which St. Paul requires of Biſhops in his firſt Epiſtle to Timothy. Afterwards he declares againſt Simony, which was ſo common in his time, that Biſhops gave Money to Archbiſhops for their Ordination; Prieſts, Deacons, and other Clergy-men to Biſhops. He exclaims very highly againſt this abuſe, and exhorts the Biſhops to whom he directs his Diſcourſe, not to drive ſuch a diſhonourable Trade, but to lead an unblameable Life.

FLODOARD Prebendary of Rheims.

Flodoard or Frodoard is not one of the least Ornaments of the Church of Rheims. He was born at *Esperna*y in the year 894. He was Prebendary of the Church of Rheims, and the Scholar of Remy of Auxerre, whom Fulcus had invited to Rheims, to be President of the School of his Canons. In the year 936. he took a Journey to Rome, and in the year 940. he took up a Resolution of going to S. Martin of Tours, because he could not approve of the Promotion of Hugh to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. But Count Hebert caus'd him to be apprehended, and took from him the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rheims, which he was in possession of, and the Church of Cormicy which he govern'd. He was for five Months confin'd to that City, till he was brought to Soissons, where he submitted to the Judgment of the Bishops, who confirm'd the Promotion of Hugh. Then he was restor'd to favour; the Revenues which he possess'd were restor'd to him, and the Church of Coroy given him, instead of Cormicy. He assisted at the Council of Verdun, wherein Artaldus was elected Archbishop of Rheims; and liv'd in the World to Odalric's time, into whose hands he resign'd his Benefice, and withdrew into the Solitude of a Monastery, where he dyed in the year 966.

This Author has written an History of the Church of Rheims, divided into four Books. He therein gives an Account of the Succession and Lives of the Archbishops, of what they had done or written, and what happened worth the taking notice of under each of them in that Church. The first Book begins with the Apostles, and ends at the death of S. Remy. The Account of the first Bishops is fabulous, and what he says of the following is very uncertain. The Life of S. Remy, the Conversion and Baptism of Clovis take up the greatest and best part of that Book. The second Book contains the Succession and History of the Archbishops of Rheims from S. Remy down to Hincmarus. The third is wholly taken up with the Life of Hincmarus, and with the Abstract of his Writings. The fourth contains the History of Fulcus, and of those who succeeded him down to Odalric. This History was publish'd by Father Sirmond, and printed at Paris in the year 1611. and afterwards by Colvenerius who got it to be printed at Douay in the year 1617.

Beside this Piece, Flodoard did likewise compose a Chronicon (for Monsieur Pithou had no grounds to question whether it were his or no.) It began at the year 877. but the first years are lost, and we have only by us the year 919. and those which follow to the 966. where it ends. Bonderius observes that at Treves there is a Manuscript, which contains several pieces of Poetry of Flodoard; namely, five Books of the Triumphs of the Italian Martyrs and Confessors; three Books of the Triumphs of JESUS CHRIST, and of the Saints of Palestine; and two Books of the Triumphs of JESUS CHRIST at Antioch. But these Pieces have not as yet been publish'd, and no body (as we hear of) has ever seen them since. The Chronicon was publish'd by Monsieur Pithou, and Monsieur Duchesne, in their Collections of the Writers of the History of France.

An ADVERTISEMENT to the following Addition.

At soon as this Volume was printed off, I understood by Father Thierry Ruinard, a Learned Religious Benedictine of the Congregation of S. Maur, that the Treatise of Flodoard concerning the Triumph of the Martyrs, which Bonderius made mention of, was in an ancient Manuscript in the Convent of the unshod Carmelites of that City; and this Father has been pleas'd to communicate the Abstract of that Manuscript to me, which I thought fit to publish.

The ADDITION.

I Have examin'd that Manuscript, the beginning of which is torn; the Work begins at the end of the first Chapter of the third Book. He therein treats of the Martyrs who suffer'd under Valerian's Persecution.

The fourth Book begins with Pope S. Felix, and treats of the Persecutions of Aurelian, Claudius, Numerian, and Diocletian. He therein speaks of the Popes according to the times wherein they liv'd.

The Fifth and sixth Books are not there, tho' there seems to be nothing left out.

The seventh treats only of the Persecution under Diocletian.

The eighth has this Title De Persecutione Maximiniani, i.e. Concerning the Persecution under Maximian.

Flodoard Prebendary of Rheims.

minian. It begins with the History of S. Marcel, and of all the Martyrs which are in his false Decretals: Afterwards he speaks of the Martyr'd Saints which are worship'd in Italy. The fifteenth Chapter is concerning S. Afra of Augsburgh. The sixteenth is concerning S. Eusebius the Pope.

The ninth Book makes mention of S. Valentine a Martyr at Rome, afterwards of the Martyrs thereabouts; and of the Decretals of S. Sylvester, Gallicanus, S. John, and S. Paul, and of several other Martyrs, who were at Rome in the time of Julian the APOSTATE.

The tenth Book begins at S. Julius the Pope, and ends with Vitalian and Adeodate. He therein mentions several other Saints; as for instance, in the second Chapter he speaks of Eusebius, whom he calls Præsul, Prælate, who is said to have suffered at Rome under Constance, with Orosius and others: he speaks of S. Eusebius of Verceil, of Victorine the Rhetorician, and of S. Dennis of Milan; he makes mention of the Translation of the latter, made by S. Basil, who sent his Body to S. Ambrose. (I have the Letter of S. Basil by me, directed to S. Ambrose, taken out of an ancient Manuscript, which makes mention of this Translation.) In the third Chapter, where he treats of S. Damasus the Pope, he likewise speaks of S. Jerom. In the eighth Chapter he treats of the Schism of Laurence, of Pascasius the Deacon------ In the nineteenth of Horsmisdas the Pope, of the Peace in the East, of S. Germain of Capua, of the Restitution of Africa, of S. Remy, of the Conversion of Clovis, of the Crown which he sent to Rome, of the Consular Habits which he receiv'd from the Emperor. In the tenth Chapter he speaks of S. John the Pope, of Symmachus, and of Boetius, whom Theodoric caus'd to be put to death. In the twelfth Chapter of Cassiodorus, of what Belisarius did against the Goths in Italy and Africa. Lastly he treats at large of S. Gregory, and of what happened in his Monastery.

The eleventh Book comprehends the History of the Popes from Agatho down to Christophilus. In the fifth Chapter he speaks at large of Boniface of Germany, whom he stiles Doctor and Martyr. In the sixth Chapter of Charlemagne Prince of France, who turn'd a Religious. In the seventh Chapter of Pope Stephen II. of his Progress into France, of the miraculous Cure he wrought in the Abby of S. Dennis, &c.

The twelfth Book contains the History from Leo IV. to Leo VII. In the first Chapter he speaks of the Palls of Hincmarus, of the Settling the Octave of the Feast of the Assumption of our Lady. In the second Chapter, of John Bishop of Ravenna. In the third Chapter of Hincmarus and of Charles the Bald. In the fourth Chapter of Fulcus Archbishop of Rheims, and of the several Commissions which the Popes granted him. In the fifth Chapter of the Translation of S. Calixtus the Pope to Rheims, which he calls Urbem Nostram, Our City. He treats at large of the Actions of Formosus, whom (he says) Charles King of France desir'd to send him Panem Benedictum, i. e. some Consecrated Bread.

The thirteenth Book is about the Saints which S. Gregory treats of in his Dialogues, and of other Saints of Italy.

The fourteenth Book is about the Guardian Saints, Martyrs, and others of the Cities of Italy. He ends all by S. Colomban and his Disciples.

At the end is an Epitaph of Flodoard himself.

This Manuscript is almost as ancient as Flodoard.

Flodoard's stile is very plain, without any Ornament and without the least Affectation. He makes a great many Extracts, and relates a vast number of Miracles.

AURELIAN Clerk of the Church of Rheims.

Aurelian Clerk of the Church of Rheims.

TRithemius makes mention of another Clerk of the Church of Rheims call'd Aurelian, who, he says, was very well skill'd in the Knowledge of the Scriptures, and in good Literature; but above all a good Musician. He makes him the Author of a Tract concerning the Rules of Singing and of Notes, which he says was a very remarkable Volume, intituled, The Compleat Musick Master. He adds, that he likewise compos'd several other Pieces, and that he flourish'd in the Reign of Arnulphus about the year 900. We have nothing of this Author left us.

BERNERUS Monk of S. Remy of Rheims.

Bernerus Monk of S. Remy of Rheims.

WE ought likewise to reckon among those who were an Ornament to the Church of Rheims Bernerus Monk of S. Remy of Rheims, who was sent in the year 948. with several Monks to establish a Monastical Discipline in the Monastery of Humbliers in Vermandois. He wrote the Life of S. Hunegonda Abbess of Humblieres, published by Father Mabillon in the second Benedictine Century;

tuity; and the Account of the Translation of her Body, which is to be met with in the fifth Century. Bernerus
He sent several Monks to S. Quentin to be put in the room of those Clerks of the Church of that Monk of place, who did not lead regular Lives. He relates in the Account of the Translation of the Relicks S. Remy of S. Hunegunda, several Miracles which were wrought till the year 965. which shews that he wrote of Rheims. and liv'd beyond that year. But thus much may suffice to speak concerning the Church of Rheims.
We proceed to the other Churches of France.

GAUTIER Archbishop of Sens.

THE beginning of this Century Gautier was Archbishop of Sens, who was ordain'd in the year 887. and liv'd to the year 923. He made Constitutions, which remain still among us. They are comprehended in fourteen Articles. Gautier Archbishop of Sens.

The first Prohibits such Abbots and Conventual Priors, who would not appear at the Synod, and were not excus'd; from being admitted into the Church for eight days.

The second prohibits the Religious from receiving any Depositum into their Convents without the permission of the Bishop.

The third orders that they should all eat together in the same Refectory, and all lye together in the same Dormitory.

The fourth imports, that all the separate Apartments of Nunneries shall be pull'd down, except such as were requisite to entertain the Bishop; or proper for the sick; or for any other Cause which the Bishop shall adjudge to be just and necessary.

The fifth, that none of the Religious shall be permitted to go abroad, or to lye out of the Monastery, unless it be but seldom, and upon some lawful occasions.

The sixth, that all the suspicious and unnecessary Doors of these Monasteries shall be shut up.

The seventh prohibits the Ecclesiastical Judges from issuing forth general Excommunications, and from Excommunicating all those who shall Communicate with an Excommunicate Person, unless it be upon some great important occasion, and in such Cases as are enormous.

The eighth injoyns the Canons or Prebendaries to regulate their Offices, and to behave themselves in them with care and exactness.

The ninth enjoyns them to observe the Rules prescrib'd by the General Council.

The tenth and eleventh order, that the Communities of the Monks or Regular Canons be re-establish'd in those Priories where they were us'd to be, if they have but wherewithal to subsist.

The twelfth, that the Abbots and Conventual Priors shall have in their respective Abbeys and Priories, a sufficient number of Religious, from whom they shall not exact any Pension.

The thirteenth, that the Clerks who lead loose lives shall be shaven by the order of the Bishops, Archdeacons, or other Officers, so that no Mark or Token of their Clerical Tonsure shall be left them.

The fourteenth imports, that when any Country shall be interdicted for the Offence of the Lord or his Bailiffs, that Interdiction shall not be taken off, till such time as satisfaction be made for the Damages which the Parochial Churches shall suffer by reason thereof.

'Tis question'd whether these Constitutions belong'd to this Gautier, or to some other of a more modern date. And indeed they relate more to the Discipline of the succeeding Centuries, than to the Discipline of the Tenth.

Of the other Bishops of FRANCE.

THE other Bishops of France shew'd themselves no less zealous for the keeping up of Discipline and maintaining their Rights, than those we have already mention'd. We have one famous instance of it related by Glaber Monk of Cluny, who liv'd in the following Century. Fulcus Count of Anjou, upon his return from a Journey he made to Jerusalem, being willing to discharge himself of a Vow he had made, caus'd a Monastery to be built in the Territory of Tours, over against the Castle of Loches, which he dedicated according to the Advice of his Wife to the memory of the Cherubims and Seraphims; and not to the memory of any Martyr. Hugh Archbishop of Tours was intreated to perform the Dedication of that Monastery; but he refus'd it till such time as Fulcus should restore to his Church the Revenues which he had contrary to all justice taken from it. Fulcus stomach'd this refusal, went to Rome, and after he had made several Presents to Pope John, he return'd with Cardinal Peter, who afterwards dedicated the Monastery, having a Commission granted by the Pope for The Resolutions of the Bishops of France concerning the Dedication of a Church.

for that purpose. As soon as the Bishops of France understood this, They knew (says Glaber) that it was the effect of blind Zealots, which having caus'd Fulcoius to rob the Church, had likewise procur'd him the Pope to accept of those Presents which Fulcoius had unjustly forc'd upon him. And that by this means he had given rise to a Schism in the Church of Rome. They all abominated this proceeding, looking upon it as an unworthy Action, that he who govern'd the Holy Apostolical See should violate the first Order established by the Apostles and by the Canons, the Custom of the Church, founded on a great many Authorities of Antiquity, which forbids Bishops to exercise any Jurisdiction in another's Diocese, unless the Bishop of that Diocese entreat him, or permit him to do it. For tho' the Pope of Rome be most reverd upon the account of the Dignity of the Holy Apostolick See, yet he is not permitted in any case whatsoever to violate the Rules prescribd by the Canons. And as each Bishop of the Catholick Church is the Husband of his own Church, and the Representative of our Lord: So it is not allowable to any man to undertake any thing in another's Diocese. Glaber adds, that Fulcoius notwithstanding these Remonstrances, having caus'd this Church to be dedicated, had no Bishops present but those of his own Dominions, who assisted at it much against their wills; and that it was no sooner finish'd, but the Fabrick was blown down by a storm; which is attributed to the rashness of this proceeding.

The Resolution of the Bishops of France concerning the Dedication of a Church.

The Council of Charroux in the year 989.

In the year 989. a Council was held in the Abbey of S. Savior of Charroux, in the Diocese of Poictiers, at which assisted the Archbishop of Bordeaux, and the Bishops of Poictiers, Limoges, Perigueux, Saintes, and Angoulême. There was nothing else done there but making out Anathema's against those who should rob the Churches of their Revenues, defraud the Poor of their Dues, or should by force apprehend or abuse a Clerk, not bearing Arms, before he were try'd by his Bishop.

The Council of Poitiers in the year 999.

Ten years after there was another Council held in the City of Poictiers, which was called by William Count of Poictiers, and consisted of the Archbishop of Bordeaux, and the Bishops of Poictiers, Limoges, Perigueux, Angoulême, and Saintes. They therein confirm'd the Order made in the Council of Charroux against the Usurpators of the Revenue of Churches and of private Persons. And for the putting it in execution, it was order'd that all the Grandees and Judges should cause full Restitution to be made to every one, who had any thing taken from them; and that those who would not submit to their Determinations, should be constrain'd to do it by force. They therein likewise forbad Bishops the exacting any thing for the Administration of Penitance and Confirmation; and renew'd the Prohibition made so often against Ecclesiasticks keeping Company with Women.

We shall reckon among the Councils of France the Synod held at Rheims under Gerbert; because we look upon that Archbishop as a Frenchman; and because it was he alone who made the following Institutions in an Assembly of his Clergy, held the first of May in the year 997.

The Council of Ravenna in the year 997.

The first is a Prohibition of a great Abuse which prevail'd in the Church of Ravenna, according to which they sold to Bishops, at the time of their Consecration, the Body of JESUS CHRIST, and the Holy Chalice to the Arch-Priests of the Diocese. The Eucharist which he speaks of in this place, was a Consecrated Loaf, which was given whole to the Bishop on the Day of his Consecration, and which he kept by him to Communicate thereof for forty days together, as is observ'd in the Roman Decretal.

The second imports, that all the Arch-Priests shall pay to the Sub-Deacons of Ravenna, as an acknowledgment of that Church, an yearly Pension of Two pence.

The third renews the Ancient Canons concerning the necessary qualifications of those who are to be admitted into Holy Orders, and prohibits Bishops from Consecrating Churches out of their own Diocese, without leave from the Bishop of the place; and from entertaining or keeping those who belong to another's Diocese, till they have Letters Dimissory from their Bishop. He likewise forbids the receiving any thing for the Burial of the Dead, unless their Friends or Relations should give any thing voluntarily.

Lastly we shall refer to this place that which happen'd in France and at Rome about the Marriage and Divorce of King Robert and Queen Bertha.

The marriage of King Robert with Bertha.

About the end of this Century, that Prince being a Widdower by the Death of Queen Luitgarde his first Wife, had marry'd Bertha, Sister to Radulphus the Simple, King of Burgundy, who was the Widow of Eudes the first, Count of Chartres. But forasmuch as she was his Kinswoman, and he had formerly stood Godfather to one of her Children, tho' he had taken the Advice of several Bishops of his Kingdom about it, yet the Pope oppos'd this Marriage as being Null, and contracted between Persons, who according to Law could not marry together. Robert did what he could to confirm this Marriage, and spoke about it to Leo Pope Gregory the Fifth's Legat in France, who made him believe that he would obtain of the Pope what he desir'd, provided he would cause Arnulphus to be restablish'd in the Archbishoprick of Rheims. In the mean time notwithstanding the Judgment which was pass'd in favour of that Archbishop, Pope Gregory V. held a Council at Rome in the year 998. in the presence of the Emperor Otho III. at which assisted Gerbert, at that time Archbishop of Rheims, and seven and twenty Bishops of Italy. In this Council he declar'd that King Robert ought to part from his Kinswoman Bertha, whom he had marry'd contrary to the Laws, and do Penance for seven years together, according to the Degrees set down by the Canons; and if he would not, he should be Anathematiz'd: That Bertha should submit to the same Penalty; and be Excommunicated Archembald Archbishop of Tours, who had celebrated that Marriage, and the Bishops of France, who had either Assisted or Consented thereto, till such time as they should come and give the Holy See satisfaction. This Sentence of the Pope made such an Impression on the minds of Men (if we will believe lieve Peter Damien in the caſe) that all the King's Domeſticks, except two or three, abandon'd him, and would no longer have any Converſation with him; and even caus'd the Veſſels out of which he had either eat or drunk to be burnt. Let the Caſe be how it will, King Robert at laſt giving ear to the Admonitions of Abbo the Abbot, parted with Bertha within two or three years after; and Leo IX. (according as Ives of Chartres relates it) ſays that they came to Rome with the Biſhops, to obtain their Abſolution, and to get their Pennance mitigated. The Author of the Life of Abbo does not ſay that Robert went to Rome; but that he confeſſed his Fault both publickly and privately: that he asked pardon, and did Pennance for it. That which is moſt evident is, that the Marriage was of no longer force. The Council of Rome in the year 998. under Gregory V.

In the ſame Council, the Pope paſſed ſeveral other Sentences. The firſt in favour of the Church of Mersburgh, which had been rais'd to a Biſhoprick by the holy See, and by the Councils held under Otho, and afterwards deſtroy'd out of Council by Otho II. He reſtores to it its Dignity of being an Epiſcopal See.

The ſecond relates to the Perſon of the Biſhop of Mersburgh, call'd Giſlair, who had quitted that Church to be Archbiſhop of Magdeburgh. It was order'd, that if he had been requir'd by the Clergy and Laity of Magdeburgh to take upon him that Archbiſhoprick, he ſhould ſtill hold it: That if that had not been done, and he could prove that neither Ambition nor Avarice moved him to take upon him that Archbiſhoprick, he ſhould return to his firſt Church without being depos'd. But if he could not deny but that he was induced to it by ſome one or other of theſe Motives, he ſhould be depriv'd of both Churches. This Giſlair did not ſubmit to the Sentence of Gregory, but held both theſe Churches. Whereupon he was accus'd in a Council at Rome, held under Syloeſter II. Succeſſor to Gregory V. who ſuſpended him for ſome time, and ordered his Nuncio's in Germany to cite him. But that Biſhop prevail'd upon them by Bribery to put it off, and afterwards pleaded for his Excuſe his being ſick of the Palſy. At laſt he appear'd before a Council held at Aix-la-Chapelle, where he demanded an Appeal to a General Council. Laſtly, The Emperor Henry having ſent for him to Dronburgh, and remonſtrated to him that he ought to return to his Church of Mersburgh, he deſired a few days to conſider on it, and dy'd in the Interim.

The third relates to the Church of Puy in Velay. Guy Biſhop of that City, had elected for his Succeſſor his Nephew Stephen, without the Conſent of Clergy and Laity: however, after the Death of Guy, the Archbiſhop of Bourges and the Biſhop of Nevers had ordain'd Stephen. The Council declares this Ordination to be null and void; depoſes Stephen; excommunicates the Prelates who had ordain'd him, till ſuch time as they ſhould come and give the Holy See ſatisfaction; grants leave to the Clergy and Laity of Velay to elect a Biſhop; deſires the Pope might conſecrate him whom they ſhould elect; and exhorts King Robert not to ſupport Steven, but to ſtand by him who ſhould be elected by the Clergy and Laity. This Sentence was put in Execution; Theodard was elected by the Clergy and Laity, and ordain'd by Silveſter II. Succeſſor to Gregory V. as we learn by the Fragment of a Letter of that Pope, related by Father Dachery in the Adverteſement to the Reader before the Ninth Tome of his Spicilegium, wherein he has given us the Acts of that Council more compleat than they are in the Edition of the Councils by Father Labbé. He takes notice in the ſame place that Gregory V. held a Council at Rome, wherein Gualdalds, who had ſeiz'd upon the Epiſcopal ſee of the Church of Oſona or Vich, in the Province of Catalonia, had been depos'd, as appears by a Letter of Gregory V. which Father Dachery tells us is in the hands of Monſieur Baluzius. 'Tis very probable that this was done in the ſame Council, where Otho III. publiſh'd an Edict, directed to the Archbiſhops, Abbots, Marquiſſes, Counts; and to all the Judges of Italy; whereby he declares that all the Deeds of Alienation of the Church Revenues, even tho' leas'd out for 99 years, ſhall not be of force any longer than the life time of him who ſhall make them; and that there ſhall be no ſuch Deeds made but for the Advantage of thoſe Churches who are to be maintain'd out of them. This Edict is dated October 17. in the year 998. and 'tis obſerv'd that it was publiſh'd by Gerbert in the Synod which turn'd Arnulphus out of the Archbiſhoprick of Milan.

In this Century there was no leſs care taken of ſettling the Monaſtical Diſcipline of France, than of the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; and as the Biſhops were diligent in reforming the Clergy and Laity; ſo there were ſome holy Abbots, who ſet themſelves, and that with a great deal more ſucceſs, upon reforming the Monaſtical Order, which was the beginning of that Century in a very lamentable Condition. Moſt of the Monaſteries having been ruin'd by the Normans, were abandon'd, their Revenues were in poſſeſſion of Laicks, and the Abbots were Seculars. If there were any Monks ſtill left in the Monaſteries, they were ſuch as obſerv'd no order; and were ſo far from living according to their Rule, that they did not ſo much as know it.

In this Condition was the Monaſterial Order, when God rais'd up Berno, Monk of Autun, to be the Reſtorer of it. He began his Reformation in the Monaſteries of Joigny and Baume, and in ſeveral others of which he was Abbot. For a Cuſtom was then in Uſe, that one and the ſame Abbot held ſeveral Abbeys, or at leaſt ſeveral Monaſteries which depended upon him. He had for his Companions and Diſciples Odo and Adegrin. In the year 910. William Count of Auvergne and Duke of Aquitain; having founded the Abbey of Cluny, committed it to the Government of Berno, who put twelve Monks into it, and took likewiſe care of the Monaſteries of Hols, Maſſay, and Sourvigny, who were all under his Conduct, and embrac'd the ſame way of Living. Berno dying in the year 927. had for his Succeſſor Odo, the Son of Abbo, born at Tours in the year 879. He had been educated by Fulcus Count of Anjou, and made Canon of S. Martin of Tours at nineteen years of Age. The founding of the Abbey of Cluny.

The founding of the Abbey of Cluny.

Some time after, being come to Paris, he became a Diſciple of Remy of Auxerre; and afterwards reſolved to dedicate himſelf to God, he embrac'd the Monaſtical Life in the year 909. in the Monaſtery of Baume, under the Conduct of Berno. Odo extended the Reformation of Cluny to a great many other Monaſteries, and carried it as far as Rome it ſelf, to which he made three Journeys. The firſt in the year 936. The ſecond in the year 938. and the laſt in the year 942. being call'd thither by the Popes to be the Mediator of the Peace between the Princes of Italy. He dy'd at Tours in the year 942. at his return from his laſt Journey to Rome.

He had for his Succeſſor Ademar, or Aymar; next him was S. Macol, who was employ'd by Hugh Capet in the Reformation of almoſt all the Monaſteries of France. He dy'd in the year 994. leaving for his Succeſſor Odilo, who had been elected three years before his death. This laſt was Abbot of Cluny for the ſpace of Fifty ſix years.

ODO Abbot of Cluny.

Odo Abbot of Cluny.

Berno apply'd himſelf more to the ſettling of his Order, than to ſtudy: but Odo apply'd himſelf to both, and compos'd ſeveral Pieces at different times, and in all the Conditions of his Life. When he was Canon, he made an Abridgment of the Morals of S. Gregory, and of the Hymns and Anthems in honour of S. Martin. When he was only Monk, he made three Books concerning Prieſthood, upon the Prophecy of Jeremy, dedicated to Turpio Biſhop of Limoges; They are intituled Collationes ſive Colloquia; and others call them by the Title of Occupationes. When he was Abbot, he wrote the Life of S. Geraud or Gerard, Count of Aurillac, in four Books, dedicated to Aimo Abbot of Tulle; and the Life of S. Martial of Limoges; an Account of the Tranſlation of the Body of S. Martin; a Piece wherein S. Martin is equalliz'd to the Apoſtles; ſeveral Sermons and a Panegerick of S. Benedict. Theſe Tracts are printed in the Library of Cluny, with Hymns upon the Holy Sacrament and S. Magdalene. An ancient Author of his Life takes notice, that being at Rome, he corrected the Life of S. Martin; and ſpeaks of a Book about the Coming of S. Benedict into a Village near Orleans. They likewiſe attribute to Odo the Life of S. Gregory of Tours, related by Surius. Father Mabillon takes notice that in the Library of the Reform'd Carmelites of Paris, there is a Manuſcript which formerly belong'd to the Monaſtery of S. Julian of Tours, wherein there is a large Treatiſe in Verſe, intituled, Occupationes Odonis Abbatis. He adds that this Piece is divided into four Books; the firſt concerning the Creation of the World; the ſecond concerning the Formation of Mankind; the third concerning his Fall; and the fourth concerning the Corruption of Nature. 'Tis by a miſtake that they attribute to this Odo the Life of S. Maurus, which belongs to Odo Abbot of S. Maurus of Foſſez. They likewiſe falſly attribute to him ſeveral Chronicons which Thomas of Lucca compos'd under the Name of Odo, as it has been obſerv'd by the Author of the Hiſtory of the Counts of Angers, related in the Tenth Tome of the Spicilegium. Sigibert gives Odo the Title of Muſician, and ſays that he was a very proper Perſon to Compoſe and Pronounce Sermons, and to make Hymns upon the Saints.

JOHN Monk of Cluny.

John Monk of Cluny.

THE Life of Odo was written by one of his Diſciples, call'd John, whom he had met in Italy in his Journey in the year 938. and brought along with him to Pavia, where he 'cans'd him to take upon him the Monaſtick Life. It is divided into three Books, and printed in the Library of Cluny, and in the fifth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon, who has likewiſe given us another Life of Odo, written by Nalgodus, who liv'd about Two hundred years after the death of that Abbot.

ODILO Abbot of Cluny.

Odilo Abbot of Cluny.

Odilo has left us but a few Pieces: which are, the Life of S. Maiol his Predeceſſor; four Hymns in his Praiſe; ſeveral Letters to S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres; the Life of S. Adelaide the Empreſs, Otho the firſt's Wife; Fourteen Sermons upon the Feſtivals of Jeſus Chriſt and the Bleſſed Virgin; a Decree concerning the Prayers for the Dead; and three Letters related by Father Luke Dachery in the ſecond Tome of the Spicilegium, with a Letter of Pope John XIX. who reprov'd him for refuſing the Archbiſhoprick of Lions. He is lookt upon as the firſt Founder of the Feaſts of All-Saints, and of that of the Commemoration of the Dead. He liv'd to the year 1048.

Abbo Abbot of Fleury.

ABBO Abbot of Fleury.

ABBO or Albo, Monk of Fleury or S. Benedict upon the Loire, was born at Orleans, and instructed and Educated in the Schools belonging to the Monastery of Fleury, where he studied under Wolfaldus the Abbot; and for several years together had the Government of the Schools of that Monastery. He went afterwards to Paris and Rheims, to study Philosophy and Astronomy; but making no great Progress in them, he return'd to Orleans, where he learnt Musick. From thence he was invited over to England, where he taught publickly for the space of Two years, after which he return'd to the Monastery of Fleury, of which he was made Abbot. This did not hinder him from prosecuting his Studies. He had some Differences to adjust with Arnulphus Bishop of Orleans, which occasion'd him to write an Apology directed to the Kings Hugh and Robert, wherein he exhorts them to turn out Hereticks; among whom he reckons such as believ'd that the Revenues of the Church belong'd to them, and who had made an unlawful Seisure upon them. He would have the same thing done to those Bishops who assert that the Churches and Altars belong to them. He observes that Jesus Christ does not say that the Church is the Church of S. Peter; but that his Church is built upon S. Peter. From whence he concludes that his Successors cannot say that the Churches which they govern, are theirs, much less can they make a gain of them, as he says they then did every day.

[How much this Abbot is mistaken in the latter part of his Remark (which says, That our Saviour says his Church was built upon S. Peter) will appear to any who consult our Lord's Words in the Original, Matth. 16. 18. Καγὼ δέ σοι λέγω, ὅτι σὺ εἶ Πέτρος, καὶ ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ Πέτρᾳ οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν: which words in our Version run thus, And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. Where we may observe that he does not say, καὶ ἐπὶ σοι, or ἐπὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ, but ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ Πέτρᾳ, &c. from whence it must be concluded that he does not mean the Person, but the Faith of S. Peter, the Rock upon which he would build his Church. This Remark seems pertinent, since the Romanists from this Text, and that of S. John, chap. 21. v. 15, 16, &c. pretend to prove the Infallibility and Universality of the Pope.]

He likewise in his Apology gives an account of what passed in the Council of S. Denys about the year 995. where he himself was present, wherein having maintain'd against the Bishops, the Right which the Monks and Laicks had of possessing several Tithes, the People rose up in Arms against the Bishops, who were forc'd to fly for it; and forasmuch as Sigwin Archbishop of Sens, who was at the Head of them had been wounded in the Flight, Abbo was accus'd of being the Author of this Sedition. He made his Defence in this Epistle. He wrote a Letter to Bernard Abbot of Beaulieu in the Dioceis of Limoges, to dissuade him from giving a Sum of Money which the Count of Thoulouse and the Archbishop of Bourges would exact from him, for the making him Bishop of Cahors. That Abbot having resolv'd upon taking a Journey to Jerusalem, was dissuaded from it by Abbo, who advis'd him rather to go to Rome, whither he retir'd upon Mount Gargan; and being afterwards intreated to return into the World, to relieve his Relations, he again consulted Abbo about what he ought to do in the Case, who in a very elegant Letter return'd him this Answer, That he ought not to think of quitting his Solitude to involve himself in the Affairs of this World. As to the Question which Bernard propos'd, Whether he ought to keep or leave his Abbey? he return'd him this Answer, That Circumstances would direct him what to do: and recommends to him the using his utmost Discretion to examine in his own Conscience, which of the two was the most honourable for him, and most beneficial to others: because on one side 'tis a great Duty to discharge the Functions of an Abbot, when one can conduct Souls to God: but that on the other side, when there is no hopes of being able to do any good, by reason of the Wickedness of those one has to govern, 'tis more convenient to retire, to provide for ones own Salvation. Sometime after Abbo went to Rome to obtain a Confirmation of the Priviledges of his Church. He there met with Pope John XV. upon the Holy See, who was not (says Aimoin the Author of his Life) such an one as he wish'd him, or as he ought to be. Having this Pope in detestation, he return'd after he had offer'd up his Prayers in the Holy Places of God's Worship. Upon his return from this Journey, he wrote a Letter to the Abbot of Fulda, publish'd by Monsieur Baluzius in the first Tome of his Collection of Miscellanies. He was afterwards sent a second time by King Robert to Pope Gregory V. Successor to John, who threatned to lay the Kingdom under an Interdiction upon the Account of Arnulphus Archbishop of Rheims. He met this Pope at Spoleto, was very kindly receiv'd by him, and obtain'd of him a Priviledge for his Abbey, by which the Bishop of Orleans was prohibited entring into that Monastery, unless he were invited thither; and the Monks were permitted to celebrate Divine Service in their Monastery always, even tho' the whole Kingdom were laid under an Interdiction by the Pope. He adjusted the Business of Arnulphus; and having engag'd his word to the Pope, that that Archbishop should be releas'd out of Prison and re-establish'd, he was intrusted to carry the Pall to him. Upon his return to France, what he had promis'd was accordingly done, and he gave the Pope notice of it. About the end of his Life, he re-establish'd the Monastery of Squires in Gascony, which was call'd the Monastery of the Rule, and in the Country Language la Reole, where he was kill'd in the year 1004. in an Insurrection which the Monks or Women of that Country rais'd against him. Monsieur Baluzius has publish'd a Circular Letter written by the Monks of Fleury, upon his Death.

The Council of S. Dennis 995.

Abbo Abbot of Fleury.

Beſides the Apology and the Letters of Abbo which we have already mention'd, the Author of his Life makes likewiſe mention of the following Tracts. Of a Letter in Hexameter Verſe, in praiſe of the Emperor Otho: The Verſes begin and end with the ſame Letter, and may be read ſix manner of ways, which make ſo many different Senſes. Of a Treatiſe directed to Odilo Abbot of Cluny, about the Harmony of the Goſpel: and of another Tract concerning the Cycles of all the Years, from the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt down to his time, which Sigibert ſays is a Commentary on the Treatiſe of Venerius. They likewiſe attribute to him the Abſtract of the Lives of the Popes, taken out of the Hiſtory of Anaſtaſius the Librarian, printed at Mentz in the year 1603. The Life of S. Edmund King of England and Martyr. Father Mabillon has given us an Excellent Collection of Canons compos'd by Abbo, and dedicated to the Kings Hugh and Robert, in the ſecond Tome of his Analects.

Abbo's ſtile is very pure and elegant, and his Conceptions are accurate: He was very well verſ'd in the Rules of Diſcipline and Morality. His Zeal for the Monaſtical Order, and the Intereſt of the Monks, created him a great many Enemies: becauſe, as he ſays himſelf, he had always in his Thoughts the protection of the Monks; and had conſulted their Intereſt upon all occaſions, and oppos'd all who annoy'd them.

AIMOIN Monk of Fleury.

Aimoin Monk of Fleury.

THE Life of Abbo was written by Aimoin Monk of the ſame Monaſtery. He was of Aquitaine, the Son of Anentrude, the Kinſwoman of Gerald, Lord of Aubeterre. He embrac'd the Monaſtick Life in the year 970. under Oilbold Abbot of S. Benedict upon the Loire; and flouriſh'd under his Succeſſor Abbo, whoſe intimate Friend he was. He attended him in his Journey to Gaſcoigne, and after his death return'd to his Monaſtery. The principal Piece of this Aimoin is his Hiſtory of France dedicated to Abbo. It was printed at Paris by Badius Aſcenſius in the year 1514. under the Name of Aimonius. Fifty years after Monſieur Pithou or Pithœus, caus'd it to be re-printed from a Manuſcript, under the true Name of Aimoin. It was publiſh'd in the year 1567. at the Printing Houſe of Vezel. In the year 1603. Jumes of Bayeux, Monk of S. Germain des Prez, caus'd it to be printed, and pretended that it was writ by Aimoin, a Monk of S. Germain. Ten years after Freherus inſerted it in the Body of the Hiſtory of France, which he caus'd to be printed at Hanover. Laſtly, The Meſſieurs Duchesne inſerted it in the Third Tome of their Collections, printed in the year 1641. This Hiſtory is divided into five Books: But of Aimoin's there are only the three firſt Books, and one and forty Chapters of the Fourth, which ends at the founding of the Monaſtery of Fleury. The reſt is compil'd by a Monk of very late ſtanding.

Aimoin is likewiſe the Author of two Books of the Miracles of S. Benedict, which are the ſecond and third Books of theſe four, which are in the Library of Fleury; of the Life of S. Abbo mention'd before; of a Sermon upon the Feſtival of S. Benedict; and of ſeveral Verſes upon the firſt founding of the Monaſtery of Fleury, printed in the Third Tome of the Collection of Duchesne; together with another Treatiſe in Verſe concerning the Tranſlation of the Relicks of S. Benedict. He is not altogether ſo elegant as his Maſter Abbo; But he wrote with great accuracy, and his Narration is plain and pleaſant, without having any thing of that flatneſs of ſtile which ſeveral other Authors of that time had.

The Abbey of Lobes, in the Dioceſs of Cambray and Principality of Liege, founded in the Seventh Century by S. Urſmar, preſerv'd the Monaſtical Diſcipline till the Tenth Century, at which time its reputation was farther increas'd by ſeveral Abbots, who for their Piety were deſervedly advanc'd to the Biſhoprick of Liege, and recommended themſelves to the World by their Writings.

STEPHEN Abbot of Lobes.

Stephen Abbot of Lobes.

THE firſt is Stephen, whom Fulcuin calls a Learned Man, and of whom he ſays, that he obſerv'd the Rule of the Canons: which made People believe that he was a Secular Abbot. The ſame Author adds, that he has caſt into a more poliſh'd ſtile the ancient Life of S. Lambert, which was written in a courſe dreſs, and he made a very famous piece of Proſe out of it: That he likewiſe made another ſmall Treatiſe, compos'd of ſeveral fine Thoughts extracted out of Holy Writ; in which he has inſerted the Chapters and Collects of each Feſtival in the year: and that in the Preface he obſerves that he had been advanc'd to Metz, by dedicating his Treatiſe to Robert Biſhop of that City. Sigibert ſays likewiſe, that he made a piece of Proſe upon the Trinity, and upon the Invention of S. Stephen the Proto-Martyr. Others ſay, that they are certain Offices appointed for theſe Feſtivals.

The

The Life of S. Lambert was publish'd in the History of the Bishops of Liege, by Chapeaville. This Stephen was ordain'd Bishop of Liege in the year 903. Stephen Abbot of Lobes.

After his death the Bishoprick of Liege was contested, as was formerly hinted, between Hilduin and Riquier; but the latter being Abbot of Lobes, carried it from the other. In his time the study of the Liberal Arts and Sciences (says Fulcuin) began to flourish in the Abbey of Lobes, and the most famous Professors of them were Seamin, Theoduin, and Ratherius. We have already given a particular Account of the Transactions and Writings of the last of these Persons. Trithemius likewise attributes to Hilduin, who was Competitor with Riquier for the Bishoprick of Liege, the Title of Abbot of Lobes, and assures us that he wrote the History of the Abbots of that Monastery, and several Sermons; but 'tis probable that he was mistaken, and that he took Hilduin for Fulcuin.

FULCUIN Abbot of Lobes.

IN the end of this Century Fulcuin or Folcuin was chosen Abbot of Lobes. He left a well penn'd History of that Abbey, from its first founding by Landelin and S. Ursmar to his time, which was publish'd by Father D. Luke Dachery in the Sixth Tome of his Spicilegium. He has likewise compos'd a Treatise of the Miracles of S. Ursmar, referr'd by Henschenius to April 18. and the Life of S. Fulcuin Bishop, and is contain'd in the first Part of the Fourth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon. Fulcuin was chosen Abbot in the year 975. and dy'd in 990. Fulcuin Abbot of Lobes.

HERIGER Abbot of Lobes.

HE had for his Successor Heriger, the Friend of Notger Bishop of Liege, whose Works are compil'd in the following Catalogue, collected by the Author of the Continuation of Fulcuin's History, viz. The History of the Bishops of Liege: The Life of S. Ursmar in Verse: A Letter to Hugh about several Questions, and two other Tracts, which were never publish'd: A Treatise by way of Dialogue between him and Aldebold Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterward Bishop of Utrecht, concerning the Dissensions of the Church, and the Coming of our Saviour: And another Treatise containing a Collection of several Passages of the Fathers touching the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST against Paschasius Ratbertus. The History of the Bishops of Liege was publish'd by Chapeaville, and his Treatise of our Saviour's Body and Blood is that Anonymous Piece set forth by Father Cellot. The Life of S. Ursmar is in Henschenius referr'd to April 18. and the other Works are only in Manuscript. Some other Pieces are also attributed to him, viz. the Life of S. Berlenda referr'd by Bollandus to Feby. 3. and by Father Mabillon to the third Benedictine Century, and that of S. Candualde, which is inserted under the Name of Notger by Surius to March 19. This Abbot died in the year 1007. Heriger Abbot of Lobes.

ALDEBOLD Bishop of Utrecht.

* A Aldebold Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterwards chosen Bishop of Utrecht about the year 1009. wrote the History of the Emperor Henry II. which is contain'd in the Lives of the Saints writ by Surius in July 14. and in the Fifth Tome of Canisius's Antiquities. Trithemius likewise makes mention of a Hymn in Commendation of the Cross; of another in praise of the Virgin Mary; and of some other Works of the same Author, as well in Prose as Verse. He died A. D. 1027. Aldebold Bishop of Utrecht.

[* After having left his Employments in the Court of the Emperor Henry II. whom he serv'd in quality of a Privy Counsellor and General of his Armies, he became a Monk of Lobes.]

ALBERT

Albert Abbot of Gemblours

ALBERT Abbot of Gemblours.

Albert or Olbert Abbot of Gemblours, is likewise one of the Writers who proceeded from the Abbey of Lobes. Sigebert informs us, that he was a Person illustrious for his profound Skill in Human Literature and Ecclesiastical Affairs, as also by reason of his great Zeal for Religion, and that he render'd his Name immortal by writing the Lives of the Fathers, and composing Hymns in Honour of the Saints; but more especially in regard that he was Tutor to Burchard Bishop of Wormes, and incited him to the study of Divinity, and caus'd him to publish his Volume of Canons so useful to the whole World, which was written and dictated by him, and compil'd by the diligence of that Albert. Sigebert does not say that he compos'd those Lives of the Fathers, but only that he wrote them with his Hand; nevertheless Trithemius makes him the Author of them.

ODILO Monk of S. Medard at Soissons.

Odilo Monk of S. Medard at Soissons

Odilo Monk of S. Medard at Soissons flourish'd about the year 920. and wrote a Book concerning the Translation of the Relicks of S. Sebastian Martyr, and S. Gregory Pope, to the Monastery of S. Medard, dedicated to Ingram Dean of that Abbey, who was ordain'd Bishop of Laon, A. D. 932. Therefore Odilo's Piece precedes that year. It is referr'd by Bollandus to January 20. and to the fourth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon, who has likewise given us in the same Volume, the History of the Translation of the Relicks of S. Tiburtius, of S. Marcellinus, and of S. Peter and his Companions, made in the same Monastery A. C. 828. and written by the same Author.

GERARD Abbot of S. Medard at Soissons.

Gerard Abbot of S. Medard at Soissons

Gerard Abbot, or rather Dean of S. Medard at Soissons, flourish'd in the middle of the Tenth Century, having found an ancient Manuscript of the Life of S. Romanus, he cast it into a more polite stile, and made another of it in Verse; which he presented to Hugh Archbishop of Roan, as it appears by the Epistle Dedicatory, publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Analects. Of these Works there is only extant the Ancient Life of Romanus, that he corrected, and which was set forth by Monsieur Rigaud, or Rigultius.

JOHN Abbot of Arnulphus at Metz.

John Abbot of S. Arnulphus at Metz.

John Monk of Gorze, and afterward Abbot of S. Arnoud or Arnulphus at Metz, flourish'd there in the time of Adalberon, who was Bishop of that City. He wrote the Life of S. Goldesinda Abbess of Metz, and the History of her Translation, with the Life of S. John Abbot of Gorze his Patron, dedicated to Thierry Bishop of Metz. Father Mabillon has inserted these Works in different Tomes of his Benedictine Centuries.

HELPERIC or CHILPERIC Monk of S. Gal.

Helperic or Chilperic Monk of S. Gal.

Helperic or Chilperic Monk of S. Gal, compos'd in the year 980. a Treatise of the Calendar, the Preface to which was publish'd by Father Mabillon, in the first Tome of his Analects, and which is entirely preserv'd in Manuscript in the Library of S. Germain des Prez.

BERCHIER

Berthier Prieſt of Verdun.

BERTHIER Prieſt of Verdun.

Berthier Prieſt of Verdun wrote a Compendious Hiſtory of the Biſhops of that Church, and dedicated it to Dado, who was then Governour of that Country. It was publiſh'd by Father Dachery in the Twelfth Tome of the Spicilegium. He flouriſh'd about the year 987.

This Work of Berthier was continu'd by an Anonymous Monk of S. Viton at Verdun down to Thierry the Fourteenth Biſhop of that City. Afterward Lawrence Monk of Liege, and at laſt of the ſame Monaſtery of S. Viton at Verdun, made a Supplement and Continuation of that Hiſtory to the time of Alberon, that is to ſay, to the middle of the Twelfth Century. Theſe Works are follow'd by another Continuation in the ſame Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium. A nameleſs Monk.

ADSO Abbot of Luxeüil.

THere were two Monks in the Tenth Century who bore the Name of Adſo: The firſt of theſe, the Abbot of Luxeuil, wrote about the year 960. a Treatiſe of the Miracles of S. Vaudalbert, the third Abbot of Luxueil, which is contain'd in the firſt Tome of the Benedictine Centuries. The ſecond Abbot of Deuvres in the Dioceſs of Bourges, is the Author of the Life of S. Bercaire; of that of S. Baſole Confeſſor; of the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation and Miracles of the latter; of the Life of S. Frodbert Abbot of Celles; of the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of his Relicks; and laſtly of the Life of S. Manſuet the firſt Biſhop of Toul. All theſe Works, except the laſt, are in the ſecond and fourth Benedictine Centuries of Father Mabillon; the laſt was publiſh'd by Monſieur Beſquet. This Author flouriſh'd about the year 980. and died in 992. Adſo Abbot of Luxueil. Adſo Abbot of Deuvres.

LETALDUS Monk of S. Memin.

Letaldus Monk of the Abbey of Micy or S. Memin in the Dioceſs of Orleans, flouriſh'd about the end of the Tenth Century. He wrote the Hiſtory of the Miracles of S. Maximin or Memin, the firſt Founder of that Monaſtery, publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the firſt Tome of his Benedictine Centuries; and it is probable that he is the ſame with the Author of the Life of S. Julian Biſhop of Mans. Letaldus Monk of S. Memin.

CHAP. IV.

The Hiſtory of the Churches of Germany.

THE Emperor Arnulphus the laſt of the Branch of the Carlian Stock, who obtain'd Germany for his Inheritance, dying in the year 899. left but one lawful Son nam'd Lewis, who being only eight years old, was committed to the Care of Otho Duke of Saxony, who married his Siſter; and Hatto Archbiſhop of Mayence: Soon after he became Heir of Lorrain, of which Zuentibold his Baſtard Brother was in poſſeſſion. But he was not able to ſubdue Italy, nor to cauſe himſelf to be crown'd Emperor; neither did he live long, but dyed between eighteen and twenty years old, A. C. 911. leaving only two Daughters, named Placidia and Mathildis. The firſt was married to Conrade Duke of Franconia, and the other to Henry the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, and Son of Duke Otho. The Eſtates of the Realm deſigning to confer the Crown upon that Otho, he deſired to be excus'd by reaſon of his old Age, and adviſ'd them to chuſe Conrade Duke of Franconia, but his Son Henry The Revolutions of the Empire of Germany in the Tenth Century.

The Revolutions of the Empire of Germany in the Tenth Century.

Henry Duke of Saxony, whoſe Moderation was not ſo great, claim'd a Right to part of the Kingdom, as having married one of the Heireſſes, revolted againſt Conrade, wag'd War with him, and gain'd the Battle; however this Advantage prov'd ineffectual, and Conrade always remain'd in poſſeſſion of the Throne, till his death; which happen'd in the year 918. When he left Henry Duke of Saxony his Heir, and order'd the Lords to wait upon him with the Crown and the Royal Ornaments. They perform'd his laſt Will, and acknowledg'd Henry Duke of Saxony, ſurnam'd the Fowler, as King of Germany. This valiant and prudent Prince kept in awe Arnulphus Duke of Bavaria; defeated the Hungarians who ravag'd Germany; overcame the Vandals; ſubdu'd Bohemia; and after having reign'd Seventeen years, dyed A. C. 936. The Lords ſubſtituted in his place his eldeſt Son Otho, afterwards ſurnam'd the Great; againſt whom his Brother Henry made War, but was defeated, and mortally wounded in a Fight. The Dukes Gilbert and Everard, who were Authors of this Revolt, periſh'd in another Engagement near Andernac, and left Otho in the quiet poſſeſſion of his Dominions, which he enlarg'd conſiderably; and joyn'd to them the Kingdom of Italy, with the Imperial Dignity, which paſſed to his Son Otho, and to his Grandſon of the ſame Name, as it has been already related.

Under theſe Emperors, who were no leſs Religious than Valiant, the Churches of Germany were in a flouriſhing Condition, by the means of a great number of Reverend Biſhops, the Writings of ſeveral Authors, and the propagation of the Goſpel among the Northern People. This is what we ſhall proceed to ſhew in, giving an Account of ſuch Perſons illuſtrious for their Learning and Sanctity, as Germany has produc'd in this Century.

S. ULRIC Biſhop of Augsburgh.

S. Ulric Biſhop of Augsburgh.

WE ſhall begin with S. Ulric Biſhop of Augsburgh. He was deſcended from an Ancient Family in Germany, the Son of Huppant and Thetpurga; He began to ſtudy in the Monaſtery of S. Gal, and was taken from thence to be put under the Tuition of Adalberon Biſhop of Augsburgh, in the year 909. He made a Journey to Rome, and during his reſidence there Adalberon died, and left Hiltin his Succeſſor, after whoſe death Ulric was nominated Biſhop of Augsburgh by King Henry, A. C. 924. He was highly eſteem'd by that Prince, and the Emperor Otho had a particular reſpect for him. This Prelate, in like manner, made two other Journeys to Rome; one about the year 956. and the other near the end of his Life. He dyed A. C. 973. in the 83d year of his Age, after having governed the Church of Augsburgh during Fifty years.

His Life, which was written by an Author of thoſe times named Gerard, who was Contemporary with him, contains many remarkable Paſſages. It is there related, that beſides the Divine Office, which he ſung every day with his Canons in the Choir of his Church; He was wont to recite in particular the Offices of the Bleſſed Virgin, of the Holy Croſs, and of All the Saints, with the entire Pſalter; and that he was accuſtom'd to ſay one, two, or three Maſſes accordingly, as the time would permit: That in Lent, after having ſaid Matins at Night, he continu'd his Prayers till the hour that the Bell rung to the Vigils for the dead, which he ſung with the Choir, and afterwards the * Prime; That he continued in the Church at Prayers till the Canons return'd with the Croſs to celebrate Maſs, at which he aſſiſted, and kiſſed the Hand of the Prieſt that officiated: That after Maſs he ſung † Tierce with the Canons, and that he remain'd in the Church till the Sexte; when he viſited the Altars, and kneel'd before them, ſinging a Miſerere and a De Profundis: That then he return'd to his Camber, to waſh his Face, and to prepare for ſaying Maſs: That when it was ſaid, and Veſpers after it, he was wont to viſit the poor of the Hoſpital, to waſh the Feet of Twelve amongſt them; and to give every one a penny: That at his departure from thence, he ſat down at Table; that after having eat, he ſaid his Compline, and retir'd: That he ſpent all the days of Lent after this manner, till that of the Indulgence, commonly call'd Palm-Sunday: That on that day, he went early in the Morning to the Church of S. Afer, where he ſung a Trinity-Maſs, and made a Benediction of the Palm-Tree Branches, which he carried about in Proceſſion, accompanied with the Clergy and People, with the Goſpel, the Croſs, the Banners, and an Image repreſenting our Saviour ſitting on an Aſs, as far as Mount Perlach, where he was met by the Choir of Canons, and part of the People, who cover'd the way with Palm-Tree Branches or Garments: That he made an Exhortation to them upon our Saviour's Paſſion, and that they return'd together to ſing Maſs in the Cathedral Church: That during the three following days, he held a Synodical Aſſembly: That on Holy Thurſday he celebrated Divine Service, Conſecrated the Holy Chryſm and other Oyls, and diſtributed them among his Clergy: That afterward he went, according to his uſual Cuſtom, to viſit the Hoſpital, from whence he return'd to the Church; Clothed twelve poor Men in the Veſtry, and waſh'd their feet: That on Good-Friday he aſſiſted at the whole Office; That after having Adminiſtred the Holy Sacrament to the People as on the preceding day, he laid up the reſt of the Euchariſt, in order to bury it, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe times; and that at Night he eat Bread and drank Beer, without ſitting down at Table; That on Holy Saturday, after the Nocturnal Office, the the Repetition of the Pſalter, the Singing of the Three Litanies, the Bleſſing of the Tapers, and the Reading of the Leſſons, he went in Proceſſion to S. John's Church, where he baptiz'd three Infants, and then return'd to Celebrate Maſs, to Adminiſter the Holy Sacrament to the People, and to ſay Veſpers: That afterwards he diſtributed Victuals to a great many Perſons: That on Eaſter-Day, after the Prime Office, he uſually went to S. Ambroſe's Church, where he celebrated the Trinity Maſs, and return'd from thence in Proceſſion, carrying the Image of our Saviour with the Goſpel; the lighted Tapers and the Incenſe to S. John Baptiſt's Church, where he Sung Tierce, and from thence to the Cathedral, where he ſung Maſs and adminiſtred the Sacrament to all the Aſſiſtants: Afterward he gave Proviſions to the Canons of his Cathedral, and to the Clergy of S. Afra's Church diſtributing to them Lambs Fleſh and pieces of Bacon, which had been bleſſed at Maſs, and gave them a very ſplendid Entertainment. It is alſo obſervable, that he was wont to viſit his Dioceſs every Four years; to inſtruct the People; to adminiſter the Sacrament of Confirmation, and to reform his Clergy. S. Ulric Biſhop of Augsburgh.

I ſhall take no notice of a great number of Miracles that are related in this Life of S. Ulric, nor of thoſe that were written by Gebeard his fourth Succeſſor, and by Berno Abbot of S. Afer: but I cannot omit the Hiſtory of Adalbero Nephew to this Reverend Biſhop. He had caus'd him to be carefully educated, gave him an Abbey, deſign'd him for his Succeſſor, and made uſe of his Service in the management of all his Affairs, as well at Court, as in his own Dioceſs. To gain him greater Authority, he intreated the Emperor, in the laſt Journey he made to Rome, to vouchſafe to entruſt him with the ſole Adminiſtration of the Affairs of his Dioceſs, and to nominate him for his Succeſſor. Adalbero upon his return from Augsburgh, not only caus'd an Oath of Fidelity to be taken to him, by the Clergy and People of the City, but alſo preſum'd to uſe the Croſier Staff. This Attempt gave offence to the Biſhops of Germany, inſomuch, that in a Council held at Ingelheim in the year 972. in the preſence of the Emperor Otho, and of his Son, to which S. Ulric and Adalbero were ſummon'd; a Proceſs was drawn up againſt the latter, for preſuming to bear the Marks of the Epiſcopal Dignity, and upon that account they proceded ſo far, as to declare him uncapable of ſucceeding his Uncle in the Biſhoprick of Augsburgh. Whereupon the good old Man, not being able ſufficiently to explain the Caſe, by reaſon of his great Age, ſent word by one of his Clerks, that he deſign'd to retire, and embrace the Monaſtick Life, according to the Rule of S. Benedict, whoſe habit he had aſſum'd. The Biſhops of the Council having made a Remonſtrance, That he ought not thus to leave his Biſhoprick, and that this Example would be of very dangerous Conſequence, oblig'd him to return to the Government of his Church; promiſing him at the ſame time, that after his death no other Biſhop ſhould ſucceed in the Dioceſs of Augsburgh, but Adalbero; of whom they exacted an Oath, that he knew not that it was unlawful, or that it was an Heretical Practice, to aſſume the Enſigns of the Epiſcopal Dignity, and to Exerciſe the Authority of a Biſhop without due Ordination.

This Promiſe ſignified nothing with reſpect to Adalbero, becauſe he died ſuddenly in a ſhort time after, even before his Uncle; who had for his Succeſſor Henry the Son of Count Burchard, who caus'd himſelf to be choſen by force. The latter dy'd as he had liv'd, that is to ſay, rather like a Soldier than a Biſhop; for in his time he raiſed a Rebellion againſt his Sovereign Prince, and was kill'd in a Battel fought againſt the Saracens in the year 983. After his death, the Emperor Otho the Second, was deſirous to confer that Biſhoprick upon Werenharius, whom S. Ulric had deſign'd for his Succeſſor; but upon his refuſal of it, Rutychus Count of Altorf was elected. Luitolphus, who ſucceeded in the year 988. made a Journey to Rome to procure of Pope John the XV. the Canonization of S. Ulric, which he obtain'd in a Council at Rome, upon the reading of the Life and Miracles of that Saint, who edified the Church rather by his Life and Converſation, than by his Writings; for few are attributed to him, and thoſe too are very dubious. We have already obſerved that ſome make him the Author of a Diſcourſe, concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Functions aſcrib'd to Pope Leo the Fourth, and inſerted in the Synodical Letter of Ratherius, which ſeems to be really ſo; becauſe he returns an Anſwer to certain Queſtions which the Writer of his Life ſays he propos'd to his Clergy, during the time of his Viſitation.

The ſame Author cites a Sermon of S. Ulric upon the Eight Mortal Sins, and the Eight Beatitudes. But it is probable that he compos'd it out of the ordinary Diſcourſes that he had heard from the Mouth of that Saint: In the preceding Century was likewiſe publiſh'd in Germany, a Letter bearing the Name of S. Ulric, and directed to Pope Nicolas; in which he adviſeth that Pope, for putting an end to the Irregularities of the Clergy, to permit them to marry: Mention is made of this Letter, in an Addition of Bartholl Prieſt of Conſtantz, to the Chronicon of Hermannus Contractus; and its aſſirm'd to be mention'd by Æneas Sylvius in his Treatiſe of the Manners of the Germans; where he ſays, That S. Ulric reprov'd the Pope for keeping Concubines. But this Letter is apparently Suppoſititious, by reaſon that in S. Ulric's time there was no Pope nam'd Nicolas, neither did S. Ulric Biſhop of Augsbourgh live in the time of thoſe Popes who bore that Name. The Authority of the Chronicon is of little moment, and Æneas Sylvius does not diſtinctly make mention of that Letter; but only ſays, that S. Ulric reprov'd the Pope, upon account of his Concubines; which may agree with John the XII. Beſides that, this Paſſage is not found in ſome Manuſcripts of Sylvius's Hiſtory, nor in the Roman Edition. But altho' it were true, that this Author alludes to that counterfeit Letter, it would only prove that it was already forged in his time; and that it is more ancient than the Councils of Baſil and Conſtantz, which, as I preſume, cannot be call'd in queſtion.

ADALBERO Bishop of Augsburgh.

Adalbero Bishop of Augsburgh.

Adalbero the Predecessor of S. Ulric is Author of the Life of S. Hariolphus the first Abbot of Elwangen,

The two ADALBERTS, who were Saints.

Two Adelberts Saints.

THE two Saints nam'd Adalbert not only illuminated Germany with the Light of their Doctrine, but also propagated that of the Gospel amongst the Barbarous Nations: The former, after having preach'd it to the People, who inhabit along the Coasts of the Baltick Sea, and having taken much pains in Converting the Sclavonians, was ordain'd the first Archbishop of Magdeburg in the year 968, and dyed in 981. The second, who was Bishop of Prague, in like manner preach'd the Gospel to the Bohemians, Polanders, and Hungarians. The latter left his Bishoprick, by reason of the excessive Enormities of the People of Bohemia, and departing to Rome, there embrac'd the Monastick Life in the Convent of S. Boniface. After having spent five years there, he return'd to Bohemia, and pass'd from thence into Hungary; from whence he return'd the second time to Rome, and presided five years more in the same Monastery. He was also remov'd again by the Solicitation of the Archbishop of Mentz, who oblig'd Pope Gregory the Fifth to send him back. Boleslaus King of Bohemia having forbidden him to enter his Dominions, he went into Prussia, and from thence into Lithuania, where having suffer'd much in propagating the Christian Faith, he at last receiv'd the Crown of Martyrdom.

BRUNO Archbishop of Cologn.

Bruno Archbishop of Cologn.

BRUNO Archbishop of Cologn, the Son of the Emperor Henry the Fowler, and Brother of Otho the Great, is none of the least Ornaments of the Church of Germany, both with respect to his profound Learning and singular Piety. We are inform'd by a Writer of that time, that he had acquired a perfect Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues; that he had perus'd all the Ancient Authors; that he had a very fine Library; and that he took a particular Care of his Dioceis and Clergy; retrenching all their superfluous Habits, and obliging them to a constant attendance on the Duties of their Functions, as also instructing them by frequent Conferences, reiterated Exhortations, and his own Example. Sixtus Senensis says, that he compos'd a Commentary on the Pentateuch, the Manuscript of which is kept in the Library of the Dominicans at Boulogn. It's also reported that he wrote the Lives of certain Saints. He was chosen Archbishop of Cologn in the year 953. and dy'd in 965.

ROGER Monk of S. Pantaleon.

Roger Monk of S. Pantaleon.

THE Life of this great Archbishop was written by Roger a Monk of S. Pantaleon at Cologn, who dedicated it to Folcmar his Successor in the year 970. It is referr'd by Surius to Octob. 12. and is written very elegantly with respect to the stile of those times. We also may reckon up a great number of German Prelates illustrious for their Learning and Piety, among whom are Henry Archbishop of Trier, Wolfang Bishop of Ratisbon, Sigismond of Halberstadt, and many others whom we shall not now mention. We shall therefore proceed to give a particular Account of those who have left us any considerable Writings.

RATH-

RATHBOLDUS Bishop of Utrecht.

Rathboldus or Ratboldus a German by Nation, descended from the Princes of Friesland, apply'd himself to study under Nanno or Manno, in the Court of Charles the Bald, and of his Son Lewis, where those Princes caus'd the Liberal Sciences to be taught publickly. He was chosen Bishop of Utrecht in the year 899. Trithemius says, that he was well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and that he was no Novice in Humane Literature; that he was of a quick Apprehension, and much esteem'd for his Eloquence, leading a very Circumspect Life and Conversation; that he govern'd the Church of Utrecht during Seventeen years, and wrote several Tracts; among others, a Treatise of the Commendation of S. Martin; another of that of S. Boniface; The Life of S. Amalberga; a Book of Homilies and Sermons; certain florid Discourses on S. Willebrord; an Office of the Translation of S. Martin; with divers Hymns in Honour of the Saints; and lastly that he dy'd in the year 917. or rather in 918. Another Writer nam'd William of Hedin, attributes to him certain Poetical Pieces, and a Compendious Chronicon. Surius likewise ascribes to him an Eclogue concerning S. Lebuin. Father Mabillon has publish'd a Discourse of the same Author on the Life of S. Amalberga, and another on that of S. Willebrord.

Rathbol-dus Bishop of Utrecht.

HILDEBERT Archbishop of Mentz.

Hildebert Brother to the Emperor Conrade, the Thirteenth Archbishop of Mentz, Crown'd Otho the Great in the year 938. But afterward's having combin'd with Richard Bishop of Stratsburg, to foment the Division between Otho and his Brother Henry, he was banish'd to Hamburg. Some make him the Author of the Lives of certain Saints.

Hildebert Archbishop of Mentz.

WILLIAM Archbishop of Mentz.

William the Fifteenth Archbishop of Mentz, Prince of Saxony, and the Son of Otho the Great, was chosen Archbishop in the year 954. and dy'd in 968. He compos'd a Chronicon of the Archbishops his Predecessors.

William Archbishop of Mentz.

BONNO Abbot of Corbey in Saxony.

Bonno or Bavo Abbot of Corbey in Saxony, flourish'd under Arnulphus and Lewis the Fourth, Kings of Germany. He wrote a Treatise of the memorable Actions of his time, mention'd in the History of Adam of Bremen, who cites a Passage of it concerning a Miracle of S. Rembert. We have at present no other knowledge of that Work.

Bonno Abbot of Corbey in Saxony.

WALTRAMNUS Bishop of Stratsburg.

Waltramnus or Waldramnus Bishop of Stratsburg, who assisted at the Council of Triburia in the year 895. and did not dye till 905. is the Author of certain Poetical Pieces which are inserted in the second Tome of Canisius's Antiquities.

Waltramnus Bishop of Stratsburg.

SOLOMON Biſhop of Conſtance.

Solomon Biſhop of Conſtance.

Solomon Biſhop of Conſtance liv'd almoſt at the ſame time, for he entred upon the Epiſcopal Function in the year 981. and dy'd in 919. He likewiſe compos'd certain Poems dedicated to Biſhop Dado, which are in the firſt Tome of the ſame Antiquities by Caniſius. He had been Monk of S. Gal and Chaplain to King Lewis.

UTHO Biſhop of Stratsburg.

Utho Biſhop of Stratsburg.

Ruthardus Biſhop of Stratsburg had for his Succeſſor in the year 950. Utho Nephew to Henry the Second Duke of Schwaben. This Utho wrote the Lives of S. Arbogaſtus, and S. Amarin, and dy'd in 973. leaving Echenbaldus his Succeſſor.

NOTGER the Stammerer.

Notger the Stammerer.

THere were ſeveral Notgers in the Tenth Century, but the firſt and moſt famous was of the Corvian Race, and Surnam'd the Stammerer, by reaſon of the impediment in his Speech. He entred very young into the Monaſtery of S. Gal, where he ſtudied under Marcellus and Iſo, with Barpertus and Tutilo. Theſe three Monks ſtudying together, promoting Learning in that Abbey, where they had frequent Conferences one with another, applying themſelves more eſpecially to the ſtudy of the Liberal Arts and Sciences, and to that of Muſick in particular: But their chief Employment was the making of Proſes. Notger compos'd many, and tranſlated the Pſalter into High-Dutch for the uſe of King Arnulphus: He wrote the Life of S. Gal in Verſe, as alſo a Treatiſe of the Letters of the Alphabet, that are us'd in Muſick and ſome other Works of the like nature; but the principal of them is his Martirologium, publiſh'd by Caniſius in the firſt Tome of his Antiquities. The ſame Caniſius has ſet forth ſome of the Proſes and Hymns of this Author, with a Fragment of the Life of S. Gal, in the Fifth Tome of the ſame Work, in which is alſo found the Treatiſe of Muſick before-mention'd. Beſides theſe Works, Goldaſtus attributes to Notger the Stammerer the two Books of the Hiſtory of Charlemagn, that are dedicated to Charles the Bald, and written by a nameleſs Monk of S. Gal: And indeed he ſeems to diſcover himſelf in the 26th Chapter of the Second Book, where he declares that he is ſubject to Stammering, and wants Teeth. The ſame Author obſerves, that he has ſeen a Manuſcript of the Life of S. Gal, written by way of Dialogue, which bears the Name of Notger. To him likewiſe is attributed the Life of S. Landoald referr'd by Surius to March 19. That of S. Remaclus Biſhop of Utrecht, referr'd by the ſame Hiſtorian, to Sept. 3. and two Books of the Miracles of that Saint: But it's not certain that theſe Works are his; neither do they appear to be of the ſame ſtile. Notger ſpent the greateſt part of his Life in the Ninth Century, and dy'd in the Month of April, A. C. 912. His Martyrology was compos'd in the end of the Ninth Century, or in the beginning of the Tenth.

The ſecond Notger liv'd in the Tenth Century, and was not made Abbot of S. Gal till the year 972. he dy'd in 981. but there are not any of his Pieces now extant.

The third Notger was choſen Biſhop of Leige in the year 972. Neither has he left any Works unleſs we attribute to him the above-mention'd Lives of the Saints.

WITICHINDUS Monk of S. Corbey in Weſtphalia.

Witichindus Monk of Corbey in Weſtphalia.

Witichindus, Winduchindus, or Windichinus a Monk of Corbey a Monaſtery in Weſtphalia, of the Order of S. Benedict, flouriſh'd under Otho I. and II. He wrote three Books of the Hiſtory of the Saxons, in which are comprehended the Actions of Henry and Otho the Firſt, and which ends at the the death of the latter, that is to say, in the year 973. They are dedicated to Queen Mathildis, Daughter of the Emperor Otho, and were printed at Basil A. D. 1532. at Francfort in 1577. Among the German Historians printed in 1580. and at the end of a particular Edition by Meibomius at Francfort in 1621. Sigebert says also, that he wrote in Verse a Relation of S. Thecla's Passion, and the Life of S. Paul the first Hermit. These Works are lost; altho' in the last Edition by Meibomius, there are certain Verses which are attributed to this Monk. Witichindus Monk of Corbey in Westphalia.

ROSWIDA a Nun.

Roswida a Nun of the Monastery of Ganderscheim, famous for her Quality, Learning and Piety, flourish'd under the Emperor Otho II. by whose Order she compos'd in Heroick Verse a Panegirick upon the Actions of Otho the First. She likewise wrote in Verse the Passion of S. Dennis Bishop and Martyr, and that of S. Pelagius who suffer'd Martyrdom in Spain; and some other Poems in Commendation of the Virgin Mary and S. Anne; as also on S. Gandolphus and some other Saints. To her likewise is attributed the Life of S. Wilibald Bishop of Eichstadt, and that of S. Unnebald the first Abbot of Heildesheim, related by Surius, Canisius and Father Mabillon. This Nun wrote in a finer stile then most part of the Authors of her time, and was well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues: Her Poem of the Life of Otho, was printed with Witichind's Works at Francfort in 1621. and in the Collection of the German Writers by Reberus; and her Poetical Pieces were printed together at Nuremberg in 1501. by Conradus Celtes. Roswida a Nun.

REGINALDUS Bishop of Eichstadt.

Reginaldus, who in the year 975. succeeded Starkand kill'd by the Hungarians at Augsburgh, in the Bishoprick of Eichstadt, pass'd in his time for a very Learned Man, as having attain'd to a considerable Knowledge in the Greek, Latin, and Hebrew Tongues, and more especially in the Art of Musick. He wrote the Lives of S. Wilbald and Unnebald, with those of S. Nicolas and S. Blasius. He was Bishop for the space of Twenty four years. Reginaldus Bishop of Eichstadt.

"Another German Bishop of the same time, has given us the Life of S. Hunegonda referr'd by Surius to Aug. 25. and a Nameless Writer made a Narrative of the Translation of S. Epiphanius Bishop of Pavia into Saxony." A German Bishop. A nameless Author.

THIERRY Archbishop of Triers.

Thierry Provost of the Church of Mentz, and afterwards Archbishop of Trier, wrote sometime before the preceding Authors (for he dy'd in the year 970.) the Life of S. Lutruda, referr'd by Surius to Sept. 22. Thierry Archbishop of Triers.

OTHLO Bishop of Metz.

Othlo Monk of Fulda wrote the Life of S. Pyrmin, who is suppos'd to have been Bishop of Meaux, or rather Metz. This Life is dedicated to Liudolphus Archbishop of Trier, and was publish'd by Browerus, who caus'd it to be printed A. D. 1616. at Mentz, with other Lives of the Illustrious Personages of Germany. Liudolphus was made Archbishop of Trier in 999. and dy'd in 1008. Therefore Othlo compos'd his Work in the Ninth Century, or in the beginning of the Tenth. Canisius Othlo Bishop of Metz.

and

and Serrarius likewiſe attribute to him the Life of S. Boniface. But Brouverus obſerves, that it is of a different ſtile.

UFFING or UFFO Monk of Werthin.

Uffing or Uffo Monk of Werthin.

AT the ſame time Uffing, or rather Uffo of Frieſland, Monk of Werthin, wrote the Life of S. Ludger Biſhop of Munſter, which was printed at Cologn the laſt Century, with a Poem of the ſame Author; ſome attribute to him the Life of S. Ida referr'd by Surius to Sept. 4. Suffridus ſays that he likewiſe left the Life of S. Lucius King of England, which he affirms to be extant in Manuſcript.

A Council at Coblentz in the year 922.

We have the Acts only of very few Councils of Germany in the Tenth Century, altho' we have juſt grounds to ſuppoſe that many more were held. The firſt, of which any Monument is remaining is a Council held at Coblentz in the year 922. by the order of Charles King of France, and Henry King of Germany. It was compos'd of Eight Prelates, viz. Herman Archbiſhop of Mentz, Hiriger Arch-Biſhop of Cologn, and ſix other German Biſhops, and made Eight Canons, of which only the Firſt, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth remain in our Poſſeſſion. The firſt forbids Marriage between Relations to the Sixth Generation. The Fifth prohibits Laymen, who have Chappels, from receiving the Tythes of them with their own hands on purpoſe to put them to profane uſes, and ordains that the Prieſts ſhall receive and uſe them to the advantage of the Churches, and for the maintenance of Hoſpitals and poor People. The Sixth brings the Monks under Subjection to the Juriſdiction and Government of the Biſhop. The Seventh condemns a Perſon who ſells a Chriſtian for a Slave, as guilty of Murder. The Eighth forbids thoſe who give any Goods or Revenues to a particular Church, to take away the Tythes due upon account of ſuch Revenues, to the Church to which they belong'd before.

A Council at Erfurdt A.C. 932.

The Canons of a Council held at Erfurdt in the year 932. in like manner are ſtill extant, with a Preface which ſhews that it was conven'd by the Order of King Henry the Firſt, in the Fourteenth year of his Reign, and that it was compos'd of the Archbiſhop of Trier and Twelve Biſhops. The Firſt of theſe Canons imports, that the Feſtivals of the Twelve Apoſtles ſhall be ſolemniz'd, and that the Faſt of the Vigils ſhall be obſerv'd according to the ancient Conſtitutions. The Second, that no Pleas ſhall be held in the Courts of Judicature on Sundays, Holy-days, or Faſting-days: It is alſo added, that King Henry prohibited the Judges to Cite any Perſon before them in the Week preceding the Feſtival of Chriſtmas, that of S. John Baptiſt, and during the whole time of Lent, till the Eighth day after Eaſter. In the Third it is forbidden to deliver a Summons or Warrant to thoſe Perſons who are going to Church, or are there already, that they may not be diſturb'd in their Devotions. The fourth imports, that if a Prieſt be ſuſpected of any Crime, and accuſed before his Biſhop, he ſhall be thrice admoniſh'd to acknowledge his Fault, and ſhall undergo condign Puniſhment, if he be found Guilty, unleſs he prove his Innocence by clearing himſelf by his own Oath, or by that of his Colleagues. The Fifth forbids private Perſons to impoſe Faſts without the Conſent of the Biſhop or his Vicar, becauſe many do it to carry on Superſtitious Divinations, or for other ſiniſter ends, rather than out of a Principle of Devotion.

We have already made mention of the Council of Ingelheim held in the year 948. in treating of the Conteſts of Artaldus for obtaining the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, in regard that it was chiefly aſſembled upon that account.

A Council at Augsburgh A. C. 952.

In the year 952. the Emperor Otho the Firſt held at Augsburgh an Aſſembly of the Biſhops of Germany, France and Italy; where the Archbiſhop of Mentz preſided, and publiſh'd Eleven Canons, which were approv'd by the other Prelates.

The Firſt ordains that the Prieſts, Deacons and Subdeacons that marry, ſhall be depos'd according to Chap. 23. of the Council of Carthage. The Second is againſt Clergy-men, who keep Dogs and Birds for Hunting, and are addicted to that Exerciſe; they are to be ſuſpended from their Functions as long as they perſiſt in ſuch Practices. The Third ordains that Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who ſpend their time in playing at Games of Chance, ſhall incur the Penalty of being Depos'd, unleſs they renounce ſuch ſort of Games. The Fourth is againſt thoſe Clergy-men who keep ſuſpicious Women in their Houſes. The Fifth prohibits Monks from going out of their Cloiſters, without the permiſſion of their Abbot. The Sixth enjoyns Biſhops to take care of the Monaſteries of their Reſpective Dioceſſes, and ſpeedily to Reform the Diſorders that are committed in them. The Seventh and Eighth forbid them to hinder Clergy-men and Canoneſſes from embracing the Monaſtical Life. The Ninth prohibits Lay-men from turning out of the Churches thoſe Perſons to whom the Biſhops have committed Care of them. The Tenth attributes to the Biſhop the right of taking Cognizance of the diſtribution of Tythes. And the Eleventh imports, that not only the Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons and Subdeacons ſhall lead a ſingle Life, but alſo that the other Clergy ſhall be oblig'd to live Continently when they come to years of Maturity.

An Account of the Churches of England.

IN the beginning of the Ninth Century, King Alfred re-eſtabliſh'd the Univerſities, and caus'd the Liberal Arts and Sciences to flouriſh in England, inviting over the Abbot Grimbaldus, and ſeveral other Learned Men of France; but the Kings his Succeſſors were chiefly imploy'd in Reforming the Corruptions of Manners and Diſcipline. In the beginning of this Century King Edward, upon the Remonſtrances and Threats of the Pope, who complain'd that for Seven years the whole Country of the Weſt-Saxons was deſtitute of Biſhops, caus'd a Council to be aſſembled at Canterbury, in which Archbiſhop Phlegmon preſided, and where ſeveral Perſons were choſen to be Biſhops in that Province, and elſewhere, who were ordain'd by Phlegmon after his Return from Rome, whither he went on purpoſe to give an Account to the Pope of the Proceedings of the Council, and to pacifie him. The Pope approv'd their Regulations, order'd that for the future the Churches ſhould no longer be left vacant, and confirm'd the Primacy of the Church of Canterbury. All theſe Actions are attributed by ſeveral Authors to Pope Formoſus, but in regard that this Pope dy'd a long while before the time of King Edward, they are rather to be aſcrib'd to John the Ninth, who poſſeſs'd the See of Rome in the beginning of Edward's Reign, A. C. 904. to which this Council may be referr'd.

The State of England in the Tenth Century.

A Council at Canterbury under King Edward and Phlegmon, Archbiſhop of that City

The ſame King publiſh'd in the year 906. divers Laws againſt the Diſturbers of the Tranquility of the Church; againſt Apoſtates whom he condemns to death; againſt Clergy-men who commit Robberies or Fornication; againſt Inceſtuous Perſons; againſt thoſe who refuſe to pay Tythes, or to keep Sundays and Faſting-days; and againſt Sorcerers and lewd Women, who are condemned to different Puniſhments. It's alſo ordain'd in that Edict, that Perſons condemn'd to dy for Capital Crimes, ſhould be permitted to make a Confeſſion of their Sins in private to a Prieſt; and that thoſe, who have been deprived of any Member for an Offence, and ſurvive three days, ſhould cauſe their Wounds to be dreſs'd, and receive Conſolation, after having obtain'd a Licence from the Biſhop.

King Edward's Laws.

King Ethelſtan, who ſucceeded Edward in the year 923. in like manner caus'd certain Laws to be Enacted relating to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, with the Advice of the Prelates, Lords, and Learned Men of his Kingdom, by which he ordain'd, That all the Lands, and even thoſe of his own Demeans, ſhould be liable to pay Tythes. He enjoyn'd all thoſe, who held any Eſtates of him, to allow ſomewhat for the Maintenance of the Poor, and other charitable Uſes: He prohibited Outrages that were done to the Churches, and again condemn'd the Sorcerers and Witches to Impriſonment, and to pay great Fines: He regulated the manner of proving the Innocence of Accuſed Perſons, by Fire or Water-Ordeal; Forbad the keeping of Markets, or buying and ſelling on Sundays: And ordain'd that perjur'd Perſons and falſe Witneſſes ſhould be depriv'd of Chriſtian Burial. To theſe Laws he added divers Inſtructions for the Biſhops, and recommended the Reading in the Monaſteries every Friday Fifty Pſalms upon his Account.

King Ethelſtan's Laws.

Foraſmuch as the moſt remarkable Circumſtances of thoſe Laws, is that which relates to the Clearing or Convicting of an Accuſed Perſon, by the Trial of Fire or Water, then commonly call'd Ordeal; and in regard that the manner of performing it is there explain'd at large; it may not be improper here to inſert an Account of that paſſage. If any one be deſirous to clear himſelf by Ordeal, that is to ſay, by the Trial of Fire or Water, let them come to the Prieſt three days before he do it, who ſhall give him a Benediction after the uſual manner; and during thoſe three days let him eat nothing but Bread and Salt or Pulſe; let him hear Maſs every day; let him make an Oblation; let him receive the Sacrament on the day he is to undergo the Trial. If it be that of Cold Water, let him be plung'd one Fathom below the Surface of the Water. If it be that of a Hot Iron, let it be put into his Hand, and left there three days, without looking on it. If it be that of Hot Water, let it be made boyling hot, and let the Hand or Arm of the Accuſed Perſon be put into it. In all theſe Trials, both the Accuſed Perſon and the Accuſer are to Faſt, and to cauſe Twelve Witneſſes to be preſent, who may take an Oath with them, and let Holy Water be ſprinkled upon them. There are two Editions of theſe Laws, one of which is printed at large, and the other is an Abridgment of them.

King Edmund had no leſs Zeal for the maintaining of the Diſcipline of the Church, than his Predeceſſor Ethelſtan. He held in the year 944. which was the third of his Reign, even on Eaſter-day, an Aſſembly of the Prelates and Lords, in which he made certain Laws relating to Chaſtity, and the payment of Tythes, and of the Alms-penny; as alſo againſt thoſe who offer'd Violence to Nuns; againſt perjur'd Perſons, and thoſe who aſſiſted at profane Sacrifices. In theſe Laws are ſpecified the Eccleſiaſtical Penalties to be inflicted on the Infringers of them; viz. The privation of Chriſtian Burial and Excommunication. The Biſhops are there enjoyn'd to repair their Churches at their own Charge, and to prefer a Petition to the Prince, for the Reparation of others, and for their Ornaments. He likewiſe made Laws for the puniſhment of Murderers, and for the regulating

Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The latter made about that time, certain Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, by way of Admonition or Inſtruction, in which he recommends, 1. That the Church ſhould be left in the peaceable Enjoyment of its Priviledges and Immunities, and that no Taxes ſhould be laid on the Revenues belonging to it. 2. He admoniſhes the King and the Princes to obey the Archbiſhop and Biſhops; to be humble; to oppreſs no Man; to adminiſter Juſtice to all; to puniſh Criminals; and to relieve the Poor with their Alms. 3. He orders the Biſhops to lead an Exemplary Life; to viſit their Dioceſſes once every year; to preach the Truth boldly to Kings and Princes; to Excommunicate none without juſt grounds, and to ſhew to All the way to Salvation. 4. He enjoyns the Prieſts in like manner to live Circumſpectly, and to wear Habits conformable to their Order. 5. He gives the ſame Admonition to all the Clergy. 6. He exhorts the Monks to perform their Vows, and forbids them to turn Vagabonds, contenting themſelves only with wearing the Habit of Monks, without leading a Life conſonant to their Profeſſion: He recommends to them working with their own Hands, reading and prayer. 7. He prohibits Inceſtuous Marriages with Nuns, or near Relations. 8. He recommends Peace and Union. 9. He enjoyns the Obſervation of the Solemn Faſts of Lent; of the Ember-Weeks, of Wedneſday and Friday; and the Celebration of Divine Service on Sundays and Feſtivals. Laſtly, He recommends the payment of Tythes. There is alſo a Paſtoral Letter written by this Archbiſhop, and directed to his Suffragans, which is related by William of Malmsbury.

An Aſſembly of Biſhops at London A. C. 948.

Edmund being kill'd in the year 946. his Brother Elred took poſſeſſion of the Throne. We have no Laws enacted by this Prince, only the Charter of a conſiderable Donation made by him to the Monaſtery of Crowland, in favour of Turketulus, who had been formerly Chancellor of the Kingdom, and to whom he gave that Abbey. This was done in an Aſſembly of Biſhops and Lords held at London in the year 948.

After the death of Elred, which happen'd in 953 Edwin the Son of Edmund was proclaim'd King, but ſometime after, part of England Revolting, Edgar the Brother of Edwin got a ſhare of his Dominions, and upon his Brother's Death, obtain'd the ſole Poſſeſſion of the whole Kingdom. This Prince being more Religious than his Predeceſſors, entirely re-eſtabliſh'd the Purity of Diſcipline in the Church of England, and brought the Monaſtical Courſe of Life into Repute, by the Advice of S. Dunſtan, who may be call'd the Reſtorer of the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline in England.

S. Dunſtan Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

This Saint was born in the Country of the Weſt-Saxons, in the firſt year of King Ethelſtan's Reign A. C. 923. He enter'd into Holy Orders very young, and after having compleated his Studies, made application to Athelm Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who introduc'd him into the Preſence of King Ethelſtan: Afterward having fall'n into ſome diſgrace at Court, he retir'd to Elfeg Biſhop of Winchester, who adviſ'd him to embrace the Monaſtical Life, which he accordingly did, and continued in his Retirement till the Reign of King Edmund, when he was invited to Court by that Prince: He did not remain long there, without being obnoxious to the Envy and Hatred of ſeveral Perſons, who miſrepreſented him to the King; inſomuch that he was oblig'd to retire to his Solitude of Glaſſenbury, where he took up his Abode; altho' he was reſtor'd to the Favour of King Edmund, who had always a great reſpect for him; granted conſiderable Revenues to his Monaſtery, and continu'd to follow his Counſels, not only in the management of Civil Affairs, but alſo of Eccleſiaſtical. He was no leſs eſteem'd by King Elred, who determin'd to nominate him to the Biſhoprick of Winchester; but Edwin having receiv'd a ſevere Reprimand for his Irregularities from this Abbot, baniſh'd him, and pillaged his Monaſtery. However, King Edgar recall'd him immediately after his Acceſſion to the Crown, and made him not only Biſhop of Winchester, but alſo conferr'd on him the Government of the Church of London. At laſt the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury being vacant in the year 961. by the death of Odo; Elfsin Biſhop of Winchester, who was appointed to ſupply his place, dying in a Journey he made over the Alps to Rome, to fetch the Pall; and Berthelim, who was ſubſtituted in his room, having refus'd to accept that Dignity, Dunſtan was Inveſted with it a few days after, and went to Rome to receive the Pall. At his return, he apply'd himſelf altogether to the Reformation of the Clergy of England, and took upon him to Expel all thoſe who refus'd to lead a Regular Courſe of Life, and to Reſtore the Monks to their former Station.

This Saint had for his Fellow Labourers and Imitators of his Zeal, Ethelwold Biſhop of Winchester, and Oſwald Biſhop of Worceſter, who founded a great number of Monaſteries, and took much pains in Reforming the Clergy, and Extirpating the Vices that were predominant in England. The former dyed in the year 984. before S. Dunſtan, who foretold his approaching Death, as well as that of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, in a Viſit which thoſe two Prelates made him: but the latter did not dye till after this Archbiſhop, viz. in the year 992. As for S. Dunſtan, he ſurviv'd King Edgar, who dy'd in 975. and maintain'd the Right of the young Prince Edward, againſt the Pretenſions of Alfride, who endeavour'd to transfer the Crown to her Son Ethelfred; but Edward being Aſſaſſinated Three years after by the Treachery of that Queen, Dunſtan was conſtrained to Crown Ethelfred, and foretold the Calamities that ſhould befall England, and the Family of this young Prince, as a Puniſhment for his Crime, and that of his Mother. At laſt S. Dunſtan dy'd laden with years and honour A. C. 988.

In his time, and apparently by his Direction, King Edgar in 967. not only publiſh'd Laws like to thoſe of his Predeceſſors, for the preſervation of the Revenues of the Church; for the Payment of Tythes, and S. Peter's Pence; and for the Solemn Obſervations of Sundays and Feſtivals; but alſo divers Ecclesiastical Constitutions, relating to the Manners and Functions of Clergy-men; to the Celebration of the Mass; to the Confession and Pennances that ought to be impos'd on those who commit Sin, &c. Indeed these Canons may serve as a kind of Ritual for the Use of Curates. It is affirm'd that they were made in the year 967. by King Edgar; but this does not appear to be altogether certain, and perhaps they are of a later date. The Discourse which this King made to Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Oswald and Ethelwold Bishops of Worcester and Winchester, is much more certain. He there inveighs against the Irregularities and Disorders of the Clergy, and pathetically Exhorts those Bishops to joyn their Authority with His, to repress their Insolence; and to oblige them to apply the Ecclesiastical Revenues to the Relief of the Poor, for which Use they were design'd. To the end that this Order might be put in Execution, he granted a Commission to those three Prelates to take the Matter in hand, and gave them power to turn out of the Churches such Clergy-men as liv'd dissolutely, and to Substitute others in their room.

A general Council of England in the year 973.

By vertue of this Injunction, S. Dunstan held a General Council A. C. 973. in which he ordain'd that all the Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons, who would not lead a sober Life, should be Expell'd their Churches, and caus'd a Decree to be made, to oblige them to Embrace a Regular and Monastick Course of Life, or to Retire. And accordingly, these three Bishops turn'd the old Clergy-men out of most part of the Churches, and put Monks in their place, or else forc'd them to assume the Monastical Habit.

S. Dunstan did not only shew his Constancy and Zeal, with respect to the Clergy, but was also as zealous in treating Kings and Princes: For he sharply reprov'd King Edgar for abusing a young Maid whom he had lent for out of a Monastery, and impos'd on him a Pennance of Seven years. A certain very potent Earl having married one of his near Kinswomen, he Excommunicated him, and refus'd to take off the Excommunication, altho' the King had commanded him, and the Earl had obtain'd a Brief of the Pope for his Restoration. S. Dunstan being inform'd of it, reply'd, That he was ready to obey the Pope's Commands, provided the Person had really repented of his Offence; but that he would not suffer him to persist in his Sin, not without submitting to the Discipline of the Church to insult over the Prelates, and, as it were, to triumph in his Crime. At last, the Earl being mov'd with his Constancy, and the fear of those Punishments which the Divine Vengeance usually inflicts upon Excommunicated Persons, left his Kinswoman, did Publick Penance, and threw himself down prostrate before S. Dunstan in a Council barefoot, cloath'd with a Woollen Garment, holding a Bundle of Rods in his Hand, and lamenting his Sin, from which S. Dunstan gave him Absolution, at the request of the Bishops of the Council.

A Council under S. Dunstan and King Edgar.

The Reformation of the Clergy cannot be carried on without great Opposition, nor without creating many Male-contents, insomuch that in King Edgar's Life time, the Clergy-men depriv'd of their Benefices, used their utmost Efforts to recover them; and having made a Complaint in an Assembly held at Winchester, in the beginning of the year 975. they prevail'd upon the King by their Entreaties and the Promises they made to lead a more regular Course of Life for the future: But as they were about making a Decree for their Restoration, on Condition they should live more regularly, a Voice was heard coming as it were from the Crucifix, which pronounc'd these words, It will turn to no account, you have past'd a just Sentence, and you will do ill to alter your Decisions. However, after the death of King Edgar these Clergy-men renewed their Instances, and even offer'd force to drive the Monks not only from their Places, but also out of the Monasteries which were lately founded; But S. Dunstan always maintain'd his Reformation, which prevail'd in the most part of the Churches and Monasteries of England, under the Reigns of Edward and Ethelred.

A Council at Winchester A.C. 975.

S. Dunstan and S. Ethelwald did not only take pains to Reform the Ecclesiastical Discipline in England, but also in reviving the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and even they themselves compos'd some Works. A modern English writer, call'd Pits, says that S. Dunstan compil'd certain Forms of Archiepiscopal Benedictions; a small Tract on the Rule of S. Benedict; a Book call'd, Rules for the Monastical Life; several Writings against Vicious Priests; a Treatise of the Eucharist; another of Tythes; a Book of Occult Philosophy; a Tract for the Instruction of the Clergy, and some Letters. And indeed, we cannot be certainly assur'd upon the Credit of this Writer, whether S. Dunstan were really the Author of these Works, which are no longer extant; but we find a Concordance or Rule for the Monastick Life, and under the Name of Edgar set forth by Reinerus, which is apparently a Piece of S. Dunstan, as well as the other Constitutions of that Prince, and there is extant a Letter written by him to Wulfin Bishop of Worcester, which Father Mabillon publish'd from a Manuscript of Monsieur Faure, Doctor of the Faculty of Paris. The Life of S. Dunstan was written by Osborn Chaunter of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, who was Contemporary with this Saint, and is found in the Fifth Benedictine Century of Father Mabillon.

S. Ethelwald Bishop of Winchester.

If we may give farther Credit to Pits, S. Ethelwald in like manner compos'd several Tracts, of which he gives us this following Catalogue: A Book dedicated to Pope John XIV. concerning the Authority of the Bishops over their Priests; a Treatise against those Priests who commit Fornication, and against their Concubines; another of the Abbots of Lindisfarn; another of the Kings, Kingdoms, and Bishopricks of England; a History of the Kings of Great Britain; a Narrative of his Visitations; a Treatise of the Planets and Climates of the World; the Treatise of the Abbots of Lindisfarn, which this Author attributes to S. Ethelwald, is apparently a piece compos'd in Verse by Ethelwulf a Monk of that Abbey. The other Works are no longer Extant, and perhaps never were, but only in Pits's imagination.

Alfric or Ælfric Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The Writers of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory are not agreed about the immediate Succeſſor of S. Dunſtan in the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury: Some give him the Name of Siricius, and others of Alfric or Ælfric: however, it is certain that the latter was Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the beginning of the following Century, in regard that he ſign'd in that Quality a Priviledge granted by King Ethelred: He was a Pupil of S. Ethelwald, ſucceeded him in the Monaſtery of Abingdon; was afterward made Abbot of Malmsbury by King Edgar, then Biſhop of ſome Church in England, about which Authors are not agreed; and at laſt, being advanc'd to the Metropolitan See of Canterbury, he govern'd that Church till about the year 1006. This Archbiſhop in his time was in great reputation for his profound Skill in the Sciences of Grammar and Divinity, inſomuch that he was Surnam'd The Grammarian. His Sermons were tranſlated into the Saxon Tongue, in order to be read publickly in the Churches, and his Letters were inſerted in the Synodical Books of the Church of England. The Engliſh Writers aſſure us, that their Libraries were full of a great number of Works of this Archbiſhop, written in the Saxon Tongue, and they have lately publiſh'd ſome of them tranſlated into Latin, viz. A Paſchal Homily of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, in which he diſcourſes much after the ſame manner as Ratramnus or Bertram, and two Letters, one to Wulfin Biſhop of Salisbury, and the other to Wulſtan Archbiſhop of York on the ſame Subject, which were printed at London in 1566, 1623, and 1638. In the Body of the Councils is contain'd a Canonical Letter of Alfric, directed to Wulfin, which is a kind of Ritual for the uſe of the Prieſts. The principal Manuſcript Treatiſes of this Author, compos'd in the Saxon Tongue, are an Hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament till the Taking of Jeruſalem; a Penitential; Eighty Sermons; a Letter concerning the Monaſtical Life; another againſt the Marriage of Clergy-men; a Saxon Chronicle of the Church of Canterbury; certain Lives of the Saints, and Verſions of ſome Latin Works; among others the Dialogue of S. Gregory.

Fridegod Monk of S. Saviour at Canterbury.

Sometime before Fridegod, a Monk of S. Saviour at Canterbury, wrote in Verſe, at the requeſt of Odo, the Lives of S. Wilfrid and of S. Owen Archbiſhop of York; the former was publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the firſt part of the Third and Fourth Benedictine Centuries. William of Malmesbury obſerves, that theſe Verſes are not altogether contemptible, but that Fridegod intermixes ſo many Greek words and Phraſes which render them unintelligible.

Lanfrid and Wulſtan Monks of Winchester.

At the ſame time Lanfrid, a Monk of Winchester, wrote the Life of S. Swithin, and a Relation of the Miracles that happen'd at his Tranſlation; and after him Wulſtan, Monk of the ſame Monaſtery, compos'd in Verſe the Hiſtory of that Tranſlation, and the Life of S. Ethelwold.

Thus we have given an Account of almoſt all the moſt remarkable Circumſtances that occur in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England in the Tenth Century.

CHAP. VI.

Obſervations on the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the Tenth Century.

Controverſies about Doctrinal Points.

THERE were no Controverſies in the Tenth Age of the Church, relating to Articles of Faith, or Doctrinal Points of Divinity, by reaſon that there were no Hereticks, nor other Inquiſitive Perſons, who refin'd upon Matters of Religion, or undertook to dive into the bottom of its Myſteries. The Sober Party contented themſelves only in yielding an implicite Faith to whatever the Church-men thought fit to deliver from the Pulpit; and the profligate Wretches, abandon'd themſelves to groſs Senſualities, which gave Satisfaction to their brutiſh Appetites, rather than to the Vices of the Mind, to which only ingenious Perſons are liable. Therefore in this Age of Darkneſs and Ignorance, the Church not being diſturb'd upon account of its Doctrines, had nothing to do but to put a ſtop to the Enormities of Diſcipline and Manners.

Of the Euchariſt.

There were nevertheleſs in England ſome Clergy-men, who poſitively affirm'd that the Bread and Wine on the Altar retain'd the very ſame Subſtance after Conſecration, and that they were only the Repreſentation of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and not his Real Body and Blood. Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury being deſirous to oppoſe this Opinion, pray'd to God one day, as he was Celebrating Maſs ſolemnly, in the preſence of a multitude of People, to ſhew the very Subſtance of theſe Myſteries; which happen'd in the breaking of the Conſecrated Bread, out of which (as is reported) iſſued forth ſeveral Drops of Blood; which Miracle being ſeen by his Clergy, and by thoſe who doubted of the Real Preſence of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt in the Euchariſt, they abjured their Error.

Thus

Thus Osborn, a Writer of those times, relates the Matter in the Life of that Saint. The same Author in the Life of S. Dunstan says, that that Saint returning to the Altar, chang'd the Bread and Wine into our Saviour's Body and Blood, by the Prayer of Consecration; but when he had given the Benediction to the People, he left the Altar a second time to preach, and that being altogether transported with the Divine Spirit, he discours'd after such a pathetical manner concerning the Real Presence of the Body of Jesus Christ, of the Future Resurrection, and of Life Eternal, that one would have thought that a glorified Saint was then speaking. Of the Eucharist.

Ratherius Bishop of Verona stifly maintains the same Opinion in one of his Letters; and Fulcuin Abbot of Lobes, in discoursing of the Eucharistical Table, says, That it is the Table on which the Sacred Body of our Lord is consum'd. These Authors express themselves after the same manner as Paschasius Ratherius; nevertheless this did not hinder some others, who liv'd in the end of the same Century, to take part with Retramnus, to make use of his Expressions, and to oppose those of Paschasius. This is apparently done by Alfric Archbishop of Canterbury, and Heriger Abbot of Lobes, altho they do not impugn the Real Presence, as we have made it appear in the preceding Century. These are all the remarkable Circumstances in the Tenth Century, relating to Points of Doctrine; for the Errour of the Anthropomorphites confuted by Ratherius in one of his Sermons, was peculiar to certain Clergy-men of Italy, and those of the Greeks, mention'd by Pope Formosus in one of his Letters to Fulcus, are ancient, and not modern Heresies. We read in a Chronicle of the Abbey of Castres, that Durandus Abbot of that Monastery, in the year 953. confuted one Walfred, who gave it out, that both the Soul and Body perish'd after death; but it is not known whether this Error continu'd long, neither is there any part of Durandus's Piece now extant. The Contests that arose about the validity or invalidity of Ordination made by Intruders, were soon silenc'd. Some Persons were of Opinion, that one might Feast on Fridays, but their Infatuation was not of long continuance. Upon the whole, there was no Council held in this Century that either debated, or made any Decisions with respect to any Point of Doctrine; which shews, that there was no Error in Matters of Faith that prevail'd long, or made any Disturbance in the Church.

Of the Popes Authority.

Howsoever enormous the Irregularities of the Popes might be at that time, nevertheless a great deal of Respect was shewn to their Authority, and the Christians distinguishing, according to Auxilius's Remark, the Holy See, from the Person of those who possess'd it, had as much veneration for the Dignity of the One, as aversion to the Extravagancies of the others; and upon this account they yielded Obedience to the Equitable Laws, and Just and Lawful Ordinances, proceeding from the Authority of the Holy See, and oppos'd the Enterprizes of the Popes, which intrench'd upon the Liberty of the Churches and the Intention of the Canons. This may be observ'd in the conduct of the Bishops of Germany, and in the Letters they wrote concerning the Erections of Bishopricks, which the Pope attempted to make in Moravia, to the prejudice of their Rights; in that of the Bishops of France assembled in a Council at Rheims against Arnulphus; in the Discourse made by the Bishop of Orleance in that Council; and in the Judgment they pass'd with respect to the Legate Attempt, who presum'd to Consecrate a Church without the consent of the Ordinary. Neither were the Bishops of Italy of a different Opinion, as appears from their Deposing of Pope John XII. S. Dunstan shew'd the same Resolution in Refusing to Absolve a Person, altho the Pope had expressly enjoyn'd him to do it; and the like constancy is observable in Ratherius, who did not think himself oblig'd to obey the Order of a Pope, who was about to deprive him of the Disposal of the Ecclesiastical Revenues of his Diocess. However, Magnificent Titles were given to the Popes, and their Primacy and Jurisdiction was acknowledg'd: They had not as yet assum'd the Right of Ordaining Bishops or Metropolitans; nay John X. and Stephen VIII. plainly own'd, that it did not belong to them; but they granted the Pall, not only to Archbishops, but also to several Bishops, which Practice Fulques or Fulco Archbishop of Rheims censures as an Abuse, which sullied the Splendor of the Hierarchical Order. They were desirous, that the Archbishops should come in Person to Rome to receive the Pall, which was usually done by the Archbishops of England and Germany, but not by those of France.

The Popes likewise us'd to erect new Archbishopricks and Bishopricks, and there were several Examples in that Century of these sorts of Erections; as Magdeburg, Mersburg, Passaw, Placentia, &c. They also assum'd to themselves a Power to Judge Bishops primarily, according to the Direction of the Decretals, and claim'd a Right to Summon them to Rome: But it does not appear that the Bishops of France ever acknowledg'd that Right; on the contrary, they follow'd the ancient Custom which makes the Bishops subject to the Judgment of the Provincial Councils, and to prevent the bringing any Appeals to Rome, they oblig'd the accused Persons to make choice of their own Judges, as it happen'd in the Affair of Arnulphus.

John IX. own'd that the Popes might be mistaken, and that their Judgments might be revers'd: That they ought to be chosen by the Bishops of Italy, and the Clergy and People of Rome, with the Emperor's consent, and in the presence of his Deputies; as it was ordain'd in the Council of Rome held under the same John IX. Otho and his Successors had the plenary Injoyment of that Right, and the Election of the Popes depended on those Emperors. Octavian was the first of the Popes who chang'd his Name after his Election, in which he was imitated in the same Century by Gregory V. and Sylvester II. Neither were the Popes as yet absolute Sovereigns in the City of Rome: In the beginning of this Century the Romans enjoy'd an appearance of Liberty under the Government of Alberic. Afterwards Otho and his Successors were Sovereign Princes of Rome, in quality of Emperors; caus'd the Romani to take an Oath of Allegiance to them; and treated as Rebels those who revolted against them: But the Popes had the Demesns of a great number of Towns in Italy, which were granted by King Pepin, and afterwards confirm'd by the Otho's. The Writers of those Times, particularly Ratherius, Abbo, Gerbert, and some others complain'd very much, that under some Popes a shameful Traffick was made at Rome of the most Sacred Things, and that every thing there was to be purchas'd for Money. We also read, that the Popes were us'd to grant Indulgences to those Persons who made a Journey to Rome: and it is related in the Life of S. Ulric, that the Pope sent him back laden with Indulgences.

Several Points of Discipline.

There were few Councils held in this Century, and in the most part of them the Decrees were concerning Tythes; against the Usurpers of Church Revenues; against Church-men who keep Concubines; and against Marriages among near Relations. To which purpose the Degrees of Consanguinity were extended to the Seventh, in which it was forbidden to contract Marriage, and Spiritual Affinity took place as well in the Eastern as the Western Churches: Such Persons as married with these Impediments were divorc'd without redress, neither were any Dispensations granted to Kings and Princes, as it appears from the Case of King Robert, and that of the Emperor Nicephorus Phocas.

Fourth Marriages were absolutely prohibited in the Eastern, but not in the Western parts. The Bishops were chosen by the Clergy and People, but the Princes would not suffer the Election to be made without their consent. The Investitures of the Archbishops and Bishopricks, were granted to Otho I. by Pope Leo VII. and were given with the Ring and Staff. The Translation of Bishops became very frequent, and Coadjutors began to be joyn'd with them, with Assurance of Succeeding them. Thus Uthe Bishop of Strasburg had Archimbaldus for his Coadjutor; but this practice was condemn'd by the Bishops of Germany, with respect to Adalbero, whom S. Ulric his Uncle, who had chosen him for his Coadjutor, and by Gregory V. with respect to the Bishop of Puy in Velay, who in like manner had ordain'd his Nephew.

This Century is the first, in which it is observ'd that Ambition transported the Bishops so far, as to get the possession of several Bishopricks, and in which Bishops were ordain'd at the Age of eighteen years, as Pope John XI. John XII. and the Bishop of Tody; and elected very young, as Hugh of Vermandois, and Theophylact Patriarch of Constantinople. Many Bishops of Italy and Germany oblig'd their Canons to be Regular, and to live in common: others placed Monks in their Cathedrals, and even advanc'd them to Dignities; and others on the contrary, turn'd out irregular Monks, to substitute Secular Clerks in their room; as did Ratherius in one of the Churches of his Diocess. The Ecclesiastical Revenues were usually divided into four parts, and the Bishops assum'd the sole Administration of them, but in some Churches other Clergy-men had particular Revenues, which they enjoy'd independently of the Bishop. After the Death of the Bishops the Revenues of the Church, and those they left, were often expos'd to pillage, as it is related by Ratherius, Atto, and several other Writers. To prevent this Rapine, the Prince or neighbouring Bishop engag'd to take care of them. The Lords were wont to settle Priests at their pleasure, in the Country Churches; Benefices were often conferr'd on unworthy Persons; and sometimes Persons were advanc'd to the Episcopal Dignity, without any merit, and only on account of their quality; an abuse much lamented by Ratherius and Atto. Lastly, Ignorance was so predominant in those times, that it was absolutely necessary to admit Priests of mean parts to the Sacerdotal Function. However, the Bishops endeavour'd to render them more capable, by Synodal Instructions, by frequent Conferences with them, (the Original of which may probably be referr'd to the Ninth Century) by Schools, which were kept in the Cathedral Churches and Monasteries, and by furnishing them with divers Forms of Sermons and Exhortations ready prepared. The Bishops and other Clergy-men were often oblig'd to bear Arms, as Ratherius observes, altho' it be prohibited by the Canons; an abuse which was committed both in the Eastern and Western Parts. In the beginning of this Century, the Monks were very irregular, and the Monasteries were ruin'd, and possess'd by Laicks, who assum'd the quality of Abbots; but after Matters were regulated, the Monastical Discipline was re-establish'd, and Regular Abbots were constituted; nevertheless the Bishops for a long time retain'd some Abbeys as it were in Comendam; the same Abbot, or the same Regular Clerk held several Abbeys, which he caus'd to be govern'd by Co-Abbots or Pro-Abbots, or Superiours. To which we may refer the Original of Congregations. Divers Monks were advanc'd to the Episcopacy, possess'd Dignities in the Cathedral Churches, and were ordain'd Priests under the Title of their Monastery. Publick Pennance was still in use, but very rarely practis'd, and the Canonical Discipline was enervated by the Redemption of Pennances which was then introduc'd: The Rigour and Austerity of Fasting, was likewise much abated, and the Obligation to Receive the Sacrament was reduc'd to four times a year.

Ratherius forbad in his Diocess the Celebration of Marriages on Sundays, and in the time of Lent, altho' the contrary Custom had prevail'd. We find in this Century the first Example of the Benediction of a Bell; for there is no mention made of them in the Authors of the preceding Ages, who have treated at large of Ceremonies. Father Menard cites in his Notes, on S. Gregory's Sacramentary, two ancient Manuscripts which prescribe the Ceremonies of this Benediction, but it is not certain that they are more ancient than the Tenth Century. At that time also they began to recite as a part of Divine Service, the Office of the Virgin Mary: It is related in the Life of S. Ulric, that that Saint was wont to say it every day, and in the continuation of the History of the Bishops of Verdun, mention is made of a certain Clerk whom Berenger, Bishop of that City, the Kinsman of Otho the Great, met in the Church, lying prostrate on the Ground, and saying the Office of the Blest Virgin. Peter Damien in the following Century, in like manner makes mention of two Clerks who were wont to recite it every day; and Pope Urban II. ordain'd in the Council of Clermont, that the Office of the Virgin Mary should be said on Saturday. We may also observe, that the Councils and Bishops of those Times pronounc'd Eternal Anathema's, that is to say, perpetual Excommunications without hopes of Absolution against the Usurpers of Church Revenues, and against those that offer'd any Injury to Ecclesiastical Persons. The manner of clearing those that were accused of any Crime by Fire or Water Ordeal, or by a Duel between two Champions, was then in use, and even Clergy-men were oblig'd to provide a Champion; but there were certain Times when all Acts of Hostility ceas'd, which were call'd The Truce of God. Several Points of Discipline.

Bishops

In this Century we find the first Example of the Solemn Canonization of a Saint by the Pope. This Pope is John XV. who plac'd S. Ulric in the Rank of the Saints in the year 995. at the request of Liutolphus Bishop of Augsburg. We shall here subjoyn the Act it self, which was drawn up on that occasion: John Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to all Archbishops, Bishops and Abbots of France and Germany, Greeting, and the Apostolical Benediction. Having held an Assembly in the Palace of the Lateran, on the last day of January, John the most Holy Pope sitting, with the Bishops, Priests, Deacons and Clergy standing, the most Reverend Liutolphus, Bishop of Augsburg rising up, said, Most Holy Bishop, if it may please you and the rest of the Reverend Bishops and Priests here present, to give leave to read in your presence, the Book which I hold in my hand, concerning the Life and Miracles of S. Ulric, who was sometime Bishop of Augsburg, to the end that you may afterwards ordain what you shall think fit. Then the Life of that Saint being read, they proceeded to the Miracles which were perform'd by him, either in his Life-time, or after his Death, as the restoring of Sight to the Blind; the Exorcising of Devils out of possessed Persons; the Curing of others afflicted with the Palsie, and several other Miracles which were not committed to writing. These things being thus related, we have resolv'd and ordain'd, with the common consent, that the Memory of S. Ulric ought to be honour'd with a pious Affection and a sincere Devotion, by reason that we are oblig'd to honour and shew respect to the Relicks of the Martyrs and Confessors, in order to Adore him whose Martyrs and Confessors they are: We honour the Servants, to the end that this honour may redound to the Lord——— It is our pleasure therefore that the Memory of Ulric be Consecrated to the Honour of the Lord, and that it may serve to celebrate his Praises for ever. Then follows the Anathema against those who shall act any thing contrary to this Decree, with the Seals, of the Pope, of five Bishops, of nine Cardinal Priests, and of some Deacons. The Canonization of Saints.

This is the first Solemn Bull of Canonization; for the more ancient Examples, which are produc'd of the Canonization of S. Suitbert by Pope Leo III. and that of S. Abbo Martyr by Adrian I. at the request of Offa King of the Mercians in the end of the Eighth Century, are only grounded on Supposititious Pieces; nay, the very Name of Canonization in that sense, is yet more Modern then the Tenth Century, and is found only in the Bull of Pope Alexander III. For the Canonization of S. Edward the Confessor, King of England, in the year 1161, in that of the Canonization of S. Thomas of Canterbury Eight years after, and in the Letter of Ulric Bishop of Constance to Calixtus II. in which he sues for the Canonization of Bishop Conrad.

b In the Primitive Church the Name of Saint was given to all Christians, in their Life-time, and even after their Death, when they dyed in the Communion of the Church, having preserv'd the Innocence of their Baptism, but a more particular respect was shewn to those, who dyed upon the account of Religion, and were call'd Martyrs of Jesus Christ; so that the Evidence of the Matter of Fact, and the Testimony of the Faithful, caus'd that Veneration to be paid to their Memory, which their generous Constancy had merited; nevertheless, it belong'd to the Bishops and Clergy to make a Catalogue of those who deserv'd that honour, and to distinguish the false Martyrs from the true. Therefore S. Cyprian in his Ninty seventh Letter admonishes his Clergy to take care exactly to mark all the days of the Death of those who suffer'd Martyrdom, to the end that their Memory might be celebrated with the other Martyrs. Optatus Milevitanus reproves Lucilius for kissing every day, even before the Communion, the Relick of a certain Person, who was said to be a Martyr, but was not yet acknowledg'd as such. It is reported that Pope Clement I. appointed seven Deacons, and Fabian as many Sub-Deacons to commit the Acts of the Martyrs to writing; but this Matter of Fact being grounded only on the Authority of the Author of the Pontifical Book, is of no great Consequence, and so much the rather, in regard that we are inform'd by the Popes Gelasius and Gregory, that these Acts were not much valu'd by the Church of Rome, which was content only to have a Catalogue of the Saints and Martyrs who were to be honour'd. The Councils of Laodicea, Carthage, and Elvira, ordain'd, that great care be taken to make a due distinction between the true and false Martyrs, and the Example of S. Martin of Tours, and several other Reverend Bishops, who dissuaded the People from the Superstitious Worship of false Martyrs, apparently shews that it belongs to all the Bishops to declare what Martyrs ought to be acknowledg'd and publickly honour'd. After the Martyrs in process of time was likewise honour'd, the Memory of Virgins, Anchorites, Bishops renown'd for their Sanctity: and lastly, of those Persons whose singular Vertues were remarkable in their Life-time. Their Names were inserted in the Dypticks, that were recited at the Altar, and they were stiled by the Name of the Saints and Blessed, Τῶν ἁγίων Πάντων.

Every

The Canonization of Saints.

Every particular Church was us'd to place in that rank, thoſe who had firſt propagated the Chriſtian Religion, the Biſhops, and thoſe who had liv'd in great Reputation for their Sanctity. Afterwards were made Kalendars and Martyrologies, of the Saints of ſeveral particular Churches, which were by little and little diſpers'd throughout the Eaſtern and Weſtern Parts. The Church of Rome, as others had done, made uſe of one of theſe Martyrologies, from which Ado compoſed His, and afterwards took in that of Uſuardus; but it does not appear that before the Tenth Century, any Solemn Decrees were made at Rome, or elſewhere, for the Canonization of Saints. Indeed, this Cuſtom was entirely eſtabliſh'd in the Eleventh Century, when Adelardus, Paſchaſius Ratherius, S. Wibroad, Gerard Biſhop of Toul, and Wolfang Biſhop of Ratisbon were Canoniz'd by ſeveral Popes. In the Twelfth Peter d'Agnania was Canoniz'd by Pope Paſchal II. Conrad Biſhop of Conſtantz, by Calixtus II. at the requeſt of Ulric Biſhop of the ſame place; Hugh Biſhop of Grenoble, S. Sturmius Abbot of Fulda, and the Emperor Henry I. by Eugenius III. But it is obſervable, that theſe two laſt Papers declare that the Solemnity of Canonization ought to be perform'd regularly in a General Council, and yet they do it by the Authority of the Church of Rome, with the Advice of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, who were preſent in that City.

During theſe two Centuries, the Metropolitans and Biſhops were not depriv'd of the Right to declare as Saints, ſuch Perſons as died in the Reputation of Sanctity, and to cauſe their Bodies to be expos'd to the Veneration of the Faithful: But Pope Alexander III. firſt reſerv'd to himſelf the Canonization of Saints, as a Matter of great Conſequence, and after him Innocent III. aſſum'd the ſame Right; inſomuch that we do not read that the Biſhops ſolemnly Canoniz'd any Saints ſince that time, altho' there were ſome who were generally reputed ſuch among the People.

The Inſtitution of the ſeven Electors of the Empire.

The Inſtitution of the ſeven Electors of the Empire is alſo referr'd to this Century, according to the general Opinion of the German Hiſtorians, who wrote after the Reign of Frederick II. and who affirm that Pope Gregory V. and the Emperor Otho III. declar'd, with the conſent of the Princes of Germany, that the Election of the Emperor ſhould belong, for the future, only to thoſe ſeven, without allowing any Vote to the others: But the Original of this Epocha is very much diſputed, and is not grounded on any Authentick Record, or the Teſtimony of any Contemporary Writer. Indeed ſome, particularly Jordanes have given it out, that the Right of chooſing the Emperor has been peculiar to the ſeven Electors ever ſince Charlemagn's time; and this Opinion ſeems to be confirm'd by the Authority of Pope Innocent III. who acknowledges the power of Electing the King and Emperor to be inherent in the Princes of the Empire, to whom the Right juſtly belongs, more eſpecially in regard that this Right and Power is deriv'd to them from the Apoſtolical See, in the perſon of Charlemagn, who tranſferr'd the Empire from the Grecians to the Romans. Theodoric Anibom refers this Inſtitution to the time that follow'd the Death of the Emperor Henry II. and makes the Princes of Germany the Authors of it. Onuphrius maintains, that this number of Electors was not fix'd till after the Death of Frederick II. that before that time all the Princes of Germany were wont to give their Suffrages for the Election of the Emperors; that their number was not reſtrain'd to ſeven; that the name of Electors was then unknown; that altho' the preciſe time of the Inſtitution cannot be determin'd, yet it ought to be fix'd between the years 1250. and 1280. and according to all appearance, under the Pontificate of Gregory X. which perhaps gave occaſion to the generality of Authors to refer it to that of Gregory V. Jordanes's Opinion concerning the Antiquity of the ſeven Electors, is at preſent generally diſclaim'd; it being evident that Charlemagn's Poſterity obtain'd the Empire by the Right of Succeſſion, and by the Election of the German, French and Italian Princes and Noble men. After the Death of Lewis IV. the Son of Arnulphus, the laſt of Charlemagn's Race, Italy became (as we have already declar'd) a Prey to the Berengers, to Guy, Lambert, Lewis, Boſo, Hugh, Loebaire, Raoul, &c. of whom ſome affected the Title of Emperor, and even caus'd themſelves to be crown'd. In Germany, Conrad, Henry the Fowler, and Otho were choſen Kings by the Saxons and French, as it is related by Luitprand and Witichindus, Writers, who flouriſh'd at that time. The laſt was alſo acknowledg'd and crown'd Emperor when he had ſubdu'd Italy: His Son and Grandſon obtain'd the Imperial Diadem by the Right of Succeſſion, and by the Election of the Princes, as well Saxons as French and Italians. Therefore till that time, it cannot be ſaid, that the Election of the Emperor was reſerv'd to the ſeven Electors. Now to know whether this was effected by Pope Gregory V. under Otho III. we need only enquire after what manner Hiſtorians relate the Election of his Succeſſors to have been carried on, that is to ſay, whether it were perform'd by the ſeven Electors, or indifferently by all the German Princes. Otho Friſingenſis aſſures us, that after the Deceaſe of Otho III. Henry Duke of Bavaria was choſen Emperor by all the Nobility or Lords of the Kingdom: Ab omnibus regni primoribus; and this Author ſpeaks after the ſame manner concerning the Election of Conrad, who ſucceeded Henry: But nothing more plainly ſhews to whom the Right of chooſing the Emperor belong'd, then that which happen'd in the time of the Emperor Henry the Fourth, when Pope Gregory the Seventh deſign'd to Depoſe him, and caus'd Rodolphus to be ſubſtituted in his room; for he made application to all the Dukes, Earls and Biſhops of the German Empire, and Rodolphus was choſen by a Party of the Princes different from the Electors, among whom are nam'd the Biſhops of Wurtsburg and Metz, and the Duke of Carinthia.

After

Afterward when Henry the Fifth dispossessed his Father of the Imperial Throne, and caus'd the Inful- himself to be plac'd on it in his stead, this was done by all the Princes of Germany indifferently, titure of as it is related by Otho Frisingensis, and by the Abbot of Urspergo. Lotharius the Second was in the seven like manner elected Emperor by the Princes of the Empire, at the solicitation of the Archbishop of Electors of Mentz. When Conrad the Third was at first only chosen by a small number of Princes, and Henry the Empire. of Bavaria with some Saxon Princes revers'd his Election, because they were not present, it was requisite to call a general Assembly of all the Princes, in which the Saxons assisted, and gave consent to his Election. After the death of Conrad, Frederick Barbarossa was proclaim'd Emperor in an Assembly of all the Princes of Germany, in which the Barons of Italy were also present. Lastly, In the time of Pope Innocent the Third, the German Princes being divided, after the Death of Henry the Sixth some of them elected his Brother Otho, and others Philip of Schwaben; on which occasion Letters were written on both sides to the Pope: The Electors of Otho were, the Archbishop of Cologn, the Bishop of Paderborn, two other Bishops, and two Abbots, the Duke of Lorrain and Brabant, the Marquess of the Sacred Empire, and the Count of Kuk, who declare in the Body of the Letter, that they elected Otho, and confirm their Proceedings by their respective Seals. Those of the contrary Party were the Archbishops of Madgeburg, Trier, and Resancon; the Bishops of Ratisbon, Frisingen, Augsburg, Constantz, Eichstadt, Worms, Spire, Hildersheim, and Brixen; the Chancellour of the Emperial Court, four Abbots, the King of Bohemia, the Dukes of Saxony, Bavaria, Austria and Moravia; the Marquess of Ravensperg, and other Potent Noble-men of Germany, who all declare that they had chosen Philip Emperor, and that many other German Princes had consented to his Election by Letters.

This evidently proves that the Election of the Emperors was not reserv'd to the seven Electors, but that it belong'd to all the Princes of the Empire. Innocent the Third replying to those Letters, That his Legat was not capable of assisting at the Election of an Emperor, either in quality of an Elector, or in that of a Judge; not as an Elector, because it does not belong to him; but to the Princes, on whom the Power of choosing the Emperor is devolv'd according to ancient custom; more especially in regard that they receiv'd it from the Holy See, which transferr'd the Roman Empire, in the Person of Charlemagn, from the Grecians to the Romans. These are the words of that Pope, which are manifestly misapplyed, when alledg'd in behalf of the seven Electors: it being apparent, that in this place, he makes mention of all the Princes of the Empire, who had an inherent Right to elect the Emperors ever since the time of Charlemagn; affirming that neither had his Legat acted as a Judge, in regard that he had not proceeded against Philip in a Judiciary Form, nor pass'd any Judgment upon the Validity or Nullity of the Election: That therefore he had only perform'd the Function of a Denuncer, by declaring to them, that the Duke was Incapacitated from being elected, whereas Otho was not. That many of those persons, who had a right to choose the Emperor, had approv'd Otho's Election: And that they who had chosen Philip, had forfeited their Right, by carrying on the Election, in the absence, and to the contempt of the others. That besides, Philip was not crown'd Emperor, either in the place where it ought to have been done, or by a person, whose office it was to perform the Ceremony: whereas Otho was crown'd at Aix-la-Chapelle, which was the proper place for his Coronation, and by the Archbishop of Cologn, whose Right it was to officiate at the Solemnity: That therefore he nominated and declar'd Otho Emperor, being incited thereto by a principle of Justice, as also upon account that he had a Right to favour whom he thought fit, when the Suffrages of the Electors were divided: That besides, there were several lawful Impediments against Philip Duke of Schwaben, as his being Excommunicated, Attainted of Perjury, and descended of the Race of the Persecutors of the Church.

Thus this Answer supposes that these persons, who had a right to choose the Emperor, and who are mention'd by this Pope, are not only the seven Electors, but also all the Princes and Noblemen of the Empire, of whom a party had elected Otho, and the greater number Philip of Schwaben: But after the death of the latter, all the Suffrages were re-united in favour of Otho A. D. 1209, and in the following year, Otho being Excommunicated, the Princes of Germany, viz. the King of Bohemia, the Dukes of Austria and Bavaria, the Landgrave of Thuringen, and many others being assembled, elected Frederick King of Sicily Emperor. Hitherto we find no mention of the seven Electors; and indeed the first Writer that makes any, is the Cardinal of Ostia, who liv'd in the time of Pope Innocent the Fourth, and speaks of them in his Commentary on the Decretal of Innocent the Third, where he affirms that the Electors mention'd in that place, are the Archbishops of Mentz, Cologn, and Trier, the Count Palatine of the Rhine, the Duke of Saxony, the Marquess of Brandenburg, and the Duke of Bohemia. Matthew Paris writing the History of the Council of Lyons, at the same time reports, that after the Deposing of Frederick, Pope Innocent the Fourth ordain'd that the seven Electors should pass into an Island of the River Rhine, there to choose an Emperor; but those seven Electors, whom he names, are the Archbishops of Cologn, Mentz, and Saltzburg, and the Dukes of Austria, Bavaria, Saxony, and Brabant. However, Martinus Polonus a contemporary Writer, names the seven Electors after this manner, that is to say, the three high Chancellors of the Empire, viz. the Archbishop of Mentz, the Chancellor of Germany, the Archbishop of Trier Chancellor of Gaul, the Archbishop of Cologn Chancellor of Italy, the Marquess of Brandenburg High Chamberlain, the Palatine of the Rhine High Steward, the Duke of Saxony Gentleman of the Horse, and the King of Bohemia High Cupbearer. This Author says thus much in speaking ting of Otho the Third, which has induc'd ſome to believe, that they were inſtituted under that Emperor, although he obſerves that it did not happen till afterward. This full Relation makes it appear that the Inſtitution of the ſeven Electors attributed to Pope Gregory V. without any juſt grounds, is nothing near ſo ancient, and that 'tis very probable that the Electors of the Emperor were not reduced to the number of ſeven, till the Pontificate of Innocent the Fourth, and that before, all the Princes and Noble-men of the Empire indifferently, might have a ſhare in his Election, notwithſtanding the Aſſertions of the Canoniſts and the Modern Hiſtoriographers of Germany to the contrary.

To the Reader.

BY how much the farther Progreſs we make, in the ſeveral Ages of the Church, ſo much the greater Number of Conteſts appear to our View; every Age ſucceſſively affording Variety of Matter, and producing a new Scene of Affairs. Thus for inſtance, in the Eleventh Century, different Opinions aroſe concerning the Holy Sacraments; the Latin and Greek Churches came to an open Rupture; the Popes took upon them to depoſe Emperors and Kings; and Scholaſtick Divinity, the Source of an infinite Number of Queſtions, took then its firſt Riſe. The Minds of Men being recovered, as it were, from that Lethargy, wherewith they were ſeiz'd in the preceding Age; they began to apply themſelves to Study, in the beginning of this: Inſomuch that in a ſhort ſpace of time, all Europe was fill'd with Judicious and Learned Perſonages, who communicated their Knowledge to others, either by Publick Lectures or Writings.

The Controverſies, that afterwards aroſe, were likewiſe a powerful Motive to excite them to Study; and gave Occaſion to thoſe, who were endow'd with extraordinary Parts, to exerciſe their Pens, and to ſhew their Learning. Some were very ſucceſsful in imitating the Ancients, both in their Style and manner of Writing; but the greateſt part of them, ſtill retain'd ſomewhat of the Barbariſm and Courſeneſs of the former Age, and others fell into that uncouth and barren Method of handling Matters, which is more eſpecially peculiar to Logicians. The moſt notorious Diſorders were regulated; enormous Crimes were reſtrain'd; and the Biſhops took a great deal of pains in reforming Church-Diſcipline; which nevertheleſs, was not reſtor'd to its ancient Perfection. Thus much may ſerve to give a general Idea of the Eleventh Century, which the Learned M. DU PIN (according to his uſual Method) has improved to the beſt Advantage.

CHAP. I.

Of the Writings of S. Fulbert, Biſhop of Chartres.

S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres.

WE will begin this Eleventh Century with S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres, who was one of the principal Reſtorers of Learning, of the Sciences, and of Divinity. He came from Rome to France, and held his publick Lectures in the Schools of the Church of Chartres, about the end of the Tenth, and the beginning of the Eleventh Century. His Reputation gain'd him Scholars from all Parts, who went out of his School full of Learning and Piety, and diffuſed his Light in France and Germany; inſomuch that all the Ingenious Perſons of that time, gloried in having been his Scholars. He was in great Repute with King Robert; and, as ſome Hiſtorians tell us, he was his Chancellor. In the Year 1007. he ſucceeded Radulphus in the Biſhoprick of Chartres; and govern'd that Church with a great deal of Vigilance and Prudence, for the ſpace of One and twenty Years and ſome Months. He dy'd April 10. 1028.

He compos'd ſeveral Letters, Sermons, and Pieces of Poetry. His Letters amount to 134.

In the Firſt he explains three Eſſential Points of our Faith; namely, The Myſtery of the Trinity, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacraments of Life; to wit, of the Body and Blood of our Lord. We ſhall not here ſtand to repeat what he has ſaid about the Myſteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation; 'tis enough to take notice that he has given a very exact Explanation of them, and that he has very particularly refuted the Errors of the Arians, Neſtorians and Eutychians. Upon the Sacraments, he ſays, That we ought not to reſt upon the External and Viſible Signs, but to attend to the Inviſible Power and Efficacy of theſe Myſteries. " We know, ſays he, and 'tis an unqueſtionable Truth, That we were " polluted by our firſt Birth, and purified by the ſecond; therefore we are buried and we " die with JESUS CHRIST, that we may be born again and quicken'd with him. " The Water and the Holy Ghoſt are united in that Sacrament; the Water denotes the " Burial, the Holy Ghoſt the Life Eternal; as JESUS CHRIST lay buried in the

S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres.

" Ground for three Days, ſo is Man dipp'd, and as it were buried three times in the Wa" ter, that he may riſe again by the Holy Spirit. He afterwards proves, That 'tis God " which Baptizeth; and that tho' a wicked Man ſhould adminiſter this Sacrament, yet it does " not hinder the Remiſſion of Sins, becauſe 'tis not he who is the Author, but only the Mi-
" niſter of the Sacrament; as he himſelf acknowledges, when he ſays, He who has regene" rated you by Water and the Holy Spirit, grant you the Unction of Salvation. Now 'tis
" God alone who is the Author of Grace, the Diſpenſer of Spiritual Gifts, and who remits
" Sins. In diſcourſing on the third Point, namely, concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of CHRIST, after he had taken notice of its Sublimity, and its Incomprehenſibility; he ſays, That God commiſerating our Frailty, has provided a Remedy for us by this propitiatory Sacrifice offer'd for our daily Faults; and foraſmuch as he has taken out of our ſight, and carry'd to Heaven that Body which he offer'd for our Redemption, that we might not be depriv'd of the preſent Protection of his Body, he has left us a Salutary Pledge of his Body and Blood, which is not a Symbol of a vain, empty Myſtery, but the real Body of JESUS CHRIST, which his ſecret Efficacy produceth every Day after an inviſible manner, in the Solemnity of thoſe Myſteries, under the viſible Form of the Creature. 'Tis this Body which he ſpake of to his Diſciples a little before his Paſſion, This is my Body, and this is my Blood: And elſewhere, He that eateth my Fleſh, and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him, John 6. 56. Being therefore thus inſtructed by the Will and Pleaſure of this true Maſter, in partaking of his Body and Blood, we may boldly maintain, That we are chang'd into his Body, and that he dwelleth in us, not only by an Union of the Will, but by the Reality of the Nature which is united to us. He adds, That we ſhould not imagine it to be any Diſhonour to a God, who condeſcended to enter into the Womb of a Virgin, to be in Pure and Virgin Creatures: That what appears externally to be the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, became internally the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: And to make this Change the more credible, he compares it to the Creation; and ſays, That if God could make Creatures out of Nothing, he could more eaſily convert them into the Subſtance of his Body.

The Second Letter of Fulbert of Chartres is concerning a Cuſtom in uſe in his time, of giving to the Prieſts, after their Ordination, a Conſecrated Hoſt, which they kept and communicated of for forty Days together. He had been ask'd the Reaſon of this Cuſtom. But before he reply'd to that, he obſerv'd, That different Churches had their different Cuſtoms; which was no hindrance of their being united in the ſame common Faith. Afterwards, he ſays, That this Cuſtom was obſerv'd by all the Biſhops of his Country: That he remember'd that formerly a Prieſt, having receiv'd a conſecrated Hoſt from his Biſhop, and communicating thereof every Day, it one Day happen'd, That after he had celebrated theſe Myſteries, he loſt this Hoſt, by wrapping his Habit in the Communion Table-cloth. That on the Morrow, in the time of Celebration, when he came to communicate, he was very much ſurpriz'd at his miſſing the Hoſt. That the Biſhop, being inform'd of what had happen'd through his Careleſsneſs, had impos'd on him a very ſevere Pennance. S. Fulbert adds, That this Accident gave him an occaſion of asking this Biſhop, Whether it were not better that the Prieſts ſhould eat this Hoſt, the firſt or ſecond Day after it was conſecrated, without dividing it into ſo many Pieces? But that this Biſhop had return'd him this Anſwer, That they were oblig'd to keep this Hoſt for the ſpace of Forty Days; becauſe, as JESUS CHRIST had been Forty Days upon Earth after his Reſurrection, and appear'd to his Apoſtles ſeveral times; ſo the Biſhop, in ordaining his Prieſts, gave them the Euchariſt to take for Forty Days together, to put them in mind of thoſe Forty Days during which our Lord appear'd to his Apoſtles after his Reſurrection. Fulbert having ask'd, Whether this Myſtery might not be as well perform'd by the Bread which the Prieſts conſecrated every Day, was anſwer'd by the Biſhop, That as many particular Churches ſpread over the Face of the whole Earth, made but One Catholick Church, becauſe they have all one Common Faith; juſt ſo, many Particular Hoſts offer'd by many Faithful, are only One Bread, becauſe of the Unity of the Body of CHRIST: That the Bread conſecrated by the Biſhop, and the Bread conſecrated by the Prieſt, are chang'd into one and the ſame Body of JESUS CHRIST, by the Omnipotency of the ſame Virtue which operateth in both; but as it may be ſaid in ſome meaſure, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST born of the Virgin, and nailed to the Croſs, is different from the Body of JESUS CHRIST when raiſed from the Dead: Even ſo it ſeems, That the Bread conſecrated on the Ordination-day, and kept by the Prieſts, may have a particular Signification diſtinct from the Bread which was conſecrated every Day; the former may denote the Body of JESUS CHRIST raiſed from the Dead, to die no more; the latter, JESUS CHRIST who dies and riſes again every Day for us.

The Third and Fourth Letters are directed to King Robert; wherein he prays him to order Eudes Count of Chartres, to cauſe the Caſtles to be demoliſh'd which were built by Vicount Geofrey, and very much incommoded the Church of Chartres.

The Two following contain nothing in them remarkable.

The Seventh is directed to Leoterick Archbiſhop of Sens, whom he exhorts to make uſe of his Authority in ſuccouring Aviſgaudus Biſhop of Mans, whom the Count of that City oppreſs'd; and to threaten the ſaid Count with Excommunication, in caſe he did not reſtore to him his Revenue, and let him be quiet. S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres.

The Eighth is a Copy of a Letter which he had written to this Aviſgaudus, who complain'd that Fulbert and Leoterick had publiſh'd his Confeſſion. Fulbert gives him to underſtand, That he wrong'd them, in having ſuch a Thought of them; That they had never publiſh'd any thing but what was for his Advantage, and which might ſerve to juſtifie him againſt thoſe who had accus'd him of having quitted his Biſhoprick out of Avarice, Baſeneſs, or for ſome other diſhonourable Cauſe. That if he had truſted to their Secrecy ſuch Things as he ought to repent of, they had taken great Care to conceal them; but that they had no Power to conceal thoſe, which were publick both before and after his Confeſſion. As to that part of this Biſhop's Complaint that they had ſaid of him, That he was in Love with a Monaſtick Life, Fulbert returns him this Anſwer, That he ought not to take this amiſs, ſince it could be no Prejudice to him; for the Love of a Religious Life render'd him rather worthy, than unworthy of the Biſhoprick into which he deſir'd to enter again, were there nothing elſe to hinder him from it. But that they could not perceive how he could be put into Poſſeſſion again, becauſe he could not complain that he had been turn'd out of it, or that any one had been put into Poſſeſſion of that See againſt his Will; ſince he had voluntarily quitted it under pretence of his Indiſpoſition, and deſired the King, That either Franco, Dean of the Church of Paris, or ſome other Perſon might be put into his Place: That after this Reſignation, Franco had been put into his Place according to the Election of the Clergy, the Votes of the Laity, the Donation of the King, and the Approbation of the Holy See; and that he had been ordain'd by the Archbiſhop of Sens his Metropolitan.

In the Ninth Letter he returns an Anſwer to the Biſhop of Paris, upon three Points. The Firſt is upon that Biſhop's deſiring him to Excommunicate one who had ſeiz'd upon ſome Revenues belonging to the Church of Paris. He ſays he had not done it, (1.) Becauſe he had not met with any Man who would venture to give him notice of this Excommunication. (2.) Becauſe 'twas to no purpoſe that this Man ſhould be declared excommunicated in the Church of Chartres, without knowing any thing of it. (3.) Becauſe he thought it might more conveniently be done in a Synod of the Biſhops of the Province. The Second is about the Arch-deacon of Paris, of whom his Biſhop complain'd. Fulbert ſent him Word, That it ſignified nothing to conſult him about it, ſince it was his Buſineſs to judge him; and that for his part he could not condemn him, till he had firſt heard him. The Third is upon a Diſpute which happen'd between Adeoldus and the Monks of S. Denis. He ſays, That Adeoldus offer'd to refer himſelf to their Arbitration; and that if he pleaſed to appoint a Day wherein he would meet him, with ſome One in behalf of the Monks of S. Denis, at S. Arnulphus, he would be there likewiſe to adjuſt theſe Differences.

The following Letters, to the One and twentieth, contain very little of Eccleſiaſtical Matters; but in this there is mention made of a very remarkable Matter of Fact. The Abbot of S. Peters of Chartres being very ſick, a Monk, named Megenard, ſtole by Night out of the Monaſtery, and went to beg the Abbacy of Count Thibold, Son of Count Eudes of Chartres, who was then at Blois. The Count ſent him back on the Morrow with Orders, That he ſhould be received as Abbot. Anſwer was made him, That this ought not to be allowed; becauſe they could not acknowledge him for Abbot, who had begg'd the Abbacy of another before the preſent Abbot was dead, and who intended to carry it by Authority, and not receive it by Election. He went and carry'd this Anſwer back to the Count; and within five Days after, the Abbot dy'd. The Monks, with ſome Canons who had enter'd the Monaſtery, held a Chapter: Fulbert was there preſent, and ask'd them, Whether there were any among them who approv'd of what Megenard had done? They all anſwer'd, No. Thereupon it was order'd, That One ſhould be ſent to the Count, to carry him the News of the Abbot's Death; and to intreat him to grant the Monks leave to chuſe another. At the breaking up of the Chapter, two Monks, who had been Provoſts of the Out-parts, went to Blois to tell the Count, That Megenard was Elected, and required to be Abbot, by the Monks of S. Peter. Theſe Monks, having Intelligence thereof, made a Proteſtation againſt it. The Count brought Megenard, and introduced him by Force: The Monks withdrew, and were receiv'd by Biſhop Radulphus. Notwithſtanding all this, Megenard receiv'd Benediction from a Biſhop of Bretagne, mauger the Proteſtations of the Deputy of the Archbiſhop, and of ſeveral Monks. He ſeized upon the Monaſtery, and ſollicited the Biſhops, and the Pope himſelf, to be eſtabliſh'd therein. Fulbert laments this Misfortune, and intreats him to whom he writ, to do his beſt for theſe poor Monks.

The Two and twentieth Letter is directed to Pope John XVII. He informs him, That Count Radulphus, whom he had excommunicated for ſeizing the Revenues of his Church, and for having abus'd a Clerk, was gone to Rome to ſeek for the Abſolution of a Sin, for which he would make no Satisfaction. He conjures the Pope not to admit him to Communion.

S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres.

The following Letters to the Thirty fourth, are directed to Leoterick Archbiſhop of Sens. What is moſt remarkable in them about Matters Eccleſiaſtical, we ſhall here briefly inſert. In the Three and twentieth he adviſes him, to ſend back a Prieſt, who was guilty of Simony, into his Dioceſs who had ordain'd him; and, if he tarry'd in his Dioceſs, to ſuſpend him from all Eccleſiaſtical Functions. In the Five and twentieth, he deſires him to degrade a Prieſt who had been ordain'd for a Reward, that he might afterwards enjoin him Pennance for two Years, and then re-eſtabliſh him. He adds, That it was not requiſite to re-ordain him, but to re-eſtabliſh him in his Orders, by the proper Inſtruments and Habits, by ſaying, I reſtore to thee the Order of Door-keeper, &c. in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And afterwards to give him the Bleſſing in theſe Terms; The Bleſſing of God Almighty, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, reſt upon thee, that thou mayſt be confirm'd in the Sacerdotal Order; and that thou mayſt offer Propitiatory Sacrifices to God Almighty, for the Sins and Offences of the People. In the Twenty eighth he complains, That Leoterick had ordain'd ſeveral Biſhops in his Province, without calling him thereto; and that he had call'd the Biſhop of Troyes, who was incapable of any ſuch thing. In the Twenty ninth, he refuſes to give Abſolution to ſome Homicides of Senlis, at the Price they offer'd him. In the Thirtieth he declares, That he had not elected Odotrick for Biſhop; but that after he had been elected by the Clergy or Laity, he had ordain'd him Prieſt; and upon Leoterick's Account, he had order'd him to go to Rome, there to be ordain'd Biſhop. In the Thirty third he determines, That a Man who had been God-father to his own Son at Confirmation, ought to be divorc'd from his Wife; which he grounds upon a Canon of the Council of Leſſines, held under Charlemaigne.

The Thirty fourth is written in the Name of Leoterick and Fulbert of Chartres, to the Clergy of the Church of Paris; to whom they wiſh, in the Preface, Temperantiam in Proſperis, Fortitudinem in Adverſis, Charitatem ubique; i. e. Temperance in Proſperity, Courage in Adverſity, and Charity at all times. They declare to them, That they ſympathize in the Troubles which their Biſhop undergoes; but they are ſorry, that he would not apply himſelf to them for Conſolation; and they wonder that theſe Canons ſhould admit to their Communion ſuch Perſons who are refractory to the Laws of God, and diſobedient to their Biſhop: They aſſure them, they ought not to defer ſeparating them from their Communion, till their Biſhop had excommunicated them. In particular, they accuſe Lyſiard Arch-deacon of Paris, who inſtead of being what he ought to be, The Eye of his Biſhop, the Reliever of the Poor, and the Inſtructer of the Ignorant, had run counter thereto; and was become to his Biſhop a Blinder of the Eyes, to the Poor a Robber, and to the Ignorant an erreonous Guide, by taking away the Tithes and Oblations of the Altars from the Poor, and giving them to Seculars. Beſides, they accus'd him of Perjury and Diſloyalty to his Biſhop; and orders them to ſhew him this Letter, that ſo he may reform himſelf.

In the Thirty ſixth, Fulbert demonſtrates the Enormity of a Deacon's Offence, who pretending to be a Prieſt, had celebrated Maſs.

In the Thirty eighth he ſays, That Ebaud, elected Arch-biſhop of Rheims, ought not to be rejected, tho' he were a Laick, provided he had been brought up in Piety, and kept himſelf always untainted in his Morals; becauſe there are ſeveral Examples of very great Men, ſuch as S. Ambroſe of Milan, S. Germain Biſhop of Auxerre, and ſeveral others, who, having led a good Life whilſt Laicks, have prov'd holy Biſhops.

In the Thirty ninth he writes to the Arch-biſhop of Bourges, That the Abbot Salomon and his Monks, cited before that Arch-biſhop upon the Buſineſs of Tedfride, could not poſſibly make their Appearance, becauſe it was then their Harveſt-time; but that at the Council of Orleans, to be held the Fifteenth of October, they would appoint him the Time and the Place, wherein they would have an Hearing. Afterwards he complains, That this Arch-biſhop had written a Letter to Arnulphus Abbot of S. Peter, whereby he declar'd, that he had excommunicated his Monks. He gave him to underſtand, That he had never any where Read that he had ſuch a Power allow'd him. This Arch-biſhop had written another Letter to him, wherein he had reprov'd him for having ſubmitted the Abbot Tedfride, without an Hearing, to Monk Salomon, who was only Provoſt. Fulbert reply'd, That it was not done before Tedfride had been heard, and that he was not Abbot when Salomon was put in his Place: That Abbot Tedfride being accus'd by his Monks, had declar'd, That he would no longer endure them; That he abdicated their Government, and that he would be no longer Monk of Bonneval. That after this Declaration he went, by his Permiſſion, to the Dioceſs of Bourges; and that the Monks of Bonneval had elected one of their Brethren, and had preſented him to Count Odo, that he might confer the Abbacy on him, according to Cuſtom; and that this having been granted to him, he had made him Abbot.

In the Forty fifth, directed to Adarus Biſhop of Laon, he relates a tragical Action, which happen'd in his Dioceſs. The Sub-dean of his Church being dead, the Biſhop of Senlis deſir'd of him this Benefice for himſelf, or his Brother. Fulbert reply'd, That it was not ſuitable for him, who was a Biſhop; and that he could not give it to his Brother, who had neither Age nor Manners requiſite for ſuch a Place: That he had choſen a pious Man out of his own Clergy, on whom he had conferr'd that Benefice. That the Biſhop of Senlis being incens'd at this Denial, and coveting this Benefice, had ſent high Threatnings to the Incumbent: That theſe Threatnings afterwards were put in Execution: And that within a few Days after the People of Senlis had ſet upon him as he was going to Church, and had kill'd him in the Porch of the Cathedral. That the Authors of this Offence had been diſcover'd by one of their Valets, who being taken as he was drying his Cloths, had diſcover'd all. S. Fulbert exhorts the Biſhop of Laon to excommunicate theſe Homicides. S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres.

The Forty eighth and ninth, are directed to the Biſhop of Senlis, upon the ſame Subject.

In the Forty ſeventh, he adviſes the Arch-biſhop of Tours, That if the Pope has refus'd to give him the Pall without a lawful Cauſe, he ought not to be diſcourag'd at it; and that he ought to repeat his Requeſts, becauſe, in the Court of Rome, there were certain Rules, not practis'd any where elſe.

In the Fiftieth he determines, That a Woman, who was engag'd upon Oath to marry a Man, could not marry another till after his Death, or by his Conſent.

The Fifty firſt contains the Reſolution of another Caſe of the ſame Nature. A Woman not being willing to live with her Husband, and ſaying ſhe had rather live a Nun, the Husband deſires he may have leave to marry another. S. Fulbert declares, That 'tis his Opinion he could not have leave, till ſhe were either Dead, or turn'd Recluſe.

In the Two and fiftieth he declares, That it was better not to celebrate Maſs, unleſs there were two or three Communicants. Which he proves thus; Becauſe the Word Church, without which there can be no true Sacrifice, cannot be ſaid but of many; for when 'tis ſaid Dominus Vobiſcum, The Lord be with you; it implies, That there are more than one. And laſtly, becauſe the Prayers are made for thoſe who offer the Sacrifice.

The Fifty Seventh is directed to the Biſhop of Liſieux, who had interdicted the Prieſts of the Canons of Chartres, who had Churches in his Dioceſs, becauſe they did not pay him a certain Duty, call'd the Synodical Duty. He ſays, That this Duty had been remitted to them who were in the Dioceſs of Chartres, by the Liberality of his Predeceſſors; but that this does not prejudice the Right of the Biſhop of Liſieux, over thoſe who are of his own Dioceſs; that therefore if he would not be pleas'd to remit it, they ſhould pay him, provided he would re-eſtabliſh them.

In the Fifty eighth, directed to the Biſhop of Paris, he declaims againſt the Requeſt which this Biſhop had made to him, of giving Benefices to Laicks.

The Sixtieth Letter, directed to Leoterick Arch-biſhop of Sens, is written about the Excommunication of Guido, an Accomplice in the Murder of the Sub-dean of Chartres. Leoterick had writ to Fulbert, That this Man deſir'd to be examined in a Synod of Biſhops. Fulbert returns him this Anſwer, That there was no further need of examining his Cauſe, ſince he was proved Guilty.

In the Sixty firſt, he tells Theodoric the Reaſons why he did not Ordain him, (1.) Becauſe on the Day whereon he was to be ordain'd, he had neither Letters, nor Deputies from the Biſhops of the Province, to intimate their Approbation of his Ordination. (2.) Becauſe he he had ſeen a Suſpenſion of the Pope iſſued out againſt him, becauſe of an Homicide he had been guilty of. (3.) Becauſe by his own Confeſſion he was unworthy thereof. (4.) Becauſe the Clergy and Laity had not elected him freely, but through Fear, and at the Recommendation of the Prince, who had not given them Liberty of chooſing any other. He adds, That though he had ſo many Reaſons for not ordaining him, yet he had like to have been kill'd in the Church by thoſe who ſupported his Intereſt. He reproves him for thus endeavouring to be ordain'd by Force, and for having celebrated Maſs in a violated Church, before it had been reconcil'd.

The Sixty ſecond Letter is directed to the Biſhop of Orleans, to whom at the top he wiſhes, Obſequium-Dilectionis ſine fuco Diſſimulationis, i. e. The Obedience of Love, without the leaſt Varniſh of Diſſimulation. He therein gives him the Reaſons why his Clergy could not go in a ſolemn Proceſſion to the Church of Orleans, according to Cuſtom.

In the Sixty Fourth he approves of the Diſſolution of Marriage, for the Cauſe of Impotence.

In the Seventy ſecond, he adviſes the Abbot and Monks of S. Medard, to live in Subjection to their Biſhop, according to the Laws of the Church.

In the Seventy third he gives the ſame Advice to the Monks of Orleans, whom the Biſhop of that City had Excommunicated, becauſe they would not ſubmit to his Juriſdiction.

In the Seventy fourth, he reproves a Clerk of his Church, who had been undutiful to him.

In the Eighty third, directed to the Almoner of the Church of Orleans, he handles this Queſtion, What Puniſhment a Prieſt was liable to, who had celebrated Maſs without Communicating? He ſays, That if he did it through Infidelity, or becauſe he was apprehenſive of his being guilty of Drunkenneſs or Uncleanneſs, he ought to be enjoyn'd Pennance, till he were throughly converted. That if he did it through any Diſguſt, becauſe of the frequent Celebration of the Holy Sacrifice, he ought to be excluded from communicating for a whole Year. That if he did it through any Scruple of Conſcience, and for a ſmall Offence, 'tis ſufficient to reprove him with Gentleneſs. And Laſtly, That if he did it through any Weakneſs in his Head or Stomach, he ought to abſtain from celebrating, till he was reſtored to his Health.

The Ninety fifth is a Letter of King Robert directed to Guarlin Arch-biſhop of Bourges, wherein he acquaints him, that in ſeveral Parts of his Kingdom there fell a ſhower of Blood, of that Nature, that it ſtuck ſo cloſe on the Fleſh, on the Cloths, and on the Stones, that no waſhing could fetch it out: Whereas when it fell on Wood, it was eaſily waſh'd off. He deſires to know whether any ſuch thing had ever happened. The Arch-biſhop of Bourges Anſwers him in the following Letter, that this Prodigy Prognoſticated ſome Civil War, for the confirmation of which he produces ſeveral Examples of the ſame Nature taken out of Hiſtory, to which he adds ſeveral myſtical Reaſons. Fulbert of Chartres in the following Letter relates another Inſtance of it, taken out of the Writings of Gregory of Tours.

In the Ninety ninth Letter, Fulbert exhorts a Count to do Pennance, and to reſtore to the Church, what of Right belong'd to it.

In the Hundredth he declar'd to Count Fulcus, who had in his Retinue, ſeveral who were Rebels to the King; that he would excommunicate him, if he did not turn them off.

The Hundred and Eighth is a Letter of Compliment from Odilo to Fulbert of Chartres, wherein he gives him many high Commendations.

The Six and twenty following Letters are written in the name of the Canons of Chartres, but contain nothing remarkable concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

There is nothing extraordinary in the Sermons of S. Fulbert. The Firſt is upon the Trinity. In the Second he exhorts his People to Repentance. The Third is about the Purification of the Virgin Mary. The Three next upon the Incarnation. Theſe are follow'd by Three other Diſcourſes againſt the Jews, wherein he proves that the Meſſias is already come: And by a ſmall Collection of Paſſages of the Scripture concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation. After this follows a Penitential very much abridg'd, and ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers about the Euchariſt. Next to this come ſeveral Hymns, ſeveral Pieces in Proſe, and laſtly ſeveral pieces of Poetry very ill done.

The Letters of S. Fulbert are written in a pretty correct Stile, and are full of Delicacy and Spirit; he has not been ſo happy in the reſt of his performances. He Argues very pertinently both upon the Doctrins and the Diſcipline of the Church, and gives very juſt Determinations of any Caſe that is propoſed to him. Upon occaſion he ſhews a great deal of Steadineſs, without failing in his Reſpect to higher Powers. His Works have been Publiſh'd with a great deal of Remiſsneſs by Charles de Villiers Doctor of Paris, from a Manuſcript of the College of Navarre, and from ſeveral others, and Printed at Paris in the Year, 1608.

Father Luke Dachery has ſince given us in the addition to the ſecond Tome of his Spicelegium, a Letter of Fulbert of Chartres concerning Eccleſiaſtical Revenues; wherein this Author in the firſt place lays down by ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, and eſpecially of S. Jerom, that theſe Revenues are deſign'd for the Maintenance of the Poor. Secondly, That the holy Veſſels ought not to be Sold no more than the Crucifixes, unleſs upon urgent Occaſions, and when the Poor are in ſuch extream Want, that they cannot be reliev'd otherwiſe. Thirdly, That they ſhou'd take care not to ſell them to ſuch Perſons, as might convert them to profane Uſes. They aſcribe likewiſe to S. Fulbert the Life of S. Aupert Biſhop of Cambray, referr'd by Surius to the Thirteenth of December.

CHAP. II.

Berenger Arch deacon of Angers.

BERENGER was born at Tours about the end of the Tenth, or the beginning of the Eleventh Century. He Studied at Chartres under Fulbert, and ſtaid in that City till the Death of that Biſhop. 'Tis ſaid that from that very time it appear'd that he had ſeveral particular Opinions, and that Fulbert upon his Death took notice of him as a dangerous Man, and as one who corrupted a great many People. It was perhaps the Offence he took at being thus ſtigmatis'd, which induc'd him to leave Chartres, and return to Tours. And being in great Repute for his Learning, he was made choice of to be Lecturer in the publick Schools of S. Martin: He gave ſuch Content in that Employ, that they made him Chamberlain, and afterwards Treaſurer of the Church of S. Martin. No Body knows the Reaſon why he left Tours, and went to Angers; but 'tis certain that thither he retir'd, and was very very well receiv'd by the Biſhop, who made him Arch-deacon of his Church, and ſhew'd him a great deal of Reſpect. He who was then Biſhop of that City, goes under two Names; for he is call'd Bruno by Theodwin Biſhop of Liege, by Durandus Abbot of Troarn, and Marbodus Cotemporary Authors, and in the Decretal of the Dedication of the Church of S. John of Angely: And he is call'd Euſebius in the Title of the Letter which he wrote to Berenger; in that which was ſent to him by Gregory VII. In the ancient Inſcriptions of S. Aubin of Angers, in two ancient Catalogues of the Biſhops of Angers, which are in the Library of Monſieur Colbert, and in almoſt all the ancient Records. Theſe two Names are given him in the Decree whereby Geoffry Count of Anjou and Agnes his Wife, granted the Church of Allhallows in the Suburbs of Angers to the Abbey of the holy Trinity of Vendoſme, which bears date in the Year, 1048. and ſign'd by Euſebius Bruno Biſhop, and Berenger Arch-deacon of Angers: And in the Chronicon of S. Aubin of Angers, Printed by Father Labbe in the firſt Tome of his Bibliotheca Manuſcriptorum, he is call'd twice Euſebius Cognomento Bruno. He was made Biſhop of Angers in the Year 1047. Sometime after Berenger coming to that City, began there to broach his Doctrin upon the Euchariſt. Bruno maintain'd his Opinions, and within a ſhort time he had a great many Followers: But theſe Opinions were rejected and oppoſed by the greateſt Scholars of that Age, as a new Hereſy. Lanfrank began the Controverſy, and Berenger being inform'd of it by Ingelram of Chartres, wrote to him a Letter, by which he gave him to underſtand, that he was very much to blame in accuſing John Scotus of Hereſy, for his Opinion about the Sacrament of the Altar, oppoſed to the Sentiment of Paſchaſius; and that he could Wiſh to meet him in the preſence of ſeveral Perſons, that he might convince him that it was through prepoſſeſſion that he had ſuch Thoughts: Beſides, that if he judg'd John Scotus to be an Heretick, upon the account of what he had delivered about the Euchariſt, he muſt likewiſe charge S. Ambroſe, S. Jerom, S. Auſtin, and ſeveral other Fathers with Hereſy. Lanfrank was gone to Rome, when this Letter was carry'd to Normandy; but for all this it was Publiſh'd, and ſcandaliz'd a great many People. It was likewiſe carry'd to Rome by a Clerk of the Church of Rheims, who ſhew'd it to a great many, and read it publickly in the Council held at Rome, under Pope Leo IX. in the Year, 1050. Berenger was thereupon Excommunicated, and Lanfrank then preſent was engag'd to clear himſelf of the Suſpicion he lay under of holding Correſpondence with Berenger, and to give an Account of his Faith: He did it without any Heſitation, made a profeſſion of the Faith of the Church, and prov'd it by the Teſtimony of the Fathers. It was Order'd in this Council that another ſhould be held at Verceil in September, to which Berenger ſhould be Cited, and Lanfrank was deſired to be preſent. Berenger being inform'd of his Condemnation, retired into Normandy to Ariſfrede Abbot of Preaux, and endeavour'd to win over to his Party, William Duke of Normandy. But that Prince detain'd him at Brionne, where he call'd an Aſſembly of the Biſhops of his Dutchy, who Condemn'd Berenger, and a Clerk who had accompanied him. In the Letter of Durandus, Abbot of Troarn, this Council is referr'd to the Year, 1053. But certainly there muſt be an Error in the Text, or Durandus was miſtaken: For 'tis evident by the Teſtimony of Durandus himſelf, that the Convention of Brionne was before the Council of Verceil, which was held in September 1050. according to the Teſtimony of Herman Contract.

The Coun-cil of Bri-onne.

Berenger being drove out of Normandy retir'd to Chartres, where he dar'd not to declare himſelf, but when he was ask'd his Opinion, only anſwer'd, That he would tell it when Time and Place ſhould offer themſelves. However, this new Doctrin beginning to ſpread it ſelf, Henry King of France to ſtop the Progreſs of it, reſolv'd to call a Council at Paris, and order'd Berenger to appear there to give an account of his Doctrin. Theodwin or Dietwin Biſhop of Liege underſtanding the King's Deſign, wrote a Letter to him; wherein he Condemns the Doctrin of Berenger, which he ſaid was likewiſe the Doctrin of Bruno Biſhop of Angers; but he diſapproved the Deſign he had of cauſing them to be Condemn'd in a Council; becauſe Bruno being a Biſhop, could not be Tryed without the Authority of the Holy Apoſtolick See. Therefore he adviſes him to paſs by the impious and ſacrilegious Opinions of theſe Perſons, till ſuch time as he had receiv'd Authority to Condemn them, after they had been heard at Rome, tho' he thought it needleſs to hear them, and to call a Council to Condemn them, and that all that was to be done was to conſider what Puniſhment to inflict upon them. Theodwin in this Letter accuſes Berenger and Bruno, not only of believing that the Euchariſt was nothing elſe but the Shadow and Type of JESUS CHRIST, but alſo of holding erroneous Opinions about Marriage, and of diſapproving Infant-Baptiſm. This Letter has been publiſh'd under the Name of Durandus Biſhop of Liege; but ſince it was written after the Year 1050. it cannot be his, for he dyed in the Year 1025. therefore it muſt be Theodwin's, who was ordain'd Biſhop of Liege in 1048.

The Letter of Theodwin againſt Berenger.

The time appointed for the Synod of Verceil being come, Leo IX. came thither with a great many Prelates of ſeveral Nations, and opened the Council the firſt of September, in the Year 1050. Berenger durſt not appear there in Perſon, but ſent two Clerks to maintain his Cauſe. They read in the Council the Book of John Scotus, which gave Riſe to the Error of Berenger, and it was Condemn'd by all the Fathers of the Council. The Opinion of Berenger was likewiſe examin'd and condemn'd, and the Doctrin of the Church maintain'd maintain'd and defended by Lanfrank, was approv'd of and confirm'd by an unanimous Conſent. The two Clerks who were ſent by Berenger would have undertaken his Defence, but they no ſooner began to ſpeak, but they were forced to hold their Tongues.

The Council of Paris in 1050. Notwithſtanding the Remonſtrance of Theodwin, King Henry held the Council which he had call'd at Paris on the ſixteenth of November in the ſame Year; but neither Berenger nor Bruno durſt appear there. In their Abſence the Biſhop of Orleans caus'd a Writing of Berenger's to be read, which was Condemn'd as Heretical by all the Aſſembly. They Condemn'd the Authors and Abettors of that Doctrin, together with the Book of John Scotus. It was there order'd that the Author of that Hereſie and his Adherents ſhould be proſecuted and conſtrained to recant under the pain of being put to Death. Theſe Matters of Fact are Recorded by Theodwin, and Durandus Abbot of Troarn. None beſides theſe two Authors have made mention of this Council of Paris, and accus'd Bruno of abetting Berenger in his Error: But foraſmuch as they liv'd at that Time, 'tis hard to diſcredit them.

Adelman Clerk of the Church of Liege. Whilſt the higher Powers made uſe of their Authority againſt the growing Hereſie of Berenger; the Learned World oppos'd it by their Writings. Among the reſt, Adelman a Clerk of the Church of Liege, who had been Berenger's School-fellow under Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres, and who afterwards was Biſhop of Breſſe; when he underſtood that Berenger taught this Error, wrote a Letter to him, wherein after he had put him in mind of their old Acquaintance, and of Fulbert of Chartres their common Maſter, he conjur'd him to relinquiſh his Error, demonſtrating to him, That it was not impoſſible for that God who had Created all Things out of nothing, to change the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Chriſt. He had ſent another Letter ſome time before upon the ſame Subject to Paulinus Biſhop of Mets, that he might admoniſh Berenger to renounce his Error. We have loſt this laſt Letter, and ſeveral others mention'd by Trithemius: But the former is among the Authors who wrote upon the Euchariſt, Printed at Louvain in 1551 and 1561. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

The Letter of Berenger to Aſcelin. Aſcelin a Monk of S. Evrou in Normandy, ſent likewiſe about the ſame time a Letter to Berenger againſt his Error. Berenger upon his return from Normandy, had a Conference with Aſcelin and his Scholar William. They publickly declar'd, That he had acknowledg'd the Book of John Scotus to be blamable, and that he durſt not maintain his Error. Berenger being inform'd of it, wrote a Letter to Aſcelin, wherein he gave him to underſtand, That he was not minded to Diſpute againſt him in the Conference which they had together, becauſe at that time he had reſolv'd not to diſcourſe with any one about the Euchariſt, till he had ſatisfied the Biſhops, to whom he ought to give an account of his Doctrin. That it was upon this Account that he would not ſo much as refute that damnable and impious Maxim maintain'd by William, That every Man ought to approach the Holy Table at Eaſter: But that Aſcelin was conſcious to himſelf that he never ſaid John Scotus was an Heretick: That all he had ſaid about it, was, That he had not ſeen all the Writings of that Author, but that what he had read of his about the Euchariſt contain'd nothing in it Heretical; and if he had ſpoken any thing which was not ſo exact, he was ready to diſown it. That Laſtly, They could not Condemn him for having alledg'd that the ſubſtance of Bread remains in the Sacrament, ſince 'tis the Doctrin of the Fathers which he defended, deſigning nothing elſe than to follow in every thing S. Ambroſe, S. Auſtin and S. Jerom; and that therefore there was no Ground for what Arnulphus had ſaid to him in Aſcelin's own hearing, Prithee let us alone in the Opinion we have been brought up in; ſince he did not pretend to eſtabliſh a Novelty, but to maintain the Doctrin of the Fathers.

Aſcelin's Letter to Belinger. Aſcelin return'd him this Anſwer, That he had receiv'd his Letter with Joy, hoping therein to have heard the News of his Converſion; but that in reading it, his Joy was turn'd into Sorrow, perceiving that he ſtill adhered to his old Error. That he did no longer ſee in him that depth of Thought, and that Learning, which he had formerly; ſince he had forgot the Paſſages of their laſt Conference, particularly that about the Propoſition made by William, That every Man ought to approach the Holy Table at Eaſter; to which he had added this Reſtriction, Unleſs he were excluded from this Heavenly Banquet by ſome Crime, which ought not to be done but by the Order of his Confeſſor; otherwiſe the Keys of the Church would become uſeleſs. That for his part he did not repent of what he had ſaid in that Conference, ſince he had maintain'd a notorious and unqueſtionable Truth, from which he would never Swerve, viz. That the Bread and Wine were by the Efficacy of the Holy Spirit, and the Miniſtry of the Prieſts, turn'd into the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; which is plainly proved out of the Holy Scriptures, unleſs corrupted by a vicious and falſe Interpretation. That for what relates to John Scotus, he was perſuaded that in looking upon him as an Heretick, he did nothing unbecoming either his Prieſthood or Religion, ſince he perceiv'd that the whole aim and deſign of that Author is to prove. That what is Conſecrated on the Altar, is not the true Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; which Error he endeavours to eſtabliſh, by ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers falſly explain'd, and among others by a Prayer of S. Gregory, upon which he ſays, that this change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST was figurative and not real. That he look'd upon Berenger himſelf ſelf to be a Man of more Learning than to maintain the Orthodoxy of this Expreſſion: That he had not ventur'd to defend it in their Conference; that he only ſaid he had not read the Book of John Scotus quite out: That he was ſurpriz'd to ſee ſuch a prudent Man give ſo large Encomiums of a Book which he had not read through: That laſtly, for his part, he was of the Opinion of Paſcaſius and of the other Catholicks, and that he firmly believed that the Faithful receiv'd upon the Altar the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST under the appearance of Bread and Wine; and that this Opinion was not contrary to the Laws of Nature which depend on the Will of God, nor to the Teſtimony of the Goſpel. To conclude, that the Advice which Arnulphus (whom he calls the ſinging Man) had given him was very wholſome, and that he ought to follow it, to be aſham'd of defending a Book Condemn'd in the Council of Verceil, and to keep cloſe to the Catholick and Apoſtolick Tradition, from which he had Swerv'd. This and the former Letters were publiſh'd by Father Luke Dachery in his Notes upon the Life of Lanfrank.

[And here it is worth our while to obſerve how modeſt the firſt Advancers and Promoters of the Doctrin of Tranſubſtantiation were in their Aſſertions: Who did not aſſert any thing about it more than what we Proteſtants readily own, viz. That the Faithful do verily and indeed receive the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ſignified to us by the Bread broken, and the Wine pour'd out.]

About the ſame time Berenger wrote another Letter to Richard, who was then at the French Court, wherein he prays him to ſpeak to the King in his behalf, that ſo he might remedy the Injuſtice which had been done him; and to give him to underſtand that they had not done well in Condemning John Scotus in the Council of Verceil, and in juſtifying Paſchaſius. That the Clerks of Chartres had given him a falſe explication of the Opinion of S. Fulbert, or rather of the Paſſage of S. Auguſtin related by that Biſhop. That to induce the King to hearken unto him, he might inform him that John Scotus wrote his Book by the Order, and at the inſtance of his Predeceſſor Charles the Great (that is, Charles the Bald) who had charg'd him to refute by writing the Folly of Paſchaſius; that upon this Account he was oblig'd to grant his Protection to that dead Perſon againſt the Calumnies of the living, if he were minded to ſhew himſelf the worthy Succeſſor of that great Prince. Berengers Letter to Richard.

While theſe Diſputes were on foot between Berenger and his Adverſaries, Leo IX. dies in the Year 1054. His ſucceſſor Victor II. confirm'd what he had done againſt Berenger, and 'tis ſaid likewiſe that he held a Council at Florence, wherein he Condemn'd him. Hildebrand his Legat in France having held a Council at Tours in the Year 1055. made Berenger appear there, and gave him Liberty to defend his Opinions: Berenger reſolv'd to forſake them, and to engage himſelf by an Oath to hold the common receiv'd Doctrin of the Church, concerning the reality of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST in the Euchariſt. The Council of Tours in the Year 1055. againſt Berenger.

But he either did this pretendedly, or elſe ſoon chang'd his mind; for after this Council he continu'd to broach his Doctrins as before; and not being capable of Teaching his Error publickly, he explain'd it in particular, and wrote ſeveral Treatiſes in its Defence. So that his Hereſie continuing to ſpread it ſelf, Nicholas II. who in the Year 1058. ſucceeded Stephen X. Pope Victor's Succeſſor, cited Berenger to a Council held at Rome in the Year 1059. which was compos'd of 113 Biſhops of ſeveral Nations. Berenger at the firſt maintain'd his Opinion, which was refuted by Alberic a Monk of Mount Caſſinus, and by Lanfrank; but afterwards he yielded, and declar'd that he was ready to believe and ſubſcribe to what the Pope and Council would be pleas'd to preſcribe to him. Upon this, Humbert Cardinal Biſhop of Blancheſelve, prepar'd a form of Faith, which was Sworn to and Subſcrib'd by Berenger in theſe Words: "I Berenger an unworthy Deacon of the "Church of S. Maurice of Angiers, having a knowledge of the true Catholick and Apo- "ſtolick Faith, do abjure all Hereſie; eſpecially that of which I have been ſuſpected, "which holds that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar after the Conſecration are only "the Sacrament, and not the real Body and Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST; "and that it could not be handled by the Prieſts, nor broke and eat by the Faithful, "unleſs it were only in the Sacrament, and after an inſenſible manner. I approve of "the Doctrin of the Holy and Apoſtolick See of Rome, and I confeſs from my Heart "and with my Lips, that I hold the ſame Faith which the Holy and Reverend Pope Nicho- "las, and his holy Synod have declar'd and aſſur'd me that I ought to hold, according to "to the Evangelical and Apoſtolick Authority, viz. That the Bread and the Wine which "lie upon the Altar, after the Conſecration, are not only the Sacrament, but alſo the real "Body and Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, and that 'tis handled by the "Prieſts, broke and eaten by the Faithful, not only in the Sacrament, but alſo in a ſen- "ſible way. The which I ſwear By the Holy and Conſubſtantial Trinity, and by the "Holy Evangeliſts, declaring that thoſe who ſhall advance any thing contrary to this "Faith, deſerve themſelves, their Doctrins, and their Followers to be Anathematiz'd. "And if I my ſelf ſhould be ſo bold, as to think or teach any thing contrary to this Profeſſion "of Faith, I ſubmit my ſelf to the utmoſt Rigor of the Canons. In Teſtimony whereof, I "have ſet my Hand to theſe Preſents, which I have heard read over and over. Afterwards he burnt his own Writings, and the Book of John Scotus. The firſt Profeſſion of Faith made by Berenger.

Berenger relapſes into his Error.

This Profeſſion of Faith ſeem'd to be ſincere: But Berenger was no ſooner return'd to France, but finding King Henry dead, and his Son Philip in his Minority, he thought that now he might maintain his Error afreſh without Reſtraint. He repented that he had burnt his Writings, and made a new one in oppoſition to that Profeſſion of Faith, which he ſaid was Humbert's, and not his. This is that Piece which Lanfrank and Guitmond refute. In a Word, he perſiſted in the Defence of his Error, and fled out into a Paſſion againſt Pope Leo, and the Holy See. Pope Alexander II. who ſucceeded Nicholas, being inform'd thereof, wrote him a Letter, wherein he exhorts him abſolutely to renounce his Error, and to be no longer a Scandal to the Church. But inſtead of obeying the Pope, he had the Confidence to ſend him Word, That he would do nothing in it, and remain'd obſtinate in his Opinion.

The Council of Roan againſt Berenger, in 1063.

Maurilla Arch-biſhop of Roan, willing to put a ſtop to the progreſs of this Hereſy, which viſibly ſpread it ſelf in Normandy, upon the account of that Influence which Berenger had over it, calls a Provincial Council of Biſhops at Roan, in the Year, 1063. wherein he prepar'd a Profeſſion of Faith, declaring, That the Bread and Wine, after Conſecration, were chang'd into the very Subſtance of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; anathematizing all thoſe who are of the contrary Opinion, or oppoſe this true Faith: And it was order'd, That for the future this Profeſſion of Faith ſhould be ſubſcribed by the Biſhops, before their Ordination.

The Council of Poitiers againſt Berenger.

In the Year, 1075. Geraldus Biſhop of Angouleſme, and Legat of the Holy See for the Provinces of Tours, Bourdeaux and Auche, call'd a Council at Poitiers, wherein Berenger was accus'd, and like to be kill'd. But this Accident did not alter his Mind, for as ſoon as the Heat was over, he went from the Council as unconvinc'd of the Truth, as he came.

The Letter of Euſebius or Bruno, Biſhop of Angers.

It was at this time that Euſebius Biſhop of Angers, who is the ſame with Bruno, wrote to Berenger; That he had receiv'd a Letter from him, which intimated, That Geofrey was a publick Abetter of Lanfrank's Fooleries; and that in that Letter he deſir'd, that Geofrey might be ſummon'd before him, to give an Account of the Explication of a Paſſage of S. Ambroſe, taken out of the Treatiſe concerning the Sacraments. That in Anſwer to his Letter he declares to him, That he knew not whether that Queſtion had been ſtarted out of Vain-glory; but this he knew very well, that after it had been ſpread over a great part of the World, it had caſt a great Blemiſh on the Reputation of the Church of Angers, which was expos'd to the Calumnies and Upbraidings of all Men, both far and near. That for his part he had reſolv'd to decline theſe Diſputes, to keep to the Text of the Holy Scriptures, and to believe that the Bread and Wine are the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST after Conſecration, without concerning himſelf how this could be: And that if any one ſhould ask him, What were the Thoughts of the Fathers and Doctors about it? he would refer ſuch an Inquirer to their Writings; and adviſe him to put ſuch a Conſtruction upon what he found in them, as was moſt conformable to the Doctrin of the Goſpel. That this was not out of any diſreſpect to the Writings of the Fathers, but becauſe he thought that the principal Regard ought to be had to the Text of the Goſpel, for fear it ſhould cauſe a Scandal in the Church of God, if the Opinions of the Fathers ſhould not be well underſtood, or the Paſſages taken out of them ſhould be corrupted. That it was after this manner that the diſturbance which happen'd at Tours in the Preſence of Gerald, and in the ſame City in the preſence of Hildebrand, was appeas'd; and that this Plague, which began to ſpread it ſelf afreſh, had been ſtop'd by the Command of the Prince, and by the Authority of the Archbiſhop of Beſançon. That thereupon he had taken up a Reſolution to hold no more Conferences, nor to enter into any Diſpute upon that Subject, and that he would never give his Conſent for the holding of any Aſſembly upon that Affair: That if any ſuch ſhould be holden, he would not be at it. That he would not give Audience to the Diſputants, and would exclude ſuch as continu'd obſtinate from the Communion, becauſe this Buſineſs had been determin'd thrice in the Province, and four times by the Sentence of the Holy See.

The Council of Rome in 1078. under Gregory VII. againſt Berenger.

At laſt Gregory VII. willing to put an end to what he had begun whilſt Legat, cited Berenger to a Council, held at Rome in December, 1078. and gave him time to conſider what he had to do till the next Council, which was held the next Year in February. Berenger did ſtill adhere to his Opinion, and maintain'd it very vigorouſly: Bruno, afterwards Biſhop of Signi and Abbot Wolphelmus, oppos'd him. The Queſtion was debated between them for three Days; and, at laſt, Berenger was forc'd to make his Recantation, drawn up in theſe Terms:

The ſecond Profeſſion of Faith made by Berenger.

" I Berenger, believe in my Heart, and confeſs with my Mouth, That the Bread and Wine " which are upon the Altar, are ſubſtantially chang'd by the Myſtery of the Prieſt, and by " the Words of our Saviour, into the true, proper, and quickening Body and Blood of our " Lord JESUS CHRIST, which came out of his Side: And not only figuratively and " by virtue of the Sacrament, but truly, properly and ſubſtantially, according to the Intention of theſe Preſents, and as I have read, and you underſtand it. This is my Faith, contrary to which I will not, for the future, broach any Doctrin: So help me God, and the " Holy Evangeliſts. After this, the Pope conjur'd Berenger, by the Almighty God, and by the Holy Apoſtles S. Peter and S. Paul, never to diſpute again with any Perſon, about the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, unleſs to undeceive thoſe on whom he had impos'd poſ'd. Upon this Declaration he granted Berenger a Letter, directed to the Arch-biſhop of Tours and to the Biſhop of Angers; wherein he declar'd to them, That he had taken Berenger into his Protection, and enjoin'd them to defend him againſt Fulcus Richinus, the Count of Angers, who bore him an ill Will, and againſt all his Enemies. He likewiſe granted him a Bull, which excommunicates thoſe who ſhould attempt any thing againſt his Perſon or Eſtate, or ſhould call him Heretick. Theſe Favours, granted by Gregory VII. to Berenger, gave an Occaſion to the Biſhops, who exhibited a Decree againſt this Pope, in a Council held at Breſſe, in the Year, 1080. to accuſe him of being a Diſciple, or at leaſt a Favourer of that Heretick. But this Charge againſt this Pope was groundleſs and unjuſt, ſince he had not entertain'd Berenger till after he had abjur'd his Hereſy: Tho' perhaps he was too eaſy in giving Credit to the Words of ſo unconſtant a Man. In Truth, it appears that Berenger did perſiſt in teaching his Hereſy, ſince he was forc'd to appear at a Council held at Bordeaux in the Year, 1080. by Hugh the Pope's Legat, at firſt Biſhop of Dia, and afterwards Arch-biſhop of Lions, and there to give an Account of his Faith, as 'tis recorded in the Chronicon of S. Maixant. This is the laſt Scene wherein Berenger appear'd. He ſpent the reſt of his Life in the Iſle of S. Coſmus, near the City of Tours; to which Place he retir'd after the Council of Rome, and dy'd there Jan. 6. 1088. The Council of Bordeaux in 1080. againſt Berenger.

An ancient Author to be met with in the Library of Fleury, William of Malmsbury, Matthew of Paris, Vincent of Beauvais, and ſeveral other more modern Authors, tell us, That Berenger was a real Convert, and that he died a ſincere Penitent, being heartily ſorry for having infected ſo many with his Error. Clarius a Monk of Fleury, and the Authors of the Chronicon of S. Peter the Lively of Sens, and of the Chronicon of S. Martin of Tours, ſpeak very much in his Praiſe. We have likewiſe two noble Epitaphs made in his Praiſe; the one by Baudry Abbot of Bourgueil, and afterwards Biſhop of Dol; and the other by Hildebert Arch-deacon of Mans, who was afterwards Biſhop of that City, and at laſt Arch-biſhop of Tours. In a Word, his Memory is ſtill had in veneration at Tours, where they ſay that the Prebendaries of S. Martins have a Cuſtom of paying him their Reſpects every Year. 'Tis probable that theſe Authors who believe the real Preſence, would never have beſtow'd ſo many Encomiums on Berenger, if they had not been fully convinc'd of his Converſion. And yet we find that Lanfrank, in his Fiftieth Letter, written ſince the Year, 1080. to Reginald Abbot of S. Cyprian of Poitiers, and the anonymous Author of a Treatiſe written in the Year, 1088. and publiſh'd by Father Chifflet, ſpeak of him ſtill as an Heretick, without mentioning his Converſion in the leaſt. We find that after his return from Rome, he was oblig'd to give an Account of his Faith to the Council of Bordeaux. But that which raiſes the greateſt cauſe of ſuſpecting his Converſion, is, That after his ſecond Return from Rome to France, he compos'd a Treatiſe in oppoſition to his laſt Profeſſion of Faith, as Father Mabillon, who had ſeen the Manuſcript, aſſures us: The which being joined to the Teſtimony of Berthol Prieſt of Conſtance, who ſays poſitively, That Berenger had not chang'd his Opinion, ſeems to deſtroy all that has been ſaid about his Repentance, or at leaſt ſhews that it was very late, and that he did not change his Opinion till a little before his Death. Of Berenger's Repentance.

Notwithſtanding his Retractations and Repentance, ſeveral of his Followers perſiſted in their Error; but by degrees this Hereſie was extirpated. One Anaſtaſius, a Monk of S. Sergius of Angers, was forc'd to abjure it, and to deliver a Profeſſion of his Faith to Gerald Abbot of S. Aubin of that City, related by Father Luke Dachery, in his Notes upon the Life of Lanfrank. The Fathers of the Council of Placentia in the Year, 1095. condemn'd the Hereſie of Berenger afreſh: And laſtly, Bruno Arch-biſhop of Treves, drove out of his Province the Followers of this Heretick. The Followers of Berenger.

Berenger was likewiſe ſuſpected of ſeveral other Errors. Guitmond, after Theodwin, accuſes him of believing, That Infant-Baptiſm was null; and of deſtroying lawful Marriages, by permitting Men to abuſe all Women without diſtinction. Lanfrank and William of Malmſbury, accuſe him of harbouring a ſtrange Contempt for the Writings of the Fathers. Laſtly, Guitmond and S. Anſelm relate, as an Error which he had advanc'd, That our Saviour after his Reſurrection, did not enter through the Chamber-door, where his Diſciples were, before it was opened. As to this Error, 'tis a Conſequence of his Opinion about the Euchariſt. As for the two former, foraſmuch as they are not in the Writings of Berenger, and were never (as we can learn) charg'd upon him by other Authors: And ſince he has not been condemn'd for maintaining them, nor ever oblig'd to retract them in any Council, 'tis hard to ſuppoſe that he taught them publickly; and the rather, becauſe they are ancient Errors condemn'd long before that in the Church. Other Errors of Berenger.

We have by us a Letter of Berenger to Aſceline, another to Richard the Abbot; three Profeſſions of Faith; a part of his Treatiſe in oppoſition to his ſecond Profeſſion of Faith: And Father Mabillon has ſeen a Treatiſe in Manuſcript againſt the third. The Treatiſe which he compos'd againſt Adelman, alias Alman, Biſhop of Breſſe, of which Sigibert of Gembloux makes mention, and his other Pieces, are loſt. He wrote in a dry and ſcholaſtick Stile. Sigibert has reaſon for what he ſays, when he tells us, That he abus'd the Sophiſms of Logick in oppoſition to the Apoſtolical Simplicity; and that this could be no Excuſe to him, nor Edification to others, becauſe he rather rendred clear Things obſcure, than obſcure Things clear. The Writings and Adverſaries of Berenger.

clear. He does not ſeem to have had very much Skill in the Antiquities of the Church. His Error was oppos'd by Lanfrank, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; by Adelman, Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterwards Biſhop of Breſſe; by Aſceline, Monk of S. Evrow in Normandy; by Guy Aretine, Abbot of La-Croix-Saint-Leufroy; by Durandus, Abbot of Troarn; by Hugh, Biſhop of Langres; by Alberic, Monk of Mount-Caſſin; by Guitmond, Archbiſhop of Averſe; and by Alger Deacon of Liege, and afterwards Monk of Cluny.

CHAP. III.

Of the Writings of Lanfrank, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; of Guitmond; of Alger; and of the other Authors who have refuted the Error of Berenger.

Lanfrank, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

LANFRANK, deſcended from a very honourable Family of Pavia; for his Father was Warden or Keeper of the publick Archives, where were repoſited the Minutes of the Laws and Cuſtoms of the City. After he had went through the courſe of his Studies in his own Country, he went into France, under the Reign of King Henry, and came to Auranches, where he taught publickly for ſome time. In his Journey to Roan, he was taken by Highway-Men, who robb'd him; and having bound him, left him in a Foreſt near the Abby of Bec. On the Morrow, ſome Paſſengers finding him in that Condition, unbound him; and, upon his asking them, Whether there were not a Monaſtery near that Place; they directed him to the Abbey of Bec, which was newly founded. He retir'd thither, and took upon him the Habit at the Hands of Herluin chief Abbot of that Monaſtery. This happen'd in the Year, 1041. The Genius, the Learning, and the Virtue of Lanfrank, being ſoon diſcern'd, he was elected Prior of his own Monaſtery, and choſen by William I. Duke of Normandy, to be one of his Counſellors of State. He went to Rome under the Popedom of Leo IX. and clear'd himſelf, before that Pope, from the Error of Berenger, which was laid to his Charge. He return'd thither a ſecond time under the Popedom of Nicholas II. to requeſt a Diſpenſation for the Marriage of Duke William with the Daughter of the Count of Flanders, his Kinſwoman; which was granted, upon Condition that the Duke and his Lady would build a Monaſtery. The Duke gave Orders for the building the Monaſtery of S. Stephen of Caen, of which Lanfrank was made Abbot in the Year, 1063. He was ſo highly in the Duke's eſteem, that this Prince, after he had conquer'd England, could find none more proper than him to ſend to Rome to Pope Alexander II. to treat with him about the Reforming the Churches of that Kingdom. After the Death of Maurillus Arch-biſhop of Roan, Lanfrank was pitch'd upon to be his Succeſſor. But he refus'd it. And upon his Refuſal, the Biſhop of Auranches having obtain'd that Arch-biſhoprick, Lanfrank went a fourth time to Rome, to get this Tranſlation to be approv'd of, and to deſire the Pall for that Arch-biſhop. He obtain'd his Requeſt from the Pope; who ſent two Legats to crown William King of England, and to reform the Churches.

The Council of Windſor.

Theſe Legats held a Council at Windſor, wherein they depos'd ſeveral Biſhops who were convicted of Crimes, or of groſs Ignorance; and among the reſt, Stigand Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, who had poſſeſs'd himſelf of that See by Intrigues and Violence. Lanfrank was oblig'd, againſt his Will, by the expreſs Command of Abbot Herluin, to take upon him this Arch-biſhoprick in the Year, 1070. He govern'd that Church, for Nineteen Years together, with a great deal of Wiſdom and Authority. He ſtill kept up his Credit with King William, in whoſe Abſence he was Regent of the Kingdom. He dy'd a little after that Prince, in May, 1089.

Lanfranks Commentary on S. Paul's Epiſtles.

The largeſt Treatiſe of Lanfrank, is his Commentary upon the Epiſtles of S. Paul. He gives us the Text, with ſome Illuſtrations, in a Parentheſis; and adds to this, ſome Notes of Explanation taken out of S. Auguſtin, or out of the Commentary attributed to S. Ambroſe, or ſuch as himſelf compos'd. Thoſe out of S. Auguſtin are to be met with in that Father; but a great part of thoſe which are cited under the Name of S. Ambroſe, are not to be met with in the Commentary which goes at preſent under the Name of that Saint: And there are likewiſe ſome others which are S. Auguſtin's, and are aſcribed to S. Ambroſe. Theſe Notes are ſhort and ſententious; and the Author keeps cloſe to the Literal Meaning and the Morality of the Epiſtles. Peter Lombard cites ſeveral Paſſages out of this Commentary upon S. Paul, which are not exactly in the ſame manner expreſſed by Lanfrank.

Lan-

Lanfrank's Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, is a Refutation of a Piece which Berenger had made againſt the real preſence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Euchariſt. He tells him that he could wiſh that he might have a Conference with him, being perſuaded that it would be very advantageous either to reclaim him from his Error, or at leaſt to rectify his followers. But that ſince he took upon him to maintain it in his private Converſe with ignorant Men, and at the ſame time to own the Orthodox Truth before the Councils, rather out of fear of Death, than for the ſake of Truth, he avoided Perſons of clearer Heads, who could paſs a ſound Judgment upon his Diſcourſes. That if he could once Diſcourſe with him in the preſence of ſenſible Men, he would convince him what an ill uſe he made of ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, which were either falſe, or corrupted, or ill explain'd. That not being content to Teach his Errors with his Mouth, he likewiſe ſpread them through the World by the Writings which his Diſciples publiſh'd. That his firſt Writings had been Examin'd and Condemn'd by Pope Nicholas of bleſſed Memory, in a Council at Rome of One hundred and thirteen Biſhops; in which Council Berenger himſelf had thrown them into the Fire, and promis'd upon Oath, that he would never ſwerve from the Faith of the Fathers, nor Teach any more the Doctrin which he had advanc'd about the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. That he had ſince that broke his Oath by Writing againſt that Synod, againſt the Catholick Faith, and the Doctrin of all the Churches. That this is the Treatiſe which he undertakes to refute, by repeating his own Words, and giving them an Anſwer afterwards. Lanfrank's Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Berenger gave out that the Confeſſion which they had made him ſign at Rome, under Pope Nicholas, was prepared contrary to the Catholick Faith by Humbert, whom by way of Contempt he calls the Burgundian. Lanfrank aſſerts, That this Confeſſion was not Humbert's, but His, the Pope's and the Council's, who all had approv'd of it. He likewiſe recites Berenger's other Confeſſion under Pope Gregory VII. and defends Humbert. Berenger ſaid, That this Man was of the Opinion, or rather of the Fooleries of the Mob, of Paſcaſius, and of Lanfrank, who believe that after Conſecration, the ſubſtance of the Bread and Wine were no longer upon the Altar. Lanfrank ſhews him that this was not any particular Opinion; but the Doctrin of the Church, of the Councils, and of the Popes who had condemn'd him. Berenger adds, That tho' Humbert was of this Opinion, yet he had deſtroy'd his own Argument before he was aware, becauſe in ſaying that the Bread and Wine which are on the Altar, are either only the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, or are only the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, he ſuppoſed that there was both Bread and Wine upon the Altar. After Lanfrank had taken notice that if there were any Ambiguity or Contradiction in the Words of that Confeſſion, the Blame lay at Berenger's Door, ſince he had approv'd of, and Sworn to it, and was not allow'd to Swear that he would hold two Contraries; he obſerves that the two Propoſitions which he ſtarts are neither the Councils, nor Cardinal Humbert's. That the firſt belongs to Berenger and his Followers; and that the ſecond is maintain'd by none, for tho' the Church believes that the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the Body and Blood of our Saviour, yet it acknowledges that this Myſtery is the Sacrament of the Paſſion of our Lord, of his Mercy, of the Concord and Union, and of the Incarnation. That beſides, when the name of Bread is given to the Body of JESUS CHRIST, 'tis a figurative and myſtical way of Speaking; and that 'tis ſo call'd, becauſe 'tis made of Bread, and retains the Qualities of Bread; and becauſe it nouriſhes the Soul after an incomprehenſible manner, as the Bread nouriſhes the Body. 'Tis upon this Principle that he anſwers the logical Evaſions which Berenger makes about theſe terms of Bread and Wine. He replies likewiſe to the Paſſages of the Fathers, which he alledges to prove that the Bread and Wine ſtill remain in this Sacrament, by ſhewing that 'tis the external Appearance of Bread and Wine, which is the Sacrament and the Sign of the inviſible Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. Berenger asks how it can be ſaid, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST which is incorruptible, is broken and eat in this Bread. Lanfrank replies, That the Juſt who live by Faith, need not concern themſelves how the Bread and Wine become the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, by an eſſential change of its Nature: That the Belief of the Church is, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST is ſo Broken and Eat in the Euchariſt, that it does not hinder it from being incorruptible and impaſſible in the Heavens: That we eat it Corporeally when we receive it from the Hand of the Prieſt, and that we likewiſe eat it Spiritually by Faith. He moreover produces the Paſſage out of the Council of Epheſus, which ſays that this Fleſh which we Eat in the Euchariſt, is the proper quickening Fleſh of the Divine LOGOS. After he had thus Anſwer'd Berenger, he explains his own Sentiments in theſe Terms. " We believe that the terreſtrial Subſtances which are Sanctified " at the holy Table, by the divine Efficacy and Miniſtry of the Prieſt, are converted after an Ineffable, Incomprehenſible, and Miraculous manner, by the Operation of the ſu- " preme Power into the eſſential Body of our Saviour, their Appearances remaining with " their Qualities, for fear Men ſhould be ſtruck with Horror, if they were to Eat raw and " bloody Fleſh; and that they believing what they did not ſee, their Faith merited the " greater Reward. That notwithſtanding this, the Body of JESUS CHRIST remains Lanfranks Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

" ſtill in Heaven at the Right Hand of his Father, Immortal, Entire, without Defect, and " Impaſſible: So that we may truly ſay, that we do, and do not receive the ſame Body " which is Born of the Virgin; becauſe 'tis the ſame with reſpect to the Eſſence, Propriety, " and Efficacy of its Nature; And 'tis not the ſame, if we conſider the Appearances of " Bread and Wine and the other Qualities: This, ſays he, is the Doctrine which the whole " Catholick Church has always held, and does ſtill hold. He recites a great many Paſſages out of S. Ambroſe and S. Auguſtin to ſtrengthen this. He explains in what Senſe it may be ſaid that the Euchariſt is an Appearance, a Figure, or a Sacrament: That 'tis the Appearance of the Bread and Wine which were there before the Conſecration, and which are chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: That we beg of God in a Prayer, that we may comprehend according to the Truth and Reality of Things, that which we perform under Types and Figures, thereby taking the Word Truth for a clear manifeſtation of thoſe very Things without a Type and without a Figure. That the Euchariſt is likewiſe a Sign and Sacrament of the Paſſion of our Lord and Saviour. That laſtly 'tis call'd Bread and Wine, becauſe 'tis cuſtomary to call Things by the name of thoſe Things out of which they are made, and to which they are like. The Berengerians objected, That if the Bread were chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST, It was neceſſary for this Change, that either the Bread ſhould be carry'd up into Heaven, or elſe, that the Fleſh of CHRIST ſhould be brought down hither; neither of which appear'd to be done. Lanfrank anſwers them, that this is a Myſtery which we ought to believe, without inquiring into the manner of it. After Lanfrank had anſwer'd theſe two Objections, he then raiſes two new Arguments againſt Berenger. The firſt is, that if the Euchariſt were call'd the Fleſh of JESUS CHRIST, only becauſe it is the Figure of it, it would from thence follow that the Sacraments of the old Law were more excellent than thoſe of the New; becauſe 'tis more excellent to be the Type of Things future, than to be the Figure of Things paſt: And moreover, that the Manna which fell down from Heaven, was a more noble Figure than a little Bit of Bread could be. The ſecond Argument is the univerſal Opinion of the Church, and the Conſent of all Nations. " If, ſays he to Berenger, that which you " believe and maintain be True, it follows that what the whole Church believes and teaches " in all the World muſt needs be Falſe: For all the Chriſtians who are in the World, are " Perſuaded that they receive in the Sacrament the real Body and the real Blood of JESUS " CHRIST. Ask the Latins, the Greeks, the Armenians, and all the other Nations of " the Chriſtian World, and they will all unanimouſly tell you, that this is their Faith. If " the Faith of the univerſal Church be falſe, you muſt ſay that there never has been a " Church or elſe that it is loſt: But there is not any Catholick who dares to affirm either. After he had prov'd this Truth by ſeveral Paſſages of Scripture, he adds, (ſpeaking ſtill to Berenger) " You and thoſe whom you have deceiv'd, object againſt theſe plain Teſtimonies " of our Lord, and of the Holy Ghoſt, concerning the Perpetuity of the Church, that in- " deed the Goſpel has been Preach'd to all Nations, that the World has believ'd that the " Church is Eſtabliſh'd, that it has increas'd and improv'd; but that it afterwards fell into " Error by the Ignorance of thoſe who have put a falſe Gloſs upon Tradition, and that 'tis " to be found among you alone. This is the uſual Anſwer of Innovators, which Lanfrank refutes in a few words.

The Rules of the Order of S. Benedict.

The Statutes or Rules of the Order of S. Benedict made for the Monks of England, go under Lanfrank's Name; but Father Luke Dachery obſerves that they are not in his Style; that he is cited as a third Perſon in the ſecond Section of the ſecond Chapter, and that there are ſome Rules which appear too Remiſs; this makes him believe that 'tis a Collection of Rules, of which Lanfrank is not the Author, or which has been augmented by ſome other of a more modern Date. Let the caſe be how it will, it contains nothing but what relates to the Cuſtoms and Practices of Monks, therefore we ſhall not inſiſt any longer upon it.

Lanfranks Letters.

Lanfrank's Letters are ſhort and few, but contain in them things very Remarkable.

The three firſt are directed to Pope Alexander II. In the firſt he earneſtly intreats him to give him leave to lay down his Arch-biſhoprick, which he had not taken upon him but by his Order, that he might retire into a Monaſtery. He likewiſe excuſes himſelf for not being able to wait upon him at Rome. In the ſecond he gives him to underſtand, that Herman a Biſhop who had formerly quitted his Biſhoprick under the Popedom of Leo IX. and embrac'd a Monaſtick Life, had a deſign to do it again, and would have done it, had not he hinder'd him. He aſſures the Pope that that Biſhop was no longer in a Condition, by reaſon of his Age, to diſcharge his Functions, and that he is not forced to retire, but does it voluntarily to give himſelf wholly up to the Service of God. The Engliſh Hiſtorians tell us that this Herman was Flamand, and that he had been Biſhop of Wincheſter under the Reign of King Edward; that he afterwards left both that Biſhoprick and England, and became a Monk of S. Berthin: That he return'd ſome time after into England to be Biſhop of Sarum, and that he liv'd to the time of William the Conqueror, which part of his Life he ſpent at the Biſhoprick of Sarum. 'Tis about the end of his Life that he deſir'd to retire the ſecond time.

time. Lanfrank likewise consults the Pope about the Bishop of Litchfield. This Bishop being accus'd of Incontinence, and other Crimes before the Popes Legats in England, would not appear before the Synod which they held; they had Excommunicated him, and given the King liberty to put another in his place. He afterwards came to Court, and gave his Resignation to the King. Lanfrank was not willing to ordain another in his place, till he had receiv'd Permission from Rome, he therefore desires it in this Letter. The third is about the difference then on foot between the Sees of Canterbury and York about the Primacy, and about several other Churches. The Pope had referr'd the Examination of the Matter to an Assembly of Bishops, of Abbots, and of other Prelates of the Kingdom. This Assembly was held at Wincheſter by the Order of the King of England, and in his presence. It was there prov'd by the Ecclesiastical History of Bede, that from the time of S. Augustin the Apostle of England, the Church of Canterbury had always enjoy'd the Right of Primacy over all England and Ireland; and that the Bishops of the Places now in Question, had been ordain'd, cited to Synods, and deposed by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury for above 140 years together. This was likewise prov'd by the Acts of Councils, and confirm'd by the Decretals of Pope Gregory I. Boniface IV. Honorius, Vitalian, Sergius I. Gregory IV. and Leo IX. The Arch-bishop of York having nothing but weak Arguments to oppose these Authentick Testimonies, yielded the Point, and had desired the King to adjust Matters between Him and Lanfrank. Afterwards by a general Consent an Act was prepar'd touching the Privileges of the Church of Canterbury, which he sends to the Pope, and desires him to confirm. He thanks him for those Testimonies of Love which he had given him, and for granting him two Palls. He tells him at last that he sends him the Letter, which he had writ formerly to Berenger, whom he calls Schismatick. Lanfranks Letters.

The fourth is a Letter of Pope Alexander, directed to Lanfrank, wherein he confirms the Decrees of his Predecessors made in favour of the Monks who were in the Cathedral Churches of England, in opposition to those who would dispossess them, for to put secular Clerks into their Places.

The fifth is directed to Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome. After he had return'd him Thanks for the good Will he bore to him, he informs him that the Controversie about the Primacy of the Church of Canterbury was ended, and that he had sent the Act of it to Rome.

The sixth is Hildebrand's, who gives him to understand, that he had not obtain'd the Pall which his Legats requir'd, because they were not given at Rome, but to Persons there present.

The seventh is a Letter of William King of England and Duke of Normandy, to Pope Gregory VII. who acquainted him that his Legat was come to wait upon him, to demand of him the Oath of Fidelity, and the Mony which his Predecessors had always been us'd to remit to Rome. He answers him, That as for the Oath he would take none, because he was not allow'd to do it, and his Predecessors had never done it. As for the Mony, he says, that for these three last years which he had spent in France, it had been Collected very carelessly, that he would send him what was already gather'd, and the remainder he would send by Lanfrank's Deputies. He desir'd to be recommended to his Prayers, and assures him that he had a sincere Affection for him, and would be always submissive to him.

Lanfrank at the same time sent the Pope word that he could not as yet prevail upon the King to take the Oath which he required, and assures him that he had still the same Affection for him as formerly. This is the Eighth Letter.

The ninth is a Certificate granted to a Man of the Dioceſs of Seez, who stood Convicted of having kill'd three Persons who went to Mount S. Michael. The Bishop of Seez had injoyn'd him Pennance, and granted him Letters directed to the Bishops, that they might absolve him, or release him from part of his Pennance, when they should think it proper. This is what Lanfrank certifies to the Arch-bishop of York.

In the tenth, writ to the same Arch-bishop, he very clearly determines that it is not Lawful for a Man or a Woman who are divorc'd for Adultery, to Marry again.

The eleventh is a Letter of Thomas Arch-bishop of York, who wrote to Lanfrank, desiring he would send to him the Bishops of Wincheſter and Dorcheſter to assist him in Consecrating a Bishop of the Isles of the Orcades, protesting that hereby he did not pretend that these two Bishops were his Suffragans.

By the following Letter Lanfrank enjoyns them to do it.

In the thirteenth, directed to John Arch-bishop of Roan, he tells him his Opinion upon several Rites and Ceremonies which he wrote to him about. He maintains that in the Consecration of Churches the Bishop ought not to wear his * Chaſuble but a * Chappe; and that the * Maniple ought not to be given at the Ordination of Sub-deacons, because 'tis not a Habit peculiar to Ecclesiasticks, no more than the Albe and Amict, since in Monasteries the Laicks wear them. [Several Copes and Vestments wore by the Mass-Priests and other Clerks of the Church of Rome.

The four next are likewise directed to the same Arch-bishop; in the two first he writes to him about a difference which had happen'd in the Church of S. Owen, which is related at large in a Passage of an History of the Church of Roan, mention'd by Father Luke Dachery in his Notes. The third is a Letter of Complement. In the last he excuses himself upon some complaints that had been made of him.

Lanfrank's Letters.

The Four next are written in Favour of Baldwin Abbot of S. Edmond, and the Religious of that House. The Last is Pope Gregory the Seventh's to Lanfrank; by which he orders him to prevent Bishop Herfast from putting that Abbot to any Trouble. And this is the Subject-Matter of the former Letter which Lanfrank had wrote to that Bishop.

The One and twentieth is a Letter to the same Bishop, about a Man whom he had ordain'd Deacon, without having receiv'd any Order for it; who besides, was a married Man, and would not turn off his Wife. He enjoins him to depose him from his Deaconship; to give him for the future only the four lesser Orders, and not to place him among the Deacons, unless he would live single. If he did that, then he should not confer the Order of Deacon upon him again, but only grant him a Power of discharging his Functions, by giving him the Gospels in a Synod or an Assembly of the Clergy.

The Two and twentieth is likewise an Answer directed to that Bishop, about a Man who had enter'd into Priest's Orders, without being fit for it. He orders, That he should be enjoy'd Pennance, and suspended from all Ecclesiastical Functions, till such time as he thought fit to restore him.

The Three and twentieth is directed to Herbert Bishop of Norwich, his Suffragan; whom he reproves for slighting a Letter which he sent him in favour of Berard, a Clerk belonging to the Abbot Baldwin. He tells him of the Respect which is due to Metropolitans; and admonishes him to turn out Monk Herman, who went under a bad Name.

The Four and twentieth is directed to Maurice Bishop of London elect. He returns him this Answer, That he ought to injoin them Pennance who had apprehended a Man, who dy'd under their Hands. That he could not speak any farther of his Affair to the King. That Clerk Geofrey, charg'd with Apostacy, ought to be turn'd out of his Church; or bring Letters demissory from his Bishop: And advises him to meet him the Saturday before Lætare-Sunday, at Chichester; and that he would there give him Priests Orders.

The following Letters, which are very short, are upon various and particular Subjects. However, there are several Things in them concerning the Discipline of the Church, viz. In the Six and twentieth, That a Priest, who has taken upon him the Habit of a Monk, and liv'd sometime in a Monastery without having receiv'd Benediction, cannot return to the World again. In the Seven and twentieth, That Arch-deacons have a Right of distributing the Holy Chrism. In the Two and thirtieth, That young Women who have made a religious Profession, or who have been presented at the Altar, shall be oblig'd to continue Religious; but that such as have not made any such Profession, nor have been presented, shall have Liberty to go out, as well as those who fled for Sanctuary to Monasteries for fear of the French. In the Three and thirtieth he proves to the Bishops of Ireland, That tho' it might be proper to give the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to Infants, yet it was not absolutely necessary for Salvation. The Six, Seven and Eight and Thirtieth inform us, That the Clergy and Laity of Dublin elected their Bishop, and sent him to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury for Ordination: That there were some Irregularities in the Churches of Ireland; and that it was requisite to call a Council there to reform them. In the Nine and fortieth he shews, That the Apostate-Monks, who offer'd to return to their Monasteries again, ought to be pardoned, and to be treated with the same Kindness as formerly. In the Sixtieth and the Last, he proves, That a Monk who has engag'd himself to constant Residence in any Monastery, may now and then go to another Monastery, when urgent Occasion requires it. In the Fiftieth he refutes Berenger, who charg'd S. Hilary Bishop of Poitiers with being in an Error about the Sufferings of JESUS CHRIST, in teaching, That he had not been sensible of any Pain. Lanfrank explains the Passage of that Father, and tells us he spoke of the Divinity of our Saviour. In the Nine and fiftieth, he reproves a Lord for having spoke very ill Things of Pope Gregory VII. and for bestowing large Encomiums on Guibert, whom the Emperor had caus'd to be ordain'd Pope, in opposition to Gregory. He says that we ought to believe, That the Emperor did not undertake such a Thing but upon good Grounds; but that we should not commend any Person before his Death, nor speak ill of one's Neighbour; and that one cannot tell what Men are at present, nor how they will one Day appear to be in the Eye of God.

Lanfrank's Treatise of Confession.

These Letters are follow'd by a small Tract, concerning the Secrecy of Confession. Lanfrank doth demonstrate, That 'tis a great Sin to reveal it, or to give any Hints whereby the Sins that have been confess'd may be discover'd. He would not have them in Confession inform themselves of the Sins of other Men, but only of those who are confess'd, nor to require them to discover their Accomplices. He afterwards says, That the Confession of publick Sins ought to be made to the Priests, by whose Ministry the Church binds and looses that which it takes publick Cognizance of: But that one may confess private Sins to all the Ecclesiasticks, and even to Laicks; since we read that there have been Holy Fathers, who were the Guides of Souls, tho' they were not in Holy Orders. These are Lanfrank's own Words; who perhaps by publick Sins, understood mortal Sins; and by private, only venial Sins: Or rather, by the Confession of publick Sins, he meant a particular Confession of Sins; and by that of private Sins, a general Confession, without specifying any particular Offence, such as Laicks usually make to one another. Altho' in Lanfrank's time it was a common common Cuſtom among the Faithful, to confeſs their Sins to one another out of Humility, and eſpecially when they could not meet with any Prieſts; and 'tis to this Cuſtom Lanfrank alludes: For he adds, That if one cannot find a Perſon to whom one may confeſs one's ſelf, we ought not to deſpair upon that Account, becauſe the Fathers agree that in ſuch a Caſe 'tis ſufficient to make our Confeſſion to God. Laſtly, he ſays, That thoſe to whom Confeſſion is made, ought not to puniſh or correct publickly thoſe who confeſs themſelves, no not under the pretence of any other Fault. This Diſcourſe is obſcure and intricate, full of forc'd Allegories, and unjuſt Reaſonings; which made Father Luke Dachery at firſt to queſtion whether it were Lanfrank's or no. However, we are not ſure that 'tis not his; and 'tis plain that its Author liv'd much about that time. Lanfranks Treatiſe of Confeſſion.

There is likewiſe a Treatiſe of Lanfrank in the Fourth Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium; which contains, in a few Words, the principal Duties of the Religious who wait upon the Churches. It was found in an ancient Manuſcript of the Oxford Library. We have loſt his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which perhaps was the ſame with the Life of William the Conqueror; and a Commentary upon the Pſalms, of which mention is made in the Author of his Life. Other Writings of Lanfrank.

Lanfrank's Stile was neither florid nor figurative, but plain and ſimple, and ſuch as ought to appear in Dogmatical Treatiſes. His Reaſonings are pretty juſt, and his Arguments cogent. He had thoroughly ſtudied the ancient Latin Fathers, and the Canons of the Church, upon which he grounds the Doctrin which he advances, and the Judgments he makes upon the Diſcipline of the Church. There are but few who wrote at that time ſo diſtinctly and ſo exactly, or who paſſed ſuch a juſt Judgment upon Things.

Father Luke Dachery was the firſt who publiſh'd Lanfrank's Works. They were printed at Paris by Billain, in the Year, 1648. The Edition is very correct, and in a fine Character. There are likewiſe very exact and curious Notes made by Father Dachery. At the end of Lanfrank's Works he has added ſeveral other Tracts, viz. The Chronicon of the Abbey of Bec; The Life of S. Herluin, firſt Abbot of Bec, wrote by Gilbert Criſpinus Abbot of Weſtminſter; and the Lives of William, Boſo, Thibold and Letard, Abbots of that Abbey; the which, as well as that of Lanfrank, which is at the beginning of his Works, were wrote by Milo Criſpinus a Monk of Bec, who liv'd in the Twelfth Century: The Life of S. Auguſtin the Engliſh Apoſtle, and two Tracts upon the Eucharift againſt Berenger; the one wrote by Hugh Biſhop of Langres, and the other by Durandus Abbot of Troarn, who liv'd in the ſame Century.

Hugh Biſhop of Langres.

THE firſt of theſe two laſt Authors was the Son of Gilduin Count of Breteuil, near Beauvais; and Brother to Waleran Abbot of S. Witon of Verdun. He had been Clerk of the Church of Chartres, and Monk of Cluny. He was made Biſhop of Langres in the Year, 1031, and was depos'd by Leo IX. in a Council held at Rheims in the Year, 1049. But following that Pope to Rome, and being enjoyn'd Pennance, he was re-eſtabliſh'd, and dy'd in his return homeward about the Year, 1052. His Piece is only a Letter directed to Berenger, whoſe Opinion he declares in the following Terms. "You maintain (ſays he) That "the Body of JESUS CHRIST is in the Sacrament in ſuch a manner, that the Eſſence "and Nature of the Bread and Wine are not chang'd; and you make that Body you ſpeak "of, which was Crucified, to be an Intellectual Body; which makes us think that you "believe it to be Spiritual: And in this you ſcandalize the Catholick Church, and offend "our Lord, who made it appear, That this Body which you ſay was Spiritual, was ſuch as "might be felt. Beſides, if the Nature and Eſſence of the Bread and Wine do really re-"main after Conſecration, it cannot be ſaid that there is any real Change: And if the Body "of JESUS CHRIST be therein only figuratively and virtually, one might, upon the "ſame Grounds ſay, That he is likewiſe in Baptiſm, and in the other Sacraments. He afterwards proves, by ſeveral Inſtances, That the change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST is real and true; and that tho' one cannot conceive how it is, yet one ought to believe it. To ſtrengthen this, he produces ſeveral Paſſages out of S. Ambroſe and S. Auguſtin. He adds, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST is given to us under the form of Bread and Wine, becauſe if it appear'd to be Fleſh and Blood, Men would be ſtartled at it, and would not eat it. This Tract is obſcure and full of Niceties and School-Terms. Hugh Biſhop of Langres.

Durandus Abbot of Troarn.

THE other Author is Durandus Abbot of Troarn in Normandy, who is not the ſame with the Biſhop of Liege of the ſame Name. His Treatiſe is a great deal larger, and better penn'd than the former. He therein cites a great many Paſſages of the Fathers, againſt the Error Durandus Abbot of Troarn.

Error of Berenger; and in the Concluſion thereof gives a particular Account of the Condemnations of Berenger at Brionne, at Paris, and at Verceil. This Author liv'd till the Year 1088. but no Body knows at what time he wrote this Treatiſe.

Guitmond Arch biſhop of Averſe.

SOME time after Berenger's Recantation in the Council of Rome, Guitmond Arch-biſhop of Averſe, formerly a Monk of the Monaſtery of S. Leufroy in Normandy, compos'd three Books againſt Berenger in the nature of a Dialogue; wherein Roger, to whom theſe Books were dedicated, is made to propoſe the Objections of Berenger and his Followers. After he had given a Character of the Temper and the Errors of Berenger, and mention'd his Condemnation in the Council of Verceil in his firſt Book, he then proceeds to tell us, That all the Berengarians hold, that the Bread and Wine are not ſubſtantially chang'd in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt; but that they do not all agree in their Sentiments. For ſome believe, That the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST are not at all in this Sacrament, which they pretend to be only a Sign and a Figure. Others aſſert, That the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST are really there, but that they are conceal'd, and that we might receive them there is made a kind of Impanation; the moſt ſubtil Opinion which they ſay Berenger ever found out. Others, who were not thorough-pac'd Berengarians, but only ſhock'd by the Arguments of that Heretick, imagin'd the Bread and Wine are chang'd in part, and in part remain the ſame. Laſtly, There were others who believe that the Bread and Wine are entirely chang'd; but that when unworthy Perſons approach this Sacrament, it return'd to its firſt Subſtance of Bread and Wine. Guitmond undertakes to refute all theſe Opinions; and in the firſt place oppugns the two former, which were properly the Berengarian's Opinions, by ſhewing that there was a real Change made of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. He proves firſt, That it was not impoſſible for God to effect this Change. Secondly, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST might very well be touch'd, broken, bruis'd and eaten, and yet not be paſſible, corruptible or mortal; and that when the Hoſt is divided into ſeveral parts, yet the Body of JESUS CHRIST is not divided, but remains whole and entire, and the ſame under each Wafer; and ſuch as is in a thouſand diſtinct Places in the Hands of a thouſand Prieſts, who ſay Maſs in different Places, and yet this very Body is ſtill in Heaven. That we ought not to wonder that this Change is not indeed perceptible by our Senſes; but that we are not always to credit their Evidence, and that Faith is enough to perſuade us of this Miracle. That 'tis indeed difficult to conceive, but eaſy to believe it, ſince nothing is impoſſible to God, who has produced Things more wonderful. And that we ſee Changes altogether as ſurprizing, ſuch as the Change of Nothing into this viſible World, the Change of Accidents into other Accidents, the Change of Subſtances into other Subſtances, together with the Change of their Accidents: If theſe Changes are poſſible, why ſhould the Change of one Subſtance into another, without the Change of the Accidents, be counted impoſſible?

In the Second Book, Guitmond anſwers an Objection made by Berenger, which Roger propoſes to him in theſe Words: "Berenger ſays, The Fleſh of JESUS CHRIST is in-"corruptible, but the Sacraments of the Altar are corruptible if they be kept too long. To this Guitmond replies, That tho' the Conſecrated Bread ſeems to be corrupted to the Apprehenſion of corrupted Men, yet in reality it is not chang'd at all; and that it does not appear alter'd, unleſs as a Puniſhment of the Infidelity and Negligence of Men: That it cannot be gnawn by Mice, and other Vermine; and if at any time it appears to be ſo, 'tis only to puniſh the Negligence, or to try the Faith of Men. Nor will he admit that the Fire can conſume theſe Myſteries; and he ſays, That with Veneration they commit it to this moſt pure Element, to be carry'd up into Heaven. Laſtly he affirms, That though the Euchariſt may ſerve for Nouriſhment, yet it does not turn to Excrement; and as to that Objection which might be made, That ſuppoſing a Man ſhould eat nothing for ſome conſiderable time but conſecrated Bread, he would nevertheleſs have occaſion to go to Stool. He anſwers, That 'tis a Matter of Fact, that has never been experienc'd, and that it could never enter into the Heart of any Catholick to try ſuch an Experiment: That if any of Berenger's Party thought fit to do it, one ſhould not trouble one's Head much about what became of the Maſs of thoſe Infidels, which committed ſo great a Crime; Becauſe, ſays he, we do not believe, That the Bread and Wine are neceſſarily chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, unleſs among thoſe who have the Faith to believe this Myſtery, and that the Words of JESUS CHRIST are efficacious. That Laſtly, If any of them ſhould order a Catholick Prieſt to conſecrate one or more great Loaves to try the Experiment, it is to be believ'd that this Loaf would not be turn'd into Excrement; or rather that God would permit theſe Hereticks to be deceiv'd, by ordering ſome Angel or Spirit to convey away this conſecrated Loaf, and to put an unconſecrated one in its ſtead. After he had thus ſolv'd the Objections drawn from Reaſon, he anſwers the Paſſages cited out of S. Auguſtin, and makes it appear in what Senſe, and of what the Euchariſt is a Sign.

In

In the laſt Book he produces a great many Paſſages of the Fathers, upon which he grounds the Doctrin of the real change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and confirms it by the Teſtimony of the Romiſh Church, and by the Condemnations brought againſt Berenger. To conclude, he demonſtrates that 'tis much greater, and more excellent to believe that we receive the real Body of JESUS CHRIST, than to imagine that we only receive the ſhadow and ſign of it. Guitmond Arch-biſhop of Averſe.

Afterwards he refutes in ſhort their Opinion, who pretended that one part of the Bread and Wine was chang'd, and that the other remain'd ſtill the ſame: And the Opinion of thoſe who believ'd that the Bread and Wine re-aſſum'd their former Nature, when unworthy Perſons approach'd thereto. Both of theſe Opinions were grounded upon this, That they could not conceive how the Wicked could be partakers of the Body of JESUS CHRIST. To ſolve this difficulty, Guitmond diſtinguiſhes between two ſorts of Receiving, the one Corporeal, the other Spiritual: That the Juſt receive the Body of JESUS CHRIST both theſe ways; that the Wicked receive it only in the firſt ſenſe, though they do really receive it. He adds, That if only part of the Conſecrated Bread were chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST upon the account of thoſe who were unworthy to receive it, then no Man could aſſuredly ſay, This is the Body of JESUS CHRIST, becauſe no Man ought to affirm confidently that he is worthy to receive it. Wherefore it would be raſhneſs in the Prieſt to ſay, This is the Body of JESUS CHRIST, as well as in the People to anſwer, It is ſo. That beſides, if a vicious Prieſt ſhould Conſecrate an Hoſt which he ought to receive all himſelf, then there would be neither Change nor Conſecration; and by this means it would be true to affirm, That the Wickedneſs of the Prieſt would diſannul the Efficacy of the Words of JESUS CHRIST, and that the Belief of the Church which is perſuaded, that the Words of our Saviour are alike Efficacious in Good and Bad Prieſts, would be abſolutely falſe. Laſtly, To refute the laſt Opinion, he obſerves that 'tis contrary to ſound Senſe and Reaſon to ſay, That the incorruptible Body of JESUS CHRIST is chang'd in corruptible Creatures; and he concludes all by ſaying that, ſince the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, is not a bare repreſentation of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, it does not contain it by an Impanation: That the Bread and Wine are not chang'd in part only; and that being once chang'd, they cannot return again to their former ſubſtance; and that it muſt be affirm'd, that all the Bread and Wine are ſubſtantially and perpetually chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST.

There is likewiſe another ſmall Tract of Guitmond, which is only a plain Expoſition of Faith concerning the Myſteries of the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Euchariſt: It enlarges chiefly on the former, and explains in what Senſe the Son is the Wiſdom, and the Holy Ghoſt the Love of the Father. Nor ought we to forget a Diſcourſe belonging to the ſame Author, which he directs to William the Firſt, King of England, by which he refuſes a Biſhoprick which that Prince had offer'd to him. Theſe Tracts are to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Guitmond liv'd to about the Year 1080. The Seventy eighth Letter of Ives of Chartres is directed to him, wherein that Author gives him the Character of a Religious and Learned Man. His Style is not very elegant, but pretty cogent; he argues very methodically without wandering from his Subject.

Alger Deacon of Liege and Monk of Cluny.

Alger did not write till long after Lanfrank, for he flouriſh'd in the twelfth Century. He was of Liege, where he ſtudied with great ſucceſs, and there ſpent part of his Life, firſt of all in the quality of a Deacon of the Church of S. Bartholomew. From thence he was tranſlated to the Church of S. Mary and S. Lambert, where he liv'd Twenty years, till the Death of Frederick Biſhop of Liege, after which he retir'd, and took upon him the Habit of a Monk in the Abby of Cluny. We make mention of this Author here, tho' he belongs to the next Century, becauſe the principal Treatiſe which he wrote, was that whereby he refutes the Errors which Lanfrank and Guitmond have oppos'd. This Treatiſe is entitled, A Diſcourſe concerning the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and divided into three Books. In the Preface he takes notice of the four Errors about the Euchariſt, mention'd by Guitmond, and Subjoyns two more to them. The One is, That the Bread and Wine are chang'd into Fleſh and Blood, but not into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: The Other, That the Euchariſt is turn'd into Excrements. He afterwards propoſes to refute theſe Errors, not by the force of humane Reaſon, but by the Teſtimonies of JESUS CHRIST and the Saints. But before he does this, he advertiſes the Faithful, that tho' this Myſtery be incomprehenſible, yet it does not from thence follow that 'tis incredible, becauſe God has a Power ſufficient to do things which we are not capable of Comprehending. After this he divides his Work into two Parts: In the former he ſays, He will treat of the reality of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Euchariſt; and in the latter, concerning ſeveral Queſtions relating to that Sacrament. Alger Deacon of Liege and Monk of Cluny.

Alger Deacon of Liege and Monk of Cluny.

In the former he proves, That the Son of God after he had taken upon him a Nature like to Ours by the Incarnation, was likewiſe pleas'd viſibly to communicate thereof to us, by giving us his Body and his Blood, not only in a figure, but likewiſe in reality under the Sacrament of Bread and Wine. That there are two Things to be diſtinguiſh'd in the Euchariſt; the Sacrament, and the Matter of the Sacrament. That the Sacrament is the Form, the Figure, and the other Qualities of the Bread and Wine; and that the Matter of the Sacrament is the inviſible Subſtance of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, which is contain'd in that Sacrament, and into which the Subſtance of the Bread and Wine has been chang'd. That it cannot be ſaid, That JESUS CHRIST is united to the Bread, as the Son of God is perſonally united to Man, becauſe the Subſtance of the Bread and Wine is no longer there, but chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. That tho' the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Euchariſt, is ſpiritual and inviſible, yet 'tis really there; and that God has ſometimes permitted that it ſhould plainly and manifeſtly appear to be as really in the Euchariſt, as it is in Heaven, at the Right hand of the Father. That 'tis the ſame whole and entire Body, which is diſtributed to all the Faithful under ſeveral conſecrated Wafers. That it is not Sacrific'd nor offer'd up after the ſame manner, as it was upon the Croſs, but that this myſtical Sacrifice or Immolation is the Figure and Repreſentation of that which was offer'd upon the Croſs, tho' it be the ſame CHRIST, both upon the Croſs and the Altar. That the inviſible Body may in one ſenſe be ſaid to be the Figure of the viſible Body, but that for all this, 'tis no leſs the real Body. That the Corporeal Communion is the Figure of the Spiritual Communion; but that by this Corporeal Communion, the Wicked as well as the Good, receive the Body of JESUS CHRIST Corporeally, tho not Spiritually. Theſe are the principal Points which Alger eſtabliſhes upon the Teſtimonies of the Fathers in this firſt Book.

In the ſecond Part he treats of other Queſtions relating to the Sacrament, and particularly whether the Euchariſt be capable of any alteration, or ſubject to the ſame condition with other Aliments, part of which turns to Excrements? Upon this Head he ſets upon the Grecians, who maintain'd, That by receiving the Communion, Men broke their Faſts. He owns that Men might live of Conſecrated Bread and Wine, and that there are Inſtances of it: But he denies that any part of the Euchariſt is Corrupted, or turn'd into Excrements; or if any are voided, they are produc'd by the fleſh of the Man himſelf, or ſupply'd ſome other way. He further maintains, That tho' the Bread and Wine ſeem to be ſubject to alteration, as for Inſtance, to be devour'd by Animals, or conſum'd by Fire; yet this is not in reality, but only in appearance, to puniſh the Incredulity of the Wicked, or the Careleſſneſs of Miniſters. After he had thus reſolv'd that Queſtion, he paſſes on to others that are leſs Conſiderable: Namely, (1.) Why God, who is inviſible, would have us to offer him a viſible Sacrifice? To this he anſwers, That 'tis to put Men in mind of what they owe him; and becauſe Man being a Compound Creature made up of a Soul and Body, 'tis reaſonable he ſhould offer to God both Corporeal and Spiritual Sacrifices. (2.) The ſecond Queſtion is, Why the Sacrifice of the Church is made up of a Sacrament and the Body of JESUS CHRIST, and why 'tis not either a ſimple Sacrament, or the viſible Body of JESUS CHRIST? This he reſolves by ſaying, That if the Euchariſt were a ſimple Sacrament, it would not be different from the Sacraments of the old Law; and that if the Body of JESUS CHRIST ſhould appear therein openly, it would be ſubject to great Inconveniences. For (ſays he) it would appear either alive or dead; but it cannot appear as dead, ſince he is living; and if it appear'd alive, it would either be in the ſame State wherein it was before his Paſſion, or in the ſame State wherein it was after his Reſurrection: In the firſt Caſe, it would be impoſſible to ſwallow it; and in the ſecond, Men would not be able to endure the brightneſs of its Glory. That beſides, it was neceſſary that the Body of JESUS CHRIST ſhould be conceal'd under ſhadows and repreſentations, to exerciſe the Faith of the One, and to prevent others from uttering Blaſphemies, and from charging the Chriſtians with eating and drinking humane Fleſh and Blood. The third Queſtion is, (3.) Why God requires ſo much Faith in this Sacrament? He anſwers, That Man being in a lapſ'd State, becauſe Adam by giving too much Credit to the Words of the Devil, had eaten of the forbidden Fruit; 'tis neceſſary we ſhould be ſav'd by believing the Word of God, who injoyns us to eat his Body, and drink his Blood in this Sacrament. (4.) The fourth Queſtion is, Why we make uſe of Bread and Wine, rather than any other Creature? For this he aſſigns ſeveral Reaſons, Becauſe Bread and Wine are the ordinary Nouriſhment of Man, which ſupports the corporeal Life, as the Euchariſt is the Nouriſhment of the Soul, which ſupports the ſpiritual Life: Becauſe as the Bread and Wine are chang'd into Fleſh and Blood, ſo they are here chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRST: Becauſe the Bread being made up of ſeveral Grains of Corn, and the Wine out of ſeveral Bunches of Grapes, is a figure of the Unity of the Church which is made up of ſeveral Perſons. (5.) The fifth Queſtion is, Why we do not immediately enjoy Life eternal, after having receiv'd the Body of JESUS CHRIST? He replies, That 'tis becauſe we may have time to exerciſe our ſelves in Virtue. (6.) The ſixth Queſtion is, Why God beſtows an eternal Recompence on temporal Merits? 'Tis, ſays he, Becauſe he regards not the temporal Action, but rewards or puniſhes the Eternal Propenſity and Inclination of doing Good or Evil. (7.) The ſeventh Queſtion is, Why Bread is conſecrated into the Body, and Wine into the Blood of JESUS CHRIST? He replies, That 'tis not becauſe the Body of JESUS CHRIST is without the Blood, or the Blood without the Body, ſince JESUS CHRIST is whole and entire under each Kind; but that we offer and communicate under theſe two Kinds, becauſe of the different Myſteries which they figure out to us. (8.) The eighth Queſtion is, Why we make uſe of White Bread rather than Brown, though at the ſame time we conſecrate Wine of all ſorts of Colours? He anſwers, That in caſe of Neceſſity, one may make uſe of any ſort of Bread; but that 'tis proper to uſe the Whiteſt, becauſe it is to be chang'd into the glorious Body of the ſpotleſs Lamb. (9.) The ninth and laſt Queſtion is, Why we make uſe of Unleaven'd rather than Leaven'd Bread, although we indifferently make uſe of Wine that has Lees as well as of that which has none? He ſays, That this is a grand Diſpute between the Latins and the Greeks, who treat one another as Hereticks, and call each other Azymites and Fermentarians, though one may ſafely uſe the One as well as the Other; that notwithſtanding this, JESUS CHRIST made uſe of Unleaven'd Bread as a Figure of Purity. He likewiſe relates the Reaſons of the Greeks; and after he had anſwer'd them, he concludes, That it was better to make uſe of Unleaven'd Bread, which he believ'd to have been the Cuſtom of the Latin Church from its beginning. Alger Deacon of Liege and Monk of Cluny.

In the laſt Book he diſcourſes of ſeveral other Points which relate to the Miniſters of the Euchariſt: And in the firſt place he demands, Whether Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which are without the Pale of the Church, do conſecrate the Body of JESUS CHRIST; and at firſt he produces the Teſtimonies of the Fathers, which ſeem to prove, That they do not conſecrate according to due Form. But afterwards having laid it down as a Principle, That the Validity of the Sacraments doth not depend on the Faith or Piety of the Miniſter; he concludes, That as Hereticks and Schiſmaticks may baptize, ſo likewiſe can they conſecrate; and that the Ordination of Prieſthood is as much among them as Baptiſm. This he proves from ſeveral Principles and Paſſages of S. Auguſtin, and replies to thoſe Paſſages which he at firſt ſtarted againſt the Sacraments of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which (he ſays) ought not to be underſtood of the Sacraments themſelves, but of the Abuſe which they make of them, ſince they are ſo far from being beneficial to them, that they render them the more Criminal. He afterwards asks, Whether the Sacraments are valid, if any Addition or Alteration be made of the Words of the Office, either by the Wickedneſs or Careleſneſs of him who officiates? He explains this Queſtion as it relates to Baptiſm; and, after he had cited ſeveral Paſſages out of S. Auguſtin and the Popes, and among others out of Pope Zachary, he concludes, That provided the Eſſential Words be recited, tho' by careleſsneſs it happens that needleſs Words be added thereto, or ſome Ceremony be left out, yet this does not hinder the Efficacy of the Sacrament. He does not apply this Principle to the Euchariſt, but only ſays in general, That in the Celebration of theſe Holy Myſteries we ought not to introduce any Hereſies or Novelties; but faithfully to obſerve the Inſtitution of JESUS CHRIST, that ſo as thoſe Myſteries are truly effected by his Power, and founded upon his Authority, they may be likewiſe profitable to us by his Grace.

The ſame Author has compos'd a Treatiſe of Mercy and Juſtice, without affixing his Name thereto: It is divided into three Parts. In the firſt he ſhews in what Inſtances we ought to extend Mercy to Criminals, and to bear with them. In the ſecond part he ſhews, at what times, with what diſcretion, and in what manner we ought to exerciſe Juſtice upon them. In the third, he diſcourſes of the different Errors of the Hereticks about the Sacraments, and ſhews wherein they differ from the Catholicks, and in what Points they diſagree among themſelves. This is what we gather from the Preface of that Treatiſe; which Preface Father Mabillon has publiſh'd in the firſt Tome of his Analects, with the Panegyrick of a Canon of Liege, who was Cotemporary with Alger. This Preface is taken out of his two Manuſcripts, where the Work is compleat, but has never yet been publiſh'd. We have wholly loſt ſeveral Letters, and the Hiſtory of the Church of Liege, which he wrote whilſt he reſided in that City, of which the Author of his Elogy makes mention. Peter, ſirnam'd the Venerable, prefers Alger's Piece upon the Euchariſt, to thoſe of Lanfrank and Guitmond. It muſt be confeſs'd, That 'tis a great deal larger, and that he cites more Paſſages out of the Fathers; but his way of Reaſoning is not ſo exact, nor is his Writing ſo compleat as Lanfrank's. He has obſerv'd Guitmond's Method, and done little elſe beſides amplifying and confirming his Principles and Arguments. This Treatiſe was printed at Cologne in the Year, 1535. At Louvain, together with Lanfrank's Treatiſe, in the Year, 1561. and is to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

S. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

THE ſame Principles which are eſtabliſh'd in the Tracts of Guitmond and Alger, are likewiſe to be met with in the two laſt Letters of S. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; wherein he eſtabliſhes the real Preſence, and refutes thoſe who believ'd that the Euchariſt was S. Anſelm A. B of Canterb.

S. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

was only a Type and Figure. He aſſerts, That the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; but withal owns, That it may be call'd Bread, a Sacrament and a Figure: Bread, becauſe JESUS CHRIST is call'd ſo himſelf; A Sacrament, becauſe under the viſible Appearance of Bread and Wine, the Divine Power does therein internally preſent to us the Fleſh of JESUS CHRIST: And a Figure, becauſe we conceive and believe it to be quite another Thing than what it ſeems to be to our Sight and Taſte. That God made Choice of Bread and Wine in this Sacrament, becauſe of the Analogy which there is between our Spiritual and Corporeal Nouriſhment. That we ought not to believe that when we receive the Body, we do not receive the Blood; and that when we receive the Blood, we do not receive the Body; but that they are exhibited to us under theſe two different kinds, thereby to denote that we ought to be conformable to the Body and Soul of JESUS CHRIST. That Water is mix'd therewith, thereby to repreſent that Water which iſſu'd out of our Lord's Side, and which is the Figure of Baptiſm. That the Wicked do indeed receive the Subſtance, tho' not the Effects and Benefits of the Body of JESUS CHRIST. That the outward Elements of Bread and Wine, may be broken, eaten by Mice, and go into the Stomach; but that theſe are Accidents which only happen to the Elements which are left, but not to that which is really the Euchariſt. That we ought not to ask, what becomes of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, nor how the Bread is chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST, becauſe God has wrought greater Miracles than theſe. Laſtly, That a wicked Prieſt may as well Conſecrate as a good Prieſt, becauſe 'tis JESUS CHRIST who Conſecrates, and 'tis he who Baptizes.

CHAP. IV.

An Account of the Popes and of the Church of Rome, from the time of Silveſter II. to Gregory VII.

Silveſter II.

GERBERT, who goes under the Name of Silveſter II. had the Poſſeſſion of the Papal Chair only Five Years, from the Year, 999. to the Year, 1003. During this time he did not do much worth the mentioning, nor did he write ſo much as he had acted before. We have only Three Letters of his, written whilſt he was Pope. The Firſt is directed to Azolin Biſhop of Laon, who was accus'd by King Robert of being diſloyal to him. He had been cited before a Council held at Compiegne, where he had acknowledg'd his Fault, begg'd Pardon for it, given Hoſtages for a Security of his Allegiance, and promis'd to reſtore the Forts of Laon to the King. But afterwards he went back from his Word, would have taken the Arch-biſhop of Rheims Priſoner, under a Pretence of reſtoring to him the Citadel of Laon; and kept thoſe Men Priſoners who were ſent to take Poſſeſſion thereof. The Pope upbraids him with this Perfidiouſneſs, and cites him to a Council to be held at Rome in the Eaſter-week; giving him to underſtand, That if he did not make his Appearance, he would pronounce Sentence againſt him, without admitting his Excuſe of the Dangers of Travelling, ſince there was no more Danger in the Kingdom of Lorrain than in Italy: And whereas he might perhaps alledge Sickneſs as an Excuſe, the Pope adds, That if he made uſe of that Shift, he muſt ſend ſome to teſtifie the Truth of it, and to anſwer to the Accuſations which were preferr'd againſt him.

We have already mention'd his Second Letter, directed to Arnulphus Arch-biſhop of Rheims, by which he confirms him in that Arch-biſhoprick.

The Third is a Bull or Grant, which confirms and ratifies the Privileges of the Abbey of Vezelai.

We may likewiſe add to theſe Letters, his Tract againſt the Simoniſts, which he made in the beginning of his Popedom. Ademar makes mention of one Action of Silveſter, which, if true, is an Inſtance of unheard-of Severity. He ſays, That Guy, the Count of Limoges, having impriſon'd Grimoald Biſhop of that City, for taking Poſſeſſion of the Monaſtery of Brantome, which that Biſhop demanded of him; and having afterwards releas'd him upon certain Conditions, this Biſhop went to Rome, and having complain'd of this Uſage to Silveſter, that Pope had cited Guy to Rome; where, his Cauſe being heard in an Aſſembly held on Eaſter-day, he had been condemn'd by the Pope and Senate to be ty'd by the Feet to wild Horſes Tails, and to be drawn and torn to pieces: But that being committed to the Biſhop's Cuſtody, he adjuſted Matters with him, and that they both fled from Rome, and return'd good Friends to their own Country again. 'Tis very probable that all this was done by Conſent; for otherwiſe how can one excuſe the Cruelty of this Sentence ſo diſagreable to the Spirit and Character of the Church, which breaths out nothing but Gentleneſs and Peace, and which deſires not the Death, but the Amendment of a Sinner? Silv. II.

[Here we may ſee how much Dupin, though a true Romaniſt, abhors thoſe bloody Principles upon which the Inquiſition, and other unheard of Severities of the Church of Rome are founded.]

The two Popes, who immediately ſucceeded Silveſter II. were both Johns. The firſt of theſe, who according to our Account is John XVI. and according to others John XVIII. firnam'd the Meager, was only four Months and ſome Days upon the Chair: The other held it almoſt ſix Years. He ſent a Legat into Germany to confirm the Priviledges and Prerogatives of the Church of Magdebourg, and to raiſe the Church of Bamberg into a Biſhoprick. This was done with the conſent of the Arch-biſhop of Mayence, and other Prelates of Germany in a Council held at Francfort, which approv'd of the Pope's Bull, which advanc'd the Church of Bamberg to be a Biſhoprick. He gave the Pall to S. Elphege Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and ſent Bruno his Miſſionary into Poland. He renew'd Communion with the Greek Church. S. Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres wrote him a Letter, wherein he beſtows great Commendations upon him, and prays him to be well adviſ'd before he granted Abſolution to Count Radulphus. John XVI. and John XVII.

Sergius IV. ſucceeded John XVII. and was call'd before Os Porci. If Ditmar may be credited in the Caſe, he chang'd his Name into that of Sergius, and was the firſt who made a Law to authoriſe the changing of Names; however, there are inſtances of this Nature more ancient, as we have already obſerv'd. Authors ſay in general a great deal in Commendation of this Pope; but they have not mention'd any one of his Actions in particular, and we have none of his Letters by us. He was not upon the Chair above two Years, eight Months, and thirteen Days, for he dy'd May 13. in the Year 1012. Sergius IV.

After his Death there was a Schiſm in the Church of Rome, between Benedict VIII. Son to Gregory the Count of Freſcati, who was firſt Elected by his Father's intereſt; and one Gregory, who was Elected by ſome Romans, who outed Benedict. He fled to Henry King of Germany, who immediately rais'd Forces, and march'd into Italy to re-eſtabliſh him. As ſoon as the King arriv'd, Gregory fled for it, and Benedict was receiv'd without any Oppoſition. He confer'd the imperial Crown on that Prince, and on Queen Chunegonda his Wife. Under his Pontificate the Norman Lords who had drove the Sarazens out of Sicily, drove likewiſe the Greeks out of a great many of thoſe places which they held in Italy, being aſſiſted by the Emperor Henry, who came thither a ſecond time at the inſtance of the Pope. Benedict dy'd in the Year 1024. and ſome Authors ſay that after his Death, he appear'd mounted on a black Horſe, and that he ſtrew'd the place, where he had depoſited a Treaſure, that ſo it might be diſtributed to the Poor, and that by theſe Alms, and the Prayers of S. Odilo, he was deliver'd from the Torments of the other Life. We have only one Bull of his in Favour of the Abbey of Cluny. Benedict VIII.

This Pope held a Council at Pavia, in which after he had diſcours'd at large againſt the Incontinence of the Clergy, he publiſh'd eight Decrees. The firſt and ſecond, prohibite the Clergy from having any Concubines, and from living with Women. The third and fourth import, that the Children of ſuch Clergy-men as are Slaves of the Church, ſhall be Slaves to the Church for ever, tho' born of a Mother that is Free. And the three laſt import, that ſuch Clergy as are Slaves to the Church, can neither purchaſe nor poſſeſs any thing of their own, even tho' they ſhould be born of a Mother that is Free. Theſe Decrees were Sign'd by the Pope, by the Arch-biſhop of Milan, and by five Biſhops, and afterwards ratified by the Emperor's Authority, who at the Pope's Requeſt, publiſh'd an Edict conſiſting of the ſame Articles, to give them the force of a Law. The Council of Pavia under Benedict VII.

The Count of Freſcati, that the Popedom might be ſtill in his Family, caus'd his other Son to be Elected in the room of Benedict VIII. tho' he was not then in Orders. He was ordain'd and call'd John, which according to us is the Eighteenth of that Name, but according to others the Twentieth. 'Tis ſaid, that ſometime after this Pope being ſenſible that his Election was Vicious and Simoniacal, he withdrew into a Monaſtery there to ſuffer Pennance, and that he forbore performing any part of his Function, till ſuch time as he was choſen again by the Clergy. The Emperor Henry dy'd at the beginning of this Popedom, and Conrad was Elected King of Germany in his place, in the Year 1024. and Crown'd Emperor three years after by this Pope. The Greeks having diſpatch'd an Embaſſy to Rome, to get the Pope's Grant that the Church of Conſtantinople ſhould be call'd the Univerſal Church, were oppos'd by the French Prelates; and William Abbot of S. Benign of Dijon, wrote a Letter to John XVIII. to divert him from that Deſign; which Letter is mentioned by Glaber. This Pope wrote a Letter to the Biſhop of Limoges, by which he declares, that S. Martial ſhall have the Character of Apoſtle; and another Letter to Odilo Abbot of Cluny, wherein he blames him for having refus'd to accept of the Arch-biſhoprick of Lions. He ſent Letters of Abſolution to the Biſhop of Auxerre, who had ſent him his Confeſſion in Writing. Canutus King of England came to Rome in the Year 1031. where he was very kindly received by Pope John and the Emperor. He complain'd that they exacted too great Summs of his Arch-biſhops for the Grant of their Palls, and it was order'd that for the future they John XVIII.

ſhould not be ſo ſerv'd. He likewiſe obtain'd, That his Subjects might have free Acceſs to Rome, and that they ſhould be exempt from Cuſtoms. This is what the King acquaints the Peers of his Kingdom in his Letter, mention'd by William of Malmsbury.

Benedict IX. John XVIII. dying November 7. in the Year, 1033. Alberic Count of Freſcati caus'd his Son to be ſeated on S. Peter's Chair. He was Nephew to the two laſt Popes the Count's Brothers, and was not above Eighteen Years of Age at the moſt. He chang'd his Name of Theophylact into that of Benedict IX. Peter Damien ſpeaks of him as a Man that liv'd very diſorderly, and was very unworthy of that Dignity to which he had been advanc'd by the Tyranny of his Father. However, he enjoy'd the Popedom very quietly for Ten Years together; but at laſt the Romans, weary of his abominable Irregularities, outed him, and put up in his Place the Biſhop of S. Sabina, who took upon him the Name of Silveſter III. He enjoy'd his Diginty but three Months; for tho' Benedict voluntarily reſign'd the Popedom, yet he return'd to Rome, and with the Aſſiſtance of Freſcati's Party, drove out his Competitor, and re-aſſum'd the Papal Chair. But being altogether uncapable of Governing it, and having nothing more in his Thoughts than the gratifying of his Brutal Appetite, he made a Bargain about the Popedom with John Gracian Arch-prieſt of the Church of Rome, and made it over to him for a Sum of Mony, reſerving to himſelf the Revenues due from England to the Holy See. This Gracian took upon him the Name of Gregory VI. In the mean time King Henry, who had ſucceeded his Father Conrad in the Year, 1039. being incens'd againſt Benedict, who had ſent the Imperial Crown to the King of Hungary, after he had defeated that Prince, reſolv'd to march into Italy, to put an end to that Schiſm. After he came thither, he caus'd theſe three Popes to be depos'd in ſeveral Synods, as Uſurpers, Simoniſts and Criminals. Benedict fled for it; Gregory VI. was apprehended and afterwards baniſh'd; and Silveſter III. was ſent back to his Biſhoprick of S. Sabina. He caus'd Suidger Biſhop of Bamberg to be Elected in their ſtead, who took upon him the Name of Clement II. and was acknowledg'd as lawful Pope by all the World. He crown'd Henry Emperor; and as he was waiting upon him home to Germany, he dy'd beyond the Alps, Octob. 7. in the Year, 1047. Nine Months after his Election. Immediately upon this Benedict IX. returns to Rome, and a third time remounts the Papal Chair; which he held for Eight Months, notwithſtanding the Emperor had ſent from Germany, Poppo Biſhop of Breſſe, who was conſecrated Pope under the Title of Damaſus II. but he did not long enjoy that Dignity, for he dy'd of Poyſon, as 'tis ſuppos'd, at Paleſtrina, Three and twenty Days after his Conſecration.

Gregory VI.

Clement II.

Damaſus II.

It is no Wonder that theſe Popes have not left us the leaſt Monument of their Paſtoral Vigilance, either in Councils or by Letters, ſince all their Care and Aim was how to gratify their Ambition and the reſt of their Paſſions, without watching over the Flock of JESUS CHRIST. Clement II. muſt be excepted out of that Number; for though he had been Pope but a very ſhort time, yet the firſt thing he did after his Advancement, was to hold a Council at Rome againſt the Simoniacal, in which he endeavoured to put a ſtop to the further progreſs of Simony, which was then ſo common at Rome, that almoſt all the Eccleſiaſticks were guilty of it. He wrote likewiſe a Letter to John, Arch-biſhop of Salerno Elect, by which he approves of his Tranſlation, after he had examin'd whether it had been done by Intrigue or Simony; and being ſatisfied that it was only for the Benefit and Good of the Church, and that the Clergy and Laity of Salerno had elected him freely, he granted him the Pall, confirm'd him in the Arch-biſhoprick, and gave him a Power to ordain and conſecrate the Biſhops of ſeven Dioceſſes mention'd in that Letter.

Leo IX. In the mean time, Benedict being ſtill in Poſſeſſion of the Church of Rome, was guilty of ſtrange Exorbitances there, which oblig'd the Romans to ſend freſh Deputies to the Emperor Henry, deſiring he would grant them a Man fit to be advanc'd to S. Peter's Chair. He made choice of one Bruno Biſhop of Toul, whom he ſent to Rome with the Pontifical Purple Habit upon him. 'Tis reported, That in going through France, at Cluny he met with Hildebrand Clerk of the Church of Rome, who having been carried away with Gregory VI. ſtay'd in France after his Death, and withdrew to Cluny, where he was Prior. This Hildebrand attended Bruno to Rome, and perſuaded him to lay aſide his Purple Robes, and to leave the Romans to a free Liberty of Election; aſſuring him, That this would promote and further his Deſign. He attain'd his End, according as he had promis'd him. Bruno was very kindly receiv'd by the Romans, elected Pope unanimouſly, and ordain'd February 13. in the Year, 1049. under the Name of Leo IX. Benedict was likewiſe oblig'd to ſubmit, and by Hildebrand's Perſuaſion he acknowledg'd Leo as Pope, and ingratiated himſelf to him. Leo having ſettled the Affairs of Rome and Italy, croſs'd the Mountains twice and went into Germany. The ſecond time he went to beg the Emperor's Aſſiſtance againſt the Normans of Pozzuolo, with whom he was then at War. Having obtain'd his Deſire he return'd into Italy, and march'd againſt them. They ſurpriz'd his Forces, defeated them, and took him Priſoner. However, they us'd him very kindly; and having treated him with a great deal of Reſpect, conducted him to Benevento. He liv'd there a Year, from whence they diſmiſſed him, without exacting any thing for his Ranſom, attended with a great Train of Coaches, which conducted him to Rome, where he dy'd within a ſhort time after. Peter Damien very vehemently ments upbraids this Pope for having wag'd this War, born Arms, and appear'd in Perſon at the Head of his Forces. Benno aſſures us, That he undertook this War by the Advice and Inſtigation of Benedict and Hildebrand, and that they were the Perſons who betray'd him to the Normans. However it was, Leo IX. in the reſt of his Actions, ſhew'd a great deal of Prudence and Piety; and his Letters are an eternal Monument of his Learning, and of the Love he bore to Religion and Church-Diſcipline. Leo IX.

The Firſt is directed to Leo Arch-biſhop of Acridè, and to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who had condemn'd the Cuſtom of the Latin Church about Unleavened Bread, which it made uſe of in the Holy Myſteries. He therein raiſes the Dignity of the Church of Rome, founded by S. Peter. He ſays, That 'tis this Church which has refuted, convinc'd and condemn'd all Hereſies, and which has confirm'd other Churches in the Faith of S. Peter, which has and will always remain in the Church of Rome. He reckons up Fourſcore and ten Hereſies ſprung up in the Greek Church, among which he places the Preſumption of John the Faſter, who took upon him the Quality and Title of Univerſal Patriarch: He not only defends the Spiritual Authority of the Popes, but likewiſe their Temporal Sovereignty, which he founds upon a ſuppoſititious Donation of the Emperor Conſtantine. He upbraids the Greeks with the Conſtantinopolitan Council under Conſtantine Capronymus, and with the Affair of Photius. He adds, That in Contempt of the Canons of the Nicene Council, they had advanc'd Eunuchs to the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople. Afterwards, comparing the Church of Rome with that of Conſtantinople, he ſays, That the former is as ancient as Chriſtianity it ſelf, and that it has undergon all manner of Perſecutions; whereas the latter is wholly New, and ſprung up in Pleaſures: That the one is the Mother, the other the Daughter: That upon this Account the Latter ought to pay a due Reſpect to the Former, and not to be ſo ungrateful, as it is to that Church, from which it deriv'd its firſt Birth. He reproves, in particular, Leo of Acride, and the Patriarch, for having ſhut up all the Latin Churches, and taken away the Monaſteries from the Monks and Abbots, till ſuch time as they ſhould conform themſelves to the Greek Cuſtoms. " The Church of Rome (ſays he) acts with a great deal more " Moderation and Prudence. For tho' there are ſeveral Greek Monaſteries and Churches both " within and out of Rome, yet they have no Diſturbance, but are permitted to live according " to the Cuſtom of their Anceſtors, and are not conſtrain'd to relinquiſh their Cuſtoms: On " the contrary, they are admoniſh'd and adviſ'd to obſerve them. To conclude, he enlarges very much on the Preſumption of the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, and on the Dignity of the Church of Rome.

Leo's ſecond Letter is directed to the Biſhops of the Provinces of Venice and Iſtria, whom he gives to underſtand, That Dominick Patriarch of Grado or Aquileia Nova, came to a Council held at Rome in the Year, 1053. wherein he had been ordain'd: That the Town of Grado ſhould always be eſteem'd the Metropolis of Venice and Iſtria, and that the Biſhop of Foro-Julio or old Aquileia, ſhould have no Power or Juriſdiction out of Lombardy, according to the Grant of Gregory II. and the Reſtriction of Gregory III. He thereupon orders theſe Biſhops to ſubmit to the Patriarch of Grado, as to their Metropolitan.

The Third is an Anſwer directed to Thomas a Biſhop in Africa, who had ask'd the Pope's Advice about the Dignity of the Church of Carthage. He at firſt lets him know how deeply he is concern'd to underſtand, by his Letter, that the Church of Africa, where there were formerly ſo many Biſhops, that in the Canons we read of Two hundred and five who were preſent at a Council held at Carthage, was now reduc'd to the Government of only five Biſhops, and that even they could not live friendly together. Afterwards he congratulates him for having apply'd himſelf to the Church of Rome for the Reſolution of his Doubts. Laſtly, he declares to him, That the Biſhop of Carthage is Primate and Metropolitan of all Africa; and that the Biſhop about whom he wrote (whoever he were) ought not to conſecrate Biſhops, nor to depoſe them, nor to call a Provincial Council, nor to do any Thing, unleſs what concerns his own Dioceſs, without the Conſent and Permiſſion of the Arch-biſhop of Carthage. He adds, by way of Advice, That they could not call a General Council, nor determine any thing about Biſhops, without the Authority of the Holy See.

The Fourth Letter is directed to two other Biſhops of Africa, call'd Peter and John. After a Preamble, very much like that of the former Letter, he gave them the ſame Anſwer concerning the Arch-biſhop of Carthage, and the determining of Matters relating to Biſhops; and thereto adds ſeveral Extracts out of the falſe Decretals, concerning the Inſtitution of Metropolitans.

In the Fifth, he congratulates Peter Biſhop of Antioch his Advancement to that Dignity, ſpeaks of the Prerogatives of the Church of Rome, exhorts him to maintain the third Rank among the Patriarchs, approves of the Form of Faith which he had ſent him, and makes another like it, declaring, That he wiſh'd that the Latin and Greek Churches were happily united, and it was no Fault of his that they were not.

The Sixth is directed to Michael Patriarch of Conſtantinople. He declares to him the Inclination he had for Peace, and was glad to find the Patriarch of the ſame Mind too. However he reproves him, (1.) Becauſe he being a Novice, had all of a ſudden been made Patriarch. (2.) Becauſe he was minded to make the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch

Leo IX. ſubmit to his Juriſdiction. (3.) Becauſe he took upon him the Title of Univerſal Patriarch, which the Popes of Rome had never allow'd of, and ſays, That S. Peter was never ſtil'd Univerſal Apoſtle, tho' he had been made the Prince of the Apoſtles; and that the Council of Calcedon had granted that Title to S. Leo and his Succeſſors. (4.) Becauſe he calumniated the Latin Church, and anathematiz'd and perſecuted all thoſe who made uſe of Unleaven'd Bread in the Euchariſt. In the cloſe of this Letter, he exhorts him to put an end to this Schiſm. This Letter bears date January, Indictio ſeptima, which is the Year 1054.

The Seventh is writ to the Emperor Conſtantine Monomachus, on whom he beſtows great Commendations for his being ſo deſirous of Peace and Union between the two Churches. He exhorts him to imitate the Piety of Conſtantine the Great, and the reſpect he bore to the Holy See, and to grant him his Protection. He complains to him that Patriarch Michael had done many unjuſt things, even whilſt he pretended to be deſirous of a Peace.

The Eighth is directed to all the Biſhops of Italy, and contains an Injunction which he made to put a ſtop to the Avarice of Abbots and Monks, who converted all the Pious Donations to the uſe of their own Monaſteries, without allowing any ſhare thereof to the Churches. He injoyns that all thoſe who ſhould hereafter grant ſuch Donations, ſhall leave the one Moyety of what they give to the Church where they live, and the other to the Monaſtery.

The Ninth, directed to the Biſhops of France, has relation to the Council of Rheims, to which it is referr'd.

The Tenth is againſt thoſe who rifle Biſhops Houſes after their Deceaſe.

In the Eleventh he confirms the Right of Metropolitan to the Arch-biſhop of Salerno.

In the Twelfth directed to the Princes of Bretagne, he Excommunicates the Biſhops of that Province, becauſe they would not ſubmit themſelves to the Arch-biſhop of Tours, and becauſe they were Guilty of Simony. However, he gave them leave to come and clear themſelves if they could at the Council of Verceil. He pronounces the ſame Sentence againſt thoſe who had ordain'd them.

One may likewiſe reckon among the Letters of Pope Leo, the Bulls which he has granted upon ſeveral Occaſions, viz. The Bull by which he grants to the Vatican Church the Tenths of the Offerings: That by which he declares that the Body of S. Dennis is at Ratisbonne, and not at S. Dennis in France, where there are only the Bodies of S. Ruſticus and S. Eleutherus; (but 'tis a queſtion whether this Bull be genuine or no): That which relates to the Biſhop of Porto: The Bulls confirming the Privileges of the Abbies of Cluny, of S. Sophia at Benevento, and of the Monaſtery of Peter Damien, to whom he wrote likewiſe a Letter, wherein he approves of one of his Works.

The Council held under Leo IX.

There is no queſtion to be made, but that this Pope made ſeveral Laws in ſeveral Councils, tho' we have not an entire one left us. Authors make mention only of a Council of Rome held in the Year 1049. wherein he confirm'd the Decree of his Predeceſſor Clement II. concerning thoſe who were Guilty of Simony: Of another Council held the ſame year at Pavia: Of a Council held at Rheims, wherein Hugh of Langres was depos'd, the Acts of which we have by us: Of a Council held the next year at Mayence, againſt a Biſhop charg'd with Adultery: Of another Council held the ſame year at Rome againſt Berenger: Of another held at Siponta againſt two Simoniacal Arch-biſhops: Of a third Council held at Rome after Eaſter in the Year 1051. wherein Gregory Biſhop of Verceil was depos'd for Adultery, and wherein ſeveral Laws were made againſt Simoniacal and Incontinent Clerks: Of another Council begun the year following at Mantua, which was diſturb'd by a Sedition of the People; without making any mention of that which was held at Rome in the Year 1054. about the Conteſt which happen'd between the the Arch-biſhops of Grado and Aquileia. This Pope dy'd April 15. in the Year 1054. after he had preſided over the Church of Rome for five Years and ſome Months.

Victor II. After his Death Benedict endeavourd again to ſeize upon the Papal Chair; but the Romans ſent Hildebrand to the Emperor, to deſire a Pope of him. He nominated to them Gebehard Biſhop of Eichſtat, who was Elected and Conſecrated in the Year 1055. under the Name of Victor II. 'Tis ſaid that he met with ſome diſturbance in the beginning of his Pontificate, and that a Sub-deacon would have Poiſon'd him, by mixing Poiſon with the Wine in the Chalice; which was diſcover'd by a Miracle: For after it was Conſecrated, he could not lift up the Chalice, and the Sub-deacon who had done this wicked Thing, was immediately poſſeſs'd by an evil Spirit. He call'd a Council at Florence, in which he depos'd ſeveral Biſhops convicted of Simony; and order'd Laws to be made to prohibit the Alienating of the Revenues of the Church. He ſent Hildebrand his Legat into France, who held there ſeveral Councils; among the reſt one at Lions, in which a Biſhop convicted by a Miracle, of Simony, was depos'd: And that at Tours againſt Berenger. In the Year 1056. Victor went to Germany, being call'd thither by the Emperor Henry III. whom he found at the Point of Death. This Prince before his Death, caus'd his Son Henry to be Elected King, who was ſcarce five Years old, and recommended him at his Death to the Pope and the Church of Rome. Victor did not long ſurvive the Emperor, for being return'd into Italy, after he had had held a Council at Rome, he dy'd at Florence, July 28. in the Year 1057. We have only one Letter of this Popes, by which in favour of Cardinal Humbert, he confirms and augments the Privileges granted to the Church of Blancheſelve. Victor II.

After Victor's Death, Frederic Abbot of Mount Caſſin was advanc'd to the Holy See. He deſcended from a noble Family of Lorrain, and had been Chancellor and Arch-deacon of the Church of Rome. Pope Leo had ſent him on an Embaſſy to Conſtantinople. At his Return he became one of the Religious of Mount Caſſin under his Brother Richerus, who was Abbot of the Place; and after his Death Cardinal Humbert got him to be Elected Abbot of that Monaſtery in the Year 1057. having conſtrain'd the Perſon, whom the Monks had Elected without the Knowledge and Conſent of the Holy See, to lay down that Preferment. Some time after, Victor created him Cardinal under the Name of S. Chryſogone; and that Pope dying, he was Elected in his place, and Conſecrated on S. Stephen's day, in the Year 1057. from whence he took upon him the Name of Stephen IX. He immediately ſet upon reforming the Clergy of the Church of Rome, and made ſeveral Statures againſt the Clerks who kept Concubines. He brought the Church of Milan to ſubmit to that of Rome, after it had for ſeveral years withdrawn from its Juriſdiction; and ſent an Embaſſy into the Eaſt, to re-unite the two Churches. He went to Florence in the beginning of the Year 1058. where he dy'd on the 29th of March. We have one Letter of his left us, directed to the Arch-biſhop of Rheims, by which after he had Complimented him for the ſubmiſſion he expres'd towards the Holy See, he inform'd him of the Council which was to be held at Rheims, that he wonder'd he had not ſent him word whether the King had conſented to it or no. He wrote to him about the Arch-biſhop of Bourges, that nothing could be determin'd upon his buſineſs in the abſence of Hildebrand; that he would come with him, and that they would ſettle this and other Affairs together. He exhorts him vigorouſly to defend the Intereſts of the Holy See and the Church; and order'd him to be at a Council which was to be held at Rome, a Fortnight after Eaſter. There is likewiſe another Letter writ by this Pope to Pandulphus Biſhop of Marſi, by which he re-unites that Biſhoprick, which had been divided into two. Stephen IX.

The News of the Pope's Death being brought to Rome, the Count of Freſcati and the Roman Lords plac'd by force on the Papal Chair Mincius Biſhop of Velitra, to whom they gave the Name of Benedict X. Peter Damien and the other Cardinals who had no hand in this Election, withdrew from Rome after they had proteſted againſt it: And being met at Sienne, they Elected for their Pope Gerard Arch-biſhop of Florence, a Burgundian by Nation. They immediately ſent Embaſſadors to the Empreſs Agnes, to prevail upon King Henry to confirm this Election. They had their requeſt granted, and the Empreſs order'd Godfrey Marquiſs of Tuſcany to place Gerard in Poſſeſſion of the Holy See, and to turn out Benedict. In the mean time Gerard held a Council at Sutri to depoſe Benedict; but he perceiving his Intereſt to decline, thought fit to retire to his own Houſe, and relinquiſh the Chair. Gerard being inform'd of this, came to Rome with the Biſhops and Cardinals, was there acknowledg'd as lawful Pope, and ordain'd in the beginning of January 1059. by the Name of Nicholas II. Within a few days after, Mincius waited upon him to ask him Pardon, and having ſolemnly declar'd that he had been baſely us'd, and own'd himſelf Guilty of Perjury, for being put in Poſſeſſion of the Holy See before the return of Hildebrand, contrary to the Oath which he had taken to him, he was for ever ſuſpended from all his Eccleſiaſtical Functions: And to prevent ſuch diſturbances for the future, which might happen upon the Election of Popes; it was Enacted in a Synod of an Hundred and thirteen Biſhops, held at Rome in the Year 1059. That the Cardinals ſhould have the greateſt ſhare in the Election of a Pope, and that if any one ſhould intrude into the Papal Chair without being Unanimouſly and Canonically Elected by the Cardinals, and with the conſent of the other Orders, both of Clergy and Laity, he ſhould not be look'd upon as an Apoſtolick Pope, but as an Apoſtate. This is the Firſt Act of that Council. The Second imports, That at the Death of a Pope, or any other Biſhop, no Body ſhould make a ſeizure on their Eſtates, but they ſhould be reſerv'd to their Succeſſors. The Third is, That no Perſon ſhall be preſent at the Maſs of a Prieſt, whom he knows keeps a Concubine. The Fourth imports, That the Canons or Prebendaries ſhall hold all things in Common. The Fifth, That the Tenths and other Offerings ſhall be at the diſpoſal of the Biſhop. The Sixth, That no Peaſon ſhall be entitled to any Church at the Preſentation of Laicks. The Seventh, That no Perſon ſhall take upon him the Habit of a Monk, upon the promiſe or hopes of being made Abbot. The Eighth, That no Prieſt ſhall hold two Churches at once. The Ninth, That Laicks ſhall not be the Judges of the Clergy. The Tenth, That no Perſon ſhall be ordain'd by Simony. The Eleventh, That no Perſon ſhall Marry his Relation, to the ſeventh Generation, or ſo long as the Kindred may be known. The Twelfth, That a Laick who has a Wife, and keeps a Concubine ſhall be Excommunicated. The Thirteenth, That Laicks ſhall not be advanc'd all of the ſudden to Eccleſiaſtical Degrees, but ſhall be try'd for ſome conſiderable time, after they have lay'd aſide their ſecular Habit. Theſe Acts are follow'd by a Decree againſt thoſe who are guilty of Simony, by which it is order'd, That thoſe who have been formerly ordain'd by Perſons guilty of Simony, without having given Money for their Ordination, may continue in thoſe Eccleſia- Nicholas II. The Council held under Nicholas II. in the Year 1059.

ſtical Degrees to which they have been advanc'd; but that for the future, thoſe who ſhall be ordain'd by Perſons whom they know to be guilty of Simony, ſhall be depos'd. With reference to Popes 'tis added, That thoſe who ſhall take Poſſeſſion of the Papal Chair, either by Bribery, or by Intrigue, or by Force, without being Unanimouſly and Canonically Elected by the Cardinal-biſhops, and the reſt of the Clergy, ſhall be look'd upon not as Apoſtolick Popes, but as Apoſtates: And that it ſhall be lawful for the Cardinal-biſhops, and any other Perſons of known Piety, whether Clerks or Laicks, to turn out ſuch an one, who ſhall thus ſeize upon the Holy See, by Excommunicating him, and by calling in to their Aſſiſtance the ſecular Power. And that if they cannot do this in Rome, they ſhall meet together out of that City, in what place they pleaſe, to Chooſe one whom they ſhall judge more worthy to fill the Chair: And that the Perſon whom they ſhall Chooſe, ſhall be look'd upon as Lawful Pope; Salvo omnino Imperatoris Privilegio, as 'tis worded in that very Decree concerning the Election of a Pope. It was in this Council that Berenger retracted his Error, as we have ſaid before.

The other Councils under Nicholas II.

This ſame Pope being reconcil'd to the Normans of Pozzuolo, held a Council at Amalfi, where he depos'd the Biſhop of Trani; and another Council at Benevento, wherein he adjuſted a difference concerning an Hoſpital depending upon the Monaſtery of S. Vincent of Volaterra, upon which one Albert a Monk had ſeiz'd.

The Letters of Nicholas II.

The Letters of this Pope do almoſt all of them relate to the Affairs of France.

The Four firſt are directed to Gervais Arch-biſhop of Rheims. In the Firſt he gives that Biſhop to underſtand, that there was a flying Report of his being a favourer of his Adverſary: That however, he was willing to believe the contrary upon the Teſtimony which he had receiv'd of him by a very creditable Perſon. He exhorts him to maintain the Rights of the Church, and to admoniſh the King of France not to hearken to the evil Counſels which were given him, nor to oppoſe the Holy See, particulary with relation to the Perſon whom he would have to be ordain'd Biſhop of Maſcon. He aſſures him that he has a particular Reſpect and Kindneſs for that Prince; and let him do as he pleas'd, yet he would always Pray for Him and his Army. In the Second, He enjoyns that Arch-biſhop to interdict the Biſhops of Beauvais and Senlis, in caſe it appear'd that they had been ordain'd by Simony, as he was aſſur'd. In the Third, He orders that Arch-biſhop to give Satisfaction to the Church of Verdun for the Injuries he had done it, and to releaſe the Prebendaries whom he had caus'd to be apprehended. In the Fourth, He lets him know how well ſatisfied he was with thoſe ſigns of Submiſſion which he had expreſs'd to him; that he granted him what he deſir'd for the Biſhop of Senlis, becauſe it was nothing but what was reaſonable; and that he could not tell whether he ſhould come to France or no.

The Letter of Gervais Archbiſhop of Rheims, to Pope Nicholas II.

We have likewiſe a Letter of Gervais, directed to this Pope, in which he thanks him for the kind Entertainment he gave to his Deputies, and for the Charity he ſhew'd to one of them who dy'd at Rome. He acquaints him of the Death of King Henry, tells him how earneſtly he wiſh'd to ſee him in France; and aſſures him in very expreſs Terms of the Submiſſion and Reſpect which he bore to the Holy See. This doubtleſs is the Letter which Nicholas anſwer'd by the foregoing.

The Fifth Letter of this Pope is a Privilege, granted to the Monaſtery of the Religious of S. Felicity near Florence.

The Sixth, directed to Edward King of England, is a confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Church of Weſtminſter.

The Seventh, directed to Ann Queen of France, is a Tract of Peter Damien's, which was among his Letters.

The Eighth is directed to the Biſhops of France, Aquitain, and Gaſcogne. He informs them of the Decrees made in the Council of Rome, againſt the Clerks and Monks who kept Concubines, or were Apoſtates; againſt thoſe who abuſe Eccleſiaſticks, or ſeize upon the Revenues of the Church; and concerning the Compaſs of the Courts and Church-Yards.

In the Ninth, directed to the Count of Rouergue, he exhorts him to take the Churches and Poor under his Protection; and in particular, to reſtore to the Monaſtery of S. Peter of Verdun, the Lands and Revenues which he had in his Country, threatning to Excommunicate him, if he detain'd them any longer. This Pope dy'd at Florence, July 3. in the Year 1061.

Alexander II.

After his Death there were great Conteſts about the Popedom, occaſion'd by the two powerful Factions which were then in Rome: Namely, the Faction of Hildebrand, and that of the Counts of Freſcati and Galera, and of other Lords of Rome. Both Factions ſent Deputies to King Henry's Court, to obtain his Vote in favour of ſome one of their own Party. Gerard Count of Galera deputed by the Lord's Faction, having preſented King Henry with a Crown of Gold, and offer'd him the Title of a Roman Peer, inſinuated ſo far into his favour, that Stephen a Cardinal-Prieſt deputed by Hildebrand and the other Cardinals, could not ſo much as get Audience, but return'd without doing any thing. After his return the Cardinals in October, Elected for their Pope one Anſelm a Native of Milan, and Biſhop of Lucca, who took upon him the Name of Alexander II. They believ'd he would prove agreeable enough to the the Court. But King Henry looking upon this Election as a breach of his Prerogative, caus'd Cadalous Biſhop of Parma to be Elected Pope, who was acknowledg'd as ſuch by the Biſhops and Princes on the other ſide the Alpes. He intending to take Poſſeſſion of the the Papal Chair by Force, ſat down with an Army before Rome; but was beaten off by the Forces of Godfrey Marquis of Tuſcany, and of Matilda his Wife, who had enter'd into the Intereſts of Alexander. This firſt attempt proving very unſucceſsful, he return'd a ſecond time with greater ſtrength, and became Maſter of the Town Leonina, and of the Church of S. Peter; but he was outed thence alſo, and his Forces put into ſuch a Conſternation, that he himſelf had like to have been taken, and was forced to throw himſelf into a Caſtle, from whence he very narrowly made his Eſcape, by giving Mony to thoſe who Beſieg'd him. Some time after Anno Arch-biſhop of Cologne, who had the greateſt hand in the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of Germany, ever ſince the Empreſs Agnes was remov'd, being come into Italy, and alledging that the Election of Pope Alexander was invalid, becauſe it was carry'd on without the Emperor's Approbation, and becauſe he lay under a ſuſpicion of having given Mony for to be Elected: It was agreed upon to call a Council at Mantua, to adjuſt this difference. Alexander and Cadalous met there, with Peter Damien, Hildebrand, and ſeveral other Biſhops of Italy, Lombardy and Spain. Alexander did there very ſtiffly defend his Election; Cadalous had not the face to maintain his pretended Right, and ſo withdrew. The former likewiſe clear'd himſelf by Oath of the Accuſation of Simony, which was lay'd to his Charge; ſo that Anno and the Biſhops of Lombardy acknowledg'd him alone to be Lawful Pope. But the Emperor's Prerogative was preſerv'd for the future, and Alexander was oblig'd to Pardon Cadalous, and to make Guitbert Grand Signior of Parma, Chancellor to King Henry, and formerly the Popes greateſt Enemy, Arch-biſhop of Ravenna. This Council was held in the Year 1064. and put an end to a Schiſm which would have been the Cauſe of very great diſturbances in the Church of Rome, if it had continued as it had begun. Alexander II.

The year before, Alexander had held a Council at Rome, conſiſting of above One hundred Biſhops, wherein he had reviv'd the Decrees of his Predeceſſors, Leo IX. and Nicholas II. againſt thoſe who were guilty of Simony, againſt thoſe who kept Concubines, againſt ſuch of the Laity who ſeiz'd on the Revenues of the Church, againſt thoſe who Marry'd their Kindred till after the ſeventh Degree, and againſt the Apoſtate Clergy and Monks. This is only a renewal of the Council held under Nicholas II. The Councils under Alexander II.

In two other Councils held at Rome the year following, Alexander Condemn'd thoſe who maintain'd, that the Degrees of Conſanguinity ought to reach no farther than to Couſin-Germans, which he calls the Hereſy of the Nicolaitans. He likewiſe Condemn'd thoſe who had maintain'd, that one may without being guilty of Simony, give Mony to Princes to be inſtituted into the Revenues of the Church. He makes uſe of Peter Damien to confute theſe Errors; and ſent him to Milan to reform the Clergy of that City; into France, to relieve the Monks of Cluny; and to Florence, to put an end to the Schiſm of the Church, belonging to that City.

Whilſt Peter Damien was employ'd in Reforming the Church, Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome, who had the ſole Adminiſtration of Affairs relating to the Holy See, made uſe of his utmoſt endeavours to advance the temporal Power thereof. With the Aſſiſtance of Godfrey Marquiſs of Tuſcany, and the Princeſs Matilda, he repuls'd the Normans of Pozzuolo, and oblig'd them to ſurrender ſeveral places. He engag'd ſeveral Lords of Burgundy and France to bind themſelves by Oath to defend the Church of Rome. He exhorted William Duke of Normandy to take upon him the Kingdom of England, vacant by the Death of King Edward. Laſtly, From the Pontificate of Alexander he began the Conteſt with King Henry about the Right of Inveſtitures, and caus'd him to be cited to Rome upon that Subject. We attribute all this to Hildebrand, becauſe 'tis evident that it was he who Govern'd under the Name of Alexander II. who led a reſerv'd and a retir'd Life, and ſpent more of his time at Lucca and Mount Caſſin than at Rome. However he dy'd in that City, April 22. in the Hear 1073.

Since this Pope was eleven Years and ſome Months on the Chair, we may very well expect a great many Letters written in his Name. We have Five and Forty of them compleat, and the Fragments of ſeveral Acts related by Ives of Chartres and by Gratian. The Letters of Alexander II.

His Firſt Letter is directed to the Clergy and Laity of Milan, whom he exhorts to lead a Chriſtian Life.

The Second is directed to Harold King of Norway, whom he exhorts to own the Arch-biſhop of Breme as Vicar of the Holy See, and to ſubmit to him as ſuch. He reproves him for that the Biſhops of his Kingdom, were either not Conſecrated, or elſe had given Mony to be Conſecrated.

By the Third, directed to the King of Denmark, he demands of that Prince the payment of what was due from that Kingdom to the Holy See.

By the Fourth, directed to the Arch-biſhop of Dalmatia and Sclavonia, he ſends him the Pall, and gives him ſome Inſtructions concerning his Office.

The

The Letters of Alexander II.

The Fifth is the Decree of the Council of Rome, of which we have already ſpoken.

In the Sixth, directed to Gervais Arch-biſhop of Rheims, he writes to him againſt Cadalous, congratulates him of the endeavours he us'd for the extirpation of Simony; and intruſts him and the Arch-biſhop of Sens with the Tryal of the Biſhop of Orleans, who was Charg'd with Simony, and orders him to turn out the Abbot of S. Medard of Soiſſons, Excommunicated long before, and to Elect another in his Place.

This Letter is follow'd by a Decree made at Milan by two Cardinal Legats of the Holy See, againſt the Clergy who were either guilty of Simony, or kept Concubines.

The Seventh Letter is directed to the Biſhops of Denmark, whom he injoyns to be preſent at the Synod held by the Biſhop of Hamburgh.

In the Eighth he exhorts William King of England to pay him the Peter-pence which were due to him.

In the Ninth he grants to Anno Arch-biſhop of Cologne, a Privilege which he had beg'd of him in the behalf of a Monaſtery.

The Tenth is directed to William King of England: He exhorts him to take into his Protection the Eccleſiaſticks of his Kingdom; and adviſes him to follow Lanfrank's directions, to whom he committed the Determination of the Biſhop of Cheſter's Cauſe, and of the Diſpute on foot between the Arch-biſhop of York, and the Biſhop of Dorcheſter.

In the Eleventh, directed to Landulphus, he determines that the Man who had Vow'd to take upon him the Monaſtick Life and had forc'd his Wife to conſent to it, ought not to be made a Monk, till ſhe ſhould give her voluntary conſent thereto.

The Twelfth is directed to Gervais Arch-biſhop of Rheims: He aſſures him that he was deeply concern'd for what had befaln him, and invites him to come to a Synod held at Rome.

In the Thirteenth, directed to the ſame Arch-biſhop, he admoniſhes him to put an end to the difference on foot between Him and two Clerks of his own Church, and that in the preſence of the Legats of the Holy See, and of the Biſhop of Laon, whom he had Commiſſion'd for that purpoſe: And he lets him know that he has written to the Lords who moleſted him, either to do him Juſtice in the preſence of his Legats, or elſe to appear before his Synod.

In the Fourteenth, he admoniſhes him again to put an end to the Affair of thoſe two Clerks, about whom he had already written.

In the Fifteenth, he enjoyns him to Excommunicate thoſe who had unlawfully ſeiz'd upon the Revenues belonging to a Monaſtery.

In the Sixteenth, he gives the ſame Arch-biſhop to underſtand how deeply he was concern'd for the Afflictions which the Church of Rheims labour'd under, and promiſes to ſend him a Legat to his Aſſiſtance.

In the Seventeenth, he exhorts him to aſſiſt the Biſhop of Laon, in doing Juſtice to an Abbeſs, who was turn'd out of her Monaſtery of S. John of Laon.

In the Eighteenth, he forbids him to Ordain Joſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, who was manifeſtly guilty of Simony; and orders him to puniſh the Biſhop of Beauvais for the outrages he had committed, and to oblige the Biſhop of Amiens, to let the Abbot of Corby live in quiet.

In the Nineteenth, he informs him, That he had confirm'd the Privilege of the Abbey of Corbey, and adjuſted the difference which was between the Abbot, and the Biſhop of Amiens, who had given him ſatisfaction in the Synod. He refers to him the other Conteſts which might be between them, and orders him to give the Holy Chriſm and other Rites to the Monaſtery of Corby, if that Biſhop refus'd to give it them.

In the Twentieth, he lets him know, that he has confirm'd the Privileges of the Abbey of S. Dennis of France, and put an end to the difference between the Abbot and the Biſhop of Paris, after he had heard both Parties at Rome.

The One and twentieth directed to the Arch-biſhops of France, is the Letter of Legation which he grants to Peter Damien, when he ſent him into France.

In the Two and twentieth directed to Gervais Arch-biſhop of Rheims, he confirms the Excommunication made by that Arch-biſhop and by Peter Damien againſt the Abbot of S. Madard, and orders him to turn him out.

In the Three and twentieth, he thanks that Arch-biſhop and the King of France, for having turn'd out the Arch-biſhop of Chartres, who was Convicted of Simony; and he deſires that they would do the ſame with reſpect to the Biſhop of Orleans.

In the Four and twentieth, he refers the Tryal of the Divorce between Count Radulphus and his Wife, to the Arch-biſhops of Rheims and of Sens, and to their Suffragans.

In the Five and twentieth, he orders the Arch-biſhop of Rheims to cauſe the Biſhop of Chalons to reſtore to the Church of S. Menne the Body of that Saint, which he had by force taken away.

In

In the Six and twentieth, directed to the Arch-biſhop of Treves, and the Biſhop of Verdun, he orders, that a Prieſt who in his Sickneſs had vow'd to turn Monk, and was of another mind after his Recovery, ſhould be reſtor'd to the Benefices which he held before. The Letters of Alexander II.

In the Seven and twentieth written to the Clergy of Naples, he determines that the Degrees of Kindred ought to be reckon'd according to the Number of the Generations.

In the Eight and twentieth, that he who Marries a Relation of his Concubine, who is promis'd in Marriage to another, ought to reſtore her to him.

In the Nine and twentieth, he injoyns a Prieſt, who had kill'd another Prieſt, four years Pennance, and ſuſpends him for ever.

In the Thirtieth he impoſes ten years Pennance on a Laick who had kill'd a Prieſt, tho' the Prieſt had been the firſt Aggreſſor.

In the One and thirtieth he moderates the Pennance impos'd by the Biſhop of Conſtance upon an Abbot, who had given his Servant a blow with a Stick, of which he dy'd within ſix Months after.

In the Two and thirtieth, he determines, that a Man who was ordain'd Deacon and Prieſt, without having been made Sub-deacon, ſhall forbear performing his Miniſterial Functions, till ſuch time as he had been ordain'd Sub-deacon.

In the Three and thirtieth, he moderates the Pennance impos'd on a Man who had been the occaſion of Homicide, tho' he had not been an Inſtrument thereof.

In the Four and thirtieth, directed to the Biſhops of Spain, he declares that they ought not to put the Jews to death for their Religion.

In the Five and thirtieth, he orders the Clergy and Laity of Lucca, not to ſell the Offices belonging to the Church.

In the Six and thirtieth, he adjuges that a Prieſt, who is ſubject to the Falling Sickneſs, ought to abſtain from Celebrating Maſs.

By the Seven and thirtieth, he declares that he had impos'd ſeven years Pennance on a Man who had kill'd his own Son involuntarily.

In the Eight and thirtieth he explains the manner of reckoning the Degrees of Conſanguinity.

In the Nine and thirtieth, which is among Lanfrank's Letters, he confirms the Privilege of the Engliſh Monks, to officiate in Cathedral Churches.

The Fortieth is the Privilege granted to the Abbey of Vendom.

The One and Fortieth is the Privilege granted to the Monaſtery of Peter Damien.

In the Two and fortieth, he enjoyns the Biſhop of Amiens to forbear diſturbing the Monks of Corby; otherwiſe he would Suſpend and Excommunicate him, till ſuch time as he ſhould give them ſatisfaction in the preſence of the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims.

The Three and fortieth, directed to the Monks of Cluny, is a Privilege which he grants to them, that they ſhould not be Excommunicated or Interdicted, but by the Sentence of the Holy See.

By the Four and fortieth he permits Gebehard Arch-biſhop of Salzbourgh, to erect a Biſhoprick in his Dioceſs.

By the Five and fortieth he confirms the Eſtabliſhment made by the Biſhop of Paſſaw, that the Regular Canons ſhould hold all things in Common.

The greateſt part of the Fragments of his other Letters, are his Judgments preferr'd againſt the Clerks who were guilty of Simony and Fornication; or elſe his Determinations upon ſeveral Points of Diſcipline, particularly concerning the Degrees of Conſanguinity. We likewiſe gather from them, that an Excommunicated Perſon cannot Excommunicate another: That a Prieſt ought to Celebrate but one Maſs a day; tho' ſome ſay one for the day, and another for a deceaſed Perſon, when 'tis neceſſary: That thoſe who offer any Violence to Biſhops, ſhall be Excommunicated; and that thoſe who offer any to Prieſts, or to any other Clergy-men, ſhall be injoyn'd Pennance.

CHAP. V.

An Account of the Church of Rome under Gregory VII. of the Differences between this Pope, and the Emperor Henry, and other Princes of Europe; With an Abſtract of his Letters.

Gregory VII.

THERE happen'd no diſturbance among the People upon the Death of Pope Alexander: For Hildebrand, who had the whole Power in his own Hands, gave ſuch good Orders, that all was ſtill and quiet. He order'd a Faſt to be kept, and Prayers to be made for three Days together, before they conſulted about the Election of another Pope. But at the very time of Interring the Corps of the deceaſed in the Church of S. Saviour, April 22 in the Year, 1073. being the very Day of his Death; the People being mov'd thereto, proclaim'd Hildebrand Pope, and put him into the Poſſeſſion of the Holy See. The ſame Day he acquainted the Prince of Salerno of his Election, and pray'd him to come to Rome to defend him. This is what he ſays himſelf about the manner of his Election: But he withal declares that it was much againſt his Will, and that he was very Angry at it. His Adverſaries tell us quite another Story, and ſay, That they were his Soldiers and other of his Creatures, who made this tumultuary Proclamation: That neither the Cardinals, nor the Clergy, nor the moſt conſiderable among the People had any Hand in it. However, there is an Act of Election in the Name of the Cardinals and the Clergy of Rome, made in the preſence of the Biſhops and Laity, which bears date the very Day of his Election. However the Caſe was, it muſt be own'd that this Election was very Precipitate; and that Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin and Cardinal, had a great deal of reaſon for the Reply he made to Hildebrand, who check'd him for coming too late, when he told him, that it was himſelf who was too haſty, ſince he took poſſeſſion of the Holy See, before the Pope his Predeceſſor was lay'd in his Grave: And Hildebrand himſelf has acknowledg'd the Fault of this Election, which he caſts upon the People, and maintains that he had no Hand in it. He was of Tuſcany, of the Borough of Soana, the Son of a mean Artificer, if moſt Hiſtorians may be credited. He ſpent the firſt Years of his Life in Rome, where he had for his Maſter, Laurence Arch-biſhop of Melpha, and was extreamly in the favour of Benedict IX. and Gregory VI. He attended the latter in his Baniſhment to Germany, and after his Death retir'd into the Abby of Cluny, where he abode till ſuch time as Bruno Biſhop of Toul, who was nominated for Pope by the Emperor Henry, going through France took him along with him to Rome, not queſtioning but by the Acquaintance and Intereſt which he had in that City, he might be very ſerviceable to him. He was no ſooner return'd but he renew'd his Familiarity with Theophylact or Benedict IX. and grew within a while ſo Rich and Powerful, that he became Lord and Maſter of all Affairs, and the Popes were in a manner his Dependents. It was he who negotiated the Election of Victor II. between the Emperor and the Romans; and under Victor's Pontificate he was ſent Legat into France. He turn'd out Benedict IX. and caus'd Nicholas II. to be Elected in his ſtead, who made him Arch-deacon. In a Word it was by his means that Cadalous was turn'd out, and Anſelm Biſhop of Lucca ordain'd Pope under the Name of Alexander II. It was he who ſupported that Popes Intereſt, and having taken upon him the Character of Chancellor of the Holy See, had the abſolute Adminiſtration of all Affairs both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, as well as the entire diſpoſal of the Revenues of the Church of Rome during his Popedom.

Hildebrand foreſeeing that his Election might be moleſted, becauſe it had been carry'd on ſo precipitately, and without the Conſent of Henry King of Germany; he forthwith wrote to him about it, and requeſted by his Deputies that he would be pleas'd to confirm it, aſſuring him that he had been elected againſt his Will, and that he put off his Ordination till ſuch time as he was inform'd of his Will and Pleaſure. King Henry took ſome time to conſider on it, and ſent Count Eberhard to Rome, to learn after what manner that Election had been carry'd on. Hildebrand ſhew'd ſo many Civilities to this Count, that he wrote to the King in his behalf: And Henry perceiving that it ſignified nothing to oppoſe his Election, becauſe he was more powerful in Rome than himſelf, gave his Conſent to it. By this means Hildebrand was ordain'd Prieſt, and afterwards Biſhop of Rome, in June, Anno Dom. 1073. At his Ordination he took upon him the Name of Gregory VII. in honor to the Memory of John Gratian his old Patron, who had aſſum'd the Name of Gregory VI. when he was ſeated upon the Papal Chair.

No

No ſooner was this Man made Pope, but he form'd a deſign of becoming Lord Spiritual and Temporal over the whole Earth; the ſupreme Judge and Determiner of all Affairs both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; the Diſtributer of all manner of Graces of what kind ſoever; the Diſpoſer not only of Arch-biſhopricks, Biſhopricks, and other Eccleſiaſtical Benefices; but alſo of Kingdoms, States, and the Revenues of particular Perſons. To bring about this Reſolution he made uſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, and the Spiritual Sword which God had put into his Hand, not only to maintain the Faith and Diſcipline of the Church, to reform Abuſes, and to puniſh thoſe who were guilty of Spiritual Offences; but he likewiſe made uſe of it to deprive Kings of their Kingdoms, Princes and Lords of their Eſtates and Revenues; to render them his Tributaries, to diſpoſe at his pleaſure all that belong'd to them, and to force them to do whatſoever he deſir'd; to engage Arch-biſhops and Biſhops to pay him a blind Obedience, and to do nothing in their own Dioceſſes without his Order. He liv'd in times very lucky for him, and very proper to eſtabliſh his Pretenſions; the Empire of Germany was weak; France govern'd by an Infant King, who did not much mind the Affairs of State; England newly Conquer'd by the Normans; Spain in part under the Government of the Moors; the Kingdoms of the North newly Converted; Italy in the Hands of a great many petty Princes; all Europe divided by ſeveral Factions, ſo that it was eaſy for him in ſuch a juncture to eſtabliſh his Authority. But this undertaking created a World of Buſineſs to him, and engag'd him in Conteſts with a great many European Princes. The moſt conſiderable was that which he had with Henry King of Germany, which laſted all his Popedom, and was of very pernicious Conſequence, both to the Church and the Empire: The account of which is as follows. Gregory VII.

Henry, the Fourth King of the Germans of that Name, ſince Henry the Faleoner, ſucceeded (as we hinted before) his Father Henry, in the Year, 1056. being then about five Years old. His Father at his Death recommended him to Pope Victor II. and threw him under the protection of the Holy See. He was at firſt under the Government and Tuition of the Empreſs Agnes his Mother, who had the adminiſtration of the Empire in her Hands. But the Princes and Grandees of Germany, being weary of the Government of this Woman, took Henry away from her, and committed the Charge of his Royal Perſon to Anno Arch-biſhop of Cologne, who had likewiſe the greateſt ſhare in the Government. Theſe Lords, to retain their Authority the longer, left Henry to his liberty of doing what he pleas'd, and to live in the Debaucheries common to Youth; and in the mean time Govern'd Abſolutely under his Name, and diſpos'd as they ſaw fit of the Offices, Revenues, and Affairs of the Empire. Henry was in this kind of dependency upon them till he came to be Eighteen or Twenty years old: At which time he began to take Cognizance of the Affairs of his Eſtate, and to Govern them himſelf: It was then that he began to be ſenſible that a great many things had been done contrary to Juſtice, and that the Grandees abuſing the Confidence which he had repos'd in them, were advanc'd by indirect means, and regarded more their own private Intereſts, than thoſe of the State: It was then, he revok'd part of what they had caus'd to have been done, prohibited the Exactions and Outrages which they had been guilty of, re-eſtabliſh'd the Courſe of Juſtice and the Force of the Laws, and puniſh'd the Offenders. The meaſures which he took, made ſeveral of his Lords to become Malecontents; for they being us'd to do what they pleas'd themſelves without fearing to be check'd for it, could not be eaſie under this new Yoke. Thereupon they conceiv'd an Averſion to King Henry, which they continued for ever after, and they took up a Reſolution either to Kill him, or to Out him of the Empire. The Saxons were the firſt who openly Rebell'd againſt him; they ſet upon him with ſuch an Advantage, and with ſo great Numbers, that he was forc'd to fly for it. He return'd with an Army, and the Saxons were twice defeated, but ſtill kept to their Reſolution. They enter'd into a Confederacy with ſeveral Lords of Lombary, France, Bavaria and Suabia; and finding themſelves not ſtrong enough to make open War againſt him, they charg'd him with ſeveral Crimes before Pope Gregory, and intreated that Pope to turn him out of his Throne, and to put up another King in his place, whoſe Conduct and Wiſdom ſhould be anſwerable to his Dignity. An Account of the Difference between Henry and Gregory VII.

Gregory VII. had formerly begun under the Popedom of Alexander II. to form a Proceſs againſt King Henry, and had caus'd him to be cited to Rome upon the account of Simony, and other Crimes lay'd to his charge. But after Alexander's Death, he thought it would redound to his Intereſt to manage him, that he might be the more inclinable to confirm his Election. Some Authors ſay, That he ſecretly threaten'd that Prince to Proſecute him, in caſe he would not approve of his Election; but this Matter of Fact is not prov'd by any Authentick Teſtimony. What is more certain, is; That before his Ordination, Gregory ſent word to Beatrice and Matilda, That he had a deſign of ſending ſome pious Perſons to King Henry, to give him ſome wholſome Advice about his Conduct, and to perſuade him to return to that Obedience which he ow'd to the Church of Rome. At the ſame time he adviſes theſe Princeſſes not to communicate with the Biſhops of Lombardy, who were either guilty of Simony, or favour'd thoſe who were ſo. This Letter of Gregory, which is the Eleventh of his firſt Book, bears date May 25, 1073.

Gregory VII.

The Perſons guilty of Simony, of whom he ſpeaks in this Letter, are the Biſhops of Lombardy, and particularly Godfrey Arch-biſhop of Milan, who was (as Gregory ſays) advanc'd to that Dignity by Simony; and even whilſt Guy Arch-biſhop of that City was Living. He and his Adherents had been Excommunicated for this by the Pope in a Council of Rome, but this Excommunication had no other Effect upon him than to Incenſe him; and entring into a League with all the Biſhops of Lombardy, they conſpir'd together againſt the Holy See. Gregory VII. being advanc'd to the Papal Chair, had nothing more in his Thoughts, than to bring them to ſubmit, and to cauſe the Excommunication iſſued out againſt them to be put in Execution; as appears by the Letter which he ſent on that Subject to all the Faithful of Lombardy, bearing date July 1, 1073. which is the Fifteenth of the firſt Book. King Henry on the other hand protected the Arch-biſhop of Milan, and the Biſhops of Lombardy, and continued in Communion with them; and this gave the firſt Riſe to the Conteſt betwixt him and Pope Gregory.

The firſt of September in the ſame year the Pope adviſ'd Anſelm, Biſhop of Lucca Elect, not to receive the Inveſtiture of his Biſhoprick from King Henry, till ſuch time as he had given Satisfaction for his holding Communion with Excommunicated Perſons, and till he was reconcil'd to the Holy See, which he hop'd would be effected by the Mediation of the Empreſs Agnes; of Beatrice and Matilda Counteſſes of Tuſcany; and by Radulphus Duke of Suabia, who had undertaken the Accommodation. The ſame day Gregory wrote to that Duke, telling him, That he had no particular ill Will to King Henry; but on the contrary, wiſh'd him well, as he was oblig'd to do, becauſe he had acknowledg'd him for King; becauſe he had receiv'd ſeveral ſignal Favours from his Father Henry; and becauſe that Prince upon his Death, had recommended him to Pope Victor II. But for as much as this Concord between the Empire and the Church, ought to be pure and ſincere, it was requiſite in the firſt place that he ſhould manage the Affair with him, with the Empreſs Agnes, with the Counteſs Beatrice, and with Reginald Biſhop of Cumæ; that for this purpoſe he deſir'd a Conference with him, and pray'd him to come to Rome. He wrote likewiſe at the ſame time to this Biſhop of Cumæ, telling him, That he wiſh'd with all his Heart, that the King were Maſter of all that Religion and Piety which he ought to be Maſter of; and that he were in Union and Amity with the Holy See; and to bring this about, he pray'd him to be ready to come to Rome with the Empreſs, Radulphus, and the Counteſs Beatrice, that ſo all things might be adjuſted: That he might hold Conferences with the Biſhops of Lombardy, but that he ought not to Communicate with them. Theſe three Letters are the Nineteenth, Twentieth and the One and twentieth of the firſt Book. In the Four and twentieth written to Bruno Biſhop of Verona, bearing date September the 24th, he declares that he retains the ſame Love and Tenderneſs for King Henry as ever he did. This Prince replies to the Pope's Civilities in a very ſubmiſſive Letter, wherein he declares, That for as much as it was requiſite that the Empire and the Papacy ſhould be mutually aſſiſting to each other, it were to be wiſh'd that they were united together: That he own'd he had not as yet paid all that Reſpect to the Papacy which he ought, nor puniſh'd the Guilty with ſufficient Severity: That he confeſs'd his Fault, in order to obtain Pardon for it: That he acknowledg'd that the Levity of his Youth, or his being Jealous of his Authority, or Laſtly, his being led by evil Councellors, was the cauſe of his Sinning againſt Heaven and the Pope, not only by unlawful ſeizing upon the Revenues of the Church, but alſo by communicating with unworthy Perſons, and ſuch as were guilty of Simony, and by ſelling of Churches, inſtead of protecting them as he ought: That he deſired he would for the future aſſiſt him with his Authority; and that he implor'd his Aid and his Advice for the Reformation of the Churches, and particularly that of Milan; aſſuring him that he would aſſiſt him as far as poſſible, and hop'd he was of the ſame mind with reſpect to him. The Pope ſeem'd ſatisfied with this Letter, as he declares in the Five and twentieth Letter of the firſt Book, directed to Herlembold, whom he had made Arch-biſhop of Milan after the Excommunication of Godfrey, wherein he does not ſtick to tell him, That King Henry had ſent him ſuch a ſubmiſſive Letter, as was never in his Memory ſent by that Prince, or any of his Predeceſſors to the Popes of Rome. This Letter bears date September the 28th, ſo that King Henry's Letter, which is not related till after the Nine and twentieth of Gregory, is written ſome time before. The Six and twentieth Letter bearing date October the 9th, is likewiſe directed to Herlembold, whom he adviſes to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to reclaim the Biſhops of Lombardy, and among the reſt, the Biſhop of Verceil, by treating them with meekneſs; and to grant Abſolution to thoſe who had communicated with excommunicate Perſons, whenever they would repent. In the Seven and eight and twentieth, he exhorts the Biſhops of Aix and Pavia to aſſiſt Herlembold, and to ſhun Excommunicated Perſons; theſe Letters bear date the 13th, of the ſame Month. However, he would not have the Germans to riſe up in Arms againſt Henry, he deſires that both Parties would refer themſelves to his Judgment, as he ſent word to the Arch-biſhop of Magdebourg by the Nine and thirtieth Letter of the ſame Book, which bears date December the 20th, in the ſame Year.

By

By the Two and three and fortieth Letters, dated January 25, and 26, 1074. he summon'd the Arch-bishops of Aquileia and Milan with their Suffragans, to a Synod which was to be held at Rome in the beginning of Lent. This Synod being met, the Pope order'd that all those who had been promoted to Ecclesiastical Dignities, or had obtain'd any Benefices by Simony, should be suspended and deprived of them: That it should no longer be lawful for Clerks guilty of Fornication to celebrate Mass, nor to wait at the Altar; and that the People should not assist at the Mass, or any other Office of such Priests or Clerks who kept Concubines. In this Council he gave Absolution to Garnier Bishop of Strasbourgh, who had been Excommunicated by Alexander. This Bishop was the only Person of the German Bishops who were guilty of Simony, who came to Rome to beg Pardon for his Fault; so that the Pope thought this Submission deserv'd an absolute Pardon: But as for the Bishops of Placentia, and the other Bishops of Lombardy, who were likewise come to Rome, he only granted them the Power of Confirming Infants, in case of Necessity. This is what he gives an Account of to the Princesses Beatrice and Matilda in the Seventy seventh Letter of the first Book, dated April the 15th, 1074. A proposal was likewise made in this Synod to ordain Anselm Bishop of Lucca, and Hugh Bishop of Dia; but a Remonstrance was made in behalf of King Henry, that the Pope ought not to Consecrate them, till they had receiv'd Investiture. However, the Pope did not stick to ordain the Bishop of Dia; but put off for some time the Ordination of the Bishop of Lucca. Notwithstanding a little time after he ordain'd him; the People of Lucca would not acknowledge him, but turn'd him out in spite of all the intreaties the Pope us'd for his Reception. Some Authors say that Gregory in this Council, made a Decree against the Investitures of Benefices by Laicks. It appears by the Letter written by this Pope to Beatrice and Matilda, the Sixteenth of November the same year, that Robert Guiscard Duke of Pozzuolo was already Excommunicated, and 'tis probable that this was done in this Council. The Council of Rome in the Year, 1074.

Some time after the Pope sent to King Henry the Bishops of Ostia, Palestrina and Cumæ, as his Legats, with order to call a Council of Bishops in Germany, to reform the Abuses; to communicate to that Council the Decrees of the Council of Rome against such Clerks as were guilty of Simony, or kept Concubines; and to oblige King Henry to abandon the Interests of the Bishops of Lombardy, and to put himself upon the zealous Reformation of the Church. These Legats attended with the Empress Agnes, waited upon Henry about Easter at Nuremberg. He receiv'd them very obligingly; regulated several Abuses, promis'd them to extirpate Simony wholly out of his Dominions, and to submit to the Holy See. But he would not separate himself from the Communion of the Arch-bishop of Milan, and return'd this Answer upon that Subject, That he hop'd that when the Pope should be fully inform'd of the matter, he would revoke what he had done against that Arch-bishop, and the Bishop of Lombardy. Nor would he promise the Legats to call a Council, under a pretence that it did not belong to them, but to the Arch-bishop of Mayence to act in Germany as Vicar of the Holy See, since he had receiv'd that Privilege from the Predecessors of Gregory. It was Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme who furnish'd King Henry with this reply. The Legats insisted and remonstrated that the Power which had been granted to the Arch-bishop of Mayence, ended at the Death of that Pope who had given him the Grant; that besides they had a Commission or Power which that Arch-bishop had not; but they were not harken'd to, and were oblig'd to return, after they had suspended the Arch-bishop of Breme, and cited him to a Council to be held at Rome about the Feast of St Andrew.

The Legats having brought this Answer back to Gregory, he wrote word to Henry, That tho' he had not satisfied him in the business relating to the Arch-bishop of Milan, yet he was very well pleas'd with his Submission, and with the Civilities he shew'd to his Legats: That he was willing to have another hearing of that Affair, to see whether any alteration ought to be made in the Judgment that had been pronounc'd against that Arch-bishop. By this very Letter, he gives him to understand, that he had cited to the Synod to be held at Rome the beginning of the next Lent, Sigefroy Arch-bishop of Mayence, and the Bishops of Bamberg, Strasbourg and Spires; to give an account of their advancement to the Episcopacy, and of their Morals: He desires that he would oblige them to come, and send Deputies along with them, who should give in their Testimony of their Lives and Conversations. This Letter is dated December 7th 1074. There is likewise another Letter of the same date directed likewise to Henry, wherein he expresses a great deal of Affection to him, and prays him not to hearken to their Counsels, who were willing to sow Dissensions between them. He tells him of the Afflictions which the Eastern Christians labour'd under, and assures him that he had provided several Italian Lords to go to their Assistance, and that he had already Fifty thousand Men who were ready to follow him, if he would Head them, and March as far as our Saviours Sepulcher. That he is the more inclin'd to undertake this, because it would be a means of reuniting the Greek Church to the Latin, and of reducing the Armenians and all the other Orientals into the Bosom of the Church. But forasmuch as it was a business of great Consequence, he ask'd his Advice and Assistance, and declares that if he ſhould go, he would leave him Protector of the Church of Rome. Theſe two Letters are the Thirtieth, and one and Thirtieth of the Second Book.

Some Days before this, the Pope had ſummon'd to the Synod of Rome, by the Twenty eighth, and Twenty ninth Letters of the Second Book, Liemar Arch-biſhop of Breme, Sigefroy Arch-biſhop of Mayence, Otho Biſhop of Conſtance, Garnier of Strazbourg, Henry of Spires, Herman of Bamberg, Imbric of Augsburg, and Adelbert of Wirtzbourg.

The Pope's Decree againſt thoſe who were guilty of Simony, and againſt the Clerks, who either kept Concubines or were Marry'd, remov'd in Germany, Italy, and France a great many Eccleſiaſticks out of their Places, who were found guilty of Simony, or of having unlawful converſe with Women. Theſe Men not only complain'd of this Yoke which the Pope would impoſe upon them, but they likewiſe inveigh'd againſt him, and accuſed him of advancing an inſupportable Error and ſuch as is contrary to the Words of our Saviour, who ſays that all Men are not able to live continently; and contrary to the Words of the Apoſtle, who enjoins thoſe who cannot live continently, to Marry. They added, that this Law he would impoſe on them, which oblig'd them to live like Angels by offering force to the ordinary courſe of Nature, would be the Cauſe of great Diſorders: That moreover if the Pope perſiſted in his Reſolution, they had rather renounce the Prieſthood than Marriage, and let him ſee if he could get Angels to take care of their Flocks, ſince he would not make uſe of Men. This was the Language of theſe corrupted Eccleſiaſticks, according to the account of an Hiſtorian of that time. But the Pope for his part preſs'd the Execution of his Decree, and wrote very warm Letters to the Biſhops to oblige them to take ſtrict care of it. The Arch-biſhop of Mayence doing his utmoſt therein, found how difficult it was to root out an Abuſe ſo inveterate and ſo general as this was; and before he proceeded againſt the Refractory, he gave them ſix Months time to reclaim. Laſtly, having call'd a Synod at Erford in October, he told them in expreſs Terms that he was oblig'd to put the Pope's Decree into Execution, and that they were oblig'd either to renounce their pretended Marriages, or elſe their Attendance on the Altar. When they found they could not by their Prayers prevail upon him to alter his Reſolution, they withdrew from the Council in a great Rage, threatning the Arch-biſhop either to turn him out, or to kill him. The Arch-biſhop to pacify them, order'd them to be call'd back again; and promis'd, when an Oportunity ſhould offer, he would ſend to Rome and endeavour to work the Pope over to another Mind. The next Day he propoſed to them the Queſtion about the Tenths.

The Decree of Gregory met with no leſs oppoſition in France, Flanders, England and Lombardy, than it did in Germany, as we are inform'd by ſeveral Letters ſent by this Pope to the Princes and Biſhops of theſe Countries; and this oppoſition roſe ſo high at Cambray, that they caus'd a Man to be Burnt who had aſſerted that thoſe who were guilty of Simony, and the Marry'd Prieſts ought not to celebrate Maſs or any Divine Office; and that no Man ought to aſſiſt them therein. This we find related in the Twentieth Letter of the Fourth Book.

This Oppoſition did not diſcourage Gregory VII. in the leaſt; on the contrary he wrote ſeveral Letters to the Biſhops and Princes, whereby he enjoyns them to put his Decree in Execution, and not to tolerate Clerks guilty of Simony, nor ſuch as were Marry'd or kept Concubines. Upon this Head, we may conſult the Thirtieth Letter of the Firſt Book directed to the Arch-biſhop of Salzbourg, dated November 15, 1073. the Five and fortieth of the Second Book directed to Radulphus Duke of Saubia, and to Berthold Duke of Carinthia dated January 11, 1075. the Sixty firſt directed to Dietwin or Theodwin Biſhop of Liege, whom he charges with Simony: The Sixty ſecond directed to Sicard Biſhop of Aquileia dated March 23. The Sixty ſixth to Burchard Biſhop of Halberſtat, of the ſame Month: The Sixty ſeventh to Anno Arch-biſhop of Cologn: The Sixty eighth to the Archbiſhop of Magdebourg bearing the ſame date: The Tenth and Eleventh of the Fourth Book directed to the Count and Counteſs of Flanders dated November 2, 1076. the Twentieth of the ſame Book: Laſtly, he order'd an Apology of his Decree to be iſſued out in the nature of a Manifeſto, wherein he very much exalts the Authority of the Holy See, and the Decretals of his Predeceſſors.

The Council of Rome in the Year 1075.

The Synod call'd at Rome by the Pope the Year before, was held there about the end of February this Year. He therein Excommunicated Five Perſons belonging to King Henry's Court, who were the Inſtruments of that Prince in ſelling of Benefices: He ſuſpended from their Epiſcopal Functions Liemar Arch-biſhop of Breme, Garnier Biſhop of Strazbourg, Henry of Spires, and Herman of Bamberg. He likewiſe therein ſuſpended William Biſhop of Pavia, and Cunibert Biſhop of Turin, and depos'd Dennis of Placentia, without any hopes of being reeſtabliſh'd. Some of theſe Biſhops went to Rome for Abſolution: The Biſhop of Bamberg was likewiſe in the way thither, and ſent Deputies beforehand by Preſents to corrupt the Biſhops who were his Judges; but ſeeing he had no hopes left, he return'd again, after promiſe made of retiring into a Monaſtery. Upon his return, inſtead of performing his promiſe, he enter'd again into the poſſeſſion of his Church, and committed there new irregularities. This oblig'd the Pope to renew his ſentence of Condemnation iſſu'd out againſt him, and withall to excommunicate him. This is what Gregory wrote to the Clergy and Laity of Bamberg, to Sigefroy of Mayence, and to King Henry by Three Letters of the Third Book dated July 20, 1075. In the last he commends that Prince for oppoſing thoſe who were guilty of Simony, and for uſing his utmoſt endeavours to oblige the Clergy to live in Celibacy. Gregory VII.

King Henry willing to hold a fair Correſpondence with the Pope, whom he thought fit to keep his Friend, as long as the War between him and the Saxons laſted, ſent two Embaſſadors to him before Auguſt. By them he ſent him Word, that ſince all the Princes of his Dominions wiſh'd more to ſee them at variance than in Peace, he ſent him theſe two Perſons privately, to manage the Peace between them. That he would not have any one know any thing of it, but his Aunt Beatrice and Matilda. That when he return'd from his Expedition againſt the Saxons he would ſend other Embaſſadors to him to acquaint him of his Mind, and to teſtify to him the reſpect he bore to the Holy See. The Pope having receiv'd this Letter, return'd him this Anſwer, That he was heartily glad to find he had truſted this Negotiation to Perſons of Piety, and that he was ready to receive him into the Boſom of the Church, without exacting any thing elſe from him, but that he would follow the wholeſome Counſels which he had to give him. At the cloſe of his Letter he exhorts him to uſe the Saxons with Clemency, to turn the Biſhop of Bamberg out of his Biſhoprick, and to put another in his Place. This Letter which has no date, is the Seventh of the Third Book.

When Henry had Conquer'd the Saxons, he began to put a Slight on the Pope's Favour; and inſtead of ſending a private Embaſſy to him according to his promiſe, he reſolv'd to make it publick. This gave the Pope to underſtand, that he did not care how the Affair was Canvaſs'd, as he ſent word to Beatrice and Matilda by the Fifth Letter of the Third Book, which bears date September 11, 1075.

Much about the ſame time he who was in poſſeſſion of the Arch-biſhoprick of Milan againſt the Pope's Will, dy'd, and Henry put up in his place a Clerk of the Church of Milan nam'd Tedald, without taking any notice of the Perſon whom Gregory pretended to be the lawful Arch-biſhop of the place. Immediately upon this the Pope wrote to Tedald and to the Suffragans of the Arch-biſhoprick of Milan, to prevent his Ordination; and cited him to the Synod which was to be held at Rome. Theſe Letters are the Eighth and Ninth of the Third Book dated September 7th, and October 10th, 1075. That very Day he wrote a long Letter to King Henry, by which he exhorts him to ſeparate himſelf from the Communion of thoſe who were Excommunicated by the Holy See, and to receive immediate Abſolution from ſome Biſhop who had receiv'd Commiſſion from him to grant it to that Prince. He tells him, that he is ſurpriz'd to ſee, that tho' in his Letters he expreſſes all manner of reſpect and ſubmiſſion to the Holy See, yet he oppoſes the Canonical and Apoſtolick Inſtitutions thereof; and particularly that he had not kept to the promiſes which he made to him by the Princeſs his Mother, and by his Legats concerning the Church of Milan; and that on the contrary he had beſtow'd the Biſhopricks of Spoleto and Fermo to the prejudice of what had been injoyn'd by the Holy See: He exhorts him to a ſincere ſubmiſſion to the Sanctions of the Holy See, and to put them in Execution: And he promiſes him however that if he could ſhew him by Perſons of Prudence and Piety, how an Accomodation might be found out, he would very readily lay hold on it for his Satisfaction.

About the end of this Year, the Pope fell out with Cincius, Son of Alberic, the Prefect of Rome; and after he had Excommunicated him, he caſt him into Priſon, if Benno may be credited in the Caſe. Cincius having made his Eſcape, conſpir'd againſt the Pope; and having rais'd a Troop of Soldiers, ſet upon him unawares on Chriſtmaſs Day, whilſt he was celebrating Maſs in his Pontifical Robes, ſeiz'd upon his Perſon, drew him by Violence out of Church, and ſhut him up in a ſtrong Houſe. No ſooner was this News ſpread about Rome, but the People flock'd in great Multitudes to the Houſe of Cincius to ſtorm it, and to oblige him to releaſe the Pope. Cincius finding that he was conſtrain'd to do it, made the Pope to promiſe him, before he ſet him at liberty, that he would not do any thing to him, or his Accomplices. But the People being inrag'd burnt and pillag'd the Revenues belonging to Cincius both within and without the City. Cincius for his part burnt and demoliſh'd all that belong'd to the Church of Rome. This Conteſt held for ſome Days, being fomented by Guilbert Archbiſhop of Ravenna, who had excited Cincius to this undertaking. But at laſt Cincius was conſtrain'd to leave off, and to depart from Rome to go to the Emperor. Guilbert likewiſe retir'd, pretending to be reconcil'd to the Pope, tho' his deſign was to create him new troubles. This he did by joyning himſelf with Tedald Arch-biſhop of Milan, the Biſhop of Lombardy, Cardinal Hugh, and ſeveral others of the Clergy of Rome. The Pope is Arreſted by Cincius.

King Henry being very much diſſatisfied with the Pope, who had treated his Embaſſadors unkindly, and had ſent him a Nuncio who had diſcours'd with him in an haughty and threatning Air, was eaſily perſuaded by Cardinal Hugh, and the other Biſhops and Lords, the profeſs'd Enemies of Gregory, to abandon the Intereſts of a Man who treated him with an intolerable ſeverity. To bring this about, he wrote a circular Letter to the Biſhops and Princes of the Empire, by which he implores their Aſſiſtance in the urgent neceſſity he lay under, and in that oppreſſion under which both the Empire and Church labour'd through the King Henry's Letter.

Gregory VII.

the Tyranny of Hildebrand, who deſign'd to take upon himſelf alone the Regal and Sacerdotal Authority, contrary to divine Inſtitution, which has committed the One to Princes, and the Other to Biſhops: To the prejudice of which Inſtitution he deſign'd to deprive him of the Kingdom and his Life, after he had depriv'd the Biſhops of their Prieſthood. That in this publick Grievance both of Church and State, he invites them to meet at Worms about Septuageſima, to take ſuch meaſures as might conduce to the good of the Church, and the honour of the State. Thierry Biſhop of Verdun, wrote likewiſe a circular Letter in his own Name to all the Prelates and Princes of the Empire, which was full of Invectives againſt Gregory VII. in which he declares that they ought to proceed to the Election of a new Pope. Engelbert nominated to the Arch-biſhoprick of Treves, wrote likewiſe another Letter no leſs abuſive than the former. Laſtly, all the Biſhops of Germany were ſo diſſatisfied with Gregory VII. becauſe he had declar'd publickly that there was not one ſingle Man among them who was a lawful Biſhop, and that he would oblige all of them to reſign their Biſhopricks to him, and to hold them from him, as he had already ſerv'd ſeveral of them; that they all declar'd openly againſt him. They thereupon met together in great Numbers at Worms on the day appointed, where Cardinal Hugh, (whom the Pope had Depos'd and Excommunicated a few days before) with Guilbert of Ravenna met, and preſerr'd ſeveral things againſt the Life, Conduct, Election, and Conſtitutions of Gregory. Upon this Charge, the Aſſemby declar'd that Hildebrand could no longer be look'd upon as lawful Pope, and all the Biſhops Subſcrib'd to his Condemnation. Herman of Metz, and Adelbert Biſhop of Wirtzbourgh, were the only Perſons who made any ſcruple: But William Biſhop of Utrecht, who very warmly maintain'd the Intereſt of the King, oblig'd them to Subſcribe, by ſaying, That they muſt either do that, or renounce the Allegiance which they ow'd to their Prince. Afterwards they wrote a Letter to Gregory, in the Name of the Arch-biſhops of Mayence and Treves, and of Four and forty Biſhops of Germany, by which they declar'd to him, That tho' they knew he had been advanc'd to the Papal Chair contrary to all manner of Right, yet they had thought fit to tolerate his Intruſion, in hopes that he would have made amends for theſe criminal Beginnings, by his Probity, and the good Services he would do the Church: But that the miſerable Eſtate of the Univerſal Church, was a ſufficient demonſtration that the ſequel of his Actions was anſwerable to theſe unhappy Beginnings. That tho' our Saviour had recommended Peace and Charity as the principal Character of Chriſtians, yet he on the contrary, ſow'd Diviſions in the Church by his Novelties, and tore it in pieces by his proud Cruelty, or rather by his cruel Pride. That he was the Head of the Schiſm, and that he had created Confuſſion and Trouble to the Members of the Church, who before his Time liv'd in Union and Peace, by blowing up the Flames of Diſcord in all the Churches of Italy, Germany, France and Spain. That he was deſirous to ſtrip the Biſhops of that Power which they receiv'd in their Ordination from the Holy Ghoſt; and had deliver'd them up to the fury of the People, who could not endure any Biſhops or Prieſts, but thoſe who had by an unworthy Complaiſance beg'd their Power and their Prieſthood from his Pride. That he had been the cauſe of great Confuſions between the Members of JESUS CHRIST; ſubverted the Subordination which was requiſite to be obſerv'd among them; and deſtroy'd the Rights and Privileges of all other Biſhops, by aſſerting that as ſoon as ever he ſhould have notice of the Offence of any one of their Dioceſans, the Biſhops ſhould have no farther any Power of binding or looſing them. That ſince they could not find in their Conſciences to leave the Church in the danger to which it was expos'd by his continued Outrages, they thought it proper to acquaint him with that, which they were hitherto willing to paſs by in ſilence, viz. That he had never been capable of being lawfully ſeated upon the Holy and Apoſtolick See, becauſe he had taken an Oath in the Life time of the Emperor Henry of bleſſed Memory, that he would never be Pope, nor ſuffer any other to be advanc'd to that Dignity without the conſent of that Emperor, or his Son after him. That he had formally renounc'd the Popedom, in order to bring over the other Cardinals to do the like. That in the time of Pope Nicholas II. he himſelf had been the Author of a Decree made in a Council of One hundred and fifteen Biſhops, importing that no Pope ſhould be made but who was Elected by the Cardinals, acknowledg'd by the People, and approv'd of by the King. That he had tranſgreſs'd all theſe Promiſes and all theſe Sanctions: That moreover he gave a great ſcandal to the Church, by holding too great a familiarity with a Woman (meaning Matilda) and that it became a general complaint, that all the Affairs of the Church were manag'd by the Counſels of Women. That one cannot complain too much of the unworthy Treatment he ſhews to Biſhops. Therefore for as much as 'tis evident, that by Perjury he entred upon the Papacy; that he has diſturb'd the Church by his dangerous Novelties; and ſcandaliz'd it by the irregularity of his Life, they renounce that Obedience which they never promis'd him, and would no longer eſteem him as an Apoſtolick Pope, ſince hitherto he has not eſteem'd them as Biſhops. Rowland a Clerk of the Church of Parma was fixt upon to carry this Letter to Rome; to declare to Gregory that he ſhould renounce the Popedom; and to proteſt that all he ſhould do or injoyn for the future ſhould be Null. This Clerk attended by the Envoys of King Henry,

The Letter of Engelbert Arch-biſhop of Treves.

The Aſſembly of Worms againſt Gregory VII. held in the Year, 1076.

Henry, came to Rome the day before the Pope held his Synod which was immediately before the firſt Week in Lent. He deliver'd the Letter of the Aſſembly of Worms to Gregory, and made thoſe Declarations and Proteſtations, which he had been order'd. Gregory VII.

Gregory without being ſtartled at it held his Council on the Morrow, and caus'd the Letter which had been brought him, to be read in the preſence of thoſe who aſſiſted therein. Rowland did there renew the Denunciation he had made, threatning that if he would not obey and relinquiſh the Holy See, the King ſhould be at Rome before Whitſontide, and turn him out by force, becauſe he was a Wolf and not a lawful Shepherd. King Henry's Envoys made the ſame proteſtations. But for all this, the Courage of Gregory VII. was not abated; on the contrary, fir'd by this Affront, he began by excommunicating Sigefroy Archbiſhop of Mayence, and by ſuſpending the other Biſhops of Germany, who had any hand in this undertaking; he pronounc'd likewiſe a Sentence of Excommunication againſt the Biſhops of Lombardy, and againſt ſeveral Biſhops beyond the Mountains, who were charg'd with Simony or other Crimes; and laſtly, he declar'd King Henry to have forfeited the Kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and his Subjects abſolv'd from the Oath of Allegiance, and thundred out a Bull of Excommunication againſt that Prince. The Council of Rome againſt Henry in the Year, 1076.

The Pope immediately publiſh'd this Sentence, and directed it to all the Faithful, with a very warm Letter againſt the Proceedings of the Biſhops and King of Germany. This is the Sixth Letter of the third Book, where 'tis miſplac'd among the Letters of the Year, 1075. whereas it was not written till after the Council held the firſt Week in Lent, in the Year, 1076.

This Excommunication made an Impreſſion on a great many Peoples Minds. The Enemies of King Henry made uſe of it to promote their Deſigns, and it ſerv'd as an Umbrage to the League which the Princes and Lords of Germany renew'd againſt him. It likewiſe ſhock'd ſome of thoſe who aſſiſted at the Aſſembly of Worms; and amongſt others, Udo Arch-biſhop of Trewes, who went expreſs to Rome, to procure his Abſolution, and be reconcil'd to Gregory; and being return'd to Germany, he was one of the firſt who maintain'd, That they ought not to communicate with the King, till ſuch time as he ſhould be reconcil'd to the Pope. The Archbiſhop of Mayence and a great many more became of the ſame Mind, and there were but a very few of the Prelates who would venture to ſtand to what they had done. The Pope for his part, made ſure of the Forces and Places belonging to Matilda, the Widow of Godfrey Duke of Lorrain, who dy'd this year in his Dutchy, being parted from his Wife a long time before. This Princeſs was Daughter to Beatrice the Siſter of the Emperor Henry III. and to Boniface Lord of Lucca. She was poſſeſs'd of a very conſiderable Eſtate in Italy, having the Sovereignties of Lucca, Parma, Reggio, Mantua, and a part of Tuſcany under her. She has wholly wedded to the Intereſts of Gregory VII. who likewiſe eſpous'd her Intereſts with all the warmth imaginable.

Whilſt Affairs ſtood in this poſture, Gregory thought that before he broke out into an open War, it was adviſable to uſe his freſh endeavours to bring over King Henry to ſubmit to what he was minded to require of him. To forward this deſign he directed a Letter to all the Biſhops, Abbots, Prieſts, Dukes, Princes, Knights, and in general, to all the Faithful of the Roman Empire, wherein after he had declar'd what he had done in favour of Henry, and the baſe returns he had receiv'd for it; he exhorts them to prevail upon this Prince to do Pennance, that ſo he might be reconcil'd to the Church, declaring that if he would not hearken to their Counſels, they ought to convene together to conſult the Welfare of the Univerſal Church. He puts them in mind of holding no Correſpondence with thoſe who were not ſeparated from Communion with Henry. To conclude, he calls God to witneſs, that he had no temporal Advantage in his eye, but the Welfare of the Church was the only Motive of what he did. This Letter which is the Firſt of the fourth Book, bears date July 25, in the Year, 1076.

Within a while after Herman Biſhop of Metz, who kept Neuter in this Affair, wrote to Gregory, to ask him whether the Biſhops who communicated with Henry were excommunicated, and at the ſame time he takes notice to him that there were ſome Perſons who maintain'd, that a King could not be excommunicated. Gregory anſwer'd him by the Second Letter of the ſame Book written at Tivoli, Auguſt 25. That there was no queſtion to be made but that all thoſe who communicated with King Henry (if it be lawful to call him King) were excommunicated: And that with reſpect to thoſe who ſay that a King ought not to be excommunicated, there was no need to return them an Anſwer, ſince their Opinion was ſo Ridiculous. However, he did not ſtick to prove that Kings might be excommunicated from the example of Pope Zachary, by whom he ſays the King of France had been depos'd, and his Subjects abſolv'd from their Oath of Alliegance to him: From ſeveral Privileges which are among the Letters of S. Gregory, wherein he declares the Kings and Princes excommunicated, and depriv'd of their Dignity who ſhall infringe them. He ſubjoyns the inſtance of Theodoſius; and laſtly he alledges as a convincing Argument, that when JESUS CHRIST gave S. Peter the Power of feeding his Sheep, and the Power of Binding and Looſing, he excepted no Perſon from it. Afterwards he gives Herman to underſtand Gregory VII. ſtand, That he had granted ſome Biſhops a Power of Abſolving the Biſhops and Grandees who would ſeparate themſelves from communion with King Henry; but that he had forbidden them to grant Abſolution to that Prince till ſuch time as he was aſſur'd by good creditable Witneſſes of his Repentance, and the ſatisfaction he would make, ſince he knew very well that there were Biſhops enow who would not ſcruple to abſolve him, if he had not forbit it.

'Tis much in the ſame Air he wrote Eight Days after a Second Letter to the Prelates and Grandees of Germany, wherein after proteſtation made that it was neither Pride nor Intereſt which mov'd him to excommunicate King Henry, but only for the welfare of the Church, he prays them to be tender of him, if he did ſincerely Repent: Upon condition however that he would turn out of his Council thoſe excommunicated Perſons who were guilty of Simony, and for the future follow the Advice of thoſe who value the welfare of the Church above their own Intereſts: That he would look upon the Church as his Miſtreſs, and uſe her no longer as a Servant: That he would no longer defend ſuch Cuſtoms as were contrary to the Liberties of the Church; but follow the Doctrin of the Holy Fathers: That if he gave them an aſſurance of performing theſe and other things which with Reaſon might be required of him, they ſhall give him notice thereof by their Deputies, that ſo they might conſult together what is beſt to be done on that occaſion; but that he abſolutely forbids them to abſolve him from his Excommunication, till they had receiv'd an Approbation in writing from the Holy See for it. That if he would not repent, they ought to proceed to the election of a Prince, who would diſcharge the Duties aforemention'd, and that they ought to inform him of the Converſation and Manners of the Perſon they ſhall elect, that ſo he might confirm their Election: That with regard to the Oath which they had taken to the Empreſs Agnes, in caſe her Son ſhould dye before her, they ought not to be concern'd about it, becauſe they might very well perceive that ſhe had no longer a Right thereto, whether ſhe oppoſed or conſented to his being Depoſed: That upon the whole, they ſhould let him know who the Perſon was whom they deſign'd for Emperor, after they ſhould have reſolv'd to Out Henry. This is the Third Letter of the Fourth Book. It was no ſooner receiv'd in Germany, but the Princes and Grandees of the Empire reſolv'd to meet at Tribur or Oppenheim, to conſult of the meaſures they ought to take. Radulphus Duke of Suabia, and the Dukes of Bavaria and Carinthia, with the Biſhops of Wirtzburg and Wormes, having held a Conference at Ulma, appointed this Convention to be on the Twenty ſixth of October, and acquainted therewith all the Princes of the Empire, and the Pope, who ſent thither two Legats, to wit Sigehard Patriarch of Aquileia, and Alman Biſhop of Paſſaw. Theſe Legats declaim'd againſt the Conduct of Henry, and deſir'd that they would elect another King in his ſtead. Henry for his part ſent every Day his Deputies to promiſe the Legats, that he would correct what he had hitherto done amiſs, and that he would make reparation for it by conſulting the Welfare of the Church for the future: That if they miſtruſted his Promiſe, he was ready to confirm it by his Oath, and to give Hoſtages for a ſecurity thereof. They return'd him this Anſwer, That they could not tell how to rely on his Words, ſince he had falſify'd them ſo often already. That nothing but the very utmoſt extremity could have brought the Holy See to uſe ſuch methods, after it had try'd all other: That it had waited his leiſure as long as poſſible; but that at preſent it could not forbear laying hold of an Opportunity which offer'd it ſelf of placing on the Throne a Perſon worthy to fill it. After ſeveral Conferences of this Nature, both Parties were ready to Engage, for the two Armies were over againſt each other, on either ſide of the Rhine, when the Lords of Suabia and Saxony ſent their Deputies to the King with this Declaration, That tho' he had behav'd himſelf very ill towards them, and tho' the Crimes laid to his Charge were evident, yet they were willing to ſubmit the Determination thereof to the Holy See. That they would prevail upon his Holineſs to come to Ausbourg about the Feaſt of the Purification, to determine this Affair in a general Aſſembly of the Princes of the Empire: That if he could not get his Abſolution in a Year's time, he ſhould be depriv'd of his Right for ever: That in the mean time he ſhould disband his Army, and withdraw to Spires with the Biſhop of Verden, and ſeveral other Miniſters, who were not excommunicated; that he would lay aſide all his enſigns of Royalty; and forbear going to Church; that he ſhould reſtore the Church of Wormes to its Biſhop; and that he ſhould order the Garriſon which he had thrown into that City to march out. The King finding his Forces to be in a bad Condition, eſteem'd it a happineſs to extricate himſelf out of theſe Difficulties, tho' upon ſuch diſhonourable Terms. He thereupon promis'd to gratify them in their demands, took his leave immediately of the Archbiſhop of Cologne, and of the Biſhops of Bamberg, Stratzbourg, Baſil, Spires, Namburg, Osnabruck, and others who were excommunicated; caus'd the Garriſon of Wormes to march out, disbanded his Forces, and withdrew to Spires. The Princes of Suabia and Saxony being ſatisfied with his Submiſſion, ſent the Pope word of all that happen'd in their Convention, and pray'd him to come to Augsburg to put an end to this Affair. The King whoſe Intereſt it was to be beforehand with the Pope, and to get his Abſolution as ſoon as poſſible, ſet forward on his Journey to the Pope about the end of the Year; and underſtanding that his Enemies had ſiez'd upon the Paſſes which open'd into Italy, to apprehend him, him, he went through Burgundy and Savoy, and with much ado enter'd Italy. He was there receiv'd very honorably by a great many, who promis'd him all manner of Aſſiſtance. In the mean time the Pope upon the intelligence he had receiv'd from the Princes of Germany ſet forward on his Journey, and came as far as Verceil, where having underſtood that King Henry was come into Italy, and had rais'd ſome Forces, he withdrew to the Caſtle of Canoſſa in the Dioceſs of Reggio, which belong'd to the Princeſs Matilda. Whilſt he was there, a great many Biſhops and ſeveral Lords of Germany waited upon him, to receive their Abſolution at his Hands. He enjoyn'd them to Faſt for ſome time in Cells, and afterwards gave them Abſolution according to their requeſt, upon condition that they ſhould hold no Correſpondence with Henry, till ſuch time as he was reconcil'd to the Holy See. In the mean time the King carry'd on his Reconciliation by the Mediation of Matilda, the Abbot of Cluny and ſeveral other Lords, and very earneſtly requeſted that he would take off the Excommunication iſſu'd out againſt him, promiſing that he would always be ready to anſwer the Accuſations of his Enemies, and to refer all to the Pope's Determination. At laſt Gregory conſented to grant him Abſolution, provided he would come in Perſon, and humbly ſue for it. This Prince reſolv'd to ſubmit to it, rather than be entirely diſpoſſeſs'd of the Empire by the Princes of Germany. He thereupon came to Canoſſa, and entred the Outworks of that place bare-footed, without any enſign of Regal Dignity. He waited three Days together at the Caſtle Gate, without receiving any Anſwer from the Pope. On the fourth Day, after ſeveral Conferences, the Pope granted him Abſolution, upon condition that he would appear at the time and place which he ſhould appoint, to anſwer to the Accuſations brought againſt him by the Princes of Germany, whereof the Pope ſhall be Judge; and that he ſhall either leave or keep his Kingdom, according to the Sentence he ſhall pronounce: That till that time, he ſhall not aſſume to himſelf any Character of the Royal Dignity; nor perform any Act of Sovereignty, unleſs receiving of ſuch Revenues as were neceſſary for his Subſiſtence: That all his Subjects ſhould be abſolv'd from their Alleigance both before God and Men: That he ſhould remove Robert Biſhop of Bamberg, and Ulrick Biſhop of Coſtheim from his Perſon; and that if he faild in the Obſervation of any one of theſe Articles, the Abſolution which he receiv'd ſhould be Null and Void: That from thenceforth he ſhould acknowledge himſelf to be Guilty, and ſhould not require any longer to be heard in his own Defence: Laſtly, He bound himſelf by Oath to ſubmit to the Judgment which the Pope ſhould make, or come to the Agreement which he deſir'd; and, if the Pope ſhould croſs the Mountains, he ſhould give him free Liberty of coming and going, without offering him any Moleſtation. Theſe Articles were Sign'd and Sworn to by Henry, January the 28th, in the Year, 1077. and as Gurantees of his Word, he offer'd the Princeſs Matilda, Hugh Abbot of Cluny, the Biſhops of Verceil, Naumburg, and ſeveral Lords. Afterwards the Pope celebrated Maſs, and having taken a Conſecrated Hoſt in his Hands, and directing his Diſcourſe to King Henry, he told him, That for a proof of his being Innocent of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he would take the Sacrament upon it; and if his Majeſty were as Innocent of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he conjur'd him to do the like. This propoſal ſomewhat puzzled the King, who perhaps was not very much diſpos'd to communicate. Some Hiſtorians relate that he ſhifted it off by ſaying, That this proof of his Innocence would not perhaps be ſatisfactory to the German Princes, who were not there preſent: Others ſay, That he did receive the Communion from the Hands of the Pope. Let the Caſe be how it will, 'tis certain that after Maſs, he was treated very nobly, and ſent away with manifeſt tokens of Friendſhip and Reconciliation. Theſe Matters of Fact are apparent from the Relation of cotemporary Authors, and from the Letter which Gregory wrote immediately after to the Princes of Germany, which is the Twelfth of the fourth Book.

King Henry's Journey into Italy.

Gregory VII.

Henry repented of this Action as ſoon as he had done it; for the Italians of Lombardy perceiving how diſadvantageous the Agreement would be to them, ridicul'd him for what he had done, and caſt reproaches upon him for it, telling him, That for their parts, they did not value the Excommunication of a Man, who had himſelf been very juſtly Excommunicated by the Biſhops of Italy; who was poſſeſs'd of the Holy See by Simony; who had ſtain'd it by ſeveral Murders, and polluted it by his Adulteries: That his Majeſty had receiv'd a Treatment unworthy of himſelf, and caſt ſuch a Blot upon his Honour, as could never be wip'd off, by ſubmitting to an Heretick, and to an infamous Perſon: That they were very unfortunate in having made choice of one for the Protector of the Juſtice and Laws of the Church, who had by this diſhonorable Submiſſion betray'd the Catholick Faith, the Authority of the Church, and the Dignity of the State. Theſe and ſuch like were the common Diſcourſes of the Princes and Grandees of Italy, and which they ventur'd to ſpeak publickly. This render'd Henry ſo odious, that they propos'd to make his Son their King, and to carry him to Rome with an Army, there to have him Crown'd by a Pope of their own chooſing. Henry to clear himſelf, repreſented to them that he was neceſſitated to do what he did; that he had not done it but only for the good of the Publick, and becauſe he could not otherwiſe ſatisfie the Pope, and the German Lords, who had declar'd againſt him: That at preſent being in a place of ſafety, he would make uſe of all his ſtrength to revenge the Affront which had been offer'd him. He had much ado after all to pacifie them, and perceiv'd himſelf abandon'd by many, and deſpis'd by others. This put him upon reſolving to break entirely with the Pope, by not obſerving the Articles agreed upon betwixt them. He recall'd the Excommunicated Biſhops, and declar'd publickly that Gregory had betray'd him, and that he would be reveng'd of the Affront which had been offer'd him.

On the other ſide the Arch-biſhop of Mayence, and the Biſhops of Wirtzburg and Metz, the Duke Radulphus, and a great many other Princes and Grandees of Germany, appointed a Convention to be held at Forcheim the 13th of March, and invited the Pope thither, who was ſtill at Canoſſa, where he was detain'd three Months by the Princeſs Matilda. Having receiv'd this Intelligence, he ſent Cardinal Gregory to King Henry, to give him notice that the time was come for the performing of what he had promis'd: That the German Princes were to meet March the 13th at Forcheim, to regulate the Affairs of the Empire: That he ought to be there, to clear himſelf of the Accuſations preferr'd againſt him. The King return'd him this anſwer, That ſince this was the firſt time of his coming to Italy, he had too much buſineſs upon his hands to think of returning ſo ſuddenly and in ſo ſhort a time. The Pope having receiv'd this Anſwer, immediately diſpatch'd away his Legats to Forcheim, to declare to the Convention, that he could not ſafely go into Germany, or return back to Rome, becauſe Henry had caus'd all the Paſſes to be block'd up: And that therefore they ſhould in his Abſence conſult the Neceſſities both of Church and State, and do what they thought moſt proper for the welfare of both.

This Convention was held at the place and time appointed. Radulphus Duke of Suabia caus'd himſelf to be Elected King, and was Conſecrated by Sigefroy at Mayence. He immediately ſent one to the Pope to acquaint him of his Election, and to aſſure him of his obedience. Henry for his part, pray'd the Pope to aſſiſt him againſt Radulphus, to declare his Election Null, and to Excommunicate him. Some Authors report that Gregory approv'd of the Election of Radulphus, and acknowledg'd him for King: But he himſelf aſſures us of the contrary in the Eight and twentieth Letter of the ninth Book, where he calls God to witneſs that this Election was carry'd on without his Conſent and Knowledge; and that the Anſwer which he had return'd to Henry, was to this effect, That he would do him Juſtice, after he had heard the Arguments on both ſides, to know which had the moſt Right on his ſide. Upon this he reſolv'd to go to Germany, and for this end wrote the laſt of May, in the Year, 1077. two Letters, the one directed to the Legats which he had in that Country, and the other to the Princes of Germany, wherein he acquaints them of his Intention of coming to Germany to decide the difference. That they ought to take all neceſſary ſecurity of the two contending Parties, for his free paſſage thither; and that if either of the two Parties ſhould oppoſe his coming, they ſhould eſteem him as an excommunicated Perſon, and acknowledge him as lawful King, who ſhould ſubmit to the Holy See, and was willing to refer himſelf to its determination. Theſe two Letters are the Three and Four and twentieth of the fourth Book.

Henry foreſeeing that if the Pope went into Germany, he would not fail of paſſing a Sentence contrary to his Intereſts, reſolv'd to ſtop his Journey, and to engage in a War againſt Radulphus, and the other Rebels. The Pope having caus'd ſeveral Biſhops of King Henry's Party to be apprehended, that Prince by way of repriſal, order'd Cardinal Gerard Biſhop of Oſtia, who was Legat in Lombardy, and Bernard Abbot of Marſeilles, one of the Pope's Legats in Germany to be apprehended. Gregory being concern'd that the Affairs of Germany did not go according to his deſires, complain'd of it to Udo Arch-biſhop of Treves, and his Suffragans, and exhorts them to do all they could to divert the Storm which was comming upon Germany. The Letter which he wrote to them upon this Subject, bears date the laſt of September, in the Year, 1077. and is the Seventh of the fifth Book.

The Council of Rome in the Year, 1078.

The beginning of the next Year, the Pope cited Guilbert Arch-biſhop of Ravenna and his Suffragans, with the Biſhops and Abbots of la Marche, Fermo and Camerine of Pentapolis, of Emilia and Lombardy, to the Council which was to be held at Rome according to Cuſtom the firſt Week in Lent, and aſſures them by his Letter, (which is the Thirteenth of the fifth Book, dated January 28.) That he would do them no harm, and that he would be as indulgent towards them as in Conſcience he could be. Theſe Biſhops did not think it proper to appear at this Synod, which conſiſted of almoſt One hundred Biſhops. The Pope did therein renew his Anathema iſſu'd out already againſt Tedald Arch-biſhop of Milan, and againſt Guilbert Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, and ſuſpended them from all Epiſcopal and Sacerdotal Functions. He therein depos'd (without any hopes of being re-eſtabliſh'd) Arnulphus Biſhop of Cremona, who was there preſent, and had own'd himſelf guilty of Simony, and excommunicated him till ſuch time as he ſhould do Pennance. He therein likewiſe depos'd Rowland Biſhop of Trevifi, for having acquir'd his Biſhoprick by taking upon him the Deputation of the Aſſembly of Worms, which had been the cauſe of the Schiſm between the Empire and the Papacy, and excommunicated him for ever, if he did not do Pennance. He ſerv'd after the ſame manner Cardinal Hugh of S. Clement, as one Condemn'd thrice by the Holy See: Firſt, For having favour'd and ſupported the Schiſm of Cadalous: Secondly, For having joyn'd himſelf, when Legat, with Hereticks and Perſons Condemn'd by the Holy See for Simony: And Thirdly, for having ſtir'd up Schiſms and Diſſentions in the Church.

He

He therein renew'd the Excommunication issu'd out by his Predecessors against the Archbishop of Narbonne; and after he had thus determin'd Matters with relation to Bishops, he orders with reference to the Affairs of Germany, that two Legats should be sent into that Country, to hold there an Assembly of Prelates and Grandees of the Empire, wherein they should endeavour to bring things to an Accomodation, or to pass a definitive Sentence in favour of him who had the best Title. And that no Person might disturb the Execution of this design, he excommunicates all such as shall oppose it, and shall hinder his Legats from going into Germany. He therein likewise excommunicates the Normans of Pozzuolo, and interdicts all the Bishops who did not appear at his Synod. Lastly, He prohibits under the penalty of Excommunication, the detaining of those who had been cast away at Sea, or seizing of their Effects. He therein declares the Ordinations made by excommunicated Persons to be Null, and absolves from the Oath of Alliegance all such as had taken it to excommunicate Persons, and prohibits them from paying any Obedience to them. But that the great number of Excommunications might not be the cause of the Damnation of those, who by ignorance, simplicity, fear or constraint were oblig'd to communicate with excommunicated Persons, he exempts out of the Excommunication all Women, Children, Servants, and other Subjects, who had no hand in the Crimes which the others committed, and in general all those who communicated with excommunicated Persons without knowing them to be so. He likewise gives Travellers leave, who are in the Country of excommunicated Persons, to buy what they want of them; and he does not hinder any Man from assisting or shewing any Acts of Charity towards the excommunicate. These Decrees are of the third of March, in the Year, 1078. Gregory VII.

This Council being broke up, the Pope wrote to the Bishops, Princes, and other Lords of Germany, sending them word what had been resolv'd upon with relation to the Affairs of Germany: And after having excommunicated all those who should hinder the Execution thereof, he gave them to understand, that the Bearer of his Letter shall agree with Udo Archbishop of Treves, who is of King Henry's party, and with some other Bishops of the party of Radulphus, about the time and place of their Assembly, that so his Legats may be there with safety. He wrote likewise in particular to that Arch-bishop, recommending to him the making up of the Peace, and the putting in Execution what had been enjoyn'd in the Council of Rome; and that he might take such measures as were most equitable, he advises him to consult with him who should be chosen Mediator of the other party. These two Letters dated March 9. in the Year, 1078. are the Fifteenth and Sixteenth of the fifth Book.

The Pope wrote and disturb'd himself in vain about the holding of this Convention; Henry would not agree to it, and prepar'd himself for carrying on the War; and even those of the party of Radulphus suspected the Pope's Sentence. Thereupon he wrote another Letter dated the first of June into Germany, wherein after he had declar'd that all the care or pains which he had taken to procure Peace were in vain, because the Enemies of God and the publick Good, who only minded the gratifying of their Ambition, by destroying the Empire, and ruining Religion, hinder'd the holding of the Convention which was propos'd: He injoyns all the Germans not to assist these Enemies of the publick Peace, and not to communicate with them, giving them to understand that they were excommunicated. Lastly, he assures them that he would never favour the party which was unjust, and prays them not to harbour any such thoughts of him, whatever might be said or written to them about it; for he was one who fear'd God, and who suffer'd every day for his sake. This Letter is the First of the sixth Book.

In the mean time King Henry without minding all these Excommunications, being march'd into Germany at the Head of an Army, and became Master of the Countries of Bavaria and Suabia, which Radulphus hhd left to retire into Saxony. Radulphus did there raise some Forces, and came before Wirtzburg, and besieg'd it. Henry being come to its Relief, gave Battle to him, which did not prove successfull to him, for several of the Horse, who pretended to be on his side, falling upon him to kill him, put his Army into confusion. The Cavalry fled, the Infantry were cut in pieces, and the Town was taken; but Henry re-took it within a short time after.

About the end of November, Gregory held a Council at Rome, wherein he excommunicated Nicephorus Botoniatus, who had seiz'd upon the Empire of the East, after he had outed Michael Ducas. The Envoys of Henry and Radulphus, took an Oath in the Name of their Masters, that they would not hinder the Legats of the Holy See from holding an Assembly in Germany, to put an end to their Contests. Lastly, The Pope made in this Council twelve Canons concerning Benefices, and Ecclesiastical Revenues. The Council of Rome, December 1078.

In the First, he excommunicates all Laicks who were possess'd of Ecclesiastical Revenues, and in particular those who had seiz'd upon the Revenues belonging to the Monastery of Mount Cassin. This Decree was made upon the account that Jordanes Duke of Capua, had taken away from that Monastery a Sum of Mony which had been deposited there by the Bishop of Roscella.

Gregory VII.

The Second imports, That having underſtood that ſeveral Laicks granted in ſeveral places the Inveſtitures of Churches, contrary to the Conſtitutions of the Holy Fathers, and that this was the cauſe of great Diſturbances, he orders that no Eccleſiaſticks ſhall receive Inveſtiture of any Biſhoprick, Abby or Church, from the hands of an Emperor or a King, or any other Laick whatever, and declares that if any ſhall receive it, his Inveſtiture ſhall be Null and Void, and he ſhall be excommunicated, till ſuch time as he has given ſatisfaction for his offence.

The Third imports, That if any one ſell any Prebends, Arch-deaconries, Provoſtſhips, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, or diſpoſes of them otherwiſe than the Holy Canons direct, he ſhall be ſuſpended from his Functions, becauſe 'tis requiſite that he who receives the Dignity of a Biſhop gratis, ſhould likewiſe diſpenſe the things which belong to it gratis.

The Fourth declares thoſe Ordinations to be Null, which are made for Mony, or at the Solicitation of any one, or in conſideration of any Service done for that purpoſe; and all ſuch as are not made by the joynt conſent both of Clergy and Laity, or ſuch as are not approv'd of by thoſe to whom the Conſecration of elected Perſons does belong.

The Fifth imports, That ſuch Pennances as are not proportion'd to the Quality of the Crimes committed are inſignificant; and that they who cannot bear Arms, or exerciſe a Trade without falling into Sin, ought to quit their Profeſſion or Trade: And that thoſe who bear any Malice to, or detain any Goods of their Neighbour, ſhall be reconcil'd and make full reſtitution to him, before they ſhall be admitted to Communion.

The Sixth, prohibits Laicks from poſſeſſing Tenths, what Title ſoever they may have thereto.

The Seventh, enjoyns abſtinence from Meats every Saturday, unleſs ſome ſolemn Feſtival fall thereon.

The Eighth imports, That no Abbot ſhall be poſſeſs'd of the Tenths, or other Eccleſiaſtical Revenues which of Right belong to the Biſhop, unleſs by the Authority of the Pope, or by the Licenſe of the Biſhop of the place.

The Ninth, That Biſhops ſhall not impoſe any new Burden on the Abbots or Clergy.

The Tenth, That all thoſe who are poſſeſs'd of any Revenues belonging to the Holy See, or know of any who do poſſeſs them, ſhall be bound to diſcover it, under the Penalty of paying Fourfold.

The Eleventh, That the Biſhops who ſhall permit the Prieſts, Deacons, or Sub-deacons of their Dioceſs to live Marry'd, ſhall be ſuſpended of their Functions.

The Twelfth, That all Chriſtians ſhall endeavour to offer ſomething at the Celebration of the Maſs.

The Council of Rome, in the Year 1079.

The next Year Gregory held another Council the beginning of Lent, in which Berenger abjur'd his Error. After this the Envoys of Radulphus complain'd to the Council, That King Henry offer'd great Violences to the Eccleſiaſticks of Germany. Several Biſhops of the Council propos'd to excommunicate him; but the Pope thought it more adviſable to put it off, and contented himſelf with taking an Oath from his Envoys, who ſwore that their Maſter ſhould ſend Perſons with Paſs-ports for the Pope's Legats to go ſafely into Germany, and ſhould ſubmit to their Judgment. The Envoys of Radulphus took likewiſe an Oath, That their Maſter ſhould either come, or ſend Deputies to the Aſſembly, which the Pope or his Legats ſhould appoint, and that he ſhould ſubmit to the Judgment of the Holy See. The Arch-biſhop of Aquileia likewiſe promis'd to be faithful for the future to Pope Gregory, and his Succeſſors; to make no attempt on their Perſons or Eſtates; and to be in all things ſubmiſſive to them. In this Synod were excommunicated and depos'd, without any hopes of being re-eſtabliſh'd, Tedald Arch-biſhop of Milan, the Arch-biſhop of Narbonne, Sigefroy Biſhop of Boulogne, Rowland Biſhop of Treviſi, and the Biſhops of Fermo and Camerine. Laſtly, The Biſhop of Reggio promis'd on the Holy Evangeliſts to quit forthwith his Biſhoprick, if the Pope or his Legat ſhould order him to do it.

Gregory upon the Oath taken by the Envoys of the two Competitors, ſent away his Legats, as he hints in a Letter written to the Princeſs Matilda, March 3. in the Year, 1079. But King Henry finding he had the better of his Enemy, whom he defeated in a Battle near Fladeſheim, would not permit any Aſſembly to be held, wherein his Right might be call'd in queſtion; and the Pope's Legats perceiving the ſucceſs of his Arms, not only abſtain'd from acting any thing againſt him, but likewiſe ſeem'd to favour him. Thoſe who were of Radulphus's Party preferring their complaints to the Pope about it, and taking notice that it was ſuſpected that he had alter'd his mind, he return'd them this Anſwer, That tho' all the Latins who were of King Henry's Party accus'd him of too much ſeverity us'd towards that Prince, he had always objected to them, and declar'd that he would be of no Party, but of that which had Juſtice on its ſide; that if his Legats had done any thing contrary to the orders which he had given them, he was very ſorry for it, and that he underſtood that they were conſtrain'd to do it, either by Fraud or by Force; that he had only given them orders to appoint the time and place, that ſo he might ſend his Legats to determine this great Affair; to re-eſtabliſh the Biſhops, and to forbid them them communicating with excommunicated Persons. This Letter dated October 1. in the Year, 1079. is the Third of the seventh Book. Gregory VII.

Lastly, Gregory in the Council held the beginning of Lent in the Year 1080. after he had renew'd the prohibition of receiving Investitures of Benefices from Laicks; anathematiz'd those who granted them; reiterated the Excommunications issu'd out against Tedald Archbishop of Milan, Guilbert of Ravenna, Peter of Narbonne, Rowland Bishop of Trevisi and others; prohibited the Normans of Pozzuolo from invading the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rome; repeated and enlarg'd the Decrees made in the Council of the foregoing year, concerning Pennances proportion'd to the greatness of the Crimes, and the Elections of Bishops: He thunder'd out a terrible Excommunication against King Henry, wherein he anathematiz'd Him and all his Adherents; declar'd him to have forfeited the Kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and all Regal Dignity; forbad all Christians to obey him; and bestow'd the Kingdom of Germany on Radulphus, Elected by the Princes of Germany: And Lastly, Exhorts all of them to take up Arms against Henry, to divest him of his Dominions. The Council of Rome in the Year 1080. wherein Henry is excommunicated and depos'd by the Pope.

When the News of Henry's Excommunication was brought to Germany, it incens'd those of his Party against the Pope, who meeting at Mayence about Whitsontide, resolv'd to endure him no longer on the Papal Chair. But that his Deposition might be the more solemn, they appointed a Council to be held at Bresse, which was made up of Thirty Bishops, and a great many Princes of Germany and Italy. They there unanimously depos'd Hildebrand, because, say they, it is manifest that it was not God who Elected him, but that he caus'd himself to be Elected by Frau'd and for Mony; because he overthrew the Order of the Church; disturb'd the Empire; threatned Death to a Catholick King, and a lover of Peace; defended a perjur'd King; sow'd discord among those who were at Peace, and scandaliz'd the Church. They likewise cast Reflections upon him, calling him Obstinate, Perverse; a Preacher up of Sacrileges and Combustions; a Protector of perjur'd Persons and Homicides; a Disciple of Berenger, who call'd in question the reality of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist; a Sorcerer; a Necromancer possess'd by an evil Spirit; an Heretick; an Infidel. For these Reasons they thought that he ought to be depos'd and turn'd out of the Chair, and that if he did not recede of his own accord, he ought to lye under a perpetual Condemnation. They Elected in his stead Guilbert Archbishop of Ravenna, one of the principal Actors in this Tragedy, who took upon him the Name of Clement III. All this was done June 25, in the Year, 1080. The Council of Bresse against Gregory VII. Clement III. the Anti-Pope.

After the Assembly, Henry wrote a Letter to Hildebrand (for so he calls Gregory) in these Terms: " Henry by Divine Providence, and not by Usurpation, King, to Hildebrand who " is no longer Pope, but a Wicked Monk. You very justly deserve this Title, having " been the cause of that Confusion, which the Church at present labours under, and which " is so great that there is scarce a Man but has had his share in your Curses. For without " making much mention of other Things, you have lay'd under your feet Arch-bishops, " Bishops, Priests, and others of the Lord's Anointed, to get the Applause of the People, " and to make them believe that you know every thing, but that they know nothing. " ..... WE have born with you as long as WE thought WE might with safety do it " without prejudice to the Holy See; but you fancy'd that WE did that out of fear, which " Humility put US upon doing. You have advanc'd your self against the Regal Power; " you have dar'd to threaten to divest US thereof, as if it were you who had bestow'd it on " US, and as if WE had not receiv'd it from God, who has call'd US to the Empire, " but not you to the Papacy; for you were advanc'd thereto by Craft and Fraud, and by " your Mony gain'd the favour you had. This favour you thus gain'd has put you upon " making use of the Sword to ascend the Throne of Peace, and being mounted thereon, " you have disturb'd the Peace, by Arming the Subjects against those whom they ought to " obey, by bringing a contempt on those Bishops whom God hath call'd, even you who " who had no call .... You your self have assaulted OUR Royal Person, though an Anointed " King, and one who could not be call'd to Account but by God alone, nor be depos'd " for any other Crime but that of Apostatizing from the Faith ..... For as much therefore as you are Anathematiz'd and Condemn'd by OUR Sentence, and by the Sentence " of OUR Bishops, quit the Holy Apostolick See which you have unjustly usurp'd, and let " another take your Office, who exercises no Violence under the Umbrage of Religion; but " who Teaches the pure Doctrin of S. Peter. WE Henry by the Grace of God King, " with all our Bishops, enjoyn you to descend from the Papal Chair. The Letter of Henry to Gregory VII.

Henry at the same time wrote likewise to the Laity and Clergy of Rome, that Hildebrand being depos'd, he order'd them to turn him out of the Holy See, and to receive him in who had been Elected in his place. He sent likewise Embassadors to the Christian Kings and Princes, to prevail upon them to Recognize Clement, and to withdraw their Obedience from Gregory.

From Words they came at last on both sides to Blows. The Pope, to make his party good against Henry, reconcil'd himself with Robert Guiscard Duke of Pozzuolo, who promis'd him all manner of Assistance and Obedience; and by way of Retaliation receiv'd the Investiture of the Countries which he possess'd, with a permission of enjoying (durante beneplacito) Salerno, The preparations of War between Hen. and Gre.

Gregory VII.

Salerno, Melpha, and part of the March of Fermo, which he had invaded. This Accomodation gave the Pope a Right of imploring his Aid by the Letter, which is the Fifth of the eighth Book, dated July 21. Afterwards, to fall particularly on Guilbert, he nominates another Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, declares he would come with the aſſiſtance of the Normans of Pozzuolo to turn out Guilbert, and exhorts thoſe of Ravenna, Fermo, and Spoleto to abandon him, and to place him whom he had nominated, into Poſſeſſion of that Arch-biſhoprick. Theſe are the Seventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Letters of the eighth Book. He wrote likewiſe to the German Rebels, by the Ninth Letter of the ſame Book, dated September 22. by which he exhorts them to behave themſelves like Men, and vindicate the Honor of the Church of Rome.
